Phil. If it ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhip, I am burthened none otherwiſe than I have told you, by the Commiſſioners, who ſent me hither, becauſe I would not recant the ſame.

Boner. A man may ſpeak in the Parliament-houſe, though it be a place of free ſpeech, ſo as he may be impriſoned for it, as in caſe he ſpeak words of High-Treaſon againſt the King or Queen; and ſo it might be that you ſpake otherwiſe than it became you of the Church of Chriſt.

Phil.

Anno 1555.

Phil. I ſpake nothing which was out of the Articles which were called in queſtion, and agreed upon to be diſputed by the whole Houſe, and by the Queens permiſſion and the Council.

Boner, Why, may we diſpute of our Faith?

Or elſe why were the Articles there propounded?

Phil. Yea that we may.

Boner. Nay, I trow not, by the Law.

Phil. Indeed by the Civil Law I know it is not lawful, but by Gods Law we may reaſon thereof. For St. Peter ſaith, Be ye ready to render account unto all men of that hope which is in you, that demand you of the ſame.

1 Pet. 3.

Bon. Indeed S. Peter ſaith ſo. Why, then I ask of you what your judgement is of the Sacrament of the Altar;

No man is bound to render account of his Faith privately, unleſs it be to edifie.

Phil. My Lord, S. Ambroſe ſaith, that the diſputation of Faith ought to be in the Congregation, in the hearing of the People, and that I am not bound to render account thereof to every man privately, unleſs it be to edifie. But now I cannot ſhew you my mind, but I muſt run upon the pikes in danger of my life therefore. Wherefore as the ſaid Doctor ſaid unto Valentinian the Emperour, ſo ſay I to your Lordſhip; tolle legem & fiet certamen; Take away the Law, and I ſhall reaſon with you. And yet if I come in open judgment, where I am bound by the Law to anſwer, I truſt I ſhall utter my Conſcience as freely as any that hath come before you.

Ambroſ ad Valentinianum.

Bon. I perceive you are learned, I would have ſuch as you be about me. But you muſt come and be of the Church; for there is but one Church.

Phil. God forbid I ſhould be out of the Church, I am ſure I am within the ſame: for I know as I am taught by the Scripture, that there is but one Catholick Church, Una Columba, una Sponſa, una Dilecta; one Dove, one Spouſe, one beloved Congregation, out of the which there is no ſalvation.

One Church.

Bon. How chanceth it then, that you go out of the ſame, and walk not with us?

Phil. My Lord, I am ſure I am within the bounds of the Church whereupon ſhe is builded, which is the Word of God.

Bon. What age are ye of?

Phil. I am four and forty.

The Faith promiſed by his God-fathers was the Faith of Chriſt, after his Creed only.

Bon. You are not now of the ſame Faith your God-fathers and God-mothers promiſed for you, in the which you were baptized.

Phil. Yes, I thank God I am: for I was baptized into the Faith of Chriſt which I now hold.

Bon. How can that be? there is but one Faith.

Phil. I am aſſured of that by S. Paul, ſaying; That there is but one God, one Faith, and one Baptiſm, of the which I am.

Bon. You were twenty years ago of another Faith than you be now.

Phil. Indeed my Lord, to tell you plain I was then nullius fidei, of no Faith, a neuter, a wicked liver, neither hot nor cold.

Bon. Why, do you not think that we have now the true Faith:

Phil. I deſire your Lordſhip to hold me excuſed for anſwering at this time. I am ſure that Gods Word throughly with the Primitive Church, and all the ancient Writers do agree with this Faith I am of.

And why then began you ſo haſtily with him in the Sacrament of your Altars. Biſhop Boner offended with John Philpots ſinging in Priſon.

Boner. Well, I promiſe you I mean you no more hurt, than to mine own perſon: I will not therefore burthen you with your Conſcience as now; I marvel that you are ſo merry in Priſon as you be, ſinging and rejoycing, as the Prophet ſaith, Exultantes in rebus peſſimis, Rejoycing in your naughtineſs. Me thinketh you do not well herein; you ſhould rather lament and be ſorry.

Phil. my Lord, the mirth that we make is but in ſinging certain Pſalms, according as we are commanded by S. Paul, willing us to be merry in the Lord, ſinging together, in Hymns and pſalms: And I truſt your Lordſhip cannot be diſpleaſed with that.

Boner. We may ſay unto you as Chriſt ſaid in the Goſpel, Tibiis cecinimus vobis, & non planxiſtis.

Phil. Here my Lord ſtumbled, and could not bring forth the Text, and required his Chaplains to help, and to put him in remembrance of the Text better; but they were mum: and I recited out the Text unto him, which made nothing to his purpoſe, unleſs he would have us to mourn, becauſe they, if they laugh, ſing ſtill ſorrowful things unto us, threatinng fagots and fire.

We are my Lord, in a dark comfortleſs place, and therefore it behoveth us to be merry, leſt, as Solomon ſaith, ſorrowfulneſs eat up our heart. Therefore I truſt your Lordſhip will not be angry for our ſinging of Pſalms, ſince St. Paul ſaith; If any man be of an upright mind, let him ſing. And we therefore, to teſtifie that we are of an upright mind to God, (though we be in miſery) do ſing.

Bon. I will trouble you no further as now. If I can do you any good, I will be glad to do it for you. God be with you, good Mr. Philpot, and give you good night. Have him to the Cellar and let him drink a Cup of Wine.

Thus I departed, and by my Lords Regiſter I was brought to his Cellar door, where I drank a good Cup of Wine. and my Lords Chaplain M. Couſin followed me, taking acquaintance, ſaying, that I was welcom, and wiſhed that I would not be ſingular.

Phil. I am well taught the contrary by Solomon, ſaying, Væ ſoli, Wo be to him that is alone. After that I was carried to my Lords Cole-houſe again, where I with my ſix fellows do rouſe together in ſtraw as cheerfully (we thank God) as others do in their beds of Down.

Thus for the third Fit.

The fourth Examination of Mr. Philpot in the Archdeacons houſe of London, the ſaid month of October, before the Biſhops of London, Bathe, Worceſter, and Glouceſter.

Another Examination of J. Philpot, before the Biſhops.

Boner. Mr. Philpot, it hath pleaſed my Lords to take pains here to day, to dine with my poor Archdeacon, and in the dinner time it chanced us to have communication of you, and you were pitied here of many that knew you in the New Colledge in Oxford: and I alſo do pity your caſe, becauſe yeu ſeem unto me by the talk I had with you the other night, to be learned: and therefore now I have ſent for you to come before them, that it might not be ſaid hereafter, that I had ſo many learned Biſhops at my houſe, and yet would not vouchſafe them to talk with you, and at my requeſt (I thank them) they are content ſo to do. Now therefore utter your mind freely, and you ſhall with all favour be ſatisfied. I am ſorry to ſee you lie in ſo evil a caſe as you do, and would fain you ſhould do better, as you may if you liſt.

Bathe. My Lords here have not ſent for you to fawn upon you, but for Charities ſake to exhort you to come into the right Catholick way of the Church.

And why do not you Biſhops your ſelves pray alſo for them that are out of the way?

Worc. Before he beginneth to ſpeak, it is beſt that he call to God for grace, and to pray that it might pleaſe God to open his heart, that he may conceive the Truth.

Phil. With that I fell down upon my knees before them, and made my Prayer on this manner:

The Prayer of J. Philpot before the Biſhops.

Almighty God, which art the giver of all wiſdom and underſtanding, I beſeech thee of thine infinite goodneſs and mercy in Jeſus Chriſt, to give me (moſt vile ſinner in thy ſight,) the Spirit of wiſdom to ſpeak and make anſwer in thy cauſe, that it may be to the contentation of the hearers, before whom I ſtand, and alſo to my better underſtanding, if I be deceived in any thing.

Biſhop Boner againſt Prayer.

Bon. Nay, my Lord of Worceſter, you did not well to exhort him to make any Prayer. For this is the thing they have a ſingular pride in, that they can often make their vain prayers, in the which they glory much. For in this point they are much like to certain arrant Hereticks, of whom Pliny maketh mention, that did daily ſing Antelucanos Hymnos, Praiſe unto God before dawning of the day.

Biſhop Boner here ſeemeth more skilful in his Law, than in Church ſtories.

Phil. My Lord, God make me and all you here preſent ſuch hereticks as thoſe were that ſung thoſe morning hymns: for they were right Chriſtians, with whom the Tyrants of the World were offended for their well doing.

Bathe. Proceed to that he hath to ſay. He hath prayed I cannot tell for what.

Bon.

Bon. Say on Mr. Philpot; my Lords will gladly hear you.

Phil. I have, my Lords, been this twelve month and a half in prison without any just cause that I know, and my living taken from me without any lawful order, and now I am brought (contrary to right) from mine own Territory and Ordinary, into another mans jurisdiction, I know not why. Wherefore, if your Lordships can burden me with any evil done, I stand here before you to purge me of the same. And if no such thing may be justly laid to my charge, I desire to be released of this wrongful trouble.

Boner. There is none here goeth about to trouble you, but to do you good, if we can. For I promise you, ye were sent hither to me without my knowledge. Therefore speak your Conscience without any fear.

Mr. Philpot complaineth of his wrongful imprisonment.

Phil. My Lord, I have learned to answer in matters of Religion, In Ecclesia legitime vocatus, in the Congregation being thereto lawfully called: but now I am not lawfully called, neither is here a just Congregation where I ought to answer.

Boner. Indeed this man told me the last time I spake with him, that he was a Lawyer, and would not utter his Conscience in matters of Faith, unless it were in the hearing of the People, where he might speak to vainglory.

Mr. Philpot called in no sufficient assembly, and therefore not bound to answer, whereby to put himself in danger.

Phil. My Lord, I said not I was a Lawyer, neither do I arrogate to my self that name, although I was once a novice in the same; where I learned something for mine owne defence, when I am called in judgement to answer to any cause, and whereby I have been taught, not to put my self further in danger than I need, and so far am I Lawyer, and no further.

* Wilful, because he will not put himself wilfully into the Wolves mouth.

Bathe. If you will not answer to my Lords request, you seem to be a wilful man in your opinion.

Phil. My Lord of London is not mine Ordinary before whom I am bound to answer in this behalf, as Mr. D. Cole (which is a Lawyer) can well tell you by the Law. And I have not offended my Lord of London wherefore he should call me.

This offence was for speaking in the Convocation house with publick liberty in the Parliament.

Bon. Yes, I have to lay to your charge, that you have offended in my Dioceſs by speaking against the blessed Sacrament of the Altar: and therefore I may call you, and proceed against you to punish you by the law.

Phil. I have not offended in your Dioceſs. For that which I spake of the Sacrament was in Pauls Church in the Convocation House, which (as I understand) is a peculiar Jurisdiction belonging to the Dean of Pauls, and therfore is counted of your Lordships Dioceſs, but not in your Dioceſs.

Boner. Is not Pauls Church in my Dioceſs? Well I wot, it costeth me a good deal of money by the year, the leading thereof.

Philp. That may be, and yet be exempted from your Lordships Jurisdiction. And albeit I had so offended in your Dioceſs, yet I ought by the law to be sent to my Ordinary, if I require it, and not to be punished by you that are not mine Ordinary. And already (as I have told you) I have been convented of mine Ordinary for this cause, which you goe about to enquire of me.

B. Boner not lawful Ordinary to J. Philpot.

Boner. How say you Mr. D. Cole, may not I proceed against him by the law, for that he hath done in my Dioceſs?

Cole. Me thinketh Mr. Philpot needeth not to stand so much with your Lordship in that point as he doth, sithence yo i seek not to hinder him, but to further him: therefore I think it best that he go to the matter that is laid against him of the Convocation, and make no longer delay.

Phil. I would willingly shew my mind of the matter, but I am sure it will be laid against me to my prejudice when I come to judgement.

Cole. Why then you may speak by protestation.

Note how these men hunt for innocent Blood.

Phil. But what shall my protestation avail in a cause of Heresie (as you call it) if I (speak otherwise than you will have me; since that which I spake in the Convocation House, being a place priviledged, cannot now help me?

Boner. But Master D. Cole, may not I proceed against him for that offence he hath done in my Dioceſs?

Cole. You may call him before you, my Lord, if he be found in your Dioceſs.

Phil. But I have by force been brought out of mine owne Dioceſs to my Lords, and required to be judged of mine own Ordinary: and therefore I know Master Doctor will not say of his knowledge, that your Lordship ought to proceed against me. And here Master Dr. would say nothing.

Anno 1555.

Mr. Philpot again appealeth from B. Boner to his Ordinary.

Worc. Do you not think to find before my Lord here as good equity in your cause, as before your own Ordinary?

Phil. I cannot blame my Lord of Londons equity, with whom (I thank his Lordship) I have found more gentleness since I came, than of mine own Ordinary (I speak it for no flattery) this twelve month and this half before, who never would call me to answer, as his Lordship hath done now twice. Sed nemo prohibetur uti jure suo No man is forbid to use his own right due unto him; but I ought not to be forestalled of my right, and therefore I challenge the same for divers other considerations.

Bon. Now you cannot say hereafter but that you have been gently communed with al of my Lords here, and yet you will be wilful and obstinate in your errour, and in your own opinions, and will not shew any cause why you will not come into the Unity of the Church with us.

Phil. My Lords, in that I do not declare my mind according to your expectation, is (as I have said) because I cannot speak without present danger of my life. But rather then you should report me, by this, either obstinate or selfwilled without any just ground, whereupon I stand; I will open unto you somewhat of my mind, or rather the whole, desiring your Lordships which seem to be pillars of the Church of England to satisfie me in the same: and I will refer all other causes in the which I dissent from you, unto one or two Articles, or rather to one, which includeth them both; in the which if I can by the Scriptures be satisfied at your mouths, I shall as willingly agree to you as any other in all points.

Nay rather these Catholick prelates will be satisfied with no reasonable offer.

Bon. These Hereticks come always with their ifs, as this man doth now, saying, If he can be satisfied by the Scriptures: so that he will always have this exception, I am not satisfied, although the matter be never so plainly proved against him. But will you promise to be satisfied, if my Lords take some pains about you?

Phil. I say (my Lord) I will be satisfied by the Scriptures in that wherein I stand. And I protest here before God and his eternal Son Jesus Christ my Saviour, and the Holy Ghost, and his Angels, and you here present that be judges of that I speak, that I do not stand in any opinion, of wilfulness, or singularity, but onely upon my Conscience, certainly informed by Gods Word, from the which I dare not go for fear of damnation: and this is the cause of mine earnestness in this Behalf.

Bon. I will trouble my Lords no longer, seeing that you will not declare your mind.

Phil. I am about so to do, if it please your Lordship to hear me speak.

Bathe. Give him leave (my Lord) to speak that he hath to say.

The chiefest controversie in the Church of Christ now, is to know which is the true Church of Christ.

Phil. My Lords, it is not unknown to you that the chief cause why you do count me, and such as I am, for Hereticks, is because we be not at Unity with your Church. You say you are of the True Church: and we say, we are of the true Church. You say, that whosoever is out of your Church, is damned: and we think verily on the other side, that if we depart from the True Church, whereon we are grafted in Gods Word, we should stand in the state of damnation. Wherefore if your Lordship can bring any better Authority for your Church than we can do for ours, and prove by the Scriptures that the Church of Rome now (of the which you are) is the True Catholick Church, as in all your Sermons, writings, and arguments you do uphold, and that all Christian persons ought to be ruled by the same under pain of damnation (as you say) and that the same Church (as you pretend) hath Authority to interpret the Scriptures as it seemeth her good, and that all men are bound to follow such interpretations onely; I shall be as conformable to the same Church as you may desire me, the which otherwise I dare not: therfore I require you for Gods sake to satisfie me in this.

Cole. If you stand upon this point onely, you may soon be satisfied if you list.

Phil.

Anno 1555.

Phil. It is the thing that I require, and to this I have ſaid, I will ſtand, and referr all other controverſies wherein I ſtand now againſt you, and will put my hand thereto, if you miſtruſt my word.

S. Paul 20. years before his converſion and S. Peter before his calling, was of another faith than they were afterward and yet in following not that they would have every year a new faith.

Boner. I pray you Mr. Philpot, what faith were you of twenty years ago: This man will have every year a new faith.

Phil. My Lord to tell you plain, I think I was of no faith: for I was then a wicked liver, and knew not God then, as I ought to do, God forgive me.

Boner. No Faith? that is not ſo. I am ſure you were of ſome faith.

Phil. My Lord, I have declared to you on my Conſcience what I then was, and judge of my ſelf. And what is that to the purpoſe of the thing I deſire to be ſatisfied of you?

Boner. Maſter D. Cole, I pray you ſay your mind to him.

The determination of the Primitive Church, and of the Church of Rome as it is now, is not all one. Athanaſius miſ-alled. &c.

Cole. What will you ſay, if I can prove that it was decreed by an Univerſal Council in Athanaſius his time, that all the Chriſtian Church ſhould follow the determination of the Church of Rome? but I do not now remember where.

Phil. If you Maſter Doctor can ſhew me the ſame granted to the See of Rome by the Authority of the Scripture, I will gladly hearken thereto. But I think you be not able to ſhew any ſuch thing: for Athanaſius was Preſident of Nicene Council, and there was no ſuch thing decreed I am ſure.

Cole. Though it were not then, it might be at another time.

Phil. I deſire to ſee the proof thereof. And upon this Mr. Harpsfield, Chancellor to the Biſhop of London, brought in a book of Ireneus, with certain leaves turned in, and laid it before the Biſhops to help them in their perplexity, if it might be: the which after the Biſhops of Bathe and Gloceſter had read together, the Biſhop of Gloceſter gave me the book.

Gloceſt. Take the Book, Maſter Philpot, and look upon that place, and there may you ſee how the Church of Rome is to be followed of all men.

A place of Ireneus alledged.

Phil. I took the Book, and read the place, the which after I had read, I ſaid it made nothing againſt me, but againſt the Arrians and other Hereticks, againſt whom Ireneus wrote, proving that they were not to be credited, becauſe they did teach and follow after ſtrange Doctrine in Europa, and that the chief Church of the ſame was founded by Peter and Paul, and had to this time continued by faithful ſucceſſion of the faithful Biſhops in preaching the true Goſpel, as they had received of the Apoſtles, and nothing like to theſe late ſprung Hereticks, &c. Whereby he concludeth againſt them, that they were not to be heard, neither to be credited, the which thing if you my Lords be able to prove now of the Church of Rome, then had you as good Authority againſt me in my cauſe now, as Ireneus had againſt thoſe Hereticks.

The Church of Rome not now as it was then.

But the Church of Rome hath ſwerved from the truth and ſimplicity of the Goſpel, which it maintained in Ireneus time, and was uncorrupted from that which it is now, wherefore your Lordſhip cannot juſtly apply the Authority of Ireneus to the Church of Rome now, which is ſo manifeſtly corrupted from the Primitive Church.

Boner. So will you ſay ſtill, it maketh nothing for the purpoſe, whatſoever Authority we bring, and will never be ſatisfied,

Phil. My Lord, when I do by juſt reaſon prove that the Authorities which be brought againſt me do not make to the purpoſe (as I have already proved) I truſt you will receive mine anſwer.

The Church of Rome never deceived.

Worc. It is to be proved moſt manifeſtly by all ancient Writers, that the See of Rome hath always followed the truth, and never was deceived, until of late certain Hereticks had defaced the ſame.

Phil. Let that be proved, and I have done.

Worc. Nay, you are of ſuch arrogancy, ſingularity, and vain-glory, that you will not ſee it, be it never ſo well proved.

Phil. Ha, my Lords, is it now time (think you) for me to follow ſingularity or vain-glory, ſince it is now upon danger of my life and death, not onely preſently, but alſo before God to come? and I know, if I die not in the true faith, I ſhall die everlaſtingly: and again I know, if I do not as you would have me, you will kill me and many thouſands more: yet had I rather periſh at your hands, than to periſh eternally. And at this time I have loſt all my commodities of this World, and lie in a colehouſe, where a man would not lay a Dogg, with the which I am well contented.

I find not in Euſebius that Peter ſhould be B. of Rome 25 years, but this is in Linus. Hierom, lib. de viris illuſt. and in Abd. in lib. 1. de vit. Patr.

Cole. Where are you able to prove that the Church of Rome hath erred at any time? and by what Hiſtorie? certain it is by Euſebius, that the Church was eſtabliſhed at Rome by Peter and Paul, and that Peter was Biſhop 25 years at Rome.

Phil. I know well that Euſebius ſo writeth: but if we compare that which Saint Paul writeth to the Galathians, chap. 1. the contrary will manifeſtly appear, that he was not half ſo long there. He lived not paſt 35 years after he was called to be an Apoſtle: and Paul maketh mention of his abiding at Jeruſalem after Chriſts death more than 13 years.

Cole. What, did Peter write to the Galathians?

Phil. No, I ſay Paul maketh mention of Peter, writing to the Galathians, and of his abiding at Jeruſalem: And further, I am able to prove, both by Euſebius and other Hiſtoriographers, that the Church of Rome hath manifeſtly erred, and at this preſent doth err, becauſe ſhe agreeth not with that which they wrote. The primitive Church did uſe according to the Goſpel, and there needeth none other proof but compare the one with the other.

Harke my Lords wife parable.

Boner. I may compare this man to a certain man I read of which fell into a deſperation, and went into a wood to hang himſelf, and when he came there, he went viewing of every tree, and could find none on the which he might vouchſafe to hang himſelf. But I will not apply it as I might. I pray you (Maſter Doctor) go forth with him.

Neither you nor they are able in this caſe.

Cole. My Lord, there be on every ſide on me that be better able to anſwer him, and I love not to fall into diſputation: for that now adays a man ſhall but ſuſtain ſhame and obloquie thereby of the People. I had rather ſhew my mind in writing.

Phil. And I had rather that you ſhould do ſo than otherwiſe, for than a man may better judge of your words, than by argument, and I beſeech you ſo to do. But if I were a rich man, I durſt wager an hundred pounds, that you ſhall not be able to ſhew that you have ſaid, to be decreed by a general Council in Athanaſius time. For this I am ſure of, that it was concluded by a general Council in Africa many years after, that none of Africa (under pain of Excommunication) ſhould appeal to Rome; the which decree I am ſure they would not have made, if by the Scriptures and by an Univerſal Council it had been decreed, that all men ſhould abide and follow the determination of the Church of Rome.

Reaſon why it is not like that in Athanaſius time all men were bound to abide the determination of Rome.

Cole. But I can ſhew that they revoked that error again.

Phil. So you ſay, Maſter Doctor, but I pray you ſhew me where. I have hitherto heard nothing of you for my contentation, but bare words without any Authority.

Bon. What I pray you ought we to diſpute with you of our faith? Juſtinian in the law hath a title, De fide Catholica, to the contrary.

Not the law but the Goſpel gathered the Church together.

Phil. I am certain the Civil law hath ſuch a conſtitution: but our faith muſt not depend upon the Civil law. For as Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Non lex, ſed fides congregavit Eccleſiam, Not the law, but the Goſpel (ſaith he) hath gathered the Church together.

Worc. Mr. Philpot, you have the Spirit of pride wherewith ye be led, which will not let you to yield to the truth: leave it for ſhame.

Phil. Sir, I am ſure I have the ſpirit of Faith, by the which I ſpeak at this preſent; neither am I aſhamed to ſtand to my Faith.

Gloceſt. What? do you think your ſelf better learned than ſo many notable learned men as be here?

400 Prieſts againſt one Helias.

Phil. Elias alone had the Truth, when there were four hundred Prieſts againſt him.

Worceſt.

Worceſt. Oh, you would be counted now for Elias. And yet I tell thee he was deceived: for he thought there had been none good but himſelf, and yet he was deceived, for there were ſeven thouſand beſide him.

Phil. Yea, but he was not deceived in Doctrine, as the other four hundred were.

Worc. By my faith you are greatly to blame, that you cannot be content to be of the Church which ever hath been of that Faithful Antiquity.

Phil. My Lord, I know Rome, and have been there, where I ſaw your Lordſhip.

A good commendation for Rome by a Romaniſt.

Worc. Indeed I did flie from hence thither, and I remember not that I ſaw you there. But I am ſorry that you have been there: for the wickedneſs which you have ſeen there, peradventure cauſeth you to do as you do.

Phil. No, my Lord, I do not as I do for that cauſe: for I am taught otherwiſe by the Goſpel, not altogether to refuſe the Miniſter for his evil living, ſo that he bring ſound Doctrine out of Gods Book.

whether the Univerſal Church may be deceived? 2 Theſ. 3. A deſection prophecied of the Church.

Worc. Do you think the Univerſal Church may be deceived?

Phil. St. Paul to the Theſſalonians propheſieth that there ſhould come an Univerſal departing from the Faith in the later days before the coming of Chriſt, ſaying, Non veniet Chriſtus, niſi venerit defectio prius, that is, Chriſt ſhall not come, till there come a departing firſt.

Cole. Yea I pray you, how take you the departing there in S. Paul? it is not meant of Faith, but of the departing from the Empire: for it is in Greek, ἀποστασία.

Phil. Marry indeed you, Mr. Doctor, put me in good remembrance of the meaning of S. Paul in that place, for Apoſtaſia is properly a departing from the Faith, and thereof cometh Apoſtata, which properly ſignifieth one that departeth from his Faith: and S. Paul in the ſame place after ſpeaketh of the decay of the Empire.

Cole. Apoſtaſia doth not only ſignifie a departing from the Faith, but alſo from the Empire, as I am able to ſhew.

Phil, I never read it ſo taken, and when you ſhall be able to ſhew it (as you ſay in words) I will believe it, and not before.

Worc. I am ſory that you ſhould be againſt the Chriſtian World.

Phil. The World commonly, and ſuch as be called Chriſtians (for the multitude) hath hated the truth, and been enemies to the ſame.

Gloc. Why, Mr. Philpot, do you think that the Univerſal Church hath erred, and you onely to be in the Truth?

The Popes Church which now is, was never Univerſal. Of this Florentine Councel which was about the year 1432. read before. The word or the Church judge in controverſies.

Phil. The Church that you are of was never Univerſal, for two parts of the World, which is Aſia and Africa never conſented to the ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, as at this day they do not, neither do follow his decrees.

Gloceſt. Yes in the Florentine Councel they did agree.

Phil. It was ſaid ſo by falſe report, after they of Aſia and Africa were gone home: but it was not ſo indeed, as the ſequel of them all hitherto doth prove the contrary.

Gloc. I pray you by whom will you be judged in matters of Controverſie which happen daily?

Phil. By the Word of God. For Chriſt ſaith in S. John, The word that he ſpake, ſhall be judge in the laſt day.

Glo. What if you take the word one way, and I another way: who ſhall be judge then?

Phil. The Primitive Church.

Gloc. I know you mean the Doctors that wrote thereof.

Phil I mean verily ſo.

Gloc. What if you take the Doctors in one ſenſe, and I in another: who ſhall be judge then?

Phil. Then let that be taken which is moſt agreeable to Gods Word.

Cole. My Lords, why do you trouble your ſelves to anſwer him in this matter? It is not the thing which is laid to his charge, but his error of the Sacrament, and he to ſhift himſelf of that, brought in another matter.

Phil. This is the matter, Mr. Cole, to the which I have referred all other queſtions, and deſire to be ſatisfied.

Worc. It is wonder to ſee how he ſtandeth with a few againſt a great multitude. Anno 1555.

Phil. We have almoſt as many as you. For we have Aſia, Africa, Germany, Denmark, and a great part of France, and daily the number of the Goſpel doth increaſe: ſo that I am credibly informed, that for this Religion in the which I ſtand, and for the which I am like to die, a great multitude doth daily come out of France through perſecution, that the Cities of Germany be ſcarce able to receive them: and therefore your Lordſhip may be ſure, the Word of God will one day take place, do what you can to the contrary. John Philpots propheſie of the increaſe of the Goſpel.

Worc. They were well occupied to bring you ſuch news, and you have been well kept to have ſuch reſort unto you. Thou art the arroganteſt fellow, and ſtouteſt fond fellow that ever I knew.

Phil. I pray your Lordſhip to bear with my haſty ſpeech: for it is part of my corrupt nature to ſpeak ſomewhat haſtily: but for all that, I mean with humility, to do my duty to your Lordſhip. John Philpots put off to another day.

Bon. Mr. Philpot, my Lords will trouble you no further at this time, but you ſhall go from whence you came, and have ſuch favour as in the mean while I can ſhew you: and upon Wedneſday next you ſhall be called again to be heard what you can ſay for maintenance of your Error.

Phil. My Lord, my deſire is to be ſatisfied of you in that I have required; and your Lordſhip ſhall find me, as I have ſaid.

Worc. We wiſh you as well as our ſelves.

Phil. I think the ſame (my Lords) but I fear you are deceived, and have a zeal of your ſelves, not according to knowledge.

Worc. God ſend you more grace.

Phil, And alſo God increaſe the ſame in you, and open your eyes that you may ſee to maintain his Truth, and his true Church.

Then the Biſhops roſe up and conſulted together, and cauſed a writing to be made, in the which I think my Blood by them was bought and ſold, and thereto they put their hands, and after this I was carried to my Cole-houſe again.

¶ Thus endeth the fourth part of this tragedy. God haſten the end thereof to his glory Amen.

John Philpot to certain that required him to write his examinations. The inordinate and unlearned proceedings of the Catholicks againſt the poor flock of Chriſt.

BEcauſe I have begun to write unto you of mine examinations before the Biſhop and other, more to ſatisfie your deſire than that it is any thing worthy to be written; I have thought it good to write unto you alſo that which had been done of late, that the ſame might come to light which they do in darkneſs and in privie corners, and that the World now and the poſterity hereafter might know how unorderly, unjuſtly, and unlearnedly theſe ravening Wolves do proceed againſt the ſilly and faithful Flock of Chriſt, and condemn and perſecute the ſincere Doctrine of Chriſt in us, which they are not able by honeſt means to reſiſt, but onely by Tyranny and Violence.

The fifth Examination of John Philpot, had before the Biſhops of London, Rocheſter, Coventry, S. Aſaph (I trow) and one other, whoſe Sees I know not, Doctor Story, Curtop, Doctor Saverſon, Doctor Pendleton, with divers other Chaplains and Gentlemen of the Queens Chamber, and divers other Gentlemen, in the Gallery of my Lord of Londons palace.

The fifth examination of Mr. Philpot.

Boner. Mr. Philpot come you hither, I have deſired my Lords here, and other learned men to take ſome pains once again, and to do you good and becauſe I do mind to ſit in judgment on you to morrow (as I am commanded) yet I would you ſhould have as much favour as I can ſhew you, if you will be any thing conformable. Therefore play the wiſe man, and be not ſingular in your own opinion, but be ruled by theſe learned men.

Phil. My Lord, in that you ſay you will ſit on mein judgment to morrow, I am glad thereof, For I was promiſed by them which ſent me unto you, that I ſhould have been judged the next day after: but promiſe hath not been kept with me, to my farther grief. I look for none other but death at your hands, and I am as ready, to to yield my life in Chriſts cauſe, as you be to require it.

John Philpot ready to yield his life in Chriſts cauſe.

Anno 1555.

Bon. Lo what a wilful man is this? By my Faith it is but folly to reaſon with him, neither with any of theſe Hereticks. I am ſorry that you will be no more tractable, and that I am compelled to ſhew extremity againſt you.

Phil. My Lord, you need not to ſhew extremity againſt me unleſs you liſt: neither by the Law (as I have ſaid) have you any thing to do with me, for that you are not mine Ordinary, albeit I am (contrary to all right) in your Priſon.

Bon. Why the Queens Commiſſioners ſent you hither unto me upon your Examination had before them. I know not well the cauſe; but I am ſure they would not have ſent you hither to me, unleſs you had made ſome talk to them, otherwiſe than it becometh a Chriſtian man.

Phil. My Lord, indeed they ſent me hither without any occaſion then miniſtred by me. Only they laid unto me the Diſputation I made in the Convocation-houſe, requiring me to anſwer the ſame, and to recant it. The which becauſe I would not do, they ſent me hither to your Lordſhip.

Bon. Why did you not anſwer them thereto?

Phil. For that they were temporal men, and ought not to be Judges in Spiritual cauſes whereof they demanded me, without ſhewing any authority whereby I was bound to anſwer them, and hereupon they committed me to your Priſon.

Biſhop Boner ſeeketh cauſe againſt him, and yet pretendeth to be ſorry of his trouble.

Bon. Indeed I remember now, you maintained open Hereſie in my Dioceſs: wherefore the Commiſſioners ſent you unto me that I ſhould proceed againſt you, for this you have ſpoken in my Dioceſs.

Phil. My Lord, I ſtand ſtill upon my lawful plea in this behalf; that though it were a great hereſie, as you ſuppoſe it, yet I ought not to be troubled therefore, in reſpect of the priviledge of the Parliament-houſe, whereof the Convocation-houſe is a member, where all men in matters propounded may frankly ſpeak their minds, and here is preſent a Gentleman of the Queens Majeſties that was preſent at the Diſputation, and can teſtifie the queſtions which were then in controverſie, were not ſet forth by me, but by the Prolocutor, who required in the Queens Majeſties name, all men to diſpute their minds freely in the ſame, that were of the Houſe.

M. Philpots juſt defence for ſpeaking in the Parliament.

The Queens Gentleman. Though the Parliament-houſe be a place of priviledge for men of the houſe to ſpeak, yet may none ſpeak any Treaſon againſt the Queen, or maintain Treaſon againſt the Crown.

It were the part of a charitable Biſhop to make a matter better and not worſe.

Phil. But if there be any matter which otherwiſe it were Treaſon to ſpeak of, were it Treaſon for any perſon to ſpeak therein, ſpecially the thing being propoſed by the Speaker? I think not.

The Queens Gentleman. You may make the matter eaſie enough to you yet, as I perceive, if you will revoke the ſame which you did there ſo ſtubbornly maintain.

S. Aſ. This man did not ſpeak under Reformation, as many as there did but ἀγωνιστικῶς and κατηρεικῶς, which is, earneſtly and perſwaſibly, as ever I heard any.

John Philpot appealeth to the whole Parliament-houſe.

Phil. My Lords, ſince you will not ceaſe to trouble me for that I have lawfully done, neither will admit my juſt defence for that was ſpoken in the Convocation-houſe by me, contrary to the Laws and Cuſtom of the Realm; I appeal to the whole Parliament-houſe, to be judged by the ſame, whether I ought thus to be moleſted for that I have there ſpoken.

Rocheſter. But have you ſpoken and maintained the ſame ſince that time, or no?

Phil. If any man can charge me juſtly therewith, here I ſtand to make anſwer.

Rocheſter. How ſay you to it now? will you ſtand to that you have ſpoken in the Convocation-houſe, and do you think you ſaid then well, or no?

Phil. My Lord, you are not mine Ordinary to proceed Ex officio againſt me, and therefore I am not bound to tell you my Conſcience of your demands.

This Biſhop belike would fain have blood.

S. Aſ. What ſay you now? Is there not in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar (and with that they put off all their Caps for reverence of the Idol) the preſence of our Saviour Chriſt, really and ſubſtantially after the words of Conſecration?

Phil. I do believe in the Sacrament of Chriſts Body, duly miniſtred, to be ſuch manner of preſence, as the Word teacheth me to believe.

S. Aſ. I pray you, how is that?

Phil. As for that I will declare another time, when I ſhall be lawfully called to diſpute my mind of this matter, but I am not yet driven to that point. And the Scripture ſaith, All things ought to be done after an order.

Another Biſh. This is a froward and vain-glorious man.

Boner. It is not lawful for a man by the Civil Laws to diſpute of his Faith openly, as it appeareth in the title, De ſumma Trinitate & fide Catholica.

Phil. My Lord, I have anſwered you to this queſtion before.

Boner. Why, I never asked thee of this before now.

Phil. Yes, that you did at my laſt examination, by that token I anſwered your Lordſhip by St. Ambroſe, that the Church is congregated by the Word, and not by mans Law. Wherefore I add now further of this ſaying, Quod ſi fidem repudiat, & legem objicit, injuſtus eſt, quia juſtus ex fide vivet. i. That he which refuſeth the Word, and objecteth the Law, is an unjuſt man, becauſe the Juſt ſhall live by Faith. And moreover, (my Lord) the title which your Lordſhip alledgeth out of the Law, maketh it not unlawful to diſpute of all the Articles of the Faith, but of the Trinity.

Amb. l. 5. Epiſt. 30. Rodens cont. Auxentium.

Boner. Thou lyeſt, it is not ſo: and I will ſhew you by the Book how ignorant he is. And with that he went with all haſt to his Study, and fetcht his Book and openly read the Text, and the title of the Law, and charged me with ſuch words as ſeemed to make for his purpoſe, ſaying, How ſayeſt thou to this?

Philpot. My Lord, I ſay as I ſaid before, that the Law meaneth of the Catholick Faith, determined in the Council of Chalcedonia, where the Articles of the Creed were only concluded upon.

Bon. Thou art the verieſt Beaſt that ever I heard, I muſt needs ſpeak it, thou compelleſt me thereunto.

Our Faith not grounded upon the Civil Law.

Phil. Your Lordſhip may ſpeak your pleaſure of me. But what is this to the purpoſe, which your Lordſhip is ſo earneſt in? You know that our Faith is not grounded upon the Civil Law: therefore it is not material to me whatſoever the Law ſaith.

Bon. By what Law wilt thou be judged? Wilt thou be judged by the Common Law?

Phil. No, my Lord, our Faith dependeth not upon the Laws of man.

S. Aſ. He will be judged by no Law, but as he liſt himſelf.

Worc. The Common Laws are but abſtracts of the Scriptures and Doctors.

Phil. Whatſoever you do make them, they are no ground of my Faith, by the which I ought to be judged.

Bon. I muſt needs proceed againſt thee to morrow.

J. Philpot ſtandeth to his defence of the Law, in refuſing the Judge not to be competent.

Phil. If your Lordſhip ſo do, I will have Exceptionem fori: for you are not my competent Judge.

Bon. By what Law canſt thou refuſe me to be thy Judge?

Phil. By the Civil Law, De competente judice.

Boner. There is no ſuch title in the Law. In what Book is it, as cunning a Lawyer as you be?

De officio Ordinarii, is a title in the firſt Book of the Decretals.

Phil. My Lord, I take upon me no great cunning in the Law: but you drive me to my ſhifts for my defence, and I am ſure, if I had the Books of the Law, I were able to ſhew what I ſay.

Defora competente, is a title in the ſecond Book of the Decretals.

Boner. What? De competente judice? I will go fetch thee my Books. There is a title indeed, De officiis judicis Ordinarii.

Phil. Verily that is the ſame De competente judice, which I have alledged. With that he ran to his Study, and brought the whole courſe of the Law between his hands, which (as it might appear) he had well occupied, by the duſt they were imbrued withal.

Boner. There be the Books: find it now (if thou canſt) and I will promiſe to releaſe thee out of Priſon.

Phil.

Phil, My Lord I ſtand not here to reaſon matters of the Civil Law, although I am not altogether ignorant of the ſame; for that I have been a Student in the Law ſix or ſeven years: but to anſwer to the Articles of Faith, with the which you may lawfully burden me. And whereas you go about unlawfully to proceed, I challenge, according to my knowledge, the benefit of the Law in my defence, Boner. Why, thou wilt anſwer directly to nothing thou art charged withal: therefore ſay not hereafter but you might have been ſatisfied here by Learned men, if you would have declared your mind.

M. Philpot returneth again to his queſtion of the Church.

Philpot. My Lord, I have declared my mind unto you and to other of the Biſhops at my laſt being with you deſiring you to be ſatisfied but of one thing, whereunto I have referred all other Controverſies: the which if your Lordſhips now, or other Learned men can ſimply reſolve me of, I am as contented to be reformable in all things, as you ſhall require; the which is to prove that the Church of Rome (whereof you are) is the Catholick Church.

That Peter did build the Church of Rome it is falſe, for both the Scripture ſaith, that Peter was ſet over the the circumciſed, and not over the Gentiles, and alſo it is to be proved by Grotius, Suetonius, Tertullianus, and other ſtories, that the Faith of Chriſt was in Rome in Tiberius time before Peter ever ſaw Rome.

Coven. Why, do you not believe your Creed, Credo Eccleſiam Catholicam?

Phil. Yes that I do: but I cannot underſtand Rome (wherewithal you burden us) to be the ſame, neither like to it.

S. Aſ. It is moſt evident that St. Peter did build the Catholick Church at Rome. And Chriſt ſaid, Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc Petram ædificabo Eccleſiam meam.

Moreover, the ſucceſſion of Biſhops in the See of Rome can be proved from time to time, as it can be of none other place ſo well, which is a manifeſt probation of the Catholick Church, as divers Doctors do write.

Phil. That you would have to be undoubted, is moſt uncertain, and that by the Authority which you alledge of Chriſt, ſaying unto Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build my Church, unleſs you can prove the Rock to ſignifie Rome, as you would make me falſly believe. And although you can prove the ſucceſſion of Biſhops from Peter, yet this is not ſufficient to prove Rome the Catholick Church unleſs you can prove the profeſſion of Peters Faith, whereupon the Catholick Church is builded, to have continued in his Succeſſors at Rome, and at this preſent to remain.

Bon. Is there any more Churches than one Catholick Church? And I pray tell me into what Faith were you baptized?

Phil. I acknowledge one holy Catholick and Apoſtolick Church, whereof I am a member (I praiſe God) and am of that Catholick Faith of Chriſt whereinto I was baptized.

Coven. I pray you, can you tell what this word Catholick doth ſignifie? ſhew if you can.

Phil. Yes that I can, I thank God. The Catholick Faith, or the Catholick Church, is not as now adays the People be taught, to be that which is moſt Univerſal, or of moſt part of men received, whereby you do infer our Faith to hang upon the Multitude, which is not ſo: but I eſteem the Catholick Church to be as S. Auſtin defineth the ſame. Æſtimamus fidem Catholicam à rebus præteritis, præſentibus & futuris. i. We judge, ſaith he, the Catholick Faith, of that which hath been, is, and ſhall be. So that if you can be able to prove that your Faith and Church hath been from the beginning taught, and is, and ſhall be: then may you count your ſelves Catholick, otherwiſe not. And Catholick is a Greek word compounded of κατὰ, which ſignifieth after or according, and ὅλον, a ſum, or principal or whole. So that Catholick Church, or Catholick Faith, is as much to ſay, as the firſt, whole, ſound, or chiefeſt Faith.

The Popes Faith hangeth upon the multitude. Fides Catholica ſecundum Aug.

Bon. Doth St. Auſtin ſay ſo as he alleadgeth it? or doth he mean as he taketh the ſame? how ſay you Mr. Curtop?

Curtop. Indeed, my Lord, St. Auguſtine hath ſuch a ſaying, ſpeaking againſt the Donatiſts, that the Catholick Faith ought to be eſteemed of things in time paſt, and as they are practiced according to the ſame, and ought to be through all Ages, and not after a new manner, as the Donatiſts began to profeſs.

Philpot. You have ſaid well, Mr. Curtop, and after the meaning of S. Auſtin, and to confirm that which I have ſaid for the ſignification of Catholick.

Coven. Let the Book be ſeen my Lord.

Anno 1555.

Bon. I pray you, my Lord, be content, or in good Faith I will break even off and let all alone. Do you think the Catholick Church (until it was within theſe few years, in the which a few upon ſingularity have ſwerved from the ſame) have erred?

Phil. I do not think that the Catholick Church can err in Doctrine; but I require you to prove this Church of Rome to be the Catholick Church.

Curtop. I can prove that Ireneus (which was within an hundred years after Chriſt) came to Victor, then Biſhop of Rome, to ask his advice about the excommunication of certain Hereticks, the which he would not have done (by all likelyhood) if he had not taken him to be ſupream Head.

Where Mr. Curtop finds this I cannot ſay; but this I find that Euſebius doth report that Ireneus did reprove Victor Biſhop of Rome, for his raſh ſentence in excommunicating the Churches of Greece concerning the obſervation of the Feaſt of Eaſter. Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 16.

Covent. Mark well this Argument. How are you able to anſwer the ſame? Anſwer, if you can?

Phil. It is ſoon anſwered, my Lord, for that it is of no force; neither this fact of Ireneus maketh no more for the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, than mine hath done, which have been at Rome as well as he, and might have ſpoken with the Pope, if I had liſt: and yet I would none in England did favour his Supremacy more than I.

S. Aſ. You are the more to blame (by the Faith of my Body) for that you favour the ſame no better, ſince all the Catholick Church (until theſe few years) have taken him to be the Supream head of the Church, beſides this good man Ireneus.

Phil. That is not likely, that Ireneus ſo took him, or the Primitive Church: for I am able to ſhew ſeven General Councils after Ireneus time, wherein he was never ſo taken, which may be a ſufficient proof, that the Catholick Primitive Church never took him for Supream Head.

The other Biſhop. This man will never be ſatisfied, ſay what we can. It is but folly to reaſon any more with him.

Phil. O, my Lords, would you have me ſatisfied with nothing? Judge, I pray you, who of us hath better Authority, he which bringeth the example of one man going to Rome, or I that by theſe many General Councils am able to prove, that he was never ſo taken in many hundred years after Chriſt, as by Nicene, Epheſine, the firſt and ſecond Chalcedon, Conſtantinopolitan, Carthaginenſe, Aquilenſe.

Socr. lib. 5. cap. 22. Seven General Councils in which the Biſhop of Rome was never taken for Supream Head.

Coven. Why will you not admit the Church of Rome to be the Catholick Church?

Phil. Becauſe it followeth not the Primitive Catholick Church, neither agreeth with the ſame, no more than an Apple is like a Nut.

The Church of Rome diſſenteth from the Primitive Church.

Covent. Wherein doth it diſſent?

Phil. It were too long to recite all, but two things I will name, the Supremacy and Tranſubſtantiation.

Cur. As for Tranſubſtantiation, albeit it was ſet forth and decreed for an Article of Faith not much above 300 years, yet it was always believed in the Church.

Bon. Yea, that it was. Very well ſaid of you Mr. Curtop.

Tranſubſtantiation is but a late plantation.

Phil. Ye have ſaid right, that Tranſubſtantiation is but a late plantation of the Biſhop of Rome, and you are not able to ſhew any ancient Writer, that the Primitive Church did believe any ſuch thing; and with this Curtop ſhrank away. And immediately after the Ambaſſador of Spain came in, to whom my Lord of London went, leaving the other with me. To whom I ſaid, My Lords, if you can ſhew me that this Church of Rome (whereof you are Members) is the true Catholick Church, I ſhall be content to be one thereof, and as conformable to the ſame as you can require me in all things; for I know there is no ſalvation but within the Church.

John Philpot returneth again to the iſſue.

Coven. Can you diſprove that the Church of Rome is not the Catholick Church?

Rome is not the Catholick Church, and why.

Phil. Yea, that I am able, but I deſire rather to hear of you for the proof thereof. And ſeeing I cannot have my requeſt at your hands, neither be ſatisfied with any probable Authority. I will ſhew you good proof why it is not. For if the Primitive Church were Catholick, as it was indeed, and ought to be the form and School-miſtreſs of the Church to the worlds end; then is not the Church of Rome now the Catholick Church, which diſſenteth ſo far from the ſame both in Doctrine and uſe of the Sacraments.

Covent.

Anno 1555.

Covent. How prove you that the Church of Rome now diſſenteth in Doctrine and uſe of the Sacraments from the Primitive Church?

Phil. Compare the one with the other, and it ſhall ſoon appear; as you may ſee both in Euſebius and other Eccleſiaſtical and ancient writers.

Comparison between the Primitive Church and the Popes Catholick Church.

Covent. What have you to ſay more, why it is not the Catholick Church?

The faith of the Popes Catholick Church now was never Univerſal.

Phil. Becauſe it is not (by your interpretation of Catholick) Univerſal, neither ever was, albeit you falſely perſwade the People that it is ſo. For the World being divided into three parts, Aſia, Affrica, and Europa; two parts thereof, Aſia, and Affrica profeſſing Chriſt as well as we did never conſent to the Church of Rome, which is of Europa; which is a ſufficient teſtimony that your faith was never Univerſal.

Covent. How prove you that?

Phil. All the Hiſtoriographers, which write of the proceedings of the Church, do teſtifie the ſame. Beſides that, this preſent time doth declare that to be true which I ſay. For at this preſent the Church of Aſia and Affrica do not conſent to the Church of Rome. Yea and beſides all this, moſt part of Europa doth not agree, neither allow the Church of Rome; as Germany, the Kingdom of Denmark, the Kingdom of Pole, a great part of France, England, and Zeland, which is a manifeſt probation that your Church is not Univerſal. And after this, the Biſhop of London called away the other Biſhops, and left with me divers gentlemen, with certain of his Chaplains, as Doctor Saverſon an Engliſhman, which had proceeded Doctor in Bononie, who after began with me in this matter.

Doctor Saver. Mr. Philpot, I remember you beyond-Sea ſince the time you reaſoned with a Frier (a notable learned man) coming from Venice to Padua in a barge.

Phil. I cannot forget that; for the Frier threatned me to accuſe me of Hereſie as ſoon as he came to Padua, for that I talked with him ſo boldly of the truth. He was no ſuch learned man as you name him to be, but onely in his School points a good Purgatorie Frier.

Doctor Saver. Well, he was a learned man for all that. And I am ſory to hear that you this day having communed with ſo many notable learned men, are no more conformable to them than you be.

Philpot. I will be conformable to all them that be conformable to Chriſt in his word. And I pray you good Mr. Doctor, be not ſo conformable to pleaſe men more then God, contrary to your learning for worldly eſtimations ſake.

D. Saver. No that I am not. Upon what occaſion ſhould you think thus of me?

Phil. Upon no evil that I do know of you Mr. Doctor; but I ſpeak as one wiſhing that you ſhould not be led away from the truth for promotions ſake, as many Doctors be now adays.

For the further debating of this matter that Cyprian doth allow no ſuch thing, read the anſwer of Mr. Newel to M. Dorman.

D. Saver. I have heard your arguments hitherto, and me thinketh that a great many of the old ancient writers be againſt you in that you do not allow the Church of Rome, neither the ſupremacy; for Saint Cyprian (which is an old ancient writer) doth allow the B. of Rome to be ſupreme head of the Church.

Phil That I am ſure of he doth not. For he, writing unto Cornelius then Biſhop of Rome, calleth him but his companion and his fellow Biſhop, neither attributed to him the name either of Pope, or elſe of any uſurped terms which now be aſcribed to the Biſhop of Rome to the ſetting forth of his dignity.

Saver. You cannot be able to ſhew that Saint Cyprian calleth Cornelius his fellow Biſhop.

* Cyp. lib. 1 epi. 3. D. Saverſon hath left his book to Mr. Philpot. Cyp. 11, 4. epi. 2 cap 16. Nic. conc. 3. Patriarchs only be named, to whom afterward the Patriarch of Conſtantinople was alſo joyned.

Philpot. I will wager with you what I am able to make, that I can ſhew it you in Cyprian, as I have ſaid.

* D. Saver. I will lay none other wager with you, but book for book that it is not ſo.

Philpot. I agree thereto, and I pray you one of my Lords Chaplains to fet us Cyprian hither for the trial hereof. And with that one of them went to my Lords ſtudy and brought forth Cyprian, and by and by he turned to the firſt book of his Epiſtles, the third Epiſtle, and there would have ſeemed to have gathered a ſtrong argument for the ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, becauſe he ſaith; It goeth not well with the Church when the high Prieſt is not obeyed, which ſupplieth the ſteed of Chriſt, after Gods Word, and the conſent of his fellow Biſhops and the agreement of the People.

Cyprian hath alſo theſe words following in the ſame Epiſtle: it was declared amongſt us, and it is according to juſtice and equitie that every mans cauſe ſhould be heard where the fault was committed, and to every ſeveral Paſtor there is a portion of the flock appointed to rule and govern, for the which he muſt make an account before God. Cypri. lib. 4. Epiſt. 2.

D. Saver. How can you avoid this place which maketh ſo plainly for the Biſhop of Romes Supremacy?

Phil. It maketh not ſo plain, Mr. Doctor, on your ſide, as you gather, as by and by I will give you to underſtand. But firſt I challenge the wager which we made, that your book is mine. For here you may ſee that he calleth Cornelius his fellow B. as he doth alſo in other places. And now for the underſtanding of that place, you do miſconſtrue it, to take the high Prieſt onely for the Biſhop of Rome, and otherwiſe then it was in his time. For there were by the Nicene Council four Patriarchs appointed, the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, the Patriarch of Alexandria, and the Patriarch of Rome, of which four, the Patriarch of Rome was placed loweſt in the Council, and ſo continued many years, for the time of ſeven or eight general Councils, as I am able to ſhew.

Therefore Saint Cyprian writing to Cornelius Patriarch of Rome (whom he calleth his fellow Biſhop) findeth himſelf offended, that certain Hereticks being juſtly excommunicated by him (as the Novatians were) did flee from his Dioceſs, which was their chief Biſhop (refuſing to be obedient to him and to be reformed) to the B. of Rome and to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, and there were received in communion of the congregation, in derogation of good order and diſcipline in the Church, and to the maintaining of Hereſies and Schiſms: and that Hereſies did ſpring up and Schiſms daily riſe hereof, that obedience was not given to the Prieſt of God, nor was it once conſidered him to be in the Church for the time the Prieſt, and for the time the judge in Chriſts ſtead (as in the decree of Nicene Council was appointed) not the Biſhop of Rome onely, but every Patriarch in his precinct: who had every one of them a Colledge or Cathedral Church of learned Prieſts, in hearing of whom by a convocation of his fellow Biſhops, with the conſent of the People, all Hereſies were determined by the Word of God; and this is the meaning of Saint Cyprian.

D. Saver. You take it ſo, but it ſeemeth to me otherwiſe.

Phil. Upon what ground it ſhould ſeem otherwiſe unto you I know not, but this meaning which I have declared, the general Councils, ſeven or eight one after another confirmed it ſo to be, which did not allow one ſupreme head onely.

Pend. There were not ſo many general Councils, but four onely allowed.

Phil. That is not ſo, Mr. Pendleton, although there be four ſpecially allowed for the confirmation of the Trinity: but beſides theſe four there were many other general Councils, as you may learn by many writers.

How S. Cyprian meaneth Chriſt to build his Church upon Peter. Cyp. De ſimplicitate Prælatorum. Tract. 10. in Ioan.

A Chaplain. Did not Chriſt build his Church upon Peter? Saint Cyprian ſaith ſo.

Phil. S. Cyprian De ſimplicitate Prælatorum declareth in what reſpect he ſo ſaid; In perſona unius dedit Dominus omnibus claves, ut omnium unitatem denunciaret. i. God gave in perſon of one man the keyes to all, that he might ſignifie the unity of all men. And alſo S. Auguſtine ſaith in the tenth treatiſe of S. John, Si in Petro non eſſet eccleſiæ myſterium, non ei diceret Dominus, tibi dabo claves. Si autem hoc Petro dictum eſt, non habet Eccleſia; ſi autem Eccleſia habet, quando claves accepit, eccleſiam totam deſignavit: i. If in Peter had not been the myſtery of the Church the Lord had not ſaid unto him, I will give unto thee the keyes. For if that were ſaid to Peter, the Church hath them not; if the Church have them when Peter received them, he ſignified the whole Church. And alſo S. Hier. a Prieſt of Rome, writing to Nepotian, ſaith, That all Churches do lean to their own paſtors, where he ſpeaketh of the Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy or Regiment, where he maketh no mention of the Biſhop of Rome. And Ad Evagrium, he ſaith, That whereſoever a Biſhop be, whether it be at Rome, or at Evagie, or at Rhegium, he is of one power and of one juriſdiction.

Hieronym. ad Nepotianum.

Hieronym. ad Evagrium.

D. Saver. S. Hierome De cœleſti Hierarchia? It was Dionyſius you mean.

Phil. I ſay not that Hierome wrote any book ſo intituled. But I ſay, that in the Epiſtle by me alledged, he maketh mention of the Eccleſiaſtical regiment.

D. Saver. I wonder you will ſtand ſo ſtedfaſt in your error to your own deſtruction.

Phil. I am ſure we are in no error, by the promiſe of Chriſt made to the faithful once, which is, that he will give to his true Church ſuch a Spirit of Wiſdom, that the Adverſaries thereof ſhould never be able to reſiſt. And by this I know we are of the truth, for that neither by reaſoning, neither by writing, your Synagogue of Rome is able to anſwer. Where is there one of you all that ever hath been able to anſwer any of the godly learned Miniſters of Germany, who have diſcloſed your Counterfeit Religion? Which of you all (at this day) is able to anſwer Calvins Inſtitutions, which is Miniſter of Geneva.

False ſlander

D. Saver. A godly Miniſter indeed of receipt of cutpurſes, and Runagate Traytors. And of late I can tell you, there is ſuch contention fallen between him and his own ſects, that he was fain to flee the Town, about predeſtination. I tell you truth, for I came by Geneva hither.

Philpot. I am ſure you Blaſpheme that godly man, and that godly Church where he is Miniſter; as it is your Churches condition, when you cannot anſwer men by learning, to oppreſs them with Blaſphemies and falſe reports. For in the matter of predeſtination he is in none other opinion then all the Doctors of the Church be, a-greeing to the Scriptures.

December. Saver. Men be able to anſwer him if they liſt. And I pray you which of you have anſwered Biſhop Fiſhers book.

Phil. Yes (Maſter Doctor) that book is anſwered and anſwered again, if you liſt to ſeek what hath been written againſt him.

D Story cometh in. And after this Doctor Story came in. To whom I ſaid, M. Doctor, you have done me great injurie, and without law have ſtraitly impriſoned me, more like a dog then a man. And beſides this you have not kept promiſe with me, for you promiſed that I ſhould be judged the next day after.

Happy are you when they revile you, and ſay all evil againſt you for my names ſake Matth 5. Story. I am come now to keep promiſe with thee. Was there ever ſuch a phantaſtical man as this is? Nay, he is no man, he is a beaſt, yea, theſe Hereticks be worſe then brute beaſts: for they will upon a vain ſingularitie take upon them to be wiſer then all men, being indeed very fools and aſſe heads, not able to maintain that which of an arrogant obſtinancie they do ſtand in.

Phil. Maſter Doctor, I am content to abide your railing judgment of me now. Say what you will, I am content, for I am under your feet to be troden on as you liſt. God forgive it you; yet I am no Heretick. Neither you nor any other ſhall be able to prove that I hold any jot againſt the Word of God otherwiſe then a Chriſtian man ought.

The Papiſts will not be ruled by the Scriptures without their own judge. Story. The Word of God? Forſooth the Word of God? It is but a folly to reaſon with theſe Hereticks, for they are incurable and deſperate. But yet I may reaſon with thee, not that I have any hope to win thee; whom wilt thou appoint to judge of the word whereto thou ſtandeſt?

Phil. Verily the word it ſelf.

Story. Do you not ſee the Ignorance of this beaſtly Heretick? He willeth the word to be judged of the word. Can the word ſpeak?

Phil. If I cannot prove that which I have ſaid by good Authority, I will be content to be counted an Heretick and an Ignorant perſon, and further what you pleaſe.

Story. Let us hear what wiſe Authority thou canſt bring in.

John 12. What ſay you now M. Doctor? Phil. It is the ſaying of Chriſt in S. John, Verbum quod locutus ſum judicabit in noviſſimo die, The word which I have ſpoken, ſaith Chriſt, ſhall judge in the laſt day. If the word ſhall judge in the laſt day, much more it ought to judge our doings now: And I am ſure I have my judge on my ſide, who ſhall abſolve and juſtifie me in another World. Howſoever now it ſhall pleaſe you by Authority unrighteouſly to judge of me and others, ſure I am in another World to judge you.

Mr. Doctor having not to anſwer falleth to railing. Story. What? you purpoſe to be a ſtinking Martyr, and to ſit in judgment with Chriſt at the laſt day to judge the twelve tribes of Iſrael?

Phil. Yea Sir, I doubt not thereof, having the promiſe of Chriſt, if I die for righteouſneſs ſake, which you have begun to perſecute in me. Anno 1555.

Story. I told you it was but vain to argue with this Heretick; he is drowned in his Hereſies without all learning.

Phil. Sir I have brought you, for that I have ſaid, good Authority out of Gods Book, to the which you anſwer nothing, but go about ſtill to give railing judgment againſt me without any cauſe.

Story. I will come to you by and by. When as the judge in Weſtminſter Hall giveth Sentence, doth the word give Sentence, or the judge? tell me.

Gods judgment and Civil judgment not alike. Phil. Civil matters be ſubject to Civil men, and they have Authority by the word, to be judges of them. But the Word of God is not ſubject to mans judgment, but ought to judge all the Wiſdom, thoughts and doings of men, and therefore your compariſon diſproveth nothing that I have ſaid, neither anſwereth any whit thereto.

Story. Wilt thou not allow the interpretation of the Church upon the Scriptures?

The judgment of the Church how far it ſaveth. Philpot. Yes, if it be according to the Word of the True Church: and this I ſay to you, as I have ſaid heretofore, that if ye can prove the Church of Rome (whereof ye are) to be the True Catholick Church which I ought to follow, I will be as ready to yield thereto (as long as it can be ſo proved) as you may deſire me.

Story. What a fellow is this? he will believe nothing but what he liſt himſelf. Are we not in poſſeſſion of the Church? have not our forefathers theſe many hundred years taken this Church for the Catholick Church whereof we are now? And if we had none other proof but this, it were ſufficient; for the preſcription of time maketh a good title in the Law. Preſcription of time.

Preſcription of time maketh no title in Gods matters. Phil. You do well, Mr. Doctor, to alledge preſcription of many years, for it is all that you have to ſhew for your ſelves. But you muſt underſtand, In divinis nulla occurrit præſcriptio, that preſcription hath no place in matters belonging unto God, as I am able to ſhew by the teſtimony of many Doctors.

Story. Well Sir, you are like to go after your Father Latimer the Sophiſter, and Ridley, who had nothing to alledge for himſelf, but that he had learned his Hereſie of Cranmer. When I came to him with a poor Batchelor of Art, he trembled as though he had had the palſie, as theſe Hereticks have always ſome token of fear whereby a man may know them, as you may ſee this mans eies do tremble in his head. But I diſpatched them; and I tell thee that there hath been yet never an one burnt, but I have ſpoken with him, and have been a cauſe of his diſpatch.

D. Story confeſſeth himſelf to be the chief diſpatcher of all Gods Saints that ſuffered in Queen Maries time.

Phil. You have the more to anſwer for, Mr. Doctor, as you ſhall feel in another World, how much ſoever you do now Triumph of your proceedings.

Story. I tell thee I will never be confeſſed thereof. And becauſe I cannot now tarry to ſpeak with my Lord, I pray one of you tell my Lord, that my coming was to ſignifie to his Lordſhip, That he muſt out of hand rid this Heretick out of the way. And going away he ſaid to me, I certifie thee, that thou maiſt thank none other man but me.

Phil. I thank you therefore with all mine heart, and God forgive it you.

Stories cruelty. Story. What? doeſt thou thank me? If I had thee in my ſtudy half an hour, I think I ſhould make you ſing another ſong.

Phil. No, Mr. Doctor, I ſtand upon too ſure a ground to be overthrown by you now. And thus they departed all away from me one after another, until I was left all alone. And afterwards with my Keeper going to my Cole-houſe, as I went, I met with my Lord of London, who ſpake unto me gently, as he hath hitherto in words ſaying;

John Philpot left alone. London. Philpot, if there be any pleaſure I may ſhew you in my houſe, I pray you require it, and you ſhall have it.

Phil. My Lord, The pleaſure that I will require of your L. is to haſten my judgment which is committed unto you, and to diſpatch me forth of this miſerable World, unto my eternal reſt. And for all this fair ſpeech I cannot attain hitherto this fortnights ſpace, neither fire nor candle, neither yet good lodging. But it is good for a man to be brought low in this World, and to be counted amongſt the vileſt, that he may in time of reward receive exaltation and glory. Therefore praiſed be God, that hath humbled me, and given me grace with gladneſs to be content therewithal. Let all that love the truth ſay Amen,

Thus endeth the fifth Tragedy.

The ſixth Examination of John Philpot had before the right honourable Lords, the Lord Chamberlain to the Queens Majeſtie, the Vicount Hereford, commonly called Lord Ferras, the Lord Rich, the Lord S. Johns, the Lord Windſore, the Lord Shandois, Sir John Bridges, Lieutenant of the Tower, and two other more whoſe names I know not, with the Biſhop of London and Doctor Chedſey, the ſixth day of November. Anno 1555.

The ſixth examination of Mr. Philpot before certain Lords, and the B. of London.

Philpot. Before that I was called afore the Lords, and whiles they were in ſitting down, the Biſhop of London came aſide to me and whiſpered in mine ear, willing me to uſe my ſelf before the Lords of the Queens Majeſties Council prudently, and to take heed what I ſaid; and thus he pretended to give me Counſel becauſe he wiſhed me to do well, as I might now do if I liſt. And after the Lords and other worſhipful Gentlemen of the Queens Majeſties Servants were ſet, my Lord of London placed himſelf at the end of the table, and called me to him, and by the Lords I was placed at the upper end againſt him; where I kneeling down, the Lords commanded me to ſtand up, and after in this manner the Biſhop began to ſpeak.

The words of B: Boner to Mr. Philpot.

London. Mr. Philpot, I have heretofore both privately my ſelf, and openly before the Lords of the Clergy, more times then once cauſed you to be talked withal to reform you of your errors, but I have not found you yet ſo tractable as I would wiſh: Wherefore now I have deſired theſe honourable Lords of the temporalty and of the Q. Majeſties Council, who have taken pains with me this day, I thank them therefore, to hear you what you can ſay, that they may be judges whether I have ſought all means to do you good or no: and I dare be bold to ſay in their behalf, that if you ſhew your ſelf conformable to the Q. Majeſties proceedings, you ſhall find as much favour for your deliverance, as you can wiſh. I ſpeak not this to fawn upon you, but to bring you home into the Church. Now let them hear what you can ſay.

Mr. Philpots anſwer to the Biſhop.

Phil. My Lord, I thank God of this day, that I have ſuch an honourable audience to declare my mind before. And I cannot but commend your Lordſhips equity in this behalf, which agreeth with the order of the primitive Church, which was, if any body had been ſuſpected of Hereſie, as I am now, he ſhould be called firſt before the Archbiſhop or B. of the Dioceſs where he was ſuſpected; ſecondly in the preſence of others his fellow Biſhops and learned elders; and thirdly in hearing of the laitie: where after the judgment of Gods Word declared, and with the aſſent of our Biſhops and conſent of the People, he was condemned for an Heretick, or abſolved. And the ſecond point of that good order I have found at your Lordſhips hands already in being called before you and your fellow Biſhops, and now have the third ſort of men, at whoſe hands I truſt to find more righteouſneſs in my cauſe then I have found with my Lords of the Clergie; God grant I may have at laſt the judgment of Gods Word concerning the ſame.

Hereticks in the primitive Church onely condemned to exile

London. Mr. Philpot, I pray you ere you go any further, tell my Lords here plainly whether you were by me or by my procurement committed to priſon or not, and whether I have ſhewed you any cruelty ſithen ye have been committed to my priſon.

Philpot. If it ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhip to give me leave to declare forth my matter, I will touch that afterward.

B. Boner not the cauſe of Mr. Philpots impriſonment.

Rich. Anſwer firſt of all to my Lords two queſtions, and then proceed forth to the matter. How ſay you? were you impriſoned by my Lord or no? can you find any fault ſince with his cruel uſing of you?

Phil. I cannot lay to my Lords charge the cauſe of my impriſonment, neither may I ſay that he hath uſed me cruelly, but rather for my part I may ſay that I have found more gentleneſs at his Lordſhips hands, then I did at mine own Ordinaries, for the time I have been within his priſon, for that he hath called me three or four times to mine anſwer, to the which I was not called in a twelvemonth and a half before.

Rich. Well, now go to your matter.

Phil. The matter is, that I am impriſoned for the diſputations had by me in the Convocation houſe againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, which matter was not moved principally by me, but by the prolocutor, with the conſent of the Queens Majeſtie and of the whole houſe, and that houſe, being a member of the Parliament houſe, ought to be a place of free ſpeech for all men of the houſe, by the ancient and laudable cuſtom of this Realm. Wherefore I think my ſelf to have ſuſtained hitherto great injurie for ſpeaking my Conſcience freely in ſuch a place as I might lawfully do it: and I deſire your honourable Lordſhips judgment which be of the Parliament Houſe, whether of right I ought to be impeached therefore, and ſuſtain the loſs of my living, (as I have done) and moreover of my life, as it is ſought.

The Convocation no part of the Parliament Houſe, ſaith the Lord Rich.

Rich. You are deceived herein; for the Convocation Houſe is no part of the Parliament Houſe.

Phil. My Lord, I have always underſtood the contrarie by ſuch as are more expert men in things of this Realm then I: and again, the title of every Act leadeth me to think otherwiſe, which alledgeth the agreement of the ſpiritualtie and temporaltie aſſembled together.

Rich. Yea, that is meant of the ſpiritual Lords of the upper houſe.

Whether the Convocation be part of the Parliament Houſe or no yet free liberty was given by the Queen every man to ſpeak his Conſcience.

Windſor. Indeed the Convocation Houſe is called together by one writ of the Summons of the Parliament of an old cuſtom; notwithſtanding that houſe is no part of the Parliament Houſe.

Phil. My Lords, I muſt be contented to abide your judgments in this behalf.

Rich. We have told you the truth: Mary yet we would not that you ſhould be troubled for any thing that there was ſpoken, ſo that you having ſpoken amiſs do declare now that you are ſorry therefore.

Lond. My Lords, he hath ſpoken there manifeſt Hereſie, yea, and there ſtoutly maintained the ſame againſt the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar (and with that he put off his cap, that all the Lords might reverence and vail their bonnets at that idol as he did) and would not allow the real preſence of the body and Blood of Chriſt in the ſame: yet my Lords, God forbid that I ſhould go about to ſhew him extremitie for ſo doing, in caſe he will repent and revoke his wicked ſayings; and if in faith he will ſo do, with your Lordſhips conſent he ſhall be releaſed by and by; if he will not he ſhall have the extremitie of the law, & that ſhortly.

Chamb. My Lord of London ſpeaketh reaſonably unto you: take it whiles it is offered you.

Rich. How ſay you? Will you acknowledge the real preſence of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, as all the learned men of this Realm do, in the Maſs, and as I do, and will believe as long as I live, I do proteſt it?

Phil. My Lord, I do acknowledge in the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt ſuch a preſence, as the Word of God doth allow and teach me.

How Boner taketh in the Sacrament, to be both the ſign and the thing ſignified.

Rich. That ſhall be no otherwiſe then you liſt.

Lond. A Sacrament is the ſign of a holy thing; So that there is both the ſign which is the accident (as the whiteneſs, roundneſs, and ſhape of Bread) and there is alſo the thing it ſelf, as very Chriſt both God and Man. But theſe Hereticks will have the Sacrament to be but bare ſigns. How ſay you? declare unto my Lords here whether you do allow the thing it ſelf in the Sacrament or no.

Both the ſign and the thing ſignified in due reſpects be in the Sacrament.

Phil. I do confeſs that in the Lords Supper there is in due reſpects both the ſign and the thing ſignified, when it is duly Miniſtred after the inſtitution of Chriſt.

London. You may ſee how he goeth about the buſh (as he hath done before) with my Lords of the Clergie, and dare not utter his mind plainly.

Rich. Shew us what manner of preſence you allow in the Sacrament.

Phil. If it pleaſe you, my Lord of London, to give me leave to proceed orderly thereunto, and to let me declare my mind without interruption, I will throughly open my mind therein.

L. Shand. I pray you my Lord, let him ſpeak his mind.

Ye ſay ye ſeek not his life, and yet ye know to anſwer to that ye ask will be his death.

Phil. My Lords, that at the firſt I have not plainly declared my judgment unto you the reaſon is this, becauſe I cannot ſpeak hereof without the danger of my life.

Rich. There is none of us here that ſeeketh thy life, or means to take any advantage of that thou ſhalt ſpeak.

Phil. Although I miſtruſt not your honourable Lordſhips that be here of the Temporalty; yet here is one that ſitteth againſt me (pointing to my Lord of London) that will lay it to my charge even to the death. Notwithſtanding, ſeeing your Honours do require me to declare my mind of the preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, that ye may perceive that I am not aſhamed of the Goſpel of Chriſt, neither do maintain any opinion without probable and ſufficient authority of the Scripture, I will ſhew you frankly my mind without all colour, whatſoever ſhall enſue unto me therefore, ſo that my Lord of London will not let me to utter my mind.

Rich. My Lord, permit him to ſay what he can, ſeeing he is willing to ſhew his mind.

Lond. I am content, my Lords, let him ſay what he can, I will hear him.

The proteſtation of John Philpot before the Lords.

Phil. That which I do intend to ſpeak unto you (right honourable Lords) I do proteſt here, firſt before God and his Angels, that I ſpeak it not of vain-glory, neither of ſingularity, neither of wilful ſtubbornneſs, but truly upon a good Conſcience, grounded on Gods Word, againſt the which I dare not do for fear of damnation which will follow that which is done contrary to knowledge. Neither do I diſagree to the proceedings of this Realm in the Religion, for that I love not the Queen, (whom I love from the bottom of my heart,) but becauſe I ought to love and fear God in his Word more than man in his Laws, though I ſtand, as I ſeem, to do, in this conſideration, and for none other, as God I call to witneſs.

Two things wherein the Clergy deceiveth the whole Realm.

There be two things principally, by the which the Clergy at this day doth deceive the whole Realm; that is, the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and the name of the Catholick Church: the which both they do uſurp, having indeed none of them both. And as touching their Sacrament, which they term of the Altar, I ſay now as I ſaid in the Convocation-houſe, that it is not the Sacrament of Chriſt, neither in the ſame is there any manner of Chriſts preſence. Wherefore they deceive the Queens Majeſty, and you of the Nobility of this Realm, in making you to believe that to be a Sacrament which is none, and cauſe you to commit manifeſt Idolatry in worſhipping that for God, which is no God. And in teſtimony of this to be true, beſides manifeſt proof, which I am able to make to the Queens Majeſty, and to all you of her Nobility, I will yield my life. The which to do, if it were not upon a ſure ground, it were to my utter damnation.

The Papiſts have neither the Sacrament of the Lords Body nor the true Church.

Papiſts untruly uſurp the name of the Church.

And where they take on them the name of the Catholick Church (whereby they blind many folks eyes) they are nothing ſo, calling you from the true Religion which was revealed and taught in King Edwards time, unto vain ſuperſtition. And this I will ſay for the trial hereof, that if they can prove themſelves to be the Catholick Church (as they ſhall never be able to do) I will never be againſt their doings, but revoke all that I have ſaid. And I ſhall deſire you, my Lords, to be a mean for me to the Queens Majeſty, that I may be brought to the juſt trial hereof. Yea, I will not refuſe to ſtand againſt ten of the beſt of them in this Realm. And if they be able to prove otherwiſe than I have ſaid, either by writing or by reaſoning, with good and lawful Authority, I will here promiſe to recant whatſoever I have ſaid, and to conſent to them in all points. And in the declaration of theſe things more at large, which now I write in ſum, the Biſhop of London eftſoons would have interrupted me, but the Lords procured me liberty to make out my tale, to the great grief of the Lord Biſhop of London, as it appeared by the dumps he was in.

Mr. Philpot offereth himſelf to ſtand againſt ten of the beſt Learned in the Realm, in the proof of his cauſe.

Lond. It hath been told me before, that you love to make a long tale.

Rich. All Hereticks do boaſt of the Spirit of God, and every one would have a Church by himſelf; as Joan of Kent and the Anabaptiſts. I had my ſelf Joan of Kent a ſevennight in my houſe after the Writ was out for her to be burnt, where my Lord of Canterbury, and Biſhop Ridley reſorted almoſt daily unto her: but ſhe was ſo high in the Spirit, that they could do nothing with her for all their Learning. But ſhe went wilfully unto the fire, was burnt, and ſo do you now.

Phil. As for Joan of Kent, ſhe was a vain Woman (I knew her well) and an Heretick indeed, well worthy to be burnt, becauſe ſhe ſtood againſt one of the manifeſt Articles of our Faith, contrary to the Scriptures: and ſuch vain ſpirits be ſoon known from the true Spirit of God and his Church, for that the ſame abideth within the limits of Gods Word and will not go out of the ſame, neither ſtubbornly maintain any thing contrary to the Word, as I have Gods Word throughly on my ſide to ſhew for that I ſtand in. Anno 1555.

The Popes Catholicks, when they have no reaſon wherewith to perſwade, they fall to railing, and to charge men with ſtubbornneſs.

Lond. I pray you, how will you joyn me theſe two Scriptures together; Pater major me eſt; & pater & ego unum ſumus. I muſt interpret the ſame, becauſe my Lords here underſtand not the Latin, that is to ſay, The Father is greater than I; and I and the Father are one: But I cry you mercy, my Lords, I have miſpoken, in ſaying you underſtand no Latin; for the moſt part of you underſtand Latin as well as I. But I ſpeak in conſideration of my Lord Shandois and Mr. Bridges his Brother, whom I take to be no great Latin men. Now ſhew your cunning, and joyn theſe two Scriptures by the Word if you can.

Phil. Yes that I can right well. For we muſt underſtand that in Chriſt there be two natures, the Divinity and Humanity, and in reſpect of his Humanity it is ſpoken of Chriſt, The Father is greater than I. But in reſpect of his Deity he ſaid again, The Father and I be one. Pſalm 8.

Lond. But what Scripture have you?

Phil. Yes I have ſufficient Scripture for the proof of that I have ſaid. For the firſt, it is written of Chriſt in the Pſalms, Diminuiſti eum paulo minus ab Angelis; Thou haſt made him a little leſſer than Angels. It is the 15. Pſalm, beginning Cœli enarrant. And there I miſreckoned, wherewithal my Lord took me.

Lond. It is in Domine Dominus noſter. Ye may ſee, my Lords, how well this man is uſed to ſay his Mattins.

Phil. Though I ſay not Mattins in ſuch order as your Lordſhip meaneth; yet I remember of old, that Domine Dominus noſter, and Cœli enarrant, be not far aſunder: and albeit I miſnamed the Pſalm, it is no prejudice to the Truth that I have proved.

Lond. What ſay you then to the ſecond Scripture? how couple you that by the Word to the other?

Scripture alleadged.

Phil. The Text it ſelf declareth, that notwithſtanding Chriſt did abaſe himſelf in our human nature, yet he is ſtill one in Deity with the Father. And this St. Paul to the Hebrews doth more at large ſet forth. And as I have by the Scriptures joyned theſe two Scriptures together, ſo am I able to do in all other Articles of Faith which we ought to believe, and by the manifeſt Word of God to expound them.

Lon. How can that be, ſeeing S. Paul ſaith, That the letter killeth, but it is the ſpirit that giveth life.

How the Letter killeth, and whom.

Phil. St. Paul meaneth not the Word of God written, in it ſelf killeth, which is the Word of life, and faithful teſtimony of the Lord; but that the Word is unprofitable and killeth him that is void of the Spirit of God, although he be the wiſeſt man of the world, and therefore S. Paul ſaid, That the Goſpel to ſome was a ſavour of life unto life, and to ſome other a ſavour of death unto death. 2 Cor. 3.

Alſo an example hereof we have in the ſixth of John, of them who hearing the Word of God without the Spirit were offended thereby; wherefore Chriſt ſaid, The fleſh profiteth nothing, it is the ſpirit that quickneth. John 6.

Lond. What? do you underſtand that of St. Paul and of St. John ſo?

Phil. It is not mine own interpretation, it is agreeable to the Word in other places; and I have learned the ſame of ancient Fathers interpreting it likewiſe. And to the Corinthians it is written, Animalis homo non percipit ea quæ ſunt Spiritus Dei; ſpiritualis dijudicat omnia. The natural man perceiveth not the things that be of the Spirit of God, but the ſpiritual man which is indued with the ſpirit judgeth all things. 1 Cor. 6. 1 Cor. 2.

Lond. You ſee, my Lords, that this man will have his own mind, and will wilfully caſt away himſelf. I am ſorry for him.

Phil. The words that I have ſpoken be none of mine but the Goſpel, whereon I ought to ſtand. And if you my Lord of London can bring better Authority for the Faith you will draw me unto, than that which I ſtand upon, I will gladly hear the ſame by you or by any other in this Realm.

Where-

Anno 1555.

M. Philpot requeſt to the Lords.

Wherefore I kneeling down beſought the Lords to be good unto me a poor Gentleman, that would fain live in the world if I might, and teſtifie as you have heard me to ſay this day, that if any man can prove that I ought to be of any other manner of Faith then that of which I now am, and can prove the ſame ſufficiently, I will be neither wilful, neither deſperate, as my Lord of London would make you believe me to be.

Rich. What Country man be you? are you of the Philpots of Hampſhire.

Phil. Yea, my Lord, I was Sir P. Philpots Son of Hampſhire.

Rich. He is my neer kinſman? wherefore I am the more ſorry for him.

Phil. I thank your Lordſhip that it pleaſeth you to challenge kindred of a poor Priſoner.

Rich. In Faith I would go an hundred miles on my bare feet to do you good.

Chamb. He may do well enough if he liſt.

St. John. Mr. Philpot, you are my Countryman, and I would be glad you ſhould do well.

Rich. You ſaid even now, that you would deſire to maintain your belief before ten of the beſt in the Realm. You did not well to compare with the Nobility of the Realm. But what if you have ten of the beſt in the Realm to hear you, will you be tried by them?

Phil. My Lord your Lordſhip miſtaketh me to think that I challenge ten of the beſt of the Nobility in this Realm. It was no part of my mind, but I meant of the beſt Learned on the contrary ſide.

Rich. Well, I take your meaning: what if means be made to the Queens Majeſty, that you ſhall have your requeſt, will you be judged by them?

John Philpot will not be judged by his Adverſaries, but by the hearers, ſo far as they ſhall judge by Gods Word.

Phil. My Lord, it is not meet that a man ſhould be judged by his Adverſaries.

Rich. By whom then would you be judged?

Phil. I will make your Honors judges, that ſhall be hearers of us.

Rich. I dare be bold to procure for you of the Queens Majeſty that you ſhall have ten Learned men to reaſon with you, and twenty or forty of the Nobility to hear, ſo you will promiſe to abide their judgement. How ſay you, will you promiſe here afore my Lords ſo to do?

Phil. I will be contented to be judged by them.

Ri. Yea, but will you promiſe to agree to their judgment?

Phil. There be cauſes why I may not ſo do, unleſs I were ſure they would judg according to the Word of God.

Rich. O, I perceive you will have no man judge but your ſelf, and think your ſelf wiſer then all the Learned men in this Realm.

The true order of judgment uſed in the primitive Church.

Phil My Lord, I ſeek not to be mine own judge, but am content to be judged by other, ſo that the order of judgment in matters of Religion be kept that was in the primitive Church, which is, firſt that Gods will by his Word was ſought, and thereunto both the Spiritualty and Temporalty was gathered together, and gave their conſents and judgment, and ſuch kind of judgment I will ſtand to.

B. Boner bewrayeth his own ignorance.

Lond. My Lords he would make you believe that he were profoundly ſeen in ancient writers of the judgments of the Primitive Church, and there was never any ſuch manner of judgment uſed as he now talketh of.

Phil. In the Epiſtles of St. Cyprian I am able to ſhew it you.

B. Boners dares not reach out his Book.

Lond. Ah, I tell you there is no ſuch thing; fetch me Cypriau hither.

Phil. You ſhall find it otherwiſe when the Book cometh. And Doctor Chedſey his Chaplain (whom he appointed to fetch his Book) whiſpered the Biſhop in his ear, and fetcht not the Book, by likelyhood that he ſhould have ſuſtained the reproach thereof if the Book had been fetcht. Well my Lord, quoth I, Mr. Doctor knoweth it is ſo, or elſe he would have fetcht the Book ere this.

Rich You would have none other judge, I ſee, but the Word.

Phil. Yes my Lord: I will be tried by the Word, and by ſuch as will judge according to the Word. As for an example, if there were a controverſie between your Lordſhip and another upon the words of a Statute, muſt not the words of the Statute judge and determine the controverſie?

Rich. No marry, the Judges of the Law may determine of the meaning thereof.

Lond. He hath brought as good an example againſt himſelf as can be.

B. Boner triumphs before the victory.

And here the Biſhop thought he had good handfaſt againſt me, and therefore enlarged it with many words to the judgment of the Church.

As a Judge of the Law may not diſcern the meaning of a Statute otherwiſe then agreeable to the words, ſo hath the Church no Power to judge the meaning of Gods Word contrary to it ſelf.

The Lords. He hath overthrown himſelf by his own argument.

Phil. My Lords, it ſeemeth to your Honors that you have great advantage of me by the example I brought in, to expreſs my cauſe, but if it be pondered throughly, it maketh wholly with me, and nothing againſt me, as my Lord of London hath pretended. For I will ask of my Lord Rich here whom I know to have good knowledge in the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, albeit a Judge may diſcern the meaning of a Statute agreeable to the words, whether the ſame may judge a meaning contrary to the expreſs words or no?

Rich. He cannot ſo do:

Phil. Even ſo ſay I, that no man ought to judge the Word of God to have a meaning contrary to the expreſs words thereof, as this falſe Church of Rome doth in many things; and with this the Lords ſeemed to be ſatisfied, and made no further replication herein.

objection of the Lord Rich why the words of the Scripture are not to be taken, this is my Body.

Rich. I marvel then why you do deny the expreſs words of Chriſt in the Sacrament, ſaying, This is my Body, and yet you will not ſtick to ſay it is not his Body: Is not God Omnipotent? and is not he able as well by his Omnipotency to make it his Body, as he was to make man fleſh of a piece of Clay? Did not he ſay; This is my Body which ſhall be betraied for you? and was not his very Body betrayed for us? therefore it muſt needs be his Body.

Lond. My Lord Rich, you have ſaid wonderful well and learnedly. But you might have begun with him before alſo in the 6. of John, where Chriſt promiſed to give his Body in the Sacrament of the Altar, ſaying, Panis quem ego dabo caro mea eſt; The Bread which I will give is my fleſh. How can you anſwer to that?

Phil. If it pleaſe you to give me leave to anſwer firſt my Lord Rich. I will alſo anſwer this Objection.

Rich. Anſwer my L. of London firſt, and after come to me.

Anſwer to B. Boners Objection.

Phil. My Lord of London may be ſoon anſwered, that the ſaying of S. John is, that the humanity of Chriſt, which he took upon him for the redemption of man, is the Bread of Life, whereby our Bodies and Souls be ſuſtained to eternal Life, of the which the Sacramental Bread is a lively repreſentation and an effectual coaptation, to all ſuch as believe on his paſſion. And as Chriſt ſaith in the ſame ſixth of John, I am the Bread that came down from Heaven; but yet he is not material neither natural Bread: Likewiſe the Bread is his fleſh, not natural or ſubſtantial, but by ſignification; and by grace in the Sacrament.

The place John. 6. expounded, (The Bread that I will give is my fleſh, &c.)

Anſwer to the Lord Riches Objection.

Papiſts Cater-couſins to the Capernaites.

Tranſubſtantiation hath neither ground of Scripture, nor antiquity.

And now to my Lord Riches Argument. I do not deny the expreſs words of Chriſt in the Sacrament, This is my Body, but I deny that they are naturally and corporally to be taken: they muſt be taken ſacramentally and ſpiritually, according to the expreſs declaration of Chriſt, ſaying that the words of the Sacrament which the Capernaites took carnally, as the Papiſts now do, ought to be taken ſpiritually and not carnally, as they falſly imagine, not weighing what interpretation Chriſt hath made in this behalf, neither following the inſtitution of Chriſt, neither the uſe of the Apoſtles and of the primitive Church, who never taught, neither declared any ſuch carnal manner of preſence as is now exacted of us violently without any ground of Scripture or antiquity, who uſed to put out of the Church all ſuch as did not receive the Sacrament with the reſt, and alſo to burn that which was left after the receiving, as by the Canon of the Apoſtles, and by the decree of the Council of Antioch may appear.

Lond. No, that is not ſo; they were only Catechumeni which went out of the Church at the celebration of the Communion, and none other.

Phil. It was not only of ſuch as were Novices in Faith but all others that did not receive.

Lond. What ſay you to the Omnipotency of God? is not he able to perform that which he ſpake, as my Lord Rich, hath very well ſaid? I tell thee, that God by his Omnipotency may make himſelf to be this Carpet if he will.

Pſal.135.

Phil. As concerning the Omnipotencie of God, I ſay that God is able to do (as the Prophet David ſaith) whatſoever he willeth; but he willeth nothing that is not agreeable to his Word; as that is blaſphemy which my Lord of London hath ſpoken, that God may become a Carpet. For as I have learned of ancient Writers? Non poteſt Deus facere quæ ſunt naturæ ſuæ contraria. That is, God cannot do that which is contrary to his nature, as it is contrary to the nature of God to be a Carpet. A Carpet is a Creature; and God is the Creator; and the Creator cannot be the Creature: wherefore unleſs you can declare by the word, that Chriſt is otherwiſe preſent with us then ſpiritually and Sacramentally by grace, as he hath taught us, you pretend the Omnipotency of God in vain.

B. Bonners unreverent and blaſphemous ſpeaking of God.

The Omnipotency pretended in vain.

Lond. Why? Wilt thou not ſay that Chriſt is really preſent in the Sacrament? Or do you deny it.

Chriſt in the Sacrament really preſent to the Receiver. What he calleth really.

Phil. I deny not that Chriſt is really in the Sacrament to the receiver thereof according to Chriſts inſtitution.

Lond. What mean you by really preſent?

Phil. I mean by really preſent, preſent indeed.

Lond. Is God really preſent every where?

Phil. He is ſo.

Lond. How prove you that.?

Phil. The Prophet Eſay ſaith, That God filleth all places: and whereſoever there be two or three gathered together in Chriſts name, there is he in the midſt of them.

Lond. What? his humanity?

Phil. No my Lord, I mean the Deity, according to that you demanded.

B. Boner too weak for John Philpot.

Rich. My Lord of London, I pray you let Mr. Doctor Chedſey reaſon with him, and let us ſee how he can anſwer him, for I tell thee he is a learned man indeed, and one that I do credit before a great many of you, whoſe Doctrine the Queens Majeſty and the whole Realm doth well allow, therefore hear him.

The Lords fall to drinking.

Lond. My Lords I pray you, will it pleaſe you to drink? you have talked a great while, and much talk is thirſty. I will leave Mr. Doctor and him reaſoning together a while, with your leave, and will come to you by and by again. He went (as I ſuppoſe) to make room for more drink, after the Lords had drunken.

L. Rich biddeth M. Philpot drink.

Rich. My Lord Rich ſaid to the Lords, I pray you let the poor man drink, for he is thirſty, and with that he called for a Cup of drink, and gave it me, and I drank before them all: God requite it him, for I was a thirſt indeed. Afterwards Dr. Chedſey began in this wiſe, making a great proceſs, of the which this is the effect.

Chedſey beginneth to diſpute with M. Philpot.

Ched. Mr. Philpot findeth fault with the Convocation houſe before your Lordſhips, that he hath lain thus long in Priſon, and that he had there a doſen Arguments, whereof he could not be ſuffered to proſecute one throughly, which is not ſo; for he had * leave to ſay what he could, and was anſwered to as much as he was able to bring and when he had nothing elſe to ſay, he fell to weeping. I was there preſent and can teſtifie thereof; albeit there is a Book abroad of the report of the diſputation to the contrary, in the which there is * never a true word. And whereas you require to be ſatisfied of the Sacrament, I will ſhew you the † Truth thereof, both by the Scriptures, and by the Doctors.

Four Untruths of Chedſey at one clap.
* 1. Untruth.
† 2. Untruth.
* 3. Untruth.
† 4. Untruth.

Mr. Philpot anſwered D. Chedſey.

Phil. It is a ſhrewd likelyhood that you will not conclude with any Truth, ſince you have begun with ſo many untruths, as to ſay that I was anſwered whiles I had any thing to ſay, and that I wept for lack of matter to ſay, and that the Book of the report of the diſputation is nothing true. God be praiſed, there were a good many of Noblemen, Gentlemen, and worſhipful men that heard and ſaw the doings thereof, which can teſtifie that you here have made an unjuſt report before theſe honorable Lords. And that I wept, was not for lack of matter, as you ſlander me; for I thank God, I have more matter then the beſt of you all ſhall ever be able to anſwer, as little learning as I have: but my weeping was, as Chriſts was upon Jeruſalem, ſeeing the deſtruction that ſhould fall upon her? and I foreſeeing then the deſtruction which you (through violence and unrighteouſneſs which you there declared) would work againſt the true Church of Chriſt and her faithful Members, as this day beareth witneſs, was compelled to weep in remembrance of that which I with infinity more have felt and ſhall feel.

John Philpot interrupted in his Anſwers.

All theſe words I did then ſpeak out, being interrupted by my Lord Rich, ſaying that I ſhould ſuffer him to proceed out in this matter, and afterwards I ſhould have leaſure to anſwer him in every Article. But he promiſed more then he could perform, as the end did well declare, for he had not the conſent of the Spiritualty to his promiſe, which now Rule the roſt. God ſhorten their cruel days, for his Elects ſake. And therefore I add this, which I had purpoſed to have ſpoken, if then I might have been ſuffered, leſt any that perfectly know not the things done in the Convocation-houſe and now laid to my charge if they ſhould not be anſwered by me, might reckon Dr. Chedſeys ſayings to be true. And as concerning the Book of the report of the diſputations, I wrote the ſame, and it is true in every Argument, as Mr. Dean of Rocheſter, and Mr. Cheyney Archdeacon of Hertford (yet being alive, and within the Realm) can teſtifie.

Praiſe be to the Lord, for ſo he hath.

Ched. You have of Scriptures the four Evangeliſts for the probation of Chriſts real preſence to be in the Sacrament after the words of Conſecration, with St. Paul to the Corinthians; which all ſay, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my Body. They ſay not as you would have me to believe, this is not the Body. But ſpecially the 6. of John proveth the ſame moſt manifeſtly, where Chriſt promiſed to give his Body, which he performed in his laſt Supper, as it appeareth by theſe words, Panis quem ego dabo, caro mea eſt, quam ego dabo pro mundi vita, The Bread which I will give is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the World.

Chedſey proveth the Sacrament by the ſixth of John.

Phil. My Lord Rich, with your leave, I muſt needs interrupt him a little, becauſe he ſpeaketh open blaſphemy againſt the death of Chriſt: for if that promiſe brought in by St. John, was performed by Chriſt in his laſt Supper, then needed he not to have died after he had given the Sacrament.

Rich. Let Mr. Doctor make an end of his Arguments, and afterward object to him what you can.

* So is there twice Ego too, and yet but one natural Body.

Ched. You muſt note that there is twice Dabo in this ſaying of St John, and the firſt is referred to the Sacrament of the Altar; and the ſecond to the Sacrifice upon the Croſs: and beſides theſe manifeſt Scriptures, there be many ancient Doctors proving the ſame, as Ignatius, Ireneus, and S. Cyprian (whoſe Authority he recited at large) which I do omit becauſe I was not permitted to anſwer the ſame.

Rich. Now anſwer, and object to him what you can, and you ſhall be heard.

John Philpot anſwereth proteſtation.

Phil. My Lord, the chiefeſt ground whereon he with the reſt of his ſide do ground themſelves againſt us, be theſe words, This is my Body, with a falſe pretence of the Omnipotencie of God. And before I will come to the particular anſwers of all that he hath alledged, for that your Lordſhips may the better underſtand me, what I mean, and whereupon I ſtand, I will firſt require M. Doctor to anſwer me one queſtion. But firſt of all I do proteſt to your Honors that I think as reverently of the Sacrament, as a Chriſtian man ought to do, and that I acknowledge the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, miniſtred after Chriſts inſtitution, to be one of the greateſt treaſures and comforts that he left us on the Earth: and contrarywiſe it is moſt diſcomfort and abominable, not being miniſtred as it ought to be, as it is uſed now adays. And now to my queſtion, which is this: whether theſe words only Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my Body, ſpoken by a Prieſt over the Bread and Wine, may make the Body and Blood of Chriſt, as you ſuppoſe or no?

A queſtion of J. Philpots.

Ched. Staggering what he might ſay, at laſt he ſaid, that theſe words alone, pronounced by the Prieſt, be ſufficient to make the Bread and the Wine the very Body and Blood of Chriſt really.

Phil That is blaſphemie to ſay, and againſt all the Scriptures and Doctors, who affirm that the form and ſubſtance in Conſecration muſt be obſerved which Chriſt uſed and did inſtitute, as S. Cyprian ſaith, In ſacrificio quod Chriſtus eſt, non niſi Chriſtus ſequendus: In the ſacrifice which is Chriſt, only Chriſt is to be followed. And by the Law it is forbidden to add or take away from Gods Word. And Saint Peter ſaith, If any man ſpeak let him ſpeak as the Word of God. Wherefore whoſoever ſaith that theſe words only, This is my Body, do make a preſence of Chriſt, without Bleſs, Take, and Eat, which

be three as ſubſtantial points of the Sacrament, as, This is my Body, he is highly deceived.

Theſe words (Bleſs, Take and Eat) be as ſubſtantial points of the Sacrament as (This is my Body.) Hereof read more in the Examinations of M. Bradford.

Therefore St. Auſtine ſaith, Accedat verbum ad elementum & fit Sacramentum; Let the word be joyned to the element, and it becometh a Sacrament: So that if the entire words of Chriſts Inſtitutions be not obſerved in the miniſtration of a Sacrament, it is no Sacrament; as the ſacrifices which the Ten tribes did offer at Bethel to God, were not acceptable, becauſe they were not in all points done according to Gods Word. Wherefore except bleſſing be made after the Word (which is a due thanke-giving for our redemption in Chriſt) and alſo a ſhewing forth of the Lords death in ſuch wiſe as the Congregation may be edified? and moreover a taking and eating after Chriſts Commandment? except (I ſay) theſe three parts be firſt performed (which is not done in the Maſs) theſe words This is my Body, which are laſt placed in the inſtitution of the Lords Supper, cannot be verified. For Chriſt commanded as well. Take ye, Eat ye, as This is my Body.

Chriſt ſaid, Take, Eat, this is my Body, and not, take ye, Eat ye.

Mr. Doctor taken with the manner.

Philpot. No did, Maſter Doctor? Be not theſe the words of Chriſt Accipite, manducate? and do not theſe words in the plural number ſignifie, Take ye, Eat ye, and not take thou, Eat thou, as you would ſuppoſe?

Ched. I grant it is as you ſay.

Phil. Likewiſe of conſequency, you (M. Doctor) muſt needs deny, which you have ſaid, that theſe words, This is my Body, being only ſpoken, be ſufficient to make the Body and Blood of Chriſt in the Sacrament, as you have untruly ſaid.

Lond. Then came in the Biſhop again and ſaid, what is it that you would have M. Doctor deny?

Phil. My Lord, M. Doctor hath affirmed that theſe words, This is my Body, ſpoken by the Prieſt, only do make the Sacrament.

The words of Chriſt (This is my Body) except a Prieſt ſpeak them make no body.

Lond. Indeed if M. Bridges ſhould ſpeak theſe words over the Bread and Wine, they would be of none effect: but if a Prieſt ſpeak them after a due manner, they are effectual, and make a real Body.

Phil. M. Doctor hath ſaid otherwiſe.

Lond. I think you miſtake him; for he meaneth of the words duely pronounced.

Phil. Let him revoke that he hath granted, and then will I begin again with that which before was ſaid; that, This is my Body, hath no place, except, bleſs, take, and Eat, duely go before. And therefore becauſe the ſame words do not go before, This is my Body, but prepoſterouſly follow in your Sacrament of the Maſs, it is not the Sacrament of Chriſt, neither hath Chriſt in it preſent.

Ched. If, This is my Body only do not make the Sacrament, no more do, bleſs, take, and Eat.

Phil. I grant that the one without the other cannot make the Sacrament. And it can be no Sacrament unleſs the whole action of Chriſt doth concur together according to the firſt Inſtitution.

Ched. Why, then you would not have it to be the Body of Chriſt, unleſs it be received?

Sacraments without their uſe be no Sacraments.

Phil. No verily, it is not the very Body of Chriſt to any other, but ſuch as condignly receive the ſame after his Inſtitution.

Lond. Is not a Loaf a Loaf, being ſet on the Table though no Body eat thereof?

Phil. It is not like my Lord; for a Loaf is a Loaf before it be ſet on the Table: but ſo is not the Sacrament a perfect Sacrament before it be duly miniſtred at the Table of the Lord.

Lond. I pray you, what is it in the mean while, before it is received?

Phil. It is, my Lord, the ſign begun of a holy thing, and yet no perfect Sacrament until it be received. For in the Sacrament there be two things to be conſidered, the ſign, and the thing it ſelf, which is Chriſt and his whole paſſion; and it is that to none but to ſuch as worthily receive the holy ſigns of Bread and Wine, according to Chriſts Inſtitution.

The Sacrament of the Lords Body without receiving, is no Sacrament.

Wind. There were never any that denied the words of Chriſt as you do. Did not he ſay, This is my Body?

Phil. My Lord, I pray you be not deceived. We do not deny the words of Chriſt: but we ſay, theſe words be of none effect, being ſpoken otherwiſe than Chriſt did inſtitute them in his laſt Supper. For an example; Chriſt biddeth the Church to baptize in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt: if a Prieſt ſay theſe words over the water, and there be no Child to be baptized, theſe words only pronounced do not make Baptiſm. And again, Baptiſm is only Baptiſm to ſuch as be baptized, and to none other ſtanding by.

As Baptiſm is no Baptiſm, but to the Child that is baptized, and not to the ſtanders by: ſo the Sacrament of the Body is no Sacrament but to them that worthily receive.

L. Chamb. I pray you, my Lord, let me ask him one queſtion. What kind of preſence in the Sacrament (duly miniſtred according to Chriſts Ordinance) do you allow?

Phil. If any come worthily to receive, then do I confeſs the preſence of Chriſt wholly to be with all the fruits of his Paſſion, unto the ſaid worthy Receiver, by the Spirit of God, and that Chriſt is thereby joyned to him and he to Chriſt.

L. Chamb. I am anſwered:

My Lord is better ſkilled in a fat Capon, than in Chriſts Sacrament.

Lond. My Lords, take no heed of him, for he goeth about to deceive you. His ſimilitude that he bringeth in of Baptiſm, is nothing like to the Sacrament of the Altar. For if I ſhould ſay to Sir John Bridges being with me at Supper, and having a fat Capon, Take, eat, this is of a Capon, although he eat not thereof, is it not a Capon ſtill? And likewiſe of a piece of Beef, or of a Cup of Wine; if I ſay, Drink, this is a Cup of Wine, is it not ſo, becauſe he drinketh not thereof?

Phil. My Lord, your ſimilitudes be too groſs for ſo high myſteries as we have in hand, as if I were your equal I could more plainly declare, and there is much more diſſimilitude between common meats and drinks, than there is between Baptiſm and the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Like muſt be compared to like, and ſpiritual things with ſpiritual, and not ſpiritual things with corporal things. And meats and drinks be of their own natures good or evil, and your words, commending or diſcommending, do but declare what they are. But the Sacraments be to be conſidered according to the word which Chriſt ſpake of them, of the which, Take ye, and eat ye, be ſome of the chief, concurrent to the making of the ſame, without the which there can be no Sacraments: and therefore in Greek, the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt is called κοινωνία, i. Communion, and likewiſe in the Goſpel Chriſt commanded, ſaying, Dividite inter vos, i. Divide it among you:

Ched. St. Paul calleth it a Communication.

Phil. That doth more expreſly ſhew, that there muſt be a participation of the Sacrament together.

Lond. My Lords, I am ſorry I have troubled you ſo long with this obſtinate man, with whom we can do no good; I will trouble you no longer now: and with that the Lords roſe up, none of them ſaying any evil word unto me, half amazed, in my judgment, God work it to good. Thus endeth the ſixth part of this Tragedy: The ſeventh look for with joy.

You are too weak, my Lord, you may riſe when ye will.

The ſeventh Examination of John Philpot, had the nineteenth of November, before the Biſhops of London and Rocheſter, the Chancellor of Lichfield, and D. Chedſey.

London. Sirrah, come hither. How chance you come no ſooner? Is it well done of you to make Mr. Chancellor and me to tarry for you this hour? By the Faith of my body, half an hour before Maſs, and half an hour even at Maſs, looking for your coming.

Another calling of J. Philpot before the Biſhop.

Philpot. My Lord, it is not unknown to you that I am a Priſoner, and that the doors be ſhut upon me, and I cannot come when I liſt; but as ſoon as the doors of my Priſon were open, I came immediately.

Lond. We ſent for thee to the intent thou ſhouldſt have come to Maſs. How ſay you, would you have come to Maſs or no, if the doors had ſooner been opened?

Phil. My Lord, that is another manner of queſtion.

Lond. Lo, Mr. Chancellor, I told you we ſhould have a froward Fellow of him; he will anſwer directly to nothing. I have had him before both the Spiritual Lords and Temporal, and thus he fareth ſtill; yet he reckoneth himſelf better learned than all the Realm. Yea, before the Temporal Lords, the other day, he was ſo fooliſh to challenge the beſt: he would make himſelf learned, and is a very ignorant fool indeed.

You ſaid before he was learned.

Phil. I reckon, I anſwered your Lordſhip before the Lords plain enough.

Lond.

Lond. Why anſwereſt thou not directly, whether thou wouldſt have gone to Maſs or no, if thou hadſt come in time?

Phil. Mine anſwer ſhall be thus, that, if your Lordſhip can prove your Maſs, whereunto you would have me to come, to be the true ſervice of God, whereunto a Chriſtian ought to come, I will afterward come with a good will.

Note how ſubſtantially B. Boner proveth the Maſs.

Lond. Look I pray you: the King and the Queen, and all the Nobility of the Realm do come to Maſs, and yet he will not. By my Faith thou art to well handled: thou ſhalt be worſe handled hereafter, I warrant thee.

Phil. If to lie in a blind Cole-houſe, may be counted good handling, both without fire and candle, then may it be ſaid, I am well handled. Your Lordſhip hath Power to intreat my Body as you liſt.

Lond. Thou art a Fool, and a very ignorant Fool. Maſter Chancellor, in good Faith I have handled him and his fellows with as much gentleneſs as they can deſire. I let their Friends come unto them to relieve them. And wot you what? the other day they had gotten themſelves up into the top of the Leads with a many of Prentiſes, gazing abroad as though they had been at liberty; but I will cut off your reſort: and as for the Prentiſes, they were as good not to come to you, if I take them:

The Priſoners charged with that they neither did nor knew of. He meaneth Stephen Gardiner, which in this month died a little before.

Phil. My Lord, we have no ſuch reſort to us as your Lp. imagineth, and there cometh very few unto us. And of Prentiſes I know not one, neither have we any Leads to walk on over our Cole-houſe, that I wot of: wherefore your Lordſhip hath miſtaken your mark.

Lond. Nay: now you think (becauſe my Lord Chancellor is gone) that we will burn no more: yes I warrant thee, I will diſpatch you ſhortly, unleſs you do recant.

Phil. My Lord, I had not thought that I ſhould have been alive now, neither ſo raw as I am, but well roſted to aſhes.

Chanc. Caſt not your ſelf wilfully away Mr. Philpot. Be content to be ruled by my Lord here, and by other Learned men of this Realm, & you may do well enough.

M. Philpot ſtandeth upon his Conſcience and the fear of God.

Phil. My Conſcience beareth me record that I ſeek to pleaſe God, and that the love and fear of God cauſeth me to do as I do: and I were of all other Creatures moſt miſerable, if for mine own will only I do loſe all the commodities I might have in this life, and afterward be caſt to damnation. But I am ſure, it is not my will whereon I ſtand, but Gods will, which will not ſuffer me to be caſt away, I am ſure.

Chanc. You are not ſo ſure, but you may be deceived.

Bish. Boner proceedeth Ex officio with Mr. Philpot.

Lond. Well, ſince thou wilt not be conformable by fair means I will proceed againſt thee Ex officio, and therefore hearken here to ſuch Articles as I have here written, and I charge thee to make anſwer to them. And with that he read a Libel which he had in his hand of divers Articles, and when he had done, he bad me anſwer.

Two Untruths in the Biſhops Articles.

Phil. Your libel, my Lord, containeth in ſum two ſpecial points: The firſt pretendeth, that I ſhould be of your Dioceſs, and therefore your Lordſhip, upon divers ſuſpects and infamies of Hereſie going upon me, is moved to proceed againſt me by your Ordinary office; the which firſt is not true, for that I am not of your Lordſhips Dioceſs, as the Libel doth pretend. And the ſecond is, that I being Baptized in the Catholick Church, and in the Catholick Faith, am gone from them, the which is not ſo, for I am of that Catholick Faith and Church as I was baptized unto.

Lond. What? art thou not of my Dioceſs? where are ye now I pray you?

Phil. My Lord, I cannot deny but I am in your Cole-houſe, which is your Dioceſs: yet I am not of your Dioceſs.

Lond. You were ſent hither unto me by the Queens Majeſties Commiſſioners, and thou art now in my Dioceſs: wherefore I will proceed againſt thee as thy Ordinary.

John Philpot challengeth the priviledge of his Ordinaries right.

Phil. I was brought hither through violence, and therefore my preſent being now in your Dioceſs is not enough to abridge me of mine own Ordnary's Juriſdiction neither maketh it me willingly ſubject to your Juriſdiction ſince it cometh by force, and by ſuch men as had no juſt Authority ſo to do; no more then a Sanctuary man, being by force brought forth of his place of priviledge, doth thereby loſe his priviledge, but always may challenge the ſame whereſoever he be brought.

Ched. Hath not the Queens Majeſty authority, by her Commiſſioners, to remove your Body whither ſhe will? and ought you not to obey herein? Anno 1555.

Phil. I grant that the Queens Majeſty (of her juſt Power) may tranſpoſe my Body, whither it ſhall pleaſe her Grace to command the ſame. But yet by your Laws Spiritualia non ſunt ſubjecta Imperatoris poteſtati. i. Spiritual cauſes be not ſubject to the Temporal Power. As for example; You Mr. Doctor, if the Queens Majeſty would appoint two temporal men to be judges over you in certain ſpiritual matters, might not you alledge the priviledge of a Clerk, and demand competent Spiritual judges in your cauſes?

Spiritual things are not ſubject to temporal Powers, and therefore the temporal Commiſſioners had no power to remove him into another mans Dioceſs.

Lond. Doth not a man (I pray you) ſortiri forum ratione delicti?

Phil. My Lord, your rule is true in Temporal matters, but in Spiritual cauſes it is not ſo: which be otherwiſe priviledged.

Lond. What ſaiſt thou then to the ſecond Article, and to the other?

Phil. My Lord, I ſay that I am not bound to anſwer the ſecond, neither the reſt, unleſs the firſt be proved.

Lond. Well, ſuppoſe the firſt may be proved, as it will be, what will you ſay then to the ſecond, that you are not of the ſame Catholick Faith, neither of the ſame Church now, as you were baptized in?

Phil. I am of the ſame Catholick Faith, and of the ſame Catholick Church which is of Chriſt, the Pillar and ſtabliſhment of Truth.

Lond. Nay that you are not.

Phil. Yes that I am.

Lond. Your Godfathers and Godmothers were of another Faith then you be now.

Phil. I was not baptized either into my Godfathers Faith or my Godmothers, but into the Faith and into the Church of Chriſt.

A man is not baptized into his Godfathers Faith, nor his Godmothers Faith; but into the Faith of Chriſts Church.

Lond. How know you that?

Phil. By the Word of God, which is the Touchſtone of Faith, and the limits of the Church.

Lond. How long hath your Church ſtood I pray you?

Phil. Even from the beginning, from Chriſt and from his Apoſtles, and from their immediate Succeſſors.

Chan. He will prove his Church to be before Chriſt.

John Philpot proveth his Church to be from Chriſt.

Phil. If I did ſo I go not amiſs: for there was a Church before the coming of Chriſt, which maketh one Catholick Church.

Chanc. It is ſo indeed.

No rule better than Antiquity, Univerſality, and Unity, to prove the true Faith and Church of the Proteſtants.

Phil. I will deſire no better rule then the ſame which is oftentimes brought in of your ſide, to prove both my Faith and the Catholick Church; that is, Antiquity, Univerſality, and Unity.

Lond. Do you not ſee what a bragging fooliſh fellow this is? He would ſeem to be very well ſeen in the Doctors, and he is but a Fool. By what Doctor art thou able to prove thy Church? Name him, and thou ſhalt have him.

Phil. My Lord, let me have all your ancient writers, with pen, and ink, and paper, and I will prove both my Faith and my Church out of every one of them.

Lond. No that thou ſhalt not have. You ſhall ſee how he lieth. S. Cyprian ſaith, There muſt be one High Prieſt, to the which the reſidue muſt obey, and they will allow no Head, neither Vicar general.

Becauſe you dare not.

Phil. S. Cyprian ſaith not, that there ſhould be a Vicar general over all. For in his Book De ſimplicitate Prælatorum, I am ſure he ſaith the contrary. Unus Epiſcopatus eſt, cujus pars in ſolidum a ſingulis tenetur. i. There is but one Biſhoprick, which is wholly poſſeſſed of every Biſhop in part.

S. Cyprian meaneth every Church to have his own Governour, and all Churches to be under one.

Lond. Fet hither the Book, thou ſhalt ſee the manifeſt place againſt thee.

Doctor Chedſey brought the Book, and turned to the place in an Epiſtle written unto Cornelius, then Biſhop of Rome, and recited theſe words in ſum That it went not well with the Church, where the high Prieſt was not obeyed, and ſo would have concluded for the confirmation of the Biſhops ſaying.

Cypr. lib. 1. Epiſt 3.

Phil. Mr. Doctor you miſconſtrue the place of S. Cyprian: for he meaneth not there, by the high Prieſt, the Biſhop of Rome, but every Patriarch in his precinct, of whom there were four appointed in his time. And in writing

The place of S. Cyprian explained.

Anno 1555.

uhto Cornelius he meaneth by the high Prieſt, himſelf, which was then chief Biſhop of Africa, whoſe Authority the Hereticks began to deſpiſe. Whereof he complaineth to Cornelius, and ſaith, the Church cannot be well ordered, where the chief Miniſter by order after the judgment of the Scriptures, after the agreement of the People and the conſent of his fellow Biſhops, is not obeyed.

December. London. Hath not the Biſhop of Rome always been ſupreme head of the Church, and Chriſts vicar in earth even from Peter?

The Biſhop of Rome no more head of the Church, then the B. of London.

Philpot. No, that he was not. For by the word of God he hath no more Authority, then the Biſhop of London hath.

Lond. Was not Peter head of the Church, and hath not the Biſhop of Rome, which is his ſucceſſor, the ſame Authority?

Peter had no more Authority over the Church then every one of the Apoſtles.

Philpot. I grant that the Biſhop of Rome, as he is the ſucceſſor of Peter, hath the ſame Authority as Peter had: but Peter had no more Authority then every one of the Apoſtles had.

Chanc. Yes that S. Peter had; for Chriſt ſaid ſpecially unto him, Tibi dabo claves regni cœlorum; I will give thee the keyes of the Kingdom of Heaven; the which he ſpake to none other of his diſciples ſingularly, but to him.

Peter beareth but a figure of the Church.

Phil. S. Auguſtine anſwereth otherwiſe to the objection, and ſaith, That if in Peter there had not been the figure of the Church, the Lord had not ſaid to him, To thee I will give the keyes of the Kingdom of Heaven. The which if Peter received not, the Church hath them not. If the Church hath them, then Peter hath them not.

B. Bonners diviuitie lieth much in the Civil Law.

London What if I can prove and ſhew you out of the Civil Law, that all Chriſtendom ought to follow the Holy Catholick Church of Rome, as there is a ſpecial title thereof, De catholica fide & ſancta Romana Eccleſia?

Phil. That is nothing material, ſeeing the things of God be not ſubject to mans laws; and the divine matters muſt be ordered by the Word of God, and not of man.

Cyprian. A Doctor. What will you ſay, if I can prove that Chriſt builded his Church upon Peter, and that out of S. Cyprian? Will you then believe that the B. of Rome ought to be ſupreme head of the Church?

Phil. I know what S. Cyprian writeth in that behalf; but he meaneth nothing as you take it.

A Doctor. S. Cyprian hath theſe words, Quod ſuper Petrum fundata fuit Eccleſia, tanquam ſuper originem unitatis, That upon Peter was builded the Church, as upon the firſt beginning of Unity.

The place of Cyprian, expounded.

Philpot. He declareth that in an example, that Unitie muſt be in the Church; he grounded on Peter his Church alone, and not upon men. The which he doth more manifeſtly declare in the book De ſimplicitate Prælatorum, ſaying, In perſona unius Chriſtus dedit omnibus claves, ut omnium unitatem denotaret. In the perſon of one man God gave the keyes to all, that he in ſignification thereby might declare the unitie of all men.

A Doctor. What will you underſtand S. Cyprian ſo? That were good indeed.

Philpot. I think you cannot underſtand S. Cyprian better, then he doth declare himſelf.

B. Bonner goeth to the Parliament.

London. I will deſire you (Mr. Chancellor) to take ſome pains with Mr. D. Chadſey, about his examination, for I muſt go to the Parliament houſe. And I will deſire you to dine with me.

Philp. Then the Doctor took again his former Authority in hand for want of another, and would have made a further circumſtance, digreſſing from his purpoſe. To whom I ſaid, he knew not whereabout he went, and therewith he laughed. And I ſaid his divinitie was nothing but ſcoffing.

Mr. Doctor ſlippeth away.

Mr. Doctor. Yea, then I have done with you, and ſo went away.

Phil. You are too young in Divinitie to teach me in the matters of my Faith. Though you be learned in other things more then I, yet in Divinitie I have been longer practiſed then you, for any thing I can hear of you; therefore be not too haſty to judge that you do not perfectly know.

Chanc. Peter and his ſucceſſours from the beginning have been allowed for the ſupreme head of the Church, and that by the Scriptures, for that Chriſt ſaid unto him in S. John thrice, Feed my ſheep, Paſce oves meas.

Philpot. That is no otherwiſe to be taken, then, Ite, prædicate, Go ye and preach, which was ſpoken to all the Apoſtles, as well as unto Peter. And that Chriſt ſaid thrice, Paſce oves meas, Feed my ſheep, it ſignifieth nothing elſe but the earneſt ſtudy that the Miniſters of God ought to have in preaching the Word. God grant that you of the Clergy would weigh your dutie in this behalf more then you do. Is this a juſt interpretation of the Scripture, to take Paſce oves meas, for to be Lord of the whole World? In this mean while came in the Bachelor of Divinitie, which is a Reader of Greek in Oxford, belonging to the Biſhop, and he took upon him to help Mr. Chancellor.

The word of Chriſt to Peter, feed my ſheep Paſce oves meas, expounded by Ite, prædicate.

Scholar. What will you ſay if I can ſhew you a Greek Author called Theophylact, to interpret it ſo? Will you believe his interpretation?

Theophylact of no great Authority.

Phil. Theophyl. is a late Writer, and one that was a favourer of the B. of Rome; and therefore not to be credited, ſince his interpretation is contrarie to the manifeſt words of the Scripture, and contrary to the determination of many general Councils.

Schol. In what general Council was it otherwiſe, that the B. of Rome was not ſupreme head over all?

In Nice Councell the B. of Rome was no ſupreme head nor preſident there.

Phil. In Nice Council I am ſure it was otherwiſe; for Athanaſius was there the chiefe Biſhop and preſident of the Council, and not the B. of Rome.

Scholar. Nay that is not ſo.

Phil. Then I preceive you are better ſeen in words then in knowledge of things: and I will gage with you what you will, it is ſo, as you may ſee in the Epitome of the Councils.

The ſcholar of Oxford ſhrinketh away.

Schol. I will fetch Euſebius and ſhew the contrary, and the book of general Councils. He went into my Lords cloſet, and brought Euſebius; but the general Councils he brought not, ſaying (for ſaving of his honeſty) that he could not come by them, and there he would have defended that it was otherwiſe in Euſebius, but was not able to ſhew the ſame, and ſo ſhrank away confounded.

Chanc. The Church of Rome hath been always taken for the Catholick Church; therefore I would adviſe you to come into the ſame with us. You ſee all the men of this Realm do condemn you. And why will you be ſo ſingular?

The Popes ſide not able to prove their Church to be the holy Catholick Church.

Phil. I have ſaid, and ſtill do ſay, that if you can be able to prove it unto me, that I will be of the ſame. But I am ſure that the Church, which you make ſo much of, is a falſe Church, and a Synagogue of Satan. And you with the learned men of the Realm do perſecute the true Church, and condemn ſuch as be more righteous then you.

Chanc. Do you hear (Mr. Doctor) what he ſaith, that the Church of Rome is the Devil?

Chad. I wiſh you did think more reverently of the Church of Rome. What will you ſay if I can ſhew you out of S. Auſtin in his Epiſtle written unto Pope Innocentius, that the whole general Council of Carthage did allow the Church of Rome to be chiefeſt over all other?

Three blind conjectures out of the Epiſtle of Auguſtin to Innocentius proving the See of Rome to be ſupreme head: The ſucceſſion of B. from Peter to S. Auſtins time.

Phil. I am ſure you can ſhew no ſuch thing. And with that he ſet the book of S. Auſtin, and turned to the Epiſtle but he could not prove his allegation manifeſtly, but by conjectures in this wiſe.

The conjectures of D. Chadſey anſwered.

Chad. Here you may ſee, that the Council of Carthage writing to Innocent, the Biſhop, calleth the See of Rome the Apoſtolick See. And beſides this they write to him certifying him of things done in the Council for the condemnation of the Donatiſts, requiring his approbations in the ſame, which they would not have done, if they had not taken the Church of Rome for the ſupreme head of others. And moreover you may ſee how S. Auſtin doth prove the Church of Rome to be the Catholick Church by continual ſucceſſion of the Biſhop until his time, which ſucceſſion we can prove until our daies: therefore by the ſame reaſon of S. Auſtin we ſay now, that the Church of Rome is the Catholick Church.

How the See of Rome may be called Apoſtolical, and how not Apoſtolical.

Phil. Mr. Doctor, I have conſidered how you do weigh S. Auguſtine; and contrary to his meaning and words, you would infer your falſe concluſion. As concerning that it was called by him the Apoſtolical See, that is not material to prove the Church of Rome now to be the Catholick Church. I will grant it now that it is the Apoſtolique See, in reſpect that Paul and Peter did once there preach the Goſpel, and abode there for a certain ſeaſon. I would you could prove it to be the Apoſtolical See of the true religion and ſincerity as the Apoſtle left it, and did teach the ſame; the which if ye could do, you might boaſt of Rome as of the Apoſtolical See; otherwiſe it is now of no more force, than if the Turk at Antioch and at Jeruſalem ſhould boaſt of the Apoſtolick Sees, becauſe the Apoſtles once did there abide, and founded the Church of Chriſt.

The being of Peter at Rome giveth no perpetuity to Rome to be the head of the whole Church.

The Council of Carthage wrote to Innocentius B. of Rome, to confirm their acts with his ſubſcription; Ergo, the B. of Rome is above all Biſhops. Argument, a cauſa non ſufficiente.

And whereas the whole Council of Carthage did write unto Pope Innocentius, certifying him of that was done in the General Council, and willing him to ſet his helping hand to the ſuppreſſing of the Donatiſts, as they had done; that fact of the Council proveth nothing the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, no more than if the whole Convocation-houſe now gathered together, and agreeing upon certain Articles, might ſend the ſame to ſome Biſhop, that upon certain impediments is not preſent, willing him to agree thereto, and to ſet them forth in his Dioceſs. The which fact doth not make any ſuch Biſhop of greater Authority than the reſt, becauſe his conſent is Brotherly required.

And touching the Succeſſion of the Biſhops of Rome, brought in by S. Auguſtine, it maketh nothing now thereby to prove the ſame Catholick Church, unleſs you can conclude with the ſame reaſon as S. Auguſtine doth. And the rehearſal of the ſucceſſion of the Biſhops doth tend to this only, to prove the Donatiſts to be Hereticks, becauſe they began as well at Rome as in Affrica, to found another Church of their own ſetting up, than was grounded by Peter and Paul, and by their Succeſſors, whom he reciteth until his time, which all taught no ſuch Doctrine, neither ſuch Church as the Donatiſts. And if preſently you be able to prove by the Biſhops of Rome (whereof you do glory) that ſuch Doctrine hath not been taught by any of the Succeſſors of Peters See, as is now taught and believed of us, you have good reaſon againſt us: otherwiſe it is of no force, as I am able to declare.

The ſcope of S. Auguſtines Argument is not to prove the Church of Rome therefore to be found in the Doctrine, becauſe it hath ſucceſſion of Biſhops from the Apoſtles, but to prove the Donatiſts to be Schiſmaticks, for that the Church of Rome continuing both found in the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, and alſo in retaining ſtill ſucceſſion of Biſhops from the Apoſtles time, yet they would forſake the unity of that Church, and ſet up another Church of their own.

The Argument is this.

To diſſever from that Church which by continual ſucceſſion of Biſhops deſcendeth from the Apoſtles, and keepeth the ſame Inſtitution ſtill in Faith and Doctrine, is to break the unity of the Church, and to be Schiſmaticks.

The Donatiſts do ſo from the Church of Rome, having no juſt cauſe of Doctrine ſo to do. Ergo, the Donatiſts be Schiſmaticks.

Chanc. Well M. Doctor, you ſee we can do no good in perſwading of him: let us miniſter the Articles which my Lord hath left us, unto him. How ſay you M. Philpot to theſe Articles? M. Johnſon I pray you write his Anſwers.

The Chancellor about to miniſter Articles againſt J. Philpot.

Phil. M. Chancellor, you have no authority to enquire of me my Belief in ſuch Articles as you go about, for that I am not of my Lord of Londons Dioceſs; and to be brief with you, I will make no further anſwer herein than I have already to the Biſhop.

John Philpot refuſeth the Chancellor to be his Ordinary.

Chanc. Why then let us go our ways, and let his Keeper take him away.

Thus endeth the ſeventh part of this Tragedy.

The ſum of a private Conference or Talk between Mr. Philpot, and the Biſhop

Private talk between M. Philpot and Biſhop Bonet.

Philpot. The next day in the morning betime, the Biſhop ſent one of his men unto me, to call me up into his Chappel to hear Maſs.

Biſhops Man. M. Philpot, where be you?

Phil. Who is it that calleth me?

Biſhops Man. My Lords will is, you ſhould riſe and come to hear Maſs: Will you come or no?

A marvel how the Prieſts eating up a whole man, fleſh, blood, and bone, to breakfaſt, can have ſuch an hungry Stomach to their dinner afterward, as they have, as if they had eaten never a bit of meat before.

Phil. My Stomach is not very good this morning: you may tell my Lord I am ſick. After this the Keeper was ſent to bring me to my Lord.

The Keeper. Mr. Philpot, you muſt riſe and come to my Lord.

Phil. I am at your commandment (M. Keeper) as ſoon as I can; and going out of the Priſon, he asked me, ſaying:

The Keeper. Will ye go to Maſs?

Phil. My Stomach is too raw to digeſt ſuch raw meats of fleſh, blood, and bone, this morning. After this my Keeper preſented me to the Biſhop in his Hall.

Lond. Mr. Philpot, I charge you to anſwer unto ſuch Articles as my Chaplain and my Regiſter have from me to object againſt you; go and anſwer them.

Phil. My Lord, Omnia judicia debent eſſe publica; All Judgments ought to be publick. Therefore if your Lordſhip have any thing to charge me lawfully withal, let me be in Judgment lawfully and openly called, and I will anſwer according to my duty; otherwiſe in corners I will not.

Anno 1555.

J. Philpot refuſeth to anſwer but in open Judgment.

Lond. Thou art a fooliſh Knave I ſee well enough, thou ſhalt anſwer whether thou wilt or no; Go thy ways with them, I ſay.

Phil. I will go with them at your Lordſhips pleaſure; but I will make them no further Anſwers than I have ſaid already.

Lond. No, wilt thou not Knave? Have him away, and ſet him in the Stocks: What, fooliſh Knave?

John Philpot commanded to be ſet in the Stocks of the Coleſhouſe.

Phil. Indeed (my Lord) you handle me, with others, like Fools: and we muſt be content to be made fools at your hands, Stocks and Violence be your Biſhop-like Alms. You go about by force in corners to oppreſs, and be aſhamed that your doings ſhould come to light; God ſhorten your cruel Kingdom for his Mercies ſake. And I was put by and by into the Stocks, in an houſe alone, ſeparate from my Fellows, God be praiſed that he hath thought me worthy to ſuffer any thing for his Names ſake. Better it is to ſit in the Stocks of this world, than to ſit in the Stocks of a damnable Conſcience.

Another Conference between the Biſhop and Mr. Philpot, and other Priſoners.

Another days talk of the Biſhop with J. Philpot, and other Priſoners.

Philpot. The next day after, an hour before day, the Biſhop ſent for me again by the Keeper.

The Keeper. Mr. Philpot ariſe, you muſt come to my Lord.

Phil. I wonder what my Lord meaneth, that he ſendeth for me thus early, I fear he will uſe ſome violence towards me, wherefore I pray you make him this anſwer, That if he did ſend for me by an order of Law, I will come and anſwer; otherwiſe, ſince I am not of his Dioceſs, neither is he mine Ordinary, I will not (without I be violently conſtrained) come unto him.

Keeper. I will go tell my Lord what anſwer you make: and ſo he went away to the Biſhop, and immediately returned with two of the Biſhops Men, ſaying, that I muſt come whether I would or no.

John Philpot brought to the Biſhop by violence.

Phil. If by violence any of you will enforce me to go, then I muſt go, otherwiſe I will not; and therewith one of them took me with force by the arm, and led me up into the Biſhops Gallery.

Lond. What, Thou art a fooliſh Knave indeed; thou wilt not come without thou be fetcht.

Phil. I am brought indeed (my Lord) by violence unto you, and your cruelty is ſuch, that I am afraid to come before you, I would your Lordſhip would gently proceed againſt me by the Law.

Note here the juſt dealings of theſe Biſhops.

Lond. I am blamed of the Lords the Biſhops, for that I have not diſpatched thee ere this. And in Faith I made ſute to my Lord Cardinal, and to all the Convocation-houſe, that they would hear thee. And my Lord of Lincoln ſtood up, and ſaid, that thou wert a frantick Fellow, and a man that will have the laſt word. And they all have much blamed me, becauſe I have brought thee ſo often before the Lords openly: and they ſay, it is meat and drink to you to ſpeak in an open audience, you glory ſo of your ſelf. Wherefore I am commanded to take a further order with thee, and in good Faith if you will not relent, I will make no further delay. Marry, if thou wilt be conformable, I will yet forgive thee all that is paſt, and thou ſhalt have none hurt for any thing that is already ſpoken or done.

This Biſhop of Lincoln was Dr. White.

Phil. My Lord, I have anſwered you already in this behalf, what I will do. And as for the report of Maſter White, Biſhop of Lincoln, I paſs not: who is known to be mine enemy, for that I being Archdeacon did excommunicate him for preaching naughty Doctrine. If Chriſt my Maſter were called a mad man, it is no marvel though ye count me frantick.

John Philpot being Archdeacon excommunicated Biſhop White for preaching falſe Doctrine.

Lond. Hadſt thou not a Pig brought thee the other day with a Knife in it? Wherefore was it (I pray thee) but to kill thy ſelf? or, as it is told me (marry I am counſelled to take heed of thee) to kill me? but I fear thee not. I trow I am able to tread thee under my feet; do the beſt thou canſt.

Philpot.

Anno 1555.

Matter made of a Knife ſeat to John Philpot in a Pigs belly.

Philpot. My Lord I cannot deny, but that there was a knife in the Piggs belly that was brought me. But who put it in, or for what purpoſe I know not, unleſs it were becauſe he that ſent the meat, thought I was without a Knife, and ſo put it in. But other things your Lordſhip needeth not to fear: for I was never without a Knife ſince I came to Priſon. And touching your own perſon, you ſhould live long if you ſhould live until I go about to kill you; and I confeſs by violence your Lordſhip is able to overcome me.

Articles again but to John Philpot.

London. I charge thee to anſwer to mine Articles. Hold him a Book. Thou ſhall ſwear to anſwer truly to all ſuch Articles, as I ſhall demand of thee.

Phil. I will firſt know your Lordſhip to be mine Ordinary, before I ſwear herein.

Lond. What, we ſhall have an Anabaptiſt of thee, which thinketh it not lawful to ſwear before a judge?

Phil. My Lord, I am no Anabaptiſt, I think it lawful to ſwear before a competent judge, being lawfully required. But I refuſe to ſwear in theſe cauſes before your Lordſhip, becauſe you are not mine Ordinary.

B. Boner of meer Power & Authority pronounceth himſelf to be Philpots Ordinary.

Lond. I am thine Ordinary, and here do pronounce by ſentence peremptory. that I am thine Ordinary, and that thou art of my Dioceſs: and here he bad call in more to bear him witneſs. And I make thee (taking one of his Servants by the arm) to be my notary. And now hearken to my Articles, to the which (when he had read them) he moniſhed me to make anſwer, and ſaid to the Keeper, Fet me his fellows, and I ſhall make them to be witneſſes againſt him.

In the mean while came in one of the Sheriffs of London, whom the Biſhop (calling for two Chairs) placed by him, ſaying, Maſter Sheriff I would you ſhould underſtand how I do proceed againſt this man. Maſter Sheriff, you ſhall hear what Articles this man doth maintain; and ſo read a rabblement of feigned Articles: That I ſhould deny Baptiſm to be neceſſary to them that were born of Chriſtian parents, that I denied Faſting and Prayer, and all other good deeds, and I maintained only bare Faith to be ſufficient to ſalvation whatſoever a man did beſides, and I maintained God to be the Author of all ſin and wickedneſs.

Falſe Articles feigned againſt John Philpot.

Phil. Ha, my Lord, have ye nothing of Truth to charge me withal, but ye muſt be fain to imagine theſe blaſphemous lies againſt me? You might as well have ſaid I had killed your Father. The ſcriptures ſay, That God will deſtroy all men that ſpeak lies. And is not your Lordſhip aſhamed to ſay before this worſhipful Gentleman (who is unknown to me) that I maintain theſe abominable blaſphemies which you have rehearſed? which if I did maintain, I were well worthy to be counted an Heretick, and to be burned an hundred times if it were poſſible.

Lond. I do object them unto thee, to hear what thou wilt ſay in them, and how thou canſt purge thy ſelf of them.

B. Boner taken with an untruth.

Phil. Then it was not juſtly ſaid of your Lordſhip in the beginning, that I did maintain them, ſince almoſt I hold none of theſe Articles you have read, in form as they are written.

Lond. How ſaiſt thou? Wilt thou anſwer to them or no?

Phil. I will firſt know you to be mine Ordinary, and that you may lawfully charge me with ſuch things, and then afterward being lawfully called in judgment, I will ſhew my mind fully therof, and not otherwiſe.

Other Priſoners called in to bear witneſs againſt John Philpot.

London. Well, then I will make thy Fellows to be witneſſes herein againſt thee? where are they? come.

Keep. They be here my Lord.

Lond. Come hither Srs, hold them a Book, you ſhall ſwear by the contents of that Book, that you ſhall (all manner of affections laid apart) ſay the Truth of all ſuch Articles as you ſhall be demanded of concerning this man here preſent, which is a very naughty man, and take you heed of him that he doth not deceive you, as I am afraid he doth you much hurt, and ſtrengtheneth you in your Errors.

The Priſoners refuſed to be ſworn againſt Mr. Philpot.

Priſoners. My Lord, we will not ſwear, except we know whereto: we can accuſe him of no evil, we have been but a while acquainted with him.

Phil. I wonder your Lordſhip knowing the Law will go about, contrary to the ſame, to have infamous perſons to be witneſſes, for your Lordſhip doth take them to be Hereticks, and by the Law an Heretick cannot be a witneſs.

B. Boner againſt the Law.

Lond. Yes, one Heretick againſt another may be well enough. And Mr. Sheriff, I will make one of them to be a witneſs againſt another.

Phil. You have the Law in your hand, and you will do what you liſt.

Priſoners. No, my Lord.

Note how the Biſhops make Anabaptiſts.

Lond. No, will you not? I will make you ſwear, whether you will or no. I ween they be Anabaptiſts, Maſter Sheriff, they think it not lawful to ſwear before a judge.

Philpot. We think it lawful to ſwear for a man judicially called as we are not now, but in a blind corner.

London. Why then, ſeeing you will not ſwear againſt your fellow, you ſhall ſwear for your ſelves, and I do here in the preſence of Mr. Sheriff object the ſame Articles unto you as I have done unto him, and do require you under the pain of Excommunication, to anſwer particularly unto every one of them when ye ſhall be examined, as ye ſhall be by and by examined by my Regiſter and ſome of my Chaplains.

Priſoners. My Lord, we will not accuſe our ſelves. If any man can lay any thing againſt us, we are here ready to anſwer thereto: otherwiſe we pray your Lordſhip not to burthen us; for ſome of us are here before you, we know no juſt cauſe why.

Lond. Mr. Sheriff, I will trouble you no longer with theſe froward men. And ſo he roſe up and was going away, talking with Mr. Sheriff.

B. Boner ſeeketh Corners.

Phil. Mr. Sheriff, I pray you record how my Lord proceedeth againſt us in Corners, without all order of Law, having no juſt cauſe to lay againſt us. And after this were all commanded to be put in the Stocks, where I ſate from morning untill night, and the Keeper at Night upon favour let me out.

Another Private conference between the Biſhop and Mr. Philpot in the Cole-houſe

Another private talk or conference betwixt him and the Biſhop.

Phil. The Sunday after, the Biſhop came into the Cole-houſe at night with the Keeper, and viewed the houſe, ſaying that he was never here afore: whereby a man may gueſs how he hath kept Gods Commandment in viſiting the Priſoners, ſeeing he was never with them that have been ſo nigh his noſe: and he came not then for any good zeal but to view the place, and thought it too good for me, and therefore after Supper, between eight and nine, he ſent for me, ſaying.

B. Boner viewing his Cole-houſe.

Lond. Sir, I have great diſpleaſure of the Queen and the Council for keeping you ſo long, and letting you have ſo much liberty; and beſides that, you be yonder and ſtrengthen the other Priſoners in their Errors, as I have laid wait for your doings, and am certified of you well enough: I will ſequeſter you therefore from them, and you ſhall hurt no more as you have done, and I will out of hand diſpatch you, as I am commanded, unleſs you will be a comformable man.

Phil. My Lord, you have my Body in your cuſtody; you may tranſport it whither you pleaſe: I am content. And I would you would make as quick expedition in my judgment, as, you ſay, I long therefore; and as for Conformity, I am ready to yield to all Truth, if any can bring better then I.

Lond. Why, will you believe no man but your ſelf, whatſoever they ſay?

Phil. My belief muſt not hang upon mens ſayings, without ſure Authority of Gods Word, the which if any can ſhew me, I will be pliant to the ſame; otherwiſe, I cannot go from my certain Faith to that which is uncertain.

Lond. Have you then the Truth only?

Phil. My Lord, I will ſpeak my mind freely unto you, and upon no malice I bear to you, before God. You have not the Truth, neither are you of the Church of God; but you perſecute both the Truth and the true Church of God, for the which cauſe you cannot proſper long. You ſee God doth not proſper your doings according to your expectations: He hath of late ſhewed his juſt judgment againſt one of your greateſt doers, who by report died miſerably, I envy not your Authority

He meaneth S. Gardiner B. of Winch.

you

Good counsel given to B. Boner.

you are in. You that have Learning ſhould know beſt how to rule. And ſeeing God hath reſtored you to your dignity and living again, uſe the ſame to Gods glory, and to the ſetting forth of his true Religion; otherwiſe it will not continue, do what you can. With this ſaying he was apauſed, and ſaid at length:

Lond. That good man was puniſhed for ſuch as thou art. Where is the Keeper? Come let him have him to the place that is provided for him. Go your way before.

Ibid. And he followed me, calling the Keeper aſide, commanding to keep all men from me, and narrowly to ſearch me (as the ſequel did declare,) and brought me to his privy door that goeth into the Church, and commanded two of his men to accompany the Keeper, and to ſee me placed.

J. Philpot conveyed into a cloſe Tower joyning to Pauls Church.

And afterwards I paſſed through Pauls up to Lollards Tower, and after that turned along all the Weſt-ſide of Pauls through the Wall, and paſſing through ſix or ſeven Doors, came to my lodging through many ſtraits; where I called to remembrance, that ſtrait is the way to Heaven. and it is in a Tower right on the other ſide of Lollards Tower, as high almoſt as the Battlements of Pauls, 8. foot of breadth and 13. of length, and almoſt over the Priſon where I was before, having a window opening toward the Eaſt, by the which I may look over the tops of a great many houſes, but ſee no man paſſing into them: and whoſo walketh in the Biſhops utter Gallery going to his Chappel, may ſee my Window and me ſtanding in the ſame.

Mr. Philpot ſearched for Writings.

And as I was come to my place, the Keeper pluckt off my Gown, and ſearched me very narrowly, and took away Penner, Inkhorn, Girdle and Knife, but (as God would) I had an inkling a little before I was called, of my removing, and thereupon made an errand to the Stool, where full ſore againſt my will I caſt away many a ſweet Letter and friendly: but that I had written of my laſt Examination before, I thruſt into my Hoſe, thinking the next day to have made an end thereof, and with going it was fallen down to my Leg, the which he by feeling did ſoon eſpy, and asked what that was. I ſaid, they were certain Letters: and with that he was very buſie to have them out. Let me alone (ſaid I) I will pluck them out; with that I put in my hand, having two other Letters therein, and brought up the ſame writing to my Codpiece, and there left it, giving him the other two Letters that were not of any great importance; the which to make a ſhew that they had been weighty, I began to tear as well as I could, till they ſnatched them from me, and ſo deluded him (I thank God) of his purpoſe.

The Copy of his Examinations by Gods great working preſerved.

After this he went his way, and as he was going, one of them that came with him, ſaid, that I did not deliver the Writings I had in my Hoſe, but two other Letters I had in my hand before. No did, quoth he? I will go ſearch him better: the which I hearing, conveyed my Examination I had written, into another place beſides my Bed, and took all my Letters I had in my purſe, and was tearing of them when he came again, and as he came I threw the ſame out of my Window, ſaying, That I heard what he ſaid; wherefore I did prevent his ſearching again, wherefore I was right glad. God be praiſed that gave me that preſent ſhift to blind their eyes from the knowledge of my writings, the which if they had known, it would have been a great occaſion of more ſtraiter keeping and looking unto, although they look as narrowly as they may.

The eighth Examination of John Philpot, before the Biſhop of London, *the Biſhop of St.*Davids, *Mr.*Mordant, and others, in the Biſhops Chappel.

The eighth Examination of Mr. Philpot.

THe next day after, my Keeper came before day in the morning to call me down, and ſo was I brought down into his Wardrobe, where with a Keeper I was left and there continued all the day. But after dinner I was called down into the Chappel, before the Biſhop of London, the Biſhop of St. Davids, Mr. Mordant one of the Queens Council, Mr. Archdeacon of London, and before a great many more Baalamites, and the Biſhop ſpake unto me in this wiſe.

Lond. Sir, here I object and lay unto you in the preſence of my Lord of St. Davids, and of Mr. Mordant, and of theſe worſhipful men, theſe Articles here in this Libel contained, and openly he read them.

Anno 1555.

Articles objected and read to J. Philpot.

To whom when I would particularly have anſwered to ſome of his Blaſphemies, he would not permit me, but ſaid, I ſhould have leiſure enough to ſay what I would, when he had ſaid: And unto theſe here I add another Schedule. Alſo I require thee to anſwer to the Catechiſm ſet forth in the Schiſmatical time of K. Edward. Alſo I will thee to anſwer to certain Concluſions agreed upon both in Oxford and Cambridge. And I here do bring forth theſe Witneſſes againſt thee in thine own preſence, namely my Lord of St. Davids, Mr. Mordant, and Mr. Harpſfield, with as many of you as were preſent in the Diſputation he made in the Convocation-houſe; willing you to teſtifie, of your Oaths taken upon a Book, his ſtubborn and unreverent behaviour he did there uſe againſt the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar. Give me a Book, and receiving one, he opened the ſame, ſaying, I will teach him here one trick in our Law which he knoweth not; that is, my Lord of St. Davids, becauſe you are a Biſhop, you have this priviledge, that you may ſwear, Inſpectis Evangeliis, & non tactis; By looking on the Goſpel Book, without touching of the ſame. And ſo he opened the Book in his ſight, and ſhut it again, and cauſed the other to put their hands on the Book, and took their Oath, and willed them to reſort to his Regiſter to make their Depoſitions when they might be beſt at leiſure; and afterwards he turned to me and ſaid, Now Sir, you ſhall anſwer but two words, whether you will anſwer to theſe Articles which I have laid unto you, directly, yea or nay?

Witneſſes ſworn againſt Mr. Philpot.

Phil. My Lord, you have told a long Tale againſt me, containing many lying Blaſphemies, which cannot be anſwered in two words: beſides this, you promiſed me at the beginning, that I ſhould ſay what I could for my defence, and now will you not give me leave to ſpeak? What Law is this?

Papiſts keep no promiſe.

Lond. Speak, yea or nay, for you ſhall ſay no more at this time.

The cauſe was, as I gueſs, that he ſaw ſo many there gathered to hear.

Phil. Then my two words you would have me ſpeak ſhall be, that I have appealed from you, and take you not for my ſufficient judge.

Lond. Indeed, Mr. Mordant, he hath appealed to the King and to the Queen; but I will be ſo bold with her Majeſty, to ſtay that appeal in mine own hands.

Phil. You will do what you liſt, my Lord, you have the Law in your hands.

Lond. Wilt thou anſwer, or no?

Philpot. I will not anſwer otherwiſe then I have ſaid.

Lond. Regiſter, note his anſwer that he maketh.

Phil. Knock me on the head with an hatchet, or ſet up a ſtake and burn me out of hand, without further Law; as well you may do ſo, as do that you do, for all is without order of Law: ſuch tyranny was never ſeen as you uſe now adays; God of his mercy deſtroy your cruel Kingdom. And whilſt I ſpake this, the Biſhop went away in haſt.

B. Boner doth without order of Law.

St. Davids. Mr. Philpot, I pray you be quiet, and have patience with you.

Phil. My Lord, I thank God I have patience to hear and abide all your cruel intents againſt me: notwithſtanding I ſpeak this earneſtly, being moved thereto juſtly, to notifie your unjuſt and cruel dealing with men in Corners, without all due order of Law.

After this, at night I was conducted again by three or four into the Cole-houſe.

The ninth Examination of Mr. Philpot before Biſhop Boner and his Chaplains

The ninth Examination of Mr. John Philpot before the Biſhop and his Chaplains.

IN the morning the next day I was called down betimes by my keeper, and brought again into the Wardrope, where I remained until the Biſhop had heard his Maſs, and afterward he ſent up for me into his inward Parlour, and there he called for a Chair to ſit down, and brought his infamous Libel of his forged Articles in his hand, and ſate down, willing me to draw near unto him, and ſaid:

Lond.

Anno 1555.

Lond. I am this day appointed to tarry at home from the Parliament Houſe, to examin you and your Fellows upon theſe Articles, and you ſtand dallying with me, and will neither anſwer to nor fro. I wis all your Exceptions will not ſerve you. Will it not be a fair honeſty for you, think ye, that when thou comeſt before my Lord Maior and the Sheriffs, and other worſhipful Audience, when I ſhall ſay before them all, that I have had thee theſe many times before me, and before ſo many learned men, and then thou couldſt ſay nothing for that thou ſtandeſt in, for all thy brags of learning, neither wouldſt anſwer directly to any thing?

John Philpot ſtill ſtandeth to his former Plea to anſwer before his own Ordinary.

Phil. My Lord, I have told you my mind plain enough; but yet I do not intend to loſe that priviledge the Law giveth me, the which is free choice to anſwer where I am not bound, and this priviledge will I cleave unto, until I be compelled otherwiſe.

Lond. Well, I perceive you will play the obſtinate fool. Lay thine Appellation when thou comeſt in Judgment, and anſwer in the mean while to theſe Articles.

Phil. No, my Lord, by your leave I will not anſwer to them, until my lawful Appeal be tried.

Lond. Well, thou ſhalt hear them, and with that he began to read them.

John Philpot will not hear his Articles read.

Phil. I ſhrank back into the window, and looked on a Book, and after he had read them over he ſaid unto me;

Lond. I have read them over, although it hath not pleaſed you to hear me. I marvel, in good faith, what thou meaneſt to be ſo wilful and ſtubborn, ſeeing thou maiſt do well enough if thou liſt. It is but a ſingularity; doſt thou not ſee all the Realm againſt thee?

Phil. My Lord, I ſpeak unto you in the witneſs of God, before whom I ſtand, that I am neither wedded to mine own will, neither ſtand upon mine own ſtubbornneſs or ſingularity, but upon my Conſcience inſtructed by Gods Word: and if your Lordſhip can ſhew better evidence than I have for a good Faith, I will follow the ſame.

Lond. What thou wilt not, lo, for all that. Well, all that is paſt ſhall be forgotten; and be thou conformable unto us. I wis thou mighteſt find as much favour as thou wouldeſt deſire.

Phil. Then I perceiving that he fawned ſo much upon me, thought it good to give him ſome comfort of my relenting, to the intent I might give him and his hypocritical Generation openly a further foil, perceiving that they dare reaſon openly with none, but with ſuch as be unlearned, and for lack of knowledge not able to anſwer, or elſe with ſuch as they have a hope, that for fear or love of the world, will recant: I ſaid, my Lord, it is not unknown to you, that I have openly, in the audience of a great number, ſtood to the maintenance of theſe Opinions I am in, and by learning did offer to defend them; therefore, my Lord, I would it might openly appear to the world that I am won by learning, or elſe what will they ſay, but that either for fear, or love of the world, I am without any ground turned from the Truth? and if I hear any kind of learning openly ſhewed, I ſhall be as conformable as you may require me.

Lond. Yea marry, now ye ſpeak ſomewhat like a reaſonable man. I wis you might have had a great deal more favour in my houſe, and liberty, then you have had; and you ſhall lack nothing that is within my houſe; call for it, and you ſhall have it. And what is it that you would openly by learning ſomewhat be ſatisfied in? tell me.

Phil. My Lord, I have openly ſaid, and do believe it alſo, that your Sacrifice of the Maſs is no Sacrament.

Lond. What, do you deny the Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament?

Talke of the Sacrament.

Phil. No, my Lord, I deny not the Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, but I have denied the Sacrament of the Altar, as it is uſed in your Maſs, to be the true Sacrament of Chriſts inſtitution; and firſt it muſt be proved a Sacrament before there can be any Preſence granted.

Lond. Why, do you deny the Maſs to be a Sacrament? I pray you what is a Sacrament? Is it not a ſign of a holy thing, as S. Auſtin doth define it?

This Argument in the ſecond figure concludingaffirmatively, doth not hold by Logick.

Phil. Yes verily that it is.

Lond. Then I make this Argument unto you, a Sacrament is the ſign of a holy thing: but the Maſs is the ſign of a holy thing, ergo, it is a Sacrament.

Phil. You muſt add this to your Major, or firſt Propoſition, as S. Auguſtine doth mean, that a Sacrament is the ſign of a holy thing inſtituted of God, and commanded; for otherwiſe it can be no Sacrament, for all men cannot make a Sacrament.

Lond. I grant that; and ſuch a ſign of a holy thing is the Maſs of Chriſts inſtitution.

Phil. I deny that, my Lord.

Lond. I will prove this by S. Auguſtine by and by. I will go ſhew you the Book, and you ſhall have any Book I have that you will demand. Ho, who is without there. Call me Mr. Doctor Chedſey, Mr. Archdeacon, Mr. Coſins, and other Chaplains hither.

The Biſhop being brought to a narrow ſtreight, is fain to call for more help.

Here my Lord, Mr. Doctor Chedſey is gone to Weſtminſter, and Mr. Archdeacon was here even now.

Lond. Mr. Coſins, I pray you examine him upon theſe Articles, and write his anſwer he maketh to every one of them. I will go examine his Fellows, and ſend you S. Auguſtine by and by. I find this man more conformable than he was before.

Coſins. I truſt, my Lord, you ſhall find him at length a good Catholick man. Marry, here be a ſight of Hereſies; I dare ſay you will hold none of them, nor ſtand in any of them. How ſay you to the firſt?

Phil. Mr. Coſins, I have told my Lord already, that I will anſwer to none of theſe Articles he hath objected againſt me; but if you will with learning anſwer to that which is in queſtion between my Lord and me, I will gladly hear and commune with you.

Coſins. No, will you? Why what is that then that is in queſtion between my Lord and you?

Whether the Maſs be a Sacrament.

Phil. Whether your Maſs be a Sacrament, or no.

Coſins. What, the Maſs to be a Sacrament? Who ever doubted thereof?

Phil. If it be an undoubted truth, you may the ſooner prove it; for I doubt much thereof.

Coſins. Why, I will prove it. It is the ſign of a holy thing; Ergo, it is a Sacrament.

Phil. I deny your Antecedent.

Coſins. What, will you ſo? then there is no reaſoning with you.

Mr. Coſins giveth over in the plain field.

Thus Mr. Coſins gave over in the plain field for want of further proof. And then the morrow Maſs Chaplain began to ſpeak for his Occupation; and with that Mr. Harpsfield came out from my Lord with S. Auguſtines Epiſtles, ſaying:

Harpſ. My Lord hath ſent you here S. Auguſtine to look upon, and I pray you look what he ſaith in a certain Epiſtle which he writeth; I will read over the whole. Here you may hear the celebration of the Maſs, and how it reproveth them that went a hawking and hunting before the celebration of the ſame, on the Sabbath and Holidays.

Phil. I perceive the Contents of this Epiſtle, and I ſee nothing herein againſt me, neither any thing that maketh for the proof of your Sacrament of the Maſs.

Harpſ. No, doth he not make mention of the Maſs, and the celebration thereof? what can be ſpoken more plain?

The Epiſtle of S. Auguſtine alledged for confirmation of the Maſs, anſwered how it is derived.

Phil. S. Auſtin meaneth of the celebration of the Communion, and of the true uſe of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and not of your private Maſs, which you of late years have erected in the ſtead thereof; for this word Maſs hath been an old tearm attributed to the Communion even from the Primitive Church. And I pray you tell me what Miſſa doth ſignifie. I think not many that ſay Maſs can well tell.

Coſins. No, cannot? that is marvel.

Phil. Then tell me if you can. But Mr. Coſins and my morrow Maſs Chaplain were both dumb, looking upon Mr. Harpsfield for help, and at length he ſpake.

The Word Miſſa.

Harpſ. You think it cometh of the Hebrew word Maſſah, as though none were ſeen in the Hebrew but you.

Phil. I have not gone ſo long to School, to derive the ſignification of Miſſa, which is a Latin word, out of Hebrew: but I have learned to interpret Greek words by Greek, and Latin by Latin, and Hebrew by Hebrew; I take the Communion to be called Miſſa, à mittendo, of ſuch things as at the celebration of the Communion were ſent by ſuch as were of ability, to the relief of the Poor, where the Rich brought after their Devotion and Ability, and required the Miniſter in the Celebration of the Communion to pray unto God for them, and to accept their common Alms, which they at ſuch times did ſend for the help of their poor Brethren and Siſters; and for this cauſe was it called Miſſa, as learned men do witneſs. At the which Celebration of the Maſs, all that were preſent did communicate under both kinds, according to Chriſts inſtitution, as they did in S. Auguſtines time. But unleſs you can ſhew that your Maſs is uſed as then it was, ye ſhall never by the name of Maſs (which S. Auguſtine attributed to the true uſe of the Communion) prove your private Maſs to be a Sacrament, unleſs ye can prove the ſame now to be in your Maſſes as was then, which is clean contrary.

Harpſ. What, deny you the Maſs to be a Sacrament? for ſhame ſpeak it not.

Phil. I will not be aſhamed to deny it, if you cannot prove it.

The Maſs is a Sacrifice, quoth Harpſfield.

Harpſ. Why, it is a Sacrifice, which is more than a Sacrament.

Phil. You may make of it as much as you liſt: but you ſhall never make it a Sacrifice, as you may imagin thereof, but firſt it muſt be a Sacrament, for of the Sacrament you deduce your Sacrifice.

Harpſ. Why? doth not Chriſt ſay, This is my Body? and doth not the Prieſt pronounce the ſame that Chriſt did?

Phil. The pronunciation only is not enough, unleſs the words be therewithal applied to the uſe, as Chriſt ſpake them to. For though ye ſpeak the words of Baptiſm over water never ſo many times, yet there is no Baptiſm unleſs there be a Chriſtian perſon to be baptized:

A Sacrament is no Sacrament without his uſe.

Harpſ. Nay, that is not like; for, Hoc eſt corpus meum, is an Indicative propoſition, ſhewing a working of God in the Subſtance of Bread and Wine.

Phil. It is not only an Indicative propoſition, but alſo Imperative or commanding. For he that ſaid, Hoc eſt corpus meum, i. This is my Body; ſaid alſo, Accipite, manducate, i. Take ye, eat ye. And except the former part of the inſtitution of Chriſts Sacrament be accompliſhed according to the Communion; the later, This is my Body, can have no verification, take it which way you will, and how you will.

Morrow-Maſs Chap. Why then you will make the Sacrament to ſtand in the receiving, and that receiving maketh it a Sacrament.

Receiving maketh not the Sacrament, yet the Sacrament of the Lords Supper without it be received, is no Sacrament.

Phil. I do not ſay, that the receiving only maketh it a Sacrament, but I ſay, that a common receiving muſt needs be concurrent with the true Sacrament, as a neceſſary Member, without the which it cannot be a Sacrament, becauſe Chriſt hath made this a principal part of the Sacrament, Take ye, eat ye, which you do not in your Maſs according to Chriſts inſtitution; wherefore, it can be no Sacrament, for that it wanteth of Chriſts inſtitution.

Coſins. We do forbid none to come to it, but as many as liſt may be partakers with us at the Maſs, if they require it.

Phil. Nay, that they ſhall not, though they require it, you will miniſter but one kind unto them, which is not after Chriſts inſtitution. Beſides that, you ought before you go to Maſs, to exhort all that be preſent, to make a Sacrifice of Thankſgiving, for Chriſts Paſſion with you, and exhort them to be partakers with you, according to Chriſts Commandment, ſaying unto all that be preſent, Take ye, eat ye: And likewiſe by preaching ſhew forth the Lords death, which you do not.

What the Prieſts ought to do at their Maſs.

Coſins. What, if all things be done, even as you would have it, and whilſt the Miniſter is about to miniſter the Sacrament, before any have received it, there riſe a ſudden hurly burly, that the Communicants be compelled to go away; is it not a Sacrament for all that none hath communicated beſide the Prieſt.

Phil. In this caſe, where all things are appointed to be done according to Gods word, if incident neceſſity had not let, I cannot ſay but it is a Sacrament, and that he which hath received, hath received the true Sacrament. After this, the Morrow-maſs Prieſt made this apiſh reaſon.

The Morrow-maſs Prieſt. If the Sacrament of the Maſs be no Sacrament, unleſs all do receive it, becauſe Chriſt ſaid, Take ye, eat ye; then the Sacrament of Baptiſm is no Sacrament where there is but one baptized, becauſe Chriſt ſaid to his Apoſtles, Go preach the Goſpel to all Creatures, baptizing all Nations in the Name of the Father, &c. Anno 1555.

Phil. In that ſaying of Chriſt, baptizing all Nations, is a commandment to the Apoſtles, to baptize all ſorts of men, and to exclude none that believe; be he Gentile or Jew, not meaning all at once, for that were impoſſible. And there are many examples that Baptiſm may be ſingularly miniſtred to one perſon, as we have example in Chriſt baptized of John, and in the Eunuch baptized of Philip, with many more ſuch like: but ſo have you not of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, but contrariwiſe by the expreſs words of S. Paul, you are commanded to uſe it in a communion and participation of many together; Cor. 11. Quoties convenitis ad manducandum, alius alium expectate; as oft as ye come together to eat (meaning the Lords Supper) tarry one for another. And alſo the Miniſter in the celebration of the Sacrament ſpeaketh unto all that be preſent in Chriſts behalf, to communicate with him, ſaying, Take ye, and eat ye. Wherefore, as many as be preſent and do not communicate, break Gods commandment in not receiving the ſame, and the Miniſter is no juſt Miniſter that doth not diſtribute the Sacrament, as Chriſt did, to all that are preſent; and where Gods word is tranſgreſſed, there is not Chriſt preſent, and conſequently it is no Sacrament.

The Sacrament of Baptiſm may be miniſtred unto any ſingular perſon.

The Sacrament of the Lords Supper requireth a Communion.

At the miniſtration of the Supper all that be preſent ought to communicate.

Harpſ. What, would you have it no Sacrament without it be a Communion?

Phil. I make it not ſo, but Gods expreſs word teacheth me ſo, yea, alſo all the ancient Writers; as S. Chryſoſtom writing upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, ſaith, That the oblation is in vain, whereas none doth communicate with the Prieſt. If by his judgment the action of the Prieſt alone is in vain, where is no Communion, how can that be a Sacrament, which he calleth a vain Oblation, and a vain ſtanding at the Altar?

Chryſoſt. in Ep. ad Eph.

It is no Sacrament without it be a Communion.

Coſins. You are ſuch another Fellow as I have not heard, that will not have the Maſs to be a Sacrament; you are no man for me to reaſon withal. Come, let us go, pointing to the Morrow-maſs Chaplain: we will leave you (Mr. Archdeacon) and him together; and ſo they went away. Afterward the Archdeacon fell into earneſt perſwaſions with me, ſaying:

Coſins and the Chaplain give over their part.

Harpſ. Mr. Philpot, you and I have been of old acquaintance a long time; we were School-fellows both in Wincheſter, and in Oxford many years. Wherefore I muſt wiſh you as well to do as my ſelf, and I pray you ſo think of me.

Phil. I thank you for your good will towards me. But if you be deceived, (as I am ſure you are) I ſhall deſire you not to wiſh me deceived with you. For afore God I tell you plainly, you are highly deceived, and maintain falſe Religion, and be not thoſe men you take you ſelves for: and if you do not repent, and leave off your perſecuting of Chriſts Truth, you will go to the Devil for it. Therefore conſider it in time, I give you warning, for elſe in the Day of Judgment I ſhall be a witneſs againſt you, that I told you this here talking together.

Talk between Mr. Philpot and Mr. Harpſfield Archdeacon.

Harpſ. Fie, that is but your own vain ſingular opinion; I perceive you are now ſtill that man you were in Oxford.

Phil. I truſt you can report no notorious evil that ever you knew by me there.

Harpſ. I can ſay no evil of your Converſation, but I knew you to be a ſtudious man. Marry, if you remember when we met in diſputation in parvis, you would not lightly give over, and for that cauſe I ſpeak what I have ſaid.

Phil. Mr. Harpsfield, you know in the Schools of Oxford, when we were young men, we did ſtrive much upon vain glory, and upon contention, more than for the truth; but now our years and our riper learning teach us to fall to a truth, which muſt be our portion for ever. And if I was then, in my time of ignorance, earneſt in my own cauſe, I ought now to be earneſt in my Maſter Chriſts cauſe, and his truth. I know now that nothing done upon vain glory and ſingularity can pleaſe God, have it never ſo godly a ſhew: wherefore I pray you judge not ſo of me now.

Harpſ. What, will you think your ſelf better learned, then all the learned men in this Realm?

Phil.

Anno 1555.

Phil. My Faith hangeth not upon the learned of the world, but upon the learned of Gods Word.

Harpſ. Well, I will talk with you no more as now, but pray to God to open your heart.

Phil. I pray God open both our hearts, to do more his will, than we have done in times paſt.

Harpſ. Ho Keeper, take him away with you.

What this Pronoun Hoc doth demonſtrate.

Phil. I pray you Mr. Harpsfield, tell me what this Pronoun (Hoc) doth demonſtrate and ſhew, in this Indicative Propoſition, as you call it, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my Body?

Harpſ. It doth demonſtrate the Subſtance of Bread, which by the words ſpoken by the Prieſt, and by the Omnipotency of God, is turned into the Subſtance of Chriſts very Body.

That is againſt the opinion of Wincheſter. Read before in the Tractation of Wincheſters Sermon.

Phil. Is the Subſtance of the Bread, as you ſay, turned into Chriſts Body?

Harpſ. Yea, that it is.

Phil. Why, then Chriſts Body receiveth daily a great increaſe of many thouſand pieces of Bread into his Body, and that is his Body become now, which was not before, and by this you would ſeem to make, that there is an alteration in Chriſts glorified Body, which is a wicked thing to think.

M. Harpsfield in a double tale.

Harpſ. Then he ſet about again, and remembring better himſelf, and ſeeing the inconvenience of his firſt aſſertion, of the Tranſubſtantiation of Bread into Chriſts Body, he ſaid, That the Subſtance of Bread, after the words ſpoken by the Prieſt, was evacuated or vaniſhed away by the Omnipotency of God.

Contrariety in Popiſh doctrine.

Phil. This is another Song than you ſang firſt: and here you may ſee how contrary you are to your ſelves. For indeed your Schoolmen do hold, That the very Subſtance of Bread is really turned into the Subſtance of Chriſts Body. And now you perceiving of late the inconvenience which is objected againſt you in that Opinion, you are driven to imagin a new ſhift, and ſay, the Subſtance of Bread is evacuated, contrary to that your Church hath firſt believed and taught. O what contrariety is there among you, and all to deface the ſincere Truth?

Preſence of Gods Omnipotence.

Harpſ. Is not God omnipotent? and cannot he do as he hath ſaid?

Phil. But his omnipotence will not do as you ſay, contrary to his word and to his honour. It is not Gods honour to include him bodily into a piece of Bread, and of neceſſity to tye him thereto. It is not Gods honour for you to make a piece of Bread God and Man, which you ſee before your face doth putrifie after a certain time. Is not Gods Omnipotency as able to give his Body with the Sacramental Bread, as to make ſo many turnings away of the Bread, as you do, and that directly againſt the Scripture, which calleth it Bread many times after the Conſecration? Are you not aſhamed to make ſo many alterations of the Lords holy Inſtitution as you do, and to take away the ſubſtantial parts of the Sacrament, as, Take ye, eat ye, drink ye all of this; do ye this in remembrance of me: and to place in their ſteads, Hear ye, gaze ye, knock ye, worſhip ye, offer ye, ſacrifice ye for the quick and the dead? If this be not blaſphemy to God and his Sacraments, to add and to pluck away in this ſort, and that contrary to the mind of all ancient Writers, and contrary to the example of Chriſt and all his Apoſtles, tell me.

The ſubſtantial parts of the Sacrament taken away by the Papiſts.

Harpſ. I know you have gathered the ſayings of the Doctors together, which make for your purpoſe; I will talk no longer with you.

Phil. I pray God open both our hearts, to do more his will than we have done in times paſt.

M. Harpsfield giveth over for lack of good matter

Harpſ. Ho Keeper, take him away with you.

The tenth Examination of John Philpot before Biſhop Boner, his Regiſter, and others.

His tenth Examination before the Biſhop and others.

THE next day after Dinner I was brought into my Lords upper Hall, and there he called me before him and his Regiſter, and before Dr. Chedſey, in the preſence of two homely Gentlemen, and a Prieſt which I knew not: At what time the Biſhop ſaid, Lond. I do here lay unto this man in your preſence (requiring you to be a witneſs againſt him, as much as you know in any of them) theſe Articles, this Book of the Catechiſm made in King Edwards days, alſo theſe Concluſions agreed upon both in Oxford and Cambridge; alſo I lay unto him, that he hath deſpiſed the Cenſures of the Church, and hath ſtood accurſed more than this twelve-month, and never required Abſolution thereof. How ſay you, waſt thou not accurſed by my L. Chancellor?

Phil. I was excommunicated by him wrongfully, and without any juſt cauſe, and without order of Law, being never perſonally cited.

Lond. Didſt thou not tell me the other day, when I required thee to come to the Maſs, that thou waſt excommunicated, and therefore by the Law couldſt not hear Maſs? How long haſt thou been thus excommunicated?

Phil. More than a twelve-month and a half.

Lond. Lo, you may hear what he ſaith: write it.

John Philpot required abſolution of Wincheſter, and was denied.

Phil. But as you would have written that I have ſaid, I have been thus long excommunicated; ſo alſo let him write, that I did require of my Lord Chancellor that did excommunicate me, my Abſolution, but he would not give it me, ſaying, That I was excommunicatus ipſo jure, becauſe I was an Heretick, as it pleaſed him to call me, therefore accurſed by your Law, and ſo commanded me to Priſon, where I remain.

Gentleman. Why do you not require Abſolution at my Lords hands here now?

Phil. Becauſe he is not mine Ordinary, neither hath by the Law any thing to do with me of right.

Bp. Boner will needs be his Ordinary.

Lond. What an obſtinate Fool is this? I tell thee I will be thine Ordinary whether thou wilt or no.

Mr. Philpot appealeth from the B. of London again.

Phil. And becauſe of this your unrighteous force towards me, I have appealed from you, and require you, Mr. Regiſter, that my Appeal may be entred in writing.

Lond. Have you heard ſuch a froward Fellow as this? he ſeemed yeſterday to be very tractable, and I had a good hope of him; I tell thee thou art of my Dioceſs.

Phil. I am of Wincheſter Dioceſs, and not of London Dioceſs.

Lond. I pray you may not a man be of two Dioceſſes at once?

Phil. No, that he cannot.

How one may be of Dioceſſes at once.

Lond. Lo, will you ſee what an ignorant Fool this is in the Law, in the which he would ſeem to be ſeen? I tell thee a man may be of three Dioceſſes at once: as if thou wert born in London, by reaſon thereof thou ſhouldſt be of my Dioceſs; or elſe if thou wert not born, but hadſt a Dignity here, alſo thou art to be counted of my Dioceſs, or elſe by reaſon of thy habitation in my Dioceſs.

Phil. In none of theſe reſpects I am of your Lordſhips Dioceſs. But for all that, this will not follow, that I, dwelling at Wincheſter, am at that preſent of London Dioceſs.

Lond. What wilt thou lay thereof? Wilt thou recant if I prove it?

Phil. But what ſhall I win if you do not?

Lond. I will give thee my Biſhoprick if I prove it not.

Phil. Yea, but who ſhall deliver it me if I win?

Lond. Thou art an arrogant Fool, enter their Oaths, and take theſe Witneſſes Depoſitions. I muſt be gone to the Parliament Houſe.

After this ſpake unto me a Prieſt ſtanding by, asking me whether I was kin to my Lord Rich, or no.

Phil. I ſaid, he ſaid ſo himſelf to me the other day, but how I know not.

Ched. I heard him ſay he was his nigh Kinſman.

His Baſtarmite Kinſman.

Baalamite. Why, then you and I muſt be of kin, for he is my nigh Kinſman. How chance it that you and I be of contrary Judgments?

Phil. It is no marvel, for Chriſt propheſied, That the Father ſhall be divided againſt the Son, and the Son againſt the Father for my Truths ſake:

Baal. You do hold (as I underſtand) againſt the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, and againſt the holy Maſs.

Phil. If you can prove it a Sacrament, I will not hold againſt you.

Scripture handſomly applied.

Baal. What, prove it a Sacrament, quoth he? doth not S. Paul ſay, Quæ oculus non vidit, & auris non audivit, ea præparavit Deus diligentibus ſe; That ſuch things as the eye hath not ſeen, neither ear heard, hath God prepared for them that love him?

Phil. That ſaying of S. Paul concerneth nothing your Sacrament, but is meant of the heavenly joyes that be prepared for all faithful Believers.

Baal. Why, then I perceive you understand not S. Paul. By God, you are deceived.

Phil. You ought not to swear Kinsman, if you will that I shall so call you: and without dis-worship of our Kindred, I understand S. Paul as well as you, and know what I say, and with that shewed him a Greek Testament with Erasmus's translation, and with the old also, demanding him which Text he was best acquainted withal.

Baal. I knew Greek too once, as well as you, I care not which you read.

Phil. You know them then all alike; you understand the one as well as the other. With this my Baalamite Kinsman departed in a fury.

The next days talk with the Bishops.

The next day after I was brought down again after dinner to the Chappel, and there my Baalamite Kinsman (to verifie the Scriptures, that a mans own Kinsfolks shall be his enemies) came in with the Bishop as a Witness against me: and there the Bishop caused another that came to him about other matters, to swear also to be a witness against me, which was a Priest also, saying,

Witness again sworn against John Philpot.

Lond. You shall swear to depose all the truth of certain Articles you shall be inquired of concerning this man; and here I (according to the Law) do bring them forth in thy presence.

John Philpot appealeth again from the Bishop.

Phil. My Lord, I do not agree to the production of them, but do appeal from all these and other your proceedings against me: and require you Mr. Register, that my Appeal may be entred, and I will give you for your labour.

Reg. Your Appeal shall be entred at leisure. Whom do you appeal unto? tell me.

Phil. I appeal to a higher Judge, as to the Lieutenant of the Archbishoprick of Canterbury; for I know not who is Bishop thereof at this present. With that the Bishop went away, and my Baalamite Kinsman looking big upon me, but said never a word.

Thus have I in haste scribled out all mine Examinations hitherto, that the same which hath been done unto me in dark, might come to light, and that the Papists unjust proceedings, and nakedness in their false Religion, might be known to their confusion. Jesus is Emanuel, that is, God with us, Amen. 1555.

The eleventh Examination of John Philpot, had on S. Andrews day, before the Bishop of Duresm, the B. of Chichester, the B. of Bathe, the B. of London, the Prolocutor, Mr. Christopherson, and Dr. Chedsey, Mr. Morgan of Oxford, Mr. Hussey of the Arches, Dr. Weston, Dr. Harpsfield Archdeacon, Mr. Cosins, and Mr. Johnson Register to the B. of London, in his Palace.

Yet another Examination of John Philpot before Bishops and Doctors.

I Was coming, being sent for with my Keeper, and the Bishop of London met me in his Hall-door, and full mannerly he played the Gentleman-Usher, to bring me before the Lords, saying,

Lond. My Lords, I shall desire you to take some pains with this man, he is a Gentleman, and I would he should do well, but he will wilfully cast away himself.

Dures. Come hither Sir, what is your name?

Phil. My name is Philpot.

Dures. I have heard of that name to be a worshipful stock, and since you be a Gentleman, do as you may live worshipfully among other Gentlemen. What is the cause of your trouble now?

Phil. I told him the cause, as in my former Examinations is expressed.

Dures. Well, all causes set apart, will you now be a conformable man to the Catholick Faith, and leave all new fangled Opinions and Heresies? I wis I was in Germany with Luther at the beginning of these Opinions, and can tell how they began. Leave them, and follow the Catholick Church throughout the whole world, as the whole Realm now doth.

Setling of a mans conscience in Religion requireth good advisement.

Phil. My Lord, I am in the Catholick Faith, and desire to live and dye in the same: but it is not unknown to your Lordship, that I with others these twenty years have been taught another manner of Faith then you now go about to compel us unto; wherefore it is requisite that we have a time to weigh the same, and to hear how it agreeth with Gods word. For Faith is at a sudden neither won, neither removed, but as S. Paul saith, Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word; Fides ex auditu, auditus per verbum. Anno 1555.

Papists will have Faith to be compelled.

Chich. And if you will give me leave, my Lord, I will shew him how he taketh the saying of S. Paul amiss, as many other now adays alledging the same do, that they ought not to be compelled to believe, whereas S. Paul meaneth of Infidels, and not of the Faithful; and so S. Austin, writing against the Donatists, saith, That the Faithful may be compelled to believe.

Bernard. in Cant. Ser. 66. Faith ought not to be compelled.

Phil. S. Bernard (if it please your Lordship) doth take that sense of S. Paul as I do, saying, that Fides est suadenda, & non imponenda; Faith must be perswaded to a man, and not injoyned. And S. Augustine speaketh of such as were first throughly perswaded by manifest Scriptures, and yet would resist of stubborn wilfulness.

Chich. So Bernard meaneth of Infidels also.

Phil. No, my Lord, that he both not, for he writeth not of the Infidels, but he writeth of such as were deceived by Errors.

Chich. My Lord of Durham, I have been so bold to interrupt your Lordship of your tale, I pray you now proceed on.

Dur. Mr. Philpot, will you be of the same Catholick Faith and Church with us you were baptized in, and your Godfathers promised for you, and hold as we do, and then may you be rid out of trouble? I perceive you are learned, and it is pity but you should do well.

John Philpot is of the same Faith and Church still as he was baptized.

Phil. I am of the same Catholick Faith and Catholick Church I was baptized unto, and in that will I live and dye.

Dur. That is well said; if you hold there you cannot do but well.

No man bound to be of the Faith of his Godfathers in every respect

Chich. Yea, my Lord, but he meaneth otherwise then you do; Are you of the same Faith your Godfathers and Godmothers were, or no?

Phil. I cannot tell what Faith they were of certainly, but I am of the Faith I was baptized unto, which is, the Faith of Christ: for I was not baptized in the Faith of my Godfathers, but in the Faith of Christ.

The place of S. Augustine in fide susceptorum, expounded.

Chich. S. Austin saith, That Infants are baptized in fide susceptorum, in the Faith of their Godfathers.

Phil. S. Augustine in so saying, meaneth of the Faith of Christ, which the Godfathers do or ought to believe, and not otherwise.

Dures. How say you, will you believe as we do, and all the Learned of the Realm, or no? and be of one Church with us?

Phil. My Lords, It is not unknown to you, that there hath been always two Churches.

Chich. Nay, that is not so: there is but one Catholick Church.

The true Church and the false Church ever joyned together. Aug. de Civ. Dei l. 15. c. 15.

Phil. I shall desire your Lordships to hear out my tale, and to take my meaning. For I know there is but one true Church; but always from the beginning there hath been joyned to the same true Church a false Church, Adversary to the true: and that was declared at the first in Abel and Cain, who persecuted and slew his Brother, in whom (as S. Augustine witnesseth) is represented the false and true Church. And after that, as soon as God had chosen his peculiar people, and shewed unto them his Sanctuary, holy Statutes, and Will, anon after rose the false Church, and ten of the twelve Tribes of Israel divided themselves from the true Church of Juda and Benjamin, and made to themselves at Bethel, and set up golden Calves, and yet pretended therewith to serve God, and so abused his word. Notwithstanding, God was displeased with them, and ceased not his wrath, until he had utterly destroyed them.

The true and false Church declared first in Abel and Cain.

Chich. I will grant you before the coming of Christ, there were two Churches in the old Law; but in the new Law since Christs coming, you cannot shew it to be so by the Scripture.

The Bp. of Chichester D. Day, driven to a streight.

Phil. Yes, my Lord, that I can, if you will give me leave. After Christ had chosen his twelve Apostles was there not a Judas in the new Law, and a Simon Magus? and were not they of the false Church?

Chich. Yea, but I mean after the Gospel was written, where can you find me two Churches after Christ had ascended, and sent the Holy Ghost?

Phil. The Gospel was written eight years after the Ascension written by S. Matthew, and the writing thereof is not material to the Declaration of these two Churches to have been always from time to time; as by example it may be shewed: and yet as evil as my memory is, I remember in the New Testament is mention made of two Churches, as it appeareth in the Apocalyps, and also S. Paul to the Thessalonians maketh mention that Antichrist, with his false Generation, shall sit in the Temple of God. To the which Chichester replied not.

of

Duresme. The Church in the Scripture is likened to a great Fishers net, which containeth in it both good fishes and bad fishes. I trust you will be of the better sort, and lean to the truth.

Phil. My Lord, it is my whole desire now to follow that which is good, whatsoever I have done in times past, and to cleave to Gods Truth.

Duresme. Do you so, and then shall you do well: it is almost night, my Lord of London, I must needs be gone.

The Bishops begin to be weary of their part.

Lond. Nay, my Lord of Duresme, I must desire your Lordships, and my L. of Chichester, to tarry a little while. And before he had so said, the Bishop of Bathe went his way without saying any word. What, my L. of Bathe, will you be gone? I pray you tarry. My Lords, I have earnest matters to charge this man withal, whereof I would your Lordships to be made privy, and I have them here written in a Libel, I pray you sit down again, or else I will.

Bishop Bonner would fain pick out matter if he could tell how.

First, I lay to him here, that he hath written in a Bible, which I took from him, this erroneous saying, Quod Spiritus est Vicarius Christi in terra; i. The Holy Ghost is Christs Vicar in earth, Wilt thou abide by this saying of thine; that the Spirit is Christs Vicar on earth?

Phil. My Lord, it is not my saying, it is a better learned mans than mine: For I use not to write mine own sayings, but the notable sayings of other ancient Writers, as all others be where ye find the same written. And as I remember, it is even the saying of S. Bernard, and a saying that I need not to be ashamed of, neither you to be offended at, as my Lord of Duresme, and my Lord of Chichester, by their learning can discern, and will not reckon it evil said:

Lond. No will? why, take away the first syllable, and it soundeth Arius.

Phil. That is far fetched indeed; if your Lordship will scan mens sayings in such wise, you may find out what you list.

Another matter picked against John Philpot.

Lond. But to help this, I find moreover written with his own hand in another Book; In me Johanne Philpotto ubi abundavit peccatum, superabundavit & gratia; that is, in me John Philpot, where sin did abound, grace hath superabounded. I pray you what superabundant grace have you more then other men? So said Arius, That he had the abundance of grace above all other.

Rom. 5. 2 Tim. 1.

Phil. My Lord, you need not be offended with that saying more than the other, for it is the saying of S. Paul himself, and I did apply it to my self for my comfort, knowing that though my sins be huge and great in the sight of God, yet is his mercy and grace above them all. And concerning Arius and his Adherents, I defie them, as it is well known I have written against them.

Lond. Also I lay to thy charge that thou killedst thy Father, and was accursed of thy Mother in her Deathbed, as I can bring witness thereof.

John Philpot falsly charged with untruth, which no truth can be found against him.

Phil. O Lord, what Blasphemy is this? Hath your Lordship nothing of truth to charge me withal, but (as I may speak it with your Honour) such forged blasphemous lies? If any of these can be proved, I will promise here to recant at Pauls Cross, what you will have me: I am so sure they are as great blasphemies as may be objected against any man. Ha, my Lords, I pray you consider how my Lord of London hath hitherto proceeded against me: For indeed he hath none other but such pretensed slanderous lies.

Chic. They be Parerga; that is, matters beside the purpose.

Duresme. My Lord, I must needs bid you farewel.

Mr. Philpot charged with a Letter written to Mr. Green.

Lond. Nay my Lord, here is a Letter which I shall desire your Lordship to hear e're you go. This man (being in my keeping) hath taken upon him to write Letters out of Prison, and to pervert a young Gentleman, called Mr. Green, in my House, (call him hither) and hath made a false report of his examination, as you shall hear, not being content to be evil himself, but to make others as bad as himself. He all to tare the Letter when he saw my man went about to search him, but yet I have pieced it again together, and caused a Copy to be written thereof, and he read the torn Letter, bidding Mr. Christoferson and Morgan to mark the Copy thereof.

This Letter torn in the blind Tower, read before.

The Contents of the Letter was the Examination of Mr. Green before the Bp. of London in the presence of Mr. Fecknam Dean of Pauls, and of divers others, whose ready answers in the Scriptures and in the Doctors were wondred at of the Dean himself, and of many others, as Fecknam did report: and that he was committed to Dr. Chedsey, and to have his meat from the Bishops own Table. How say you, my Lords, was this well done of him, being my Prisoner, to write this? And yet he hath written a shameful lye, that he was in Dr. Chedsey's keeping. How say you Mr. Doctor Chedsey, is it not a shameful lye?

The contents of Mr. Philpots Letter to Mr. Green.

Ched. Yes, my Lord, he was never in my keeping.

Lond. Art not thou ashamed to write such shameful Letters?

Come hither Mr. Green, did not I shew you this Letter?

Mr. Green called.

Green. Yea forsooth, my Lord, you shewed it me.

Lond. How think you, my Lords, is not this an honest man to belye me?

Phil. Your Lordship doth mistake all things. This Letter (as your Lordship may perceive) and all other that have heard the same) was not written by me, but by a Friend of mine, certifying me at my request, how Mr. Green sped at the Bp. of Londons hands: And there is nothing in the Letter that either I, or he that wrote it, need to fear, but that might be written as my report.

Mr. Philpot again charged with an untruth.

Lond. Then tell me who wrote it, if you dare.

Phil. No, my Lord, it is not my duty to accuse my Friend: and specially seeing you will take all things at the worst: Neither shall you ever know of me who wrote it. Your Lordship may see in the end of the Letter, that my Friend did write unto me upon the occasion of my Appeal, which I have made to the whole Parliament House about such matters as I am wrongfully troubled for.

Lond. I would see any so hardy to put up thine Appeal.

Phil. My Lord, I cannot tell what God will work, I have written it, speed it as it may.

Note what great gentleness this Bp. shewed to Philpot, and compare the same with the handling now of him in his imprisonment.

Lond. My Lords, I have used him with much gentleness since he came to me. How saist thou, have I not?

Phil. If to lye in the vilest Prison in this Town (being a Gentleman, and an Archdeacon) and in a Cole-house, by the space of five or six weeks already, without fire or candle, be to be counted gentleness at your hands, I must needs say I have found gentleness. But there were never men so cruelly handled as we are at these days.

Black powder sent to John Philpot to make ink

Lond. Lo, what a Varlet is this? Besides this (my Lords) even yesterday he procured his man to bring a bladder of black powder, I cannot tell for what purpose, I.

Phil. Your Lordship needeth not to mistrust the matter: it is nothing but to make ink withal, for lack of ink, as I had it before in the Kings Bench, when my Keeper took away my Inkhorn.

Lond. And why shouldst thou go about any such thing unknowing unto me, being thy Keeper? for I am thy Keeper in this House, I tell thee.

Phil. My Lord, because you have caused my pennar and inkhorn to be taken from me, I would yet fain that my Friends might understand what I lack, not that I intend to write any thing that I would be afraid should come to your sight.

Lond. More than this, my Lords, he caused a Pig to be roasted, and made a Knife be put between the skin and the flesh, for what purpose judge you. How saist thou, didst thou not so?

False surmises against John Philpot.

Phil. I cannot deny but there was half a Pig sent me, and under the same a Knife lying in the Sauce, but for no ill purpose that I know; your Lordship may judge what you will. It was not to kill my self nor any other, as you would have men to believe; for I was never yet without a Knife since I came to Prison. Therefore all these be but false surmises, and not worth rehearsal.

Lond. I have here to lay to his charge (chiefest of all) his Book of the Report of the Disputation had in the Convocation-house, which is the rankest Heresie that may be, against the blessed Sacrament of the Altar. How say you Mr. Doctor Weston? did he maintain the same there stubbornly, or no?

Weſt. Yea, my Lord, that he did, and would never be anſwered. And it is pity that the ſame worſhipful Congregation ſhould be ſlandered with ſuch untrue reports.

Phil. You anſwered me indeed, Mr. Doctor (being then Prolocutor) goodly, with, hold thy peace, and have him to Priſon, and put him out of the Houſe. I have read the Book, and I find the report of every mans Argument to be true in all points. And if there be any fault, it is, becauſe he ſetteth forth your doings too favourably, and nothing like to that you did uſe me, being an Archdeacon, and not of the worſt of the Houſe.

Dr. Weſtons chief Arguments in the Convocation Houſe.

Weſt. Thou art no Archdeacon.

Phil. Indeed, Mr. Doctor, ye have amongſt you unArchdeaconed me as now, (I thank God of it) and that without all order of Law.

Lond. I pray you my Lords hearken what he writeth of himſelf, I read it over this morning, and made a note of it. He ſaith, that Dr. Weſton called him frantick and madman, and ſaid, he ſhould go to Bethlehem.

Phil. Indeed my Lord, ſo it pleaſed Dr. Weſton to taunt at me, and ſay his ſhameful pleaſure, but yet I was no whit the more for all his ſayings, than Chriſt was when the Scribes and the Phariſees ſaid likewiſe he was mad, and that he was poſſeſſed of a Devil, moſt blaſphemouſly.

B. Tonſtall and Mr. Weſton give over the matter.

Dureſ. My Lord of London, I can tarry no longer, I muſt needs bid you farewel. Mr. Philpot, me thinketh you have ſaid well that you will abide in the Catholick Faith, and in the Catholick Church: I pray you ſo do, and you ſhall do right well. And ſo departed with Mr. Weſton and Mr. Huſſey.

Phil. I have purpoſed ſo to do, howſoever I ſpeed, by Gods grace.

Lond. I pray you my Lord of Chicheſter, and Mr. Prolocutor, and Mr. Doctor Morgan, to commune with him whiles I bring my Lord of Dureſm going.

Chriſt. Mr. Philpot I was acquainted with you at Rome, if you be remembred, but you have forgotten me, and talked ſomewhat with you of theſe matters, and I find you now the ſame man that you were then, I wiſh it were otherwiſe. For Gods ſake be conformable to men that be better learned than you, and ſtand not in your own conceit.

Phil. Whereas you call me in remembrance of acquaintance had at Rome, indeed it was ſo, though it were but very ſtrange on your part, to me-ward, being driven to neceſſity.

Chriſt. You know the world was dangerous at that time.

Wiſdom in Gods matters conſiſteth not in mans learning.

Phil. Nothing ſo dangerous as it is now; but let that paſs. Whereas you ſay, you find me to be the ſame man I was then, I praiſe God for that you ſee me not like a Reed wavering with every wind. And whereas you would have me follow better learned men than my ſelf: indeed I acknowledge that you, with a great many other, are far better learned than I, whoſe Books, in reſpect of learning, I am not worthy to carry after you: but faith and the wiſdom of God conſiſteth not in learning only, and therefore S. Paul willeth that our faith be not grounded upon the wiſdom of man. If you can ſhew by learning out of Gods Book, that I ought to be of another faith than I am, I will hear you, and any other man whatſoever he be.

Chriſt. I marvel why you ſhould diſſent from the Catholick Church, ſince it hath thus long univerſally been received, except within this five or ſix years here in England.

Phil. I do not diſſent from the true Catholick Church, I do only diſſent from the Biſhop of Rome, which if you can prove to be the Catholick Church of Chriſt, I will be of the ſame alſo with you.

Chriſt. Will you believe S. Cyprian, if I can ſhew out of him, Quod Eccleſia Romana eſt talis ad quam perfidia accedere non poteſt, That the Church of Rome is ſuch a one, unto the which misbelief cannot approach?

Phil. I am ſure you cannot ſhew any ſuch ſaying out of S. Cyprian.

Chriſt. What will you lay thereon?

Phil. I will lay as much as I am able to make.

Morgan. Will you promiſe to recant, if I ſhew his ſaying to be true.

Phil. My faith ſhall not hang upon any Doctors ſaying, further then he ſhall be able to prove the ſame by Gods Word.

Chriſt. I will go fetch the Book, and ſhew it him by and by, and therewithal he went into the Biſhops Study, and fetcht Cyprian, and appointed out theſe words in one of his Epiſtles, Ad Romanos autem, quorum fides Apoſtolo prædicante laudata eſt, non poteſt accedere perfidia; But unto the Romans, whoſe faith by the teſtimony of the Apoſtle is praiſed, misbelief can have no acceſs.

Anno 1555.

Cyprian. ad Cornel. lib. 1. Epiſt. 3.

Phil. Theſe words of Cyprian do nothing prove your pretenſed Aſſertion, which is, that to the Church of Rome there could come no misbelief.

Chriſt. Good Lord, no doth? What can be ſaid more plainly?

Phil. He ſpeaketh not of the Church of Rome abſolutely.

Chriſt. By God, a Child that can but his Grammar will not deny that you do, the words be ſo plain.

Phil. Swear not, Mr. Doctor, but weigh Cyprians words with me, and I ſhall make you to ſay as I have ſaid.

Chriſt. I am no Doctor, but I perceive it is but labour loſt to reaſon with you.

Dr. Day, B. of Chicheſter ſhrinketh alſo away.

Boner. And with that the Biſhop of London came in blowing again, and ſaid, What, is my Lord of Chicheſter gone away alſo? (for he even a little before departed alſo without any other word ſaying, but he muſt needs be gone.) What is the matter you now ſtand upon?

Morg. Mr. Chriſtoferſon hath ſhewed Mr. Philpot a notable place of the Authority of the Church of Rome, and he maketh nothing of it.

Boner. Where is the place? let me ſee. By my faith here is a place alone. Come hither, Sir, what ſay you to this? Nay, tarry a while, I will help this place with S. Pauls own teſtimony, the firſt to the Romans, where he ſaith, That their faith is preached throughout the world; how can you be able to anſwer to this?

The place of Cyprian expounded. Ad Romanos quorum fides Apoſtolo prædicante laudata eſt, non poteſt.

Phil. Yes, my Lord, it is ſoon anſwered, if you will conſider all the words of Cyprian: for he ſpeaketh of ſuch as in his time were faithful at Rome, and followed the Doctrine of S. Paul, as he had taught them, and as it was notified throughout the world, by an Epiſtle which he had written in the commendation of their faith. With ſuch as are praiſed of S. Paul at Rome, for following the true faith, misbelief can have no place. And if you can ſhew, that the faith which the Church of Rome holdeth now, is that faith which the Apoſtle praiſed and allowed in the Romans in his time, then will I ſay that S. Cyprian then ſaid, and with you, That infidelity can have no place there; but otherwiſe it maketh not abſolutely for the Authority of the Church of Rome, as you do miſtake it.

Chriſt. You underſtand Cyprian well indeed; I think you never read him in your life.

Phil. Yes, Mr. Doctor, that I have, I can ſhew you a Book noted with mine own hand: though I have not read ſo much as you, yet I have read ſomewhat. It is a ſhame for you to wreſt and wreath the Doctors as you do, to maintain a falſe Religion, which be altogether againſt you, if you take them aright; and indeed your falſe packing of Doctors together hath given me and others occaſion to look upon them, whereby we find you ſhameful liars, and miſreporters of the ancient Doctors.

Papiſts wreſters and miſreporters of the Doctors.

Morg. What, will you be in hand to allow Doctors now? they of your Sect do not ſo. I marvel therefore you will allow them.

Phil. I do allow them in as much as they do agree with the Scriptures, and ſo do all they which be of the Truth, howſoever you tearm us, and I praiſe God for that good underſtanding I have received by them.

Chriſt. What, you underſtand not the Doctors, you may be aſhamed to ſay it.

Phil. I thank God I underſtand them better then you: for you have Excæcationem cordis, the blindneſs of heart; ſo that you underſtand not truly what you read, no more than the wall here, as the taking of Cyprian doth well declare. And afore God you are but deceivers of the people, for all your brag you make of learning; neither have ye Scripture or ancient Doctor on your ſide, being truly taken.

Doctors make againſt the Papiſts if they be rightly taken.

Morg. Why, all the Doctors be on our ſide, and againſt you altogether.

Phil. Yea, ſo you ſay when you be in your Pulpits alone, and none to anſwer you. But if you will come to caſt accounts with me thereof, I will venture with you a recantation, tation, that I (as little ſight as I have in the Doctors) will bring more authorities of Ancient Doctors on my ſide then you ſhall be able for yours, and he that can bring moſt, to him let the other ſide yield. Are ye ſo content herewith?

Anno 1555.

Chriſto. It is but folly to reaſon with you, you will believe no Man but your ſelf.

Phil. I will believe you or any other Learned Man if you can bring any thing worthy to be believed. You cannot win me with vain words from my faith. Before God there is no truth in you.

Morgan. What, no truth? no truth? ha, ha, ha.

Phil. Except the Articles of the Trinity, you are corrupt in all other things, and ſound in nothing.

Morgan. What ſay you, do we not believe well on the Sacrament?

Philpot. It is the thing which (among all other) you do moſt abuſe.

Morgan. Wherein I pray you? tell us.

Morgan here beginneth to play the ſiphr.

Phil. I have told you before M. Doctor, in the Convocation Houſe.

* Morgan. Yes marry: indeed you told us there very well. For there you fell down upon your knees, and fell to weeping, ha ha, ha.

Phil. I did weep indeed, and ſo did Chriſt upon Jeruſalem, and am not to be blamed therefore, if you conſider the cauſe of my weeping.

Morg. What, make you your ſelf Chriſt? ha, ha, ha.

Phil. No ſir, I make not my ſelf Chriſt: but I am not aſhamed to do as my Maſter and Saviour did, to bewail and lament your Infidelity and Idolatry, which I there foreſaw through tyranny you would bring again to this Realm, as this day doth declare.

Morgan. That is your Argument.

The Sacrament abuſed by the Papiſts, how and wherein.

Chriſto. Wherein do we abuſe the Sacrament? tell us.

Phil. As I may touch but one of the leaſt abuſes, you miniſter it not in both kinds as you ought to do, but keep the one half from the people, contrary to Chriſts inſtitution.

Sacrament in one kind.

Chriſto. Why, is not there as much contained in one kind, as in both? And what need is it then to miniſter in both kinds?

Phil. I believe not ſo: for if it had, Chriſt would have given but one kind only; for he inſtituted nothing ſuperfluous, and therefore you cannot ſay that the whole effect of the Sacrament is as well in one kind, as in both, ſince the Scripture teacheth otherwiſe.

* Synecdoche is a figure when by one thing or by part, the whole is underſtood. Euſeb. hath theſe words, December. Parum Euchariſtiæ puero dedit.

Chriſto. What if I can prove it by Scripture, that we may miniſter it in one kind? The Apoſtles did ſo, as it may appear in the Acts of the Apoſtles in one or two places, where it is written that the Apoſtles continued In orationibus & fractione panis, In Prayers and in breaking of Bread, which is meant of the Sacrament.

† He gave a little of the Sacrament to the Boy: which words may very well comprehend both parts: and it ſeemeth by the words that follow, that part of it was liquor, for it is written in the ſame place, Juſſit ut id intingeret, & in os ſeni inſtillaret. 1. He commanded that he ſhould poor it and drop it into the Mans mouth, and ſo he did. Euſeb. in Eccleſ. hiſt. l. 6. c. 44.

* Phil. Why, M. Doctor, do you not know that S. Luke by making mention of Breaking of Bread, meaneth the whole uſe of the Sacrament, according to Chriſts inſtitution, by a figure which you have learned in Grammar, Synecdoche, where part is mentioned, and the whole underſtood to be done, as Chriſt commanded it?

Chriſto. Nay, that is not ſo. For I can ſhew you out of Euſeb. in Eccl. hiſt. that there was a Man of God (whom he named) that ſent the Sacrament in one kind by a boy, to one that was ſick.

Phil. I have read indeed that they did uſe to give that was left of the Communion Bread, to Children, to marriners, and to women, and ſo peradventure the † Boy might carry a piece of that was left to the ſick Man.

* Chriſto. Nay, as a Sacrament it was purpoſely ſent unto him.

Phil. If it were ſo, yet can you not preciſely ſay, that he had not the Cup miniſtred unto him alſo by ſome other ſent unto him: but though one Man did uſe it thus, doth it follow that all Men may do the like? S. Cyprian noteth many abuſes of the Sacrament in his time, which roſe upon ſingular Mens Examples, as uſing of Water in ſtead of Wine: therefore he ſaith, Non reſpiciendum quid aliquis ante nos fecerint, ſed quid Chriſtus qui omnium primus ante nos feverit & mandavit, that is, we muſt not look what any Man hath done before us, but what Chriſt firſt of all Men did and commanded.

Chriſto. Hath not the Church taught us ſo to uſe the Sacrament? and how do we know that Chriſt is Homouſios, that is, of one ſubſtance with the Father, but by the Determination of the Church? How can you prove that otherwiſe by expreſs words of Scripture, and where find you Homouſios in all the Scripture?

Phil. Yes that I do, in the firſt of the Hebrews, where it is written that Chriſt is the expreſs Image of Gods own ſubſtance, ejuſdem ſubſtantiæ.

Chriſto. Nay, that is not ſo. That is, There is no more but expreſſa imago ſubſtantiæ, The expreſs Image of Gods Subſtance, and Image is accident.

Phil. It is in the text, Of his ſubſtance, Subſtantiæ illius, or of his own ſubſtance, as it may be right well interpreted. Beſides this, that which Chriſt ſpake of himſelf in S. John manifeſteth the ſame, ſaying, I and the Father be one thing, Ego & pater unum ſumus. And whereas you ſay, Imago here is accidence, the ancient Fathers uſe this for a ſtrong Argument, to prove Chriſt to be God, becauſe he is the very Image of God.

Chriſto. Yea do? is this a good Argument, becauſe we are the Image of God, Ergo, we are God?

The Image of God, is not like in Chriſt, and in us.

Phil. We are not called the expreſs Image of God, as it is written of Chriſt, and we are but the Image of God by participation; and as it is written in Geneſis, we are made to the likeneſs and ſimilitude of God. But you ought to know (M. Chriſto perſon) that there is no accident in God, and therefore Chriſt cannot be the Image of God, but he muſt be of the ſame ſubſtance with God.

Chriſto. Tuſh.

Preſence of the Sacrament.

Morgan. How ſay you to the Preſence of the Sacrament? will you ſtand to the judgment here of your Book, or no? or will you recant?

Phil. I know you go about to catch me in words. if you can prove that Book to be of my ſetting forth lay it to my charge when I come to judgment.

Morgan. Speak, be you of the ſame mind as this Book is of, or no? Sure I am you were once, unleſs you are become another manner of Man then you were.

The Sacrament of the Maſs as it is uſed, is no Sacrament.

Phil. What I was, you know; what I am, I will not tell you now: but this I will ſay to you by the way, that if you can prove the Sacrament of the Maſs (as you now uſe it) to be a Sacrament, I will then grant you a preſence, but firſt you muſt prove the ſame a Sacrament and afterward intreat of the preſence.

Morg. Ho, do you doubt that it is a Sacrament?

Philpot. I am paſt doubting, for I believe you can never be able to prove it a Sacrament.

Chriſto. Yea do? good Lord, doth not S. Auguſtine call it the Sacrament of the Altar? How ſay you to that?

Phil. That maketh nothing for the probation of your Sacrament. For ſo he with other ancient writers do call the Holy Communion or the Supper of the Lord, in reſpect that it is the Sacrament of the Sacrifice which Chriſt offered upon the Altar of the Croſs, the which Sacrifice all the Altars and Sacrifices done upon the Altars in the Old Law did prefigure and ſhadow, the which pertaineth nothing to your Sacrament hanging upon your Altars of Lime and Stone.

Chriſto. No doth? I pray you what ſignifieth Altar?

Altar what it ſignifieth.

Phil. Not as you falſely take it, materially, but for the Sacrifice of the Altar of the Croſs.

Chriſto. Where find you it ever ſo taken?

Phil. Yes that I do in Saint Paul to the Hebrews the thirteenth, where he ſaith, Habemus Altare de quo non eſt fas edere his qui tabernaculo deſerviunt, We have an Altar, of the which it is not lawful for them to eat that ſerve the Tabernacle. Is not Altar in this place taken for the Sacrifice of the Altar, and not for the Altar of Lime and Stone?

Chriſto for lack of better proof falleth to exclaiming.

Chriſto. Well, God bleſs me out of your company. You are ſuch an obſtinate Heretick, as I have not heard the like.

Phil. I pray God keep me from ſuch blind Doctors, which when they are not able to prove what they ſay, then they fall to Blaſpheming (as you now do) for lack of better proof. In the mean while the Biſhop of London was talking with ſome other by, and at length came in to ſupply his part, and ſaid.

Boner. I pray you Maſters, harken what I ſhall ſay to this Man: come hither Maſter Green. And now Sir (pointing to me) you cannot think it ſufficient to be naught your your self, but muſt go about to procure this young Gentleman by your Letters to do the like.

Wrangling matter againſt M. Harpſfield.

Phil. My Lord, he cannot ſay, that I ever hitherto wrote unto him concerning any ſuch matter, as he here can teſtifie.

Green. No you never wrote unto me.

Boner. Why, is not this your Letter which you did write concerning him.

Phil. I have ſhewed your Lordſhip my mind concerning that Letter already: it was not written to Maſter Green, neither was he privy to the writing thereof.

Lond. How ſay you then, If a Man be in an error, and you know thereof, what are you bound to do in ſuch a caſe?

Phil. I am bound to do the beſt I can to bring him out of it.

Lond. If M. Green here be in the like, are you not bound to reform him thereof if you can?

Phil. Yes that I am, and will do to the uttermoſt of my power therein. The Biſhop remembring himſelf, thinking that he would but ſhrewdly after his expectation be holpen at my Mouth, but rather confirmed in that which he called an errour, ceaſed to go any further in his demand, and called M. Green aſide, and before his Regiſter read him a Letter, I know not the contents thereof: and therewithal he gave M. Green the Book of my diſputation in the Convocation-Houſe, and afterward went aſide, communing with Maſter Chriſtoferſon, leaving M. Morgan, M. Harpsfield, and M. Coſins, to reaſon with me in the hearing of Maſter Green.

Morgan. M. Philpot, I would ask you how old your Religion is?

Jo. Philpots Religion elder then popery by a 1000. years. This Religion was not ſeen openly a 100. ye ars ago: Erge, this Religion was not. The antecedent is true, and the conſequence falſe. December.

Phil. It is elder then yours by a thouſand years and more.

Morgan. I pray you where was it fifty years ago?

Phil. It was in Germany apparent by the teſtimony of Huſs, Hierom of Prague and Wickliff, whom your generation an hundred years ago and more, did burn for Preaching the Truth unto you; and before their time and ſince hath been, although under Perſecution it hath been put to ſilence.

Morgan. That is a marvellous ſtrange Religion, which no Man can tell certainly where to find it.

Philpot. It ought to be no marvel unto you to ſee Gods Truth thorow violence oppreſſed; for ſo it hath been from the beginning from time to time, as it appeareth by Stories, and as Chriſts true Religion is now to be found here in England, although Hypocriſie hath by violence the upper hand. And in the Apocalyps you may ſee it was Prophecied, that the true Church ſhould be driven into corners, and into the Wilderneſs, and ſuffer great Perſecutions.

Morg. Ah, are you ſeen in the Apocalyps? there are many ſtrange things.

Scoffing Morgan.

Phil. If I tell you the truth which you are not able to reſel, believe it, and dally not out ſo earneſt matters: Me think you are liker a ſcoffer in a play, then a reaſonable Doctor to inſtruct a Man, you are bare-arſed, and dance naked in a Net, and you ſee not your own nakedneſs.

Morg. What, I pray you, be not ſo quick with me, let us talke a little more coldly together.

Phil. I will talk with you as mildly as you can deſire, if you will ſpeak Learnedly and Charitably. But if you go about with tants to delude the truth, I will not hide it from you.

Morg. Why will not you ſubmit your judgment to the Learned Men of this Realm?

Phil. Becauſe I ſee they can bring no good ground whereupon I may with a good Conſcience ſettle my Faith more ſurely then on that which I am now grounded upon by Gods manifeſt Word.

Morgan. No do? that is marvel that ſo many Learned Men ſhould be deceived.

1 Cor. 2. Phil. It is no marvel by Saint Paul, for he ſaith, That not many Wiſe, neither many Learned after the World be called to the knowledge of the Goſpel.

Morg. Have you then alone the Spirit of God, and not we?

Philpot. I ſay not that I alone have the Spirit of God, but as many as abide in the True Faith of Chriſt, have the Spirit of God, as well as I.

Morg. How know you that you have the Spirit of God?

Phil. By the Faith of Chriſt which is in me.

Morg. Ah, by Faith do you ſo? I ween it be the Spirit of the Buttery, which your fellows have had that have been burned before you, who were drunk the night before they went to their death, and I ween went drunken unto it.

Anno 1555.

Morgan railleth to ſcoffing and railing at the good Martyrs of God.

Phil. It appeareth by your Communication, that you are better acquainted with the Spirit of the Buttery, then with the Spirit of God; wherefore I muſt now tell thee, thou painted wall and Hypocrite, in the name of the living Lord, whoſe truth I have told thee, that God ſhall rain Fire and Brimſtone upon ſuch ſcorners of his Word and Blaſphemers of his people, as thou art.

Morg. What, you rage now.

Phil. Thy fooliſh Blaſphemies have compelled the Spirit of God, which is in me, to ſpeak that which I have ſaid to thee, thou enemy of all righteouſneſs.

Morg. Why do ye judge me ſo?

Phil. By thine own wicked words I judge of thee, thou Blind and Blaſphemous Doctor: for as it is written, By thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be Condemned. I have ſpoken on Gods behalf, and now I have done with thee.

Morg. Why then I tell thee Philpot, thou art an Heretick, and ſhalt be burned for thine Hereſie, and afterwards go to Hell-fire.

Jo. Philpot with great zeal denounceth Hell Fire to Morgan unleſs he repent.

Philpot. I tell thee, thou Hypocrite, that I paſs not this for thy Fire and Fagots, neither, I thank God my Lord, ſtand in fear of the ſame: my Faith in Chriſt ſhall overcome them. But the Hell Fire which thou threatneſt me is thy portion, and is prepared for thee (unleſs thou ſpeedily repent) and for ſuch Hypocrites as thou art.

Morg. What, thou ſpeakeſt upon Wine, thou haſt tipled well to day by likelihood?

Phil. So ſaid the curſed Generation, of the Apoſtles being repleniſhed with the Holy Ghoſt, and ſpeaking the Wondrous Works of God, they ſaid they were drunk, when they had nothing elſe to ſay, as thou doeſt now.

Morg. Why, I am able to anſwer thee, ywis, I trow.

Phil. So it ſeemeth, with Blaſphemies and lies.

Morg. Nay, even with Learning, ſay what thou canſt.

Morgan ſumbling and ſtammering in the Convocation Houſe.

Phil. That appeared well at my diſputation in the Convocation-Houſe, where thou tookeſt upon thee to anſwer thoſe few Arguments I was permitted to make, and yet waſt not able to anſwer one, but in thine anſwers didſt fumble and ſtammer, that the whole Houſe was aſhamed of thee: and the final concluſions of all thine anſwer was, that thou couldſt anſwer me if I were in the Schools at Oxford.

Morg. What, did I ſo? thou believeſt me.

Phil. I do not belie thee, the Book of the report of the diſputation beareth record thereto, and all that were preſent then can tell, if they liſt, thou ſaidſt ſo. And I tell thee plain, thou art not able to anſwer that Spirit of truth which ſpeaketh in me for the defence of Chriſts true Religion. I am able by the might thereof to drive thee round about this Gallery before me: and if it would pleaſe the Queens Majeſty and her Council to hear thee and me, I would make thee for ſhame ſhrink behind the door.

Morg. Yea, would you ſo?

Morgan taken up for halting.

Phil. Thou haſt the Spirit of Illuſion and Sophiſtry, which is not able to countervail the Spirit of Truth. Thou art but an aſs in the true underſtanding of things appertaining unto God. I call thee aſs, not in reſpect of malice, but in that thou kickeſt againſt the truth, and art void of all Godly underſtanding, not able to anſwer to that thou braggeſt in.

Morg. Why, have I not anſwered thee in all things thou haſt ſaid unto me? I take them to record.

Phil. Ask of my fellow whether I be a theef.

Coſins. Hark, he maketh us all theeves.

Phil. You know that phraſe of the proverb, that like will hold with like. And I am ſure you will not judge with me, againſt him, ſpeak I never ſo true; and in this ſenſe I ſpeak it. The ſtrongeſt anſwer that he hath made againſt me is, that you will burn me.

Morg. Why, we do not burn you, it is the Temporal Men that burn you, and not we:

Phil. Thus you would (as Pilate did) waſh your hands of all your wicked doings. But I pray you, Invocate ſeculare brachium; call upon the ſecular power to be Executioners of your unrighteous judgments. And have you not not a title in your Law, De hæreticis comburendis, to burn Hereticks?

Harpſ. I have heard you both a good while reaſon together, and I never heard ſo ſtout an Heretick as you are, M. Philpot.

Cofins. Neither I in all my Life.

Phil. You are not able to prove me an Heretick, by one jot of Gods Word.

Mr. Harpſfield and Cofins depart.

Harpsfield. You have the Spirit of Arrogancy, I will reaſon with you no more. And ſo he was departing, and Maſter Cofins alſo. And with that the Biſhop and Chriſtoferſon came in again, and ſaid.

Boner. Maſter Doctor, how doth this Man and you agree?

Morgan. My Lord, I do ask him where his Church was fifty years ago.

Boner. Are you not half agreed? as one Man ſaid once to two parties, in whom the one was equally diſagreeing from the other.

Chriſtof. My Lord, it is but folly to reaſon with him any further, your Lordſhip ſhall but loſe time, for he is incurable.

December. Boner. Well then, let his Keeper have him away. And with that Doctor Chedſey led me a way by the which we could not paſs, and therefore came back again through the Biſhops Chamber, where all theſe Doctors were cluſtered together; and as I was paſſing by, the Biſhop took me by the gown and ſaid, wote you what what Mr. Chriſtoferſon telleth me? I pray you Maſter Chriſtoferſon rehearſe the Sentence in Latin; and ſo he did. The contents whereof were, That an Heretick would not be won. Chriſto. S. Paul ſaith, Hereticum hominem poſt unam atque alteram admonitionem devita; Fly an Heretick after once or twice warning.

Chriſtian truth called Hereſie.

All the Doctors. Yea, my Lord, it is beſt you ſo do; and trouble your Lordſhip no more with him.

Phil. You muſt firſt prove me juſtly to be an Heretick, before you uſe the judgment of S. Paul againſt me: for he ſpeaketh of ſuch as hold opinion againſt the manifeſt Word, the which you cannot prove by me: and becauſe you want in your proof, and be able to prove nothing againſt me, therefore you go about falſly to ſuppoſe me to be an Heretick, for the ſafeguard of your own counterfeit honeſties; but afore God you are the Hereticks which ſo ſtoutly and ſtobbornly maintain ſo many things directly againſt Gods Word, as God in his time ſhall reveal. As I went out of his Chamber, the Biſhop called me aſide and ſaid:

The Holy Ghoſt is Chriſts vicar upon Earth and how.

Boner. I pray thee in good ſadneſs, what meaneſt thou by writing in the beginning of thy Bible, Spiritus eſt Vicarius Chriſti in terris; The Spirit is the Vicar of Chriſt on the Earth? I wis you have ſome ſpecial meaning thereof.

Phil. My Lord, I have none other meaning than as I have told you already, That Chriſt ſince his aſcenſion worketh all things in us by his Spirit, and by his Spirit doth dwell in us. I pray you my Lord let me have my Bible, with other lawful Books and Writings which you have of mine, whereof many of them be none of mine, but lent to me by my friends.

Boner. Your Bible you ſhall not have, but I will perhaps let you have another, and after I have peruſed the reſt, you ſhall have ſuch as I think good.

Phil. I pray your Lordſhip then, that you would let me have Candle-light.

Boner. To what purpoſe I pray you?

John Philpot denied to have Candle-light.

Phil. The Nights be long, and I would fain occupy my ſelf about ſomewhat, and not ſpend my time idlely.

Boner. You may then pray.

Phil. I cannot well ſay my Prayers without light.

Boner Can you not ſay your Pater-noſter without a Candle? I tell you Sir, you ſhall have ſome meat and drink of me, but candles you get none.

Phil. I had rather have a Candle than your meat and drink; but ſeeing I ſhall not have my requeſt, the Lord ſhall be my light.

Boner. Have him down.

Ched. I will bring him to his Keeper, my Lord. Maſter Philpot, I wonder all theſe learned Men whom you have talked withal this day can nothing at all perſwade you.

Phil. Why, Maſter Doctor, would you have me to be perſwaded with nothing? or would you have me build my Faith upon ſand? What do you all bring, whereby I ought by any ſufficient authority to be perſwaded to you?

Ched. I am ſorry you will ſo wilfully caſt away your ſelf, whereas you might live worſhipfully: do you not think other have Souls to ſave as well as you have?

Phil. Every Man ſhall receive according to his own doings. Sure I am you are deceived, and maintain a falſe Religion; and as for my caſting away, I would my burning day were to morrow, for this delay is every day to die, and yet not to be dead.

Ched. You are not like to die yet I can tell you.

Phil. I am the more ſorry thereof. But the Will of God be done of me to his Glory. Amen.

The twelfth Examination of John Philpot, on Wedneſday the fourth of December before the Biſhop of London, the Biſhop of Worceſter, and the Biſhop of Bangor.

The 12. Examination of Mr. Philpot before certain Biſhops.

IN the morning I was ſet down to the wardrobe adjoyning to the Chappel, and within a while after came three of the Biſhops Chaplains unto me ſaying:

John Philpot ſent for to Maſs refuſeth to come.

Chaplains. Maſter Philpot, my Lord hath ſent us unto you, to deſire you to come to Maſs, certifying you that there is a Doctor of Divinity, a Chaplain of my Lords, a notable learned Man, called Doctor Chedſey, going to Maſs: Therefore we alſo pray you good Maſter Philpot, be content to come; it is hard hereby.

Phil. I wonder my Lord would trouble you in ſending you about this matter, ſeeing he knoweth I am a Man (by your Law) that cannot hear Maſs, becauſe I ſtand Excommunicate.

Biſh. Chap. Your Excommunication is but upon a contumacy, and my Lord will diſpence with you, if you will come.

Phil. My Lord cannot, for he is not mine Ordinary, and I will not ſeek any ſuch thing at his hands. With this anſwer they went their way. And after Maſs the Biſhop called me before him into his Chappel, and there in the preſence of his Regiſter, (after he had ſaid his mind, becauſe I would not come to Maſs) recited the Articles, which he oftentimes before had done in that behalf, with the depoſitions of the witneſſes, of whom ſome were not examined.

The Biſhop layeth out his Articles again.

Bon. Sir, what can you now ſay, why I ſhould not proceed to give Sentence againſt thee as an Heretick?

The Biſhops doings againſt the Law.

Phil. Why my Lord, will you proceed to give Sentence againſt me before your witneſſes be examined? that is plain againſt your own Law, as all your doings have been hitherto.

Bon. See what a fool thou art in the Law. I need not to recite the depoſitions of the witneſſes, but if I liſt; for I know them well enough already.

Phil. It appeareth indeed you may do what you liſt.

Bon. Tell me, I ſay whether thou wilt anſwer, or no: and whether if thou wert abſolved of thine Excommunication, thou wouldſt come to Maſs, or no?

Phil. I have anſwered as much as I intended to do until I be called to lawful judgment: and as conceening my Conſcience I will not make you God to ſit there as yet; it is Gods part only to be ſearcher of my Heart.

Bon. Look how fooliſhly he ſpeaks. Art thou God? and yet doſt thou not ſit in thine own Conſcience?

Phil. I ſit not in mine own Conſcience; but I know it, and God there only ought to ſit, and no Man elſe.

John Philpot is rebuked for ſinging.

Bon. Thou art a naughty fellow, and haſt done much hurt, and haſt ſeduced other poor fellows here in priſon with thee, by thy comforting of them in their errours, and haſt made them rejoyce and ſing with thee.

Phil. Yea my Lord we ſhall ſing, when you and ſuch other as you are ſhall cry Væ, Væ, Wo, wo, except you repent.

Boner. What an arrogant fool is this? I will handle thee like an Heretick and that ſhortly.

Phil. I fear nothing (I thank God) you can do to me. But God ſhall deſtroy ſuch as thou art, and that ſhortly, as I truſt.

Boner. Have him away this is a knave indeed.

Phil. And I was had into the Wardrobe again by my keeper, and within an hour after was ſent for to come before before him and the Biſhops of Worceſter and Bangor.

Sir, I have talked with you many times, and have cauſed you to be talked with of many Learned Men, yea and honourable both Temporal and Spiritual, and it availeth nothing with you. I am blamed that I have brought thee afore ſo many: for they ſay, thou glorieſt to have many to talk withal. Well, now it lyeth upon thee to look to thy ſelf; for thy time draweth near to an end, if thou do not become conformable. And at this preſent we are ſent from the Synod to offer you this Grace, that if you will come to the Unity of the Church of Rome with us, and acknowledge the Real Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar with us, all that is paſt ſhall be forgiven, and you received to favour.

Talk between John Philpot and the B. of Worceſter and Bangor.

Worc. M. Philpot, we are ſent (as you here have heard by my Lord of London) from the Synod, to offer you mercy, if you will receive it, and of good-will I bear you I wiſh you to take it, whilſt it is offered, and be not a ſingular Man againſt a whole Multitude of Learned Men, which now in faſting and Prayer are gathered together to deviſe things to do you good. There have many very Learned Men talked with you: why ſhould you think your ſelf better Learned than them all? Be not of ſuch arrogancy, but have humility, and remember there is no Salvation but in the Church.

Bangor. Me thinketh my Lord hath ſaid wonderfully well unto you, that you ſhould not think your ſelf ſo well Learned, but other Men are as well Learned as you, neither of ſo good wit, but other be as wiſe as you, neither of ſo good Memory, but other have as good Memories as you. Therefore miſtruſt your own judgment, and come home to us again. I wis I never liked your Religion, becauſe it was ſet forth by violence and tyranny, and that is no Token of True Religion. And I was the ſame manner of Man then that I am now, and a great many more. Marry, for fear we held our peace, and bear with that time. Wherefore M. Philpot, I would you did well, for I love you; and therefore be content to come home with us again into the Catholick Church of Rome.

If violence and tyranny be no token of true Religion: what may Men judge then of the Popes Religion I pray you?

Phil. Where, my Lord (as I may begin firſt to anſwer you) you ſay, that Religion is to be miſliked, which is ſet forth by tyranny, I pray God you give not Men occaſion to think the ſame by yours at this day, which had none other Argument to ſtand by, but violence. If you can ſhew me any good ſufficient ground, whereby to ground my Conſcience, that the Church of Rome is the true Catholick Church, whereunto you call me, I will gladly be of the ſame; otherwiſe I cannot ſo ſoon change the Religion I have learned theſe many years.

The Popes Religion hath no other ground to ſtand upon but violence.

Bangor. Where was your Religion to be found (I pray you) an hundred years ago, that any Man knew of it?

Where this Religion was one hundred years ago.

Phil. It was in Germany, and in divers other places apparent.

Worc. Jeſus! will you be ſtill ſo ſingular a Man? What is Germany to the whole World?

Bon. My Lords, I pray you give me leave to tell you; that I ſent for him to hear Maſs, this Morning. And wot you what excuſe he made unto me, forſooth that he was accurſed, alledging his own ſhame. He playeth as the varlet Latimer did at Cambridge: when the Vicechancellor ſent for him (who intended to have Excommunicated him for ſome of his Hereſies) and the Chancellor was coming to his Chamber, he hearing that the Chancellor was coming, made anſwer that he was ſick of the Plague, and ſo deluded the Chancellor; even ſo this Man ſaith, he was accurſed, becauſe he will not come to Maſs.

Boner raileth at Latimer.

Worc. My Lord (I am ſure) here doth behave himſelf like a Father unto you; therefore be admoniſhed by him, and by us, that come now friendly unto you, and follow your Fathers before you.

Phil. It is forbidden us of God by the Prophet Ezekiel, to follow our Fathers, or to walk in their Commandments.

Worc. It is written alſo in another place, Interroga Patres, Ask of your Fathers.

Fathers may be asked, but not followed further than they follow the Scriptures.

Phil. We ought to ask indeed our Fathers that have more experience and knowledge then we, of Gods will, but no more to allow them, then we perceive they agree with the Scripture.

Worc. You will be a contentious Man, I ſee well; and S. Paul ſaith, that neither we, nor the Church of God have any ſuch cuſtom.

Phil. I am not contentious but for the verity of my Faith, in the which I ought to contend with all ſuch as do impugn the ſame without any juſt objection. Anno 1555 Worc. Let us riſe, my Lord, for I ſee we ſhall do no good.

Boner. Nay, I pray you tarry and hear the Articles I lay to his charge. And after he had recited them, they aroſe, and after ſtanding, they reaſoned with me a while.

Wor. M. Philpot, I am very ſorry that you will be ſo ſingular. I never talked with any yet in my Dioceſs, but after once Communication had with me, they have been contented to revoke their errors, and to teach the people how they were deceived, and ſo do much good, as you may if you liſt. For as I underſtand you were Archdeacon of Wincheſter (which is the eye of the Biſhop and you may do much good in that Country if you would forſake your errors, and come to the Catholick Church.

Phil. Wherewithal you ſo ſoon perſwaded them to your will, I ſee not. Error, that I know, I hold none; of the Catholick Church I am ſure I am.

Wor. The Catholick Church doth acknowledge a real preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, and ſo will not you.

Phil. That is not ſo: For I acknowledge a very eſſential preſence in the * duly uſing of the Sacrament.

* Note he faith not in the Sacrament, but in the Adminiſtration of the Sacrament.

Wor. What, a Real Preſence?

Phil. Yea a Real Preſence by the Spirit of God in the right Adminiſtration.

Worc. That is well ſaid: and do you agree with the Catholick Church alſo?

Phil. I do agree with the true Catholick Church.

Wor. My Lord of London, this Man ſpeaketh reaſonably now.

Bon. You do agree in generalities, but when it ſhall come to the particularities, you will far diſagree.

Wor. Well, keep your ſelf here, and you ſhall have other Learned Biſhops to commune further with you, as my Lord of Dureſm, and my Lord of Chich. whom I hear ſay you do like well.

Phil. I do like them as I do all other that ſpeak the truth. I have once already ſpoken with them, and they found no fault with me.

Wor. Pray in the mean ſeaſon for Grace to God.

Phil. Prayer is the comfortableſt Exerciſe I feel in my trouble, and my Conſcience is quiet, and I have the peace of mind, which cannot be the fruits of Hereſie.

Wor. We will bid you farewel for this time.

Phil. AFter Dinner they called for me again, and demanded of me whether I meant as I ſpake before dinner, and would not go from it. To whom I anſwered, that I would not go from that I had ſaid.

After Dinner M. Philpot called again.

Wor. You ſaid at my departing from you before Dinner, that if we did burn you, we ſhould burn a Catholick Man: will you be a Catholick Man? and ſtand to the Catholick Church.

Phil. I will ſtand to the true Catholick Church.

To ſtand to the Catholick Church, is not enough with theſe Men, except you be in the Church of Rome.

Wor. Will you ſtand to the Catholick Church of Rome?

Phil. If you can prove the ſame to be the Catholick Church, I will be one thereof.

Worc. Did not Chriſt ſay unto Peter, and to all his ſucceſſors of Rome; Paſce oves meas, paſce agnos meos? Feed my Sheep, Feed my Lambs? Which doth ſignifie that he gave him a more authority than the reſt.

December. The Words of Chriſt (Feed my Sheep) opened.

Phil. That ſaying pertaineth nothing to the Authority of Peter, above others, but declareth what Chriſt requireth of his beloved Apoſtles, that they ſhould with all diligence Preach to the Flock of Chriſt the way of Salvation, and that doth the iteration of feeding, ſpoken to Peter, only ſignifie. But the Biſhop of Rome little regardeth the ſpiritual feeding, and therefore he hath imagined an eaſier way to make himſelf Lord of the whole World, yea and of Gods Word too, and doth not feed Chriſts Flock as Peter did.

The Pope is no feeder.

Worc. How can you tell that?

Phil. Yes I have been there, and I could not learn of all his Countrimen, that ever he Preacheth.

Worc. Though he Preacheth not one way, he Preacheth another, by procuring good order for the Church to be kept in.

Phil. I am ſure that it will be his Damnation before God, that that he leaveth that he is commanded of Chriſt, and ſetteth forth his own Decrees to deface the Goſpel.

Anno 1555.

Worc. It is the evil living that you have ſeen at Rome, that cauſeth you to have this ill judgment of the Church of Rome. I cannot now tarry with you to reaſon further of the matter.

How ſay you to the real preſence of the Sacrament, will you ſtand to that?

By really he meaneth truly.

Phil. I do acknowledge (as I have ſaid) a real preſence of the Sacrament, in the due Adminiſtration thereof, to the worthy receivers by the Spirit of God.

Worc. You add now a great many more words than you did before: and yet you ſay more of the Sacrament, then a great many will do.

Talk with D. Chedſey, and D. Wright and others.

Thus they departed, and after them came into me D. Chedſey, and D. Wright Archdeacon of Oxford with a great many more.

Ched. M. Philpot, here is M. Archdeacon of Oxford come to you, to give you good Counſel, I pray hear him.

Phil. I will refuſe to hear none that will Counſel me any good; and if any can bring any matter better than I have, I will ſtick thereunto.

Wright. I would wiſh you M. Philpot to agree with the Catholick Church and not to ſtand in your own conceit: you ſee a great many of learned Men againſt you.

Phil. I am (M. Doctor) of the unfeigned Catholick Church, and will live and die therein: and if you can prove your Church to be the true Catholick Church, I will be one of the ſame.

Wright. I came not to diſpute with you, but to exhort you. Here be better learned than I that can inform you better than I.

You promiſe more, Chedſey, then you can prove.

Ched. What proof would you have? I will prove unto you, our Church to have his being and Foundation by the Scriptures, by the Apoſtles, and by the Primitive Church, confirmed with the Blood of Martyrs, and with the Teſtimony of all Confeſſors.

Phil. Give me your hand, M. Doctor, prove that, and have with you.

D. Chedſey fetcheth his book of Annotations.

Ched. If I had my Books here, I could ſoon prove it, I will go fetch ſome; and with that he went and fet his Book of Annotations, ſaying, I cannot bring my Books well, therefore I have brought my Book of Annotations, and turned there to a common place of the Sacrament, aſking me whether the Catholick Church did allow the preſence of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, or no? I hear ſay you do confeſs a real preſence: but I will be hanged if you will abide by it: You will deny it by and by.

Philpot. That I have ſaid, I cannot deny; neither intend, whatſoever you ſay.

Ched. If there be a real preſence in the Sacrament, then evil Men receive Chriſt, which thing you will not grant, I am ſure.

Phil. I deny the Argument, for I do not grant in the Sacrament, by Tranſubſtantiation, any real preſence, as you falſly imagine, but in the due Adminiſtration to the worthy receivers.

Whether evil Men receive the Body of Chriſt.

Ched. I will prove that the Evil and Wicked Men eat the Body of Chriſt, as well as the good Men, by S. Auſtin here.

Quodammodo.

Phil. And in the beginning of his Text Saint Auſtin ſeemeth to approve his aſſertion; but I bad him read out to the end, and there Saint Auſtin declareth moſt evidently that it was quodammodo, after a certain manner the evil Men received the Body of Chriſt, which is ſacramentally only in the outer ſign, and not really, or indeed, as the good doth. And thus all the Doctors that you ſeem to bring in for your purpoſe, be quite againſt you, if ye did rightly weigh them.

Ched. By God you are a ſubtil fello See how he would writhe S. Auguſtines words.

Phil. See who of us writheth Saint Auſtin more, you or I, which take his meaning by his own expreſs words. And ſeeing you charge me of ſubtilty, what ſubtilty is this of you, to ſay, that you will prove your matter of the Church, even from the beginning, promiſing to ſhew your Books therein, and when it cometh to the ſhewing, you are able to ſhew none, and for want of proof ſlip into a by matter, and yet faint in the proof thereof? Afore God you are bare arſt in your Religion.

D. Chedſey fainteth in his proof.

Ched. You ſhall be conſtrained to come to us at length, whether you will or no.

Phil. Hold that Argument faſt; for it is the beſt you have, for you have nothing but violence.

The thirteenth Examination of M. Philpot, before the Archbiſhop of York, and divers other Biſhops.

The 13. Examination of M. Philpot before the Archbiſhop of York and other Biſhops.

THe Thurſday after, I was called in the morning before the Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhop of Chicheſter, the Biſhop of Bathe, and the Biſhop of London. The Biſhop of Chicheſter being firſt come began to talk with me.

Chich. I am come of good will to talk with you, to inſtruct you what I can, to come to the Catholick Church, and to will you to inſtruct your own judgment, and to learn firſt to have humility, and by the ſame to learn of others that be better learned then you, as they did learn of ſuch as were their betters before them.

Philpot. We muſt all be taught of God, and I will with all humility learn of them that will inform me by Gods Word, what I have to do. I confeſs I have but little learning in reſpect of you, that both of your years and great exerciſe do excel therein: but Faith conſiſteth not only in learning, but in ſimplicity of believing that which Gods Word teacheth. Therefore I will be glad to hear both of your Lordſhip, and of any other (that God hath revealed unto by his word) the true Doctrine thereof, and to thank you, that it doth pleaſe you to take pains herein.

Faith conſiſts not in learning, but in believing.

Chich. You take the firſt alledged amiſs, as though all Men ſhould be taught by inſpiration, and not by learning. How do we believe the Goſpel, but by the authority of the Church, and becauſe the ſame hath allowed it?

The authority of the Church.

Phil. S. Paul ſaith, He learned not the Goſpel by Men, neither of Men, but by the Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. Which is a plain and ſufficient proof that the Goſpel taketh not his Authority of Man, but of God only.

Chich. Saint Paul ſpeaketh but of his own knowledge how he came thereto.

Phil. Nay he ſpeaketh of the Goſpel generally, Which cometh not from Man but from God; and that the Church muſt only teach that which cometh from God, and not Mans precepts.

The place of S. Auſtin, I would not believe the Word if the Church did not move me, &c.

Chich. Doth not S. Auguſtine ſay, I would not believe the Goſpel if the Authority of the Church did not move me thereto.

The Word hath his Authority only from God, and not of Men.

Phil. I grant, that the Authority of the Church doth move the unbelievers to believe; but yet the Church giveth not the Word his Authority; for the Word hath his Authority only from God, and not of Men, Men be but the diſpoſers thereof. For firſt, the Word hath his being before the Church, and the Word is the Foundation of the Church, and firſt is the Foundation ſure, before the building thereon can be ſtedfaſt.

The Word is the Foundation of the Church, and not the Church of the Word.

Chich. I perceive you miſtake me, I ſpeak of the knowledge of the Goſpel, and not of the Authority; for by the Church we have all knowledge of the Goſpel.

Phil. I confeſs that; for Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word. And I acknowledge that God appointeth an ordinary means for Men to come unto the knowledge now, and not miraculouſly, as he hath done in times paſt; yet we that be taught by Men, muſt take heed that we learn nothing elſe but that which was taught in the primitive Church by Revelation. Here came in the Biſhop of York and the Biſhop of Bathe, and after they had ſaluted one another, and communed a while together, the Archbiſhop of York called me unto them, ſaying.

Talk between the Archbiſhop of York, and John Philpot.

York. Sir, we hearing that you are out of the way, are come of charity to inform you, and to bring you into the true Faith, and to the Catholick Church again; willing you firſt to have humility, and to be humble and willing to learn of your betters, for elſe we can do no good with you. And God ſaith by his Prophet; On whom ſhall I reſt, but on the humble and meek, and ſuch as tremble at my Word? Now if you will ſo be, we will be glad to travel with you.

Phil. I know that humility is the door whereby we enter unto Chriſt; and I thank his goodneſs I have entred in at the ſame unto him, and with all humility will hear whatſoever truth you ſhall ſpeak unto me.

York. What be the matters you ſtand on, and require to be ſatisfied in?

Phil

Phil. My Lord, if it ſhall pleaſe your Grace, we were entred into a good matter before you came, of the Church, and how we ſhould know the truth but by the Church.

York. Indeed that is the head we need to begin at, for the Church being truly known we ſhall ſooner agree in the particular things.

Phil. If your Lordſhips can prove the Church of Rome to be the true Catholick Church, it ſhall do much to perſwade me toward that you would have me incline unto.

York. Why, let us go to the definition of the Church. What is it?

The Church defined.

Phil. It is a Congregation of people diſperſed thorow the World, agreeing together in the Word of God, uſing the Sacraments and all other things according to the ſame.

York. Your definition is of many words to no purpoſe.

Phil. I do not preciſely define the Church, but declare unto you what I think the Church is.

York. Is the Church viſible or inviſible?

The Church both viſible and inviſible.

Phil. It is both viſible and inviſible. The inviſible Church is of the Elect of God only; the viſible conſiſts both of Good and Bad, uſing all things in Faith, according to Gods Word.

York. The Church is an univerſal Congregation of Faithful people in Chriſt thorow the World; which this word Catholick doth well expreſs; for what is Catholick elſe? doth it not ſignifie univerſal?

Phil. The Church is defined by S. Auſtin to be called Catholick in this wiſe, Eccleſia ideo dicitur Catholica, quia univerſaliter perfecta eſt & in nullo claudicat. The Church is called therefore Catholick, becauſe it is throughly perfect, and halteth in nothing.

December. Catholick defined by Saint Auguſtine. Catholick defined by the Papiſts.

York. Nay, it is called Catholick, becauſe it is univerſally received of all Chriſtian Nations for the moſt part.

Phil. The Church was Catholick in the Apoſtles time, yet was it not univerſally received of the World; but becauſe their Doctrine which they had received of Chriſt was perfect, and appointed to be Preached and received of the whole World, therefore it is called the Catholick Faith, and all perſons receiving the ſame, to be counted the Catholick Church. And S. Auſtin in another place writeth, that the Catholick Church is that which believeth aright.

York. If you will learn, I will ſhew you S. Auſtin, writing againſt the Donatiſts, that he proveth the Catholick Church by two principal points, which is, univerſality and ſucceſſion of Biſhops in one Apoſtolical See from time to time. Now thus I will make mine Argument.

Univerſality and ſucceſſion.

This Conſequence being reduced into a ſyllogiſm of the firſt figure, will ground upon a falſe major.

Da- Univerſality and ſucceſſion make a true Church.
ri- The Church of Rome hath univerſal Succeſſion.
i. Ergo, The Church of Rome is the true Church.

The Church of Rome is univerſal and hath her ſucceſſion of Biſhops from time to time.

Ergo, It is the Catholick Church.

How anſwer you to this Argument?

Phil. I deny the antecedent, that the Catholick Church is only known by Univerſality and Succeſſion of Biſhops.

York. I will prove it, and with that he brought forth a Book which he had noted out of the Doctors, and turned to his common places therein of the Church, and recited one or two out of S. Auſtin, and ſpecially out of his Epiſtle written againſt the Donatiſts, where S. Auſtin manifeſtly proveth, that the Donatiſts were not the Catholick Church, becauſe they have no ſucceſſion of Biſhops in their opinion, neither univerſality; and the ſame force hath S. Auſtins Argument againſt you.

To this he ſufficiently anſwereth before, look in the latter end of the ſeventh examination.

Univerſality always to be joyned with verity.

Phil. My Lord, I have weighed the force of that Argument before now, and I perceive it maketh nothing againſt me, neither cometh it to your purpoſe; for I will ſtand to the Trial of S. Auſtin for the Approbation of the Catholick Church whereof I am. For S. Auſtin ſpeaketh of Univerſality joyned with verity, and of Faithful Succeſſors of Peter before corruption came into the Church. And ſo if you can deduce your Argument for the See of Rome now, as S. Auſtin might do in his time, I would ſay it might be of ſome force, otherwiſe not.

Not principally by your leave, my Lord.

York. S. Auſtin proveth the Catholick Church principally by Succeſſion of Biſhops, and therefore you underſtand not S. Auſtin. For what, I pray you, was the opinion of the Donatiſts, againſt whom he wrote, can you tell? What Country were they of?

Phil. They were a certain ſect of Men, affirming among other Hereſies, that the dignity of the Sacraments depended upon the worthineſs of the Miniſter; ſo that if the Miniſter were good, the Sacraments which he miniſtred were available, or elſe not.

Anno 15[illegible]

The error of the Donatiſts.

Chich. That was their error, and they had none other but that. And he read another authority of S. Auſtin out of a Book which he brought, even to the ſame purpoſe that the other was.

Phil. I challenge S. Auſtin to be with me thorowly in this point, and will ſtand to his judgment, taking one place with another.

Chich. If you will not have the Church to be certain, I pray you by whom will you be judged in matters of controverſie?

Phil. I do not deny the Church to be certain; but I deny that it is neceſſarily tied to any place, longer then it abideth in the word; and for all Controverſies the word ought to be judge.

The Church may be certain, and yet not tied to one place.

Chich. But what if I take it one way, and you another; how then?

Auguſt de doctrina Chriſt.

Phil. S. Auſtin ſheweth a remedy for that, and willeth, Quod unus locus per plura intelligi debebat; That one place of the Scripture ought to be underſtood by the more.

December Argument a cauſa non ſufficiente & non totali.

York. How anſwer you to this Argument?

Rome hath known Succeſſion of Biſhops; which your Church hath not.

Ergo, That is the Catholick Church, and yours is not, becauſe there is no ſuch Succeſſion can be proved in your Church.

The Argument denied.

Phil. I deny (my Lord) that Succeſſion of Biſhops is an infallible point to know the Church by: for there may be a Succeſſion of Biſhops known in a place, and yet there be no Church, as at Antioch, and Hieruſalem, and in other places, where the Apoſtles abode as well as at Rome. But if you put to the Succeſſion of Biſhops Succeſſion of Doctrine withal, (as S. Auſtin doth) I will grant it to be a good proof for the Catholick Church; but a local Succeſſion only is nothing available.

Local ſucceſſion without ſucceſſion of Doctrine nothing avails.

York. You will have no Church then I ſee well?

Phil. Yes my Lords I acknowledge the Catholick Church, as I am bound by my Creed; but I cannot acknowledge a falſe Church for the true.

Chich. Why is there two Catholick Churches then?

Phil. No. I know there is but one Catholick Church, but there have been, and be at this preſent, that take upon them the Name of Chriſt and of his Church, which be not ſo indeed, as it is written; There be they that call themſelves Apoſtles, and be not ſo indeed, but the Synagogue of Satan and liars. And now it is with us, as it was with the two Women in Solomons time, which lay together, and the one ſuppreſſed her Child, and afterward went about to Challenge the true Mothers Child:

Apoc. 2.

3 Reg. 3. The Mother Church of Rome compared to the woman in Solomons time, that falſly challenged the true Mothers Child from her.

Chich. What a babling is here with you now? I ſee you lack humility. You will go about to teach, and not to learn.

Phil. My Lords, I muſt deſire you to bear with my haſty Speech; it is my infirmity of nature. All that I ſpeak is to learn by, I would you did underſtand all my mind, that I might be ſatisfied by you through better Authority.

Chich. My Lord, if it pleaſe your Grace, turn the Argument upon him, which you have made, and let him ſhew the Succeſſion of the Biſhops of his Church, as we can do. How ſay you, can you ſhew the Succeſſion of Biſhops in your Church from time to time? I tell you, this Argument troubled Doctor * Ridley ſo ſore, that he could never anſwer it; yet he was a Man well learned, I dare ſay you will ſay ſo.

* So ye ſay now, when ye would give him no leave nor time when he was alive to make his anſwers.

Phil. He was a Man ſo learned, that I was not worthy to carry his Books for Learning.

Chich. I promiſe you he was never able to anſwer that. He was a Man that I loved well, and he me; for he came unto me divers times being in Priſon, and conferred with me.

Phil. I wonder, my Lord, you ſhould make this Argument which you would turn upon me, for the trial of my Church whereof I am, or that you would make B. Ridley ſo ignorant that he was not able to anſwer it, ſince it is of no force. For behold, firſt I denied you, that local ſucceſſion of Biſhops in one place is a neceſſary point alone to prove the Catholick Church by, and that which I have denied Succeſſion of Biſhops alone is not ſufficient point to prove the Catholick Church.

Anno 1555.

you cannot prove: and is it then reaſon that you ſhould put me to the trial of that, which by you is unproved, and of no force to conclude againſt me?

Chich. I ſee, my Lords, we do but looſe our labours to reaſon with him; he taketh himſelf better learned than we.

Phil. I take upon me the name of no learning. I boaſt of no knowledge, but of Faith and of Chriſt, and that I am bound undoubtedly to know, as I am ſure I do.

Leave your reviling tearms, my Lords, and go to the matter.

Chich. Theſe Hereticks take upon them to be ſure of all things they ſtand in. You ſhould ſay rather with humility, I truſt I know Chriſt, then that you be ſure thereof.

Note how theſe men ground their faith not upon Gods word, but upon the determination of their own known Church.

Phil. Let him doubt of his Faith that liſteth; God giveth me always grace to believe that I am ſure of true faith and favour in Chriſt.

Bathe. How will you be able to anſwer Hereticks, but by the determination of the known Catholick Church?

Phil. I am able to anſwer all Hereticks by the Word of God, and convince them by the ſame.

Chich. How arrogantly is that ſpoken? I dare not ſay ſo.

Phil. My Lord, I pray you bear with me; for I am bold on the Truths ſide, and I ſpeak ſomewhat by experience that I have had with Hereticks; and I know the Arians be the ſubtilleſt that ever were, and yet I have manifeſt Scriptures to beat them down withal.

Chich. I perceive now you are the ſame manner of man I have heard of, which will not be ſatisfied by learning.

Phil. Alas, my Lord, why do you ſay ſo? I do deſire moſt humbly to be taught, if there be any better way that I ſhould learn, and hitherto you have ſhewed me no better, therefore I pray your Lordſhip not to miſ-judge without a cauſe.

Bathe. If you be the true Catholick Church, then will you hold with the Real Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, which the true Church have ever maintained.

Phil. And I, my Lord, with the true Church do hold the ſame in the due miniſtration of the Sacrament: but I deſire you, my Lord, there may be made a better concluſion in our firſt matter, before we enter into any other; for if the Church be proved, we ſhall ſoon agree in the reſt.

My Lord of York driven to ſeek his Books. Aug. de ſimplicitate credend.

In the mean while my Lord of York was turning his Book for more places to help forth his cauſe.

York. I have found at length a very notable place, which I have looked for all this while, of S. Auſtin, De ſimplicitate credendi.

Chich. It is but folly, my Lord, that your Grace do read him any more places, for he eſteemeth them not.

Mr. Philpot falſly reported to deny Doctors.

Phil. I eſteem them, inaſmuch as they be of force, as your Lordſhip doth hear me deny no Doctors you bring, but only require the true application of them, according to the writers meaning, and as by his own words may be proved.

York. I will read him the place, and ſo make an end. After he had read the Sentence, he ſaid, that by four ſpecial points here S. Auguſtine proveth the Catholick Church. The firſt is, By the conſent of all Nations, the ſecond, by the Apoſtolick See, the third, by Univerſality, and the fourth, by this word Catholick.

Four points to prove the Catholick Church out of S. Auguſtine. 1. Conſent of all Nations. 2. See Apoſtolick. 3. Univerſality. 4. Catholick.

Chich. That is a notable place indeed, if it pleaſe your Grace.

Anſwer to the Archbiſhops four points.

Phil. I pray you my Lord, of what Church doth S. Auguſtine write the ſame, of Rome, or not?

York. Yea, he writeth it of the Church of Rome.

Phil. I will lay with your Lordſhip as much as I can make, it is not ſo; and let the Book be ſeen.

Bathe. What art thou able to lay, thou haſt nothing?

York. Doth he not make mention here of the Apoſtolick See, whereby he meaneth Rome?

Phil. That is very ſtreightly interpreted, my Lord, as though the Apoſtolick See had been no where elſe but at Rome. But let it be Rome, and yet you ſhall never verifie the ſame, unleſs all the other conditions do go therewith, as S. Auguſtine doth proceed withal, whereof none, except the Apoſtolick See can now be verified of the Church of Rome. For the Faith which that See now maintaineth hath not the conſent of all Nations, neither hath had. Beſides that, it cannot have the name of Catholick, becauſe it differeth from the Catholick Churches which the Apoſtles planted, almoſt in all things.

York. Nay, he goeth about here to prove the Catholick Church by Univerſality; and how can you ſhew your Church to be Univerſal fifty or an hundred years ago?

Chriſts Church ceaſeth not to be his Church, albeit in time of perſecution it be hid ſometime in corners.

Phil. That is not material, neither any thing againſt S. Auguſtine: for my Church (whereof I am) were to be accounted Univerſal, though it were but in ten perſons, becauſe it agreeth with the ſame that the Apoſtles did univerſally plant.

Firſt anſwer to his reaſon, and call him obſtinate afterward.

York. I perceive you are an obſtinate man in your Opinion, and will not be taught; wherefore it is but loſt labour to talk with you any longer, you are a Member to be cut off.

Chich. I have heard of you before, how you troubled the good Biſhop of Wincheſter, and now I ſee in you that I have heard.

Phil. I truſt you ſee no evil in me by this; I deſire of you a ſure ground to build my Faith on, and if you ſhew me none, I pray you ſpeak not ill of him that meaneth well.

* Becauſe, my Lord, you be not able to anſwer him.

Chich. Thou art as * impudent a Fellow as I have communed withal.

Phil. That is ſpoken uncharitably, my Lord, to blaſpheme him whom you cannot juſtly reprove.

Chich. Why? thou art not God: Blaſphemy is counted a rebuke to Godward, and not to man.

Phil. Yes, it may be as well verified of an infamy laid to man, ſpeaking in Gods cauſe, as you now do lay unto me, for ſpeaking freely the Truth afore God, to maintain your vain Religion. You are void of all good ground. I perceive you are blind Guides, and leaders of the blind: and therefore (as I am bound to tell you) very Hypocrites, tyrannouſly perſecuting the Truth, which otherwiſe by juſt order you are by no means able to convince. Your own Doctors, and Teſtimonies which you bring, be evidently againſt you, and yet you will not ſee the Truth.

Chich. Have we this thank for our good will, coming to inſtruct thee?

Veritas odium parit. The free heart of John Philpot in telling truth

Phil. My Lords, you muſt bear with me, ſince I ſpeak in Chriſts cauſe; and becauſe his glory is defaced, and his people cruelly and wrongfully ſlain by you, becauſe they will not conſent to the diſhonor of God, and to hypocriſie with you; if I told you not your fault, it would be required at my hands in the day of Judgment. Therefore know you, ye Hypocrites indeed, that it is the Spirit of God that telleth you your ſin, and not I; I paſs not, I thank God, of all your cruelty. God forgive you, and give you grace to repent: and ſo they departed.

Another talk the ſame day.

Another calling of Mr. Philpot before the Biſhop.

THe ſame day at night before Supper, the Biſhop ſent for me into his Chappel, in the preſence of the Archdeacon Harpsfield, Dr. Cheadſey, and other his Chaplains, and his Servants; at what time he ſaid:

Lond. Mr. Philpot, I have by ſundry means gone about to do you good, and I marvel you do ſo little conſider it. By my truth, I cannot tell what to ſay to you: tell me directly whether you will be a conformable man, or no; and whereupon you chiefly ſtand.

Phil. I have told your Lordſhip often times plain enough, whereon I ſtand chiefly, requiring a ſure Probation of the Church whereunto you call me.

Concernin theſe four points anſwered ſufficiently before.

Harpſ. S. Auſtin writing againſt the Donatiſts, declareth four ſpecial notes to know the Church by; the conſent of many Nations, the Faith of the Sacraments confirmed by Antiquity, Succeſſion of Biſhops, and Univerſality.

Lond. I pray you Mr. Archdeacon, fetch the Book hither; it is a notable place, let him ſee it. And the Book was brought, and the Biſhop read it, demanding how I could anſwer the ſame.

Phil. My Lord, I like S. Auguſtines four points for the trial of the Catholick Church, whereof I am: for it can abide every point thereof together, which yours cannot do.

Harpſ. Have not we Succeſſion of Biſhops in the See and Church of Rome? Wherefore then do you deny our Church to be the Catholick Church?

Phil. S. Auguſtine doth not put Succeſſion of Biſhops only to be ſufficient, but he addeth the uſe of the Sacraments a cording to Antiquity and Doctrine univerſally taught & received of moſt Nations from the beginning of the Primitive Church, the which your Church is far from. But my Church can avouch all these better than yours; therefore by S. Augustines judgment, which you here bring, mine is the Catholick Church, and not yours.

Harpsf. Ched. It is but folly (my Lord) for you to reason with him, for he is irrecuperable.

It is best for you to say so, when you have no other way to shift off his Arguments.

Phil. That is a good shift for you to run unto, when you be confounded in your own sayings, and have nothing else to say; you are evidently deceived, and yet will not see it when it is laid to your face.

THus have I at large set forth as many of the said John Philpot his Examinations and privy Conferences as are yet come to light, being faithfully written with his own hand. And although he was divers other times after this examined, both openly in the Consistory at Pauls, and also secretly in the Bishops House; yet what was there said is not yet sufficiently known, either because Mr. Philpot was not himself suffered to write, or else for that his writings are by some kept close, and not brought forth, otherwise then as the Bishops Register hath noted, whose handling of such matters because it is, (either for fear or favour of his Lord and Master) very slender, little light of any true meaning can be gathered, especially in the behalf of the Answerer; howbeit, such as it is, such thought I good to put forth; requiring the Reader to judge hereof according to his Answers in his former Examinations.

The last Examinations of Mr. Philpot in open Judgment, with his final Condemnation by Bishop Boner in the Consistory at Pauls.

The last Examinations of Mr. Philpot in open Judgment, with his final condemnation by B. Boner in the Consistory at Pauls. Decemb. 14.

THe Bishop having sufficiently taken his pleasure with Mr. Philpot in his private talks, and seeing his zealous, learned, and immutable constancy, thought it now high time to rid his hands of him, and therefore on the thirteenth and fourteenth days of December, sitting judicially in the Consistory at Pauls, he caused him to be brought thither before him and others, as it seemeth, more for orders sake, than for any good affection to justice and right judgment. The effect as well of which their two sundry proceedings, as also of one other had the eleventh day of the same Month in his Chappel, appear in a manner to be all one. The Bishop therefore first speaking to Mr. Philpot, said;

Mr. Philpot called into open Judgment.

Lond. Mr. Philpot, amongst other things that were laid and objected unto you, these three things ye were especially charged and burdened withal.

Three special Articles laid to Mr. Philpot.

The first is, That you being fallen from the unity of Christ's Catholick Church, do refuse and will not come to be reconciled thereunto.

The second is, That you have blasphemously spoken against the Sacrifice of the Mass, calling it Idolatry.

And the third is, That you have spoken against the Sacrament of the Altar, denying the Real Presence of Christs Body and Blood to be in the same.

And according to the will and pleasure of the Synod Legative, ye have been oft by me invited and required to go from your said Errors and Heresies, and to return to the unity of the Catholick Church, which if ye will now willingly do, ye shall be mercifully and gladly received, charitably used, and have all the favour I can shew you. And now to tell you true, it is assigned and appointed me to give Sentence against you, if you stand herein, and will not return. Wherefore if ye so refuse, I do ask of you, whether you have any cause that you can shew, why I should not now give Sentence against you?

*Here either the Register believeth Mr. Philpot, or else he meant as not offending the Law, thereby to be accused, for otherwise all his former Examinations do declare that he spake against the Sacrament of the Altar.

Phil. Under Protestation, not to go from my Appeal that I have made, and also not to consent to you as my competent Judge, I say, touching your first objection concerning the Catholick Church, I neither was nor am out of the same. And as touching the Sacrifice of the Mass, and the Sacrament of the * Altar, I never spake against the same. And as concerning the pleasure of the Synod, I say, that these twenty years I have been brought up in the Faith of the true Catholick Church, which is contrary to your Church, whereunto you would have me to come: and in that time I have been many times sworn (as well in the reign of King Henry 8. as in the reign of good K. Edward his Son) against the usurped Power of the B. of Rome, which Oath I think that I am bound in my Conscience to keep. Quia teneor reddere Domino juramentum. But if you, or any of the Synod, can by Gods word perswade me that my said Oath was unlawful, and that I am bound by Gods Law to come to your Church, Faith, and Religion, whereof you be now, I will gladly yield, agree, and be conformable unto you, otherwise not.

Anno 1555.

B. Boner with all his Doctors not able to satisfie Mr. Philpot.

Boner then, not able with all his learned Doctors, to accomplish this his offered condition, fell to perswading of him, as well by his accustomed vain promises, as also by bloody threatnings, to return to their Church: to the which he answered,

Phil. You, and all other of your sort, are Hypocrites, and I would all the world did know your Hypocrisie, your Tyranny, Ignorance, and Idolatry.

Upon these words, the Bishop did for that time dismiss him, commanding that on Monday the 16 day of the same Month, between the hours of one and three in the Afternoon, he should again be brought thither, there to have the Definitive Sentence of Condemnation pronounced against him, if he remained then in his former constancy.

Decemb. 16.

The last Examination of Mr. John Philpot.

The last Examination of John Philpot.

AT which day and time, Mr. Philpot being there presented before the Bishops of London, Bathe, Worcester, and Litchfield, Boner Bishop of London began to talk in this manner.

Lond. My Lords, Stokesley, my Predecessor, when he went to give Sentence against an Heretick, used to make this Prayer.

B. Stokesleys prayer when he gave Sentence upon any.

Deus qui errantibus, ut in viam possint redire, justitiæ veritatisq; tuæ lumen ostendis, da cunctis qui Christiana professione censentur, & illa respuere quæ huic inimica sint nomini, & ea quæ sint apta sectari per Christum Dominum nostrum, Amen. Which I will follow. And so he read it with a loud voice in Latin. To which Mr. Philpot said:

Phil. I would ye would speak in English, that all men might hear and understand you; for Paul willeth that all things, spoken in the Congregation to edifie, should be spoken in a Tongue that all men might understand.

Whereupon the Bishop did read it in English: and when he came to these words, To refuse those things which are foes to his Name; Philpot said,

Bp. Boner praieth against himself.

Phil. Then they all must turn away from you; for you are Enemies to that Name (meaning Christs Name) and God save us from such Hypocrites as would have things in a Tongue that men cannot understand.

Lond. Whom do you mean?

Phil. You, and all other that be of your Generation and Sect. And I am sorry to see you sit in the place that you now sit in, pretending to execute Justice, and to do nothing less but deceive all men in this Realm.

And then turning himself unto the People, he further said, Oh all you Gentlemen, beware of these men (meaning the Bishops) and all their doings, which be contrary unto the Primitive Church. And I would know of you, my Lord, by what Authority you proceed against me.

Bp. Boner hath no authority to proceed against Mr. Philpot.

Lond. Because I am Bishop of London.

Phil. Well, then ye are not my Bishop, nor have I offended in your Diocess: and moreover, I have appealed from you, and therefore by your own Law you ought not to proceed against me, especially being brought hither from another place by violence.

Lond. Why, who sent you hither to me?

Phil. That did Dr. Story and Dr. Cook, with other the King and Queens Commissioners; and, my Lord, is it not enough for you to wory your own Sheep, but ye must also meddle with other mens Sheep?

Then the Bishop delivered to Philpot two Books, one of the Civil Law, and the other of the Canon, out of the which he would have proved that he had Authority to proceed against him in such sort as he did. Mr. Philpot then perusing the same, and seeing the small and slender proof that was there alledged, said unto the Bishop:

Phil. I perceive your Law and Divinity is all one; for you have knowledge in neither of them; and I would ye did know your own ignorance: but ye dance in a Net, and think that no man doth see you. Hereupon they had much talk, but what it was, it is not yet known. At last Boner spake unto him, and said:

Lond. Philpot, as concerning your Objections against my my Jurisdiction, ye shall understand that both the Civil and Canon Laws make against you; and as for your Appeal, it is not allowed in this case: For it is written in the Law, A judice dispositionem juris exequente non est appellandum.

Anno 1555.

B. Boner noted to be ignorant in the Law.

Phil. My Lord, it appeareth by your Interpretation of the Law, that ye have no knowledge therein, and that ye do not understand the Law; for if ye did, ye would not bring in that Text.

The Law seemeth either badly compared of the Bishop, or else not rightly collected of his Register.

Hereupon the Bishop recited a Law of the Romans, That it was not lawful for a Jew to keep a Christian man in captivity, and to use him as a slave, laying then to the said Philpots charge, that he did not understand the Law, but did like a Jew. Whereunto Philpot answered:

Phil. No, I am no Jew, but you my Lord are a Jew. For you profess Christ, and maintain Antichrist; you profess the Gospel, and maintain Superstition, and ye be able to charge me with nothing, Lond. and other Bish. With what can you charge us?

Phil. You are Enemies to all Truth, and all your doing be naught, full of Idolatry, saving the Article of the Trinity.

The L. Maior with the Sheriffs assistant to B. Boner against Mr. Philpot.

Whilst they were thus debating the matter, there came thither, Sir William Garret Knight, then Maior of London, Sir Martin Bowes Knight, and Tho. Leigh then Sheriff of the same City, and sate down with the said Bishops in the said Consistory, where and what time Bishop Boner spake these words in effect as followeth.

Lond. Philpot, before the coming of my Lord Maior, because I would not enter with you into the matter wherewith I have heretofore, and now intend to charge you withal, until his coming, I did rehearse unto you a Prayer both in English and in Latin, which Bp. Stokesley, my Predecessor, used when he intended to proceed to give Sentence against an Heretick.

And here he did again read the said Prayer both in English, and also in Latin: which being ended, he spake again unto him, and said:

Lond. Philpot, amongst other, I have to charge you specially with three things.

The three Articles against John Philpot again repeated.

1. First, Where you have fallen from the unity of Christs Catholick Church, you have thereupon been invited and required, not only by me, but also by many and divers other Catholick Bishops, and other learned men, to return and come again to the same: and also you have been offered by me, that if you would so return, and confess your errors and heresies, you should be mercifully received, & have so much favour as I could shew unto you.

2. The second is, That you have blasphemously spoken against the Sacrifice of the Mass, calling it Idolatry and Abomination.

3. And thirdly, That you have spoken and holden against the Sacrament of the Altar, denying the Real Presence of Christs Body and Blood to be in the same.

This being spoken, the Bishop recited unto him a certain Exhortation in English, the tenor and form whereof is this.

Bishop Boners Exhortation.

An exhortation of Bp. Boner to John Philpot. Decem. 16.

MR. Philpot, this is to be told you, that if you, not being yet reconciled to the unity of the Catholick Church, from whence ye did fall in the time of the late Schism here in this Realm of England, against the See Apostolick of Rome, will now heartily and obediently be reconciled to the unity of the same Catholick Church, professing and promising to observe and keep to the best of your power the Faith and Christian Religion observed and kept of all faithful people of the same: and moreover, if ye which heretofore, especially in the year of our Lord 1553. 1554. 1555. or in one of them have offended and trespassed grievously against the Sacrifice of the Mass, calling it Idolatry and Abominable, and likewise have offended and trespassed against the Sacrament of the Altar, denying the Real Presence of Christs Body and Blood to be there in the Sacrament of the Altar, affirming also withal, material Bread and material Wine to be in the Sacrament of the Altar, and not the Substance of the Body and Blood of Christ; if ye, I say, will be reconciled as is aforesaid, and will forsake your heresies and errors before touched, being heretical and damnable, and will also allow the Sacrament of the Mass, ye shall be mercifully received, and charitably used with as much favour as may be; if not, ye shall be reputed, taken, and judged for an Heretick (as ye be indeed.) Now do you chuse what ye will do; you are counselled herein friendly and favourably Ita est quod Edm. Boner Episc. Lond.

The Bishops Exhortation thus ended, Mr. Philpot turned himself unto the Lord Maior, and said;

John Philpot answereth to the Bishops exhortation before the L. Maior.

Phil. To you my Lord Maior bearing the Sword, I am glad that it is my chance now to stand before that Authority that hath defended the Gospel and the Truth of Gods Word; but I am sorry to see, that that Authority, which representeth the King and Queens persons, should now be changed, and be at the commandment of Antichrist; and ye (speaking to the Bishops) pretend to be the followers of the Apostles of Christ, and yet be the very Antichrists and Deceivers of the People; and I am glad that God hath given me power to stand here this day, and to declare and defend my Faith, which is founded on Christ.

To the first Article. John Philpot is of the Catholick Church, but not of the Babylonical Church.

Therefore, as touching your first Objection, I say, that I am of the Catholick Church, whereof I was never out, and that your Church (which ye pretend to be the Catholick Church) is the Church of Rome, and so the Babylonical, and not the Catholick Church; of that Church I am not.

To the second Article. John Philpot speaketh not against the true Sacrifice, but against the Sacrifice set upon the Altar, used in private Masses.

As touching your second Objection, which is, that I should speak against the Sacrifice of the Mass, I do say, that I have not spoken against the true Sacrifice, but I have spoken against your private Masses that you use in corners, which is blasphemy to the true Sacrifice; for your Sacrifice daily reiterated is a blasphemy against Christs death, and it is a lye of your own invention: and that abominable Sacrifice which ye set upon the Altar, and use in your private Masses in stead of the living Sacrifice, is Idolatry, and ye shall never prove it by Gods Word; therefore ye have deceived the People with that your Sacrifice of the Mass, which ye make a Masquing.

Thirdly, where you lay to my charge, that I deny the Body and Blood of Christ to be in the Sacrament of the Altar, I cannot tell what Altar ye mean, whether it be the Altar of the Cross, or the Altar of Stone: and if ye call it the Sacrament of the Altar in respect of the Altar of Stone, then I defie your Christ, for it is a rotten Christ.

To the third Article. Philpot denieth not the Sacrament of the Altar of the Cross, but the Sacrament of Stone he denieth. Philpot chargeth the Clergy of Q. Maries time to be Idolaters to God, and Traitors to King Henry and K. Edward.

And as touching your Transubstantiation, I utterly deny it, for it was brought up first by a Pope. Now as concerning your offer made from the Synod, which is gathered together in Antichrists name; prove me that to be of the Catholick Church (which ye shall never do) and I will follow you, and do as you would have me to do. But ye are Idolaters, and daily do commit Idolatry. Ye be also Traitors; for in your Pulpits ye rail upon good Kings, as King Henry, and King Edward his Son, which have stood against the usurped Power of the Bishop of Rome; against whom also I have taken an Oath, which if ye can shew me by Gods Law that I have taken unjustly, I will then yield unto you: but I pray God turn the King and Queens heart from your Synagogue and Church, for you do abuse that good Queen.

Here the Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield began to shew where the true Church was, saying;

D. Tanc B. of Coventry speaketh: How can the Apostles be of that Church. where their Doctrine is against it?

Covent. The true Catholick Church is set upon an high hill.

Phil. Yea, at Rome, which is the Babylonical Church.

Cov. No, in our true Catholick Church are the Apostles, Evangelists, and Martyrs; but before Martyn Luther there was no Apostle, Evangelist, or Martyr of your Church.

Phil. Will ye know the cause why? Christ did prophecy that in the latter days there should come false Prophets and Hypocrites, as you be.

Cov. Your Church of Geneva, which ye call the Catholick Church, is that which Christ prophesied of.

Phil. I allow the Church of Geneva, and the Doctrine of the same, for it is una, Catholica, & Apostolica, and doth follow the Doctrine that the Apostles did preach; and the Doctrine taught and preached in K. Edwards days, was also according to the same. And are ye not ashamed to persecute me and others for your Churches sake, which is Babylonical, and contrary to the true Catholick Church?

The Church of England in King Edwards time.

And after this they had great conference together, as well out of the Scriptures, as alſo out of the Doctors. But when Boner ſaw that by learning they were not able to convince Mr. Philpot, he thought then by his defamations to bring him out of credit; and therefore turning himſelf unto the Lord Maior of London, he brought forth a Knife, and a Bladder full of Powder, and ſaid;

Lond. My Lord, this man had a roaſted Pig brought unto him, and this Knife was put ſecretly between the skin and the fleſh thereof, and ſo it was ſent him, being in Priſon. And alſo this Powder was ſent unto him, under pretence that it was good and comfortable for him to eat or drink; which Powder was only to make Ink to write withal. For when his Keeper did perceive it, he took it and brought it unto me. Which when I did ſee, I thought it had been Gunpowder, and thereupon I put fire to it, but it would not burn. Then I took it for Poyſon, and ſo gave it to a Dog, but it was not ſo. Then I took a little water, and it made as fair Ink as ever I did write withal. Therefore, my Lord, you may underſtand what a naughty Fellow this is.

B. Boner chargeth him with falſe furmiſes, for want of true matter.

Phil. Ah my Lord, have you nothing elſe to charge me withal but theſe trifles, ſeeing I ſtand upon life and death? Doth the Knife in the Pig prove the Church of Rome to be a Catholick Church? &c.

Philpot had a knife brought him under a Pig: Ergo, the Church of Rome is a Catholick Church.

Then the Biſhop brought forth a certain Inſtrument, containing Articles and Queſtions, agreed upon both in Oxford and Cambridge, whereof you have mention before. Alſo he did exhibit two Books in print; the one was the Catechiſm made in King Edwards days, An. 1552. the other concerning the true Report of the Diſputation in the Convocation Houſe, mention whereof is above expreſſed.

Articles concluded in Oxford and Cambridge. The Catechiſm ſet forth in K. Edwards dys. The Book of Report of the Diſputation in the Convocation Houſe.

Moreover he did bring forth, and laid to Mr. Philpots charge two Letters; the one touching Bartlet Green, the other containing godly exhortations and comforts; which both were written unto him by ſome of his godly friends; the tenour whereof we thought here alſo to exhibit.

A Letter exhibited by Boner, written by ſome Friend of Mr. Philpots, and ſent to him, concerning the handling of Mr. Green in Boners Houſe at London.

A Letter written to Mr. Philpot touching the handling of Mr. Green, exhibited by B. Boner. Boner breaketh promiſe.

YOu ſhall underſtand that Mr. Green came unto the Biſhop of London on Sunday laſt, where he was courteouſly received; for what policy the ſequel declareth. His entertainment for one day or two, was to dine at my Lords own Table, or elſe to have his meat from thence. During thoſe days he lay in Dr. Chedſeys Chamber, and was examined. Albeit in very deed the Biſhop earneſtly and faithfully promiſed many right worſhipful men (who were Suters for him, but to him unknown) that he in no caſe ſhould be examined; before which, Mr. Fecknam would have had him in his friendlly cuſtody, if he would have deſired to have conferred with him, which he utterly refuſed. And in that the Biſhop objected againſt him ſingularity and obſtinacy; his Anſwer thereunto was thus, To avoid all ſuſpicion thereof, although I my ſelf am young and utterly unlearned in reſpect of the learned, (and yet I underſtand, I thank my Lord) yet let me have ſuch Books as I ſhall require; and if I, by Gods Spirit, do not thereby anſwer all your Books and Objections contrary thereto, I will aſſent to you. Whereunto the Biſhop and his aſſented, permitting him at the firſt to have ſuch Books. Who at ſundry times have reaſoned with him, and have found him ſo ſtrong and rife in the Scripture and godly Fathers, that ſithence they have not only taken from him ſuch liberty of Books, but all other Books, not leaving him ſo much as the New Teſtament. Since, they have baited and uſed him moſt cruelly. This Mr. Fecknam reported; ſaying farther, that he never heard the like young man, and ſo perfect. What ſhall become farther of him, God knoweth; but death I think, for he remaineth more and more willing to dye, as I underſtand. Concerning your Bill, I ſhall confer with others therein, knowing that the ſame Court is able to redreſs the ſame: And yet I think it will not be reformed, for that I know few or none that dare or will ſpeak therein, or prefer the ſame, becauſe it concerneth ſpiritual things. Notwithſtanding, I will aſcertain you thereof; committing you to the Holy Ghoſt, who keep you and us all, as his. Your own, &c.

Mr. Green ſtrong in Scriptures and Doctors.

Fecknams report of Mr. Green.

This Bill was a Supplication to be offered up in the Parliament.

The Copy of another Letter written by the Faithful and Chriſtian hearted Lady, the Lady Vane, to Mr. Philpot, exhibited likewiſe by Biſhop Boner. Anno 1555.

A Letter written to Mr. Philpot by the faithful and chriſtian Lady, the Lady Vane.

HEarty thanks rendred unto you my welbeloved in Chriſt, for the Book ye ſent me, wherein I find great conſolations, and according to the Doctrine thereof, do prepare my cheeks to the ſtrikers, and my womaniſh back to the burthens of reproof, and ſo in the ſtrength of my God I truſt to leap over the wall; for his ſweetneſs overcometh me daily, and maketh all theſe Apothecary drugs of the world, even medecinal-like in my mouth. For the continuance whereof, I beſeech thee (my dear Fellow-ſouldier) make thy faithful prayer for me, that I may with a ſtrong and gladſome Conſcience finiſh my courſe, and obtain the reward, though it be no whit due to my work. I am not content that you ſo often gratifie me with thanks for that which is none worthy, but duty on my part, and ſmall relief to you. But if you would love me ſo much, that I might ſupply your lacks, then would I think ye believed my offers to be ſuch, as agreed with my heart. And for the ſhort charges ye ſpeak of, the means are not ſo pleaſant, if God (whom my truſt is in) will otherwiſe prepare; but Solomon ſaith, All things have here their time; You to day, and I to morrow, and ſo the end of Adams line is ſoon run out. The mighty God give us his grace, that during this time, his glory be not defaced through our weakneſs. Becauſe you deſire to ſhew your ſelf a worthy Souldier, if need ſo require, I will ſupply your requeſt for the Scarf ye wrote of, that ye may preſent my handy-work before your Captain, that I be not forgotten in the odours of Incenſe, which our beloved Chriſt offered for his own; to whom I bequeath both our Bodies and Souls.

Your own in the Lord, F. E.

Over and beſides theſe Letters, the Biſhops did alſo bring forth a Supplication made by Mr. Philpot unto the high Court of Parliament, whereof mention is made in the firſt of the two Letters laſt mentioned; the Copy whereof doth here inſue, as followeth.

To the King and Queens Majeſties Highneſs, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of this preſent Parliament aſſembled.

A Supplication of John Philpot to the King and Queen.

IN moſt humble wiſe complaineth unto this honourable Court of Parliament John Philpot Clerk, that where there was by the Queens Highneſs a Parliament called in the firſt year of her gracious reign, and after the old cuſtom a Convocation of the Clergy, your Suppliant then being one of the ſaid Convocation Houſe, and matters there riſing upon the uſing of the Sacraments, did diſpute in the ſame, knowing that there all men had and have free ſpeech, and ought not to be after-troubled for any thing there ſpoken, and yet, that notwithſtanding, not long after the ſaid Parliament, your ſaid Suppliant (without any act or matter) was commanded to Priſon to the Kings Bench by the late Lord Chancellor, where he hath remained ever ſince, until now of late that my Lord the Biſhop of London hath ſent for your ſaid Suppliant to examine him (being none of his Dioceſs) upon certain matters, wherein they would have your Orator to declare his Conſcience, which the ſaid Biſhop ſaith he hath Authority to do, by reaſon of an Act of Parliament made in the firſt and ſecond years of the King and Queens Majeſties reigns, for the reviving of three Statutes made againſt them that hold any Opinion againſt the Catholick Faith: whereby he affirmeth, that every Ordinary may, ex officio, examine every mans Conſcience: and for that your ſaid Orator hath and doth refuſe, that the ſaid Biſhop of London hath any authority over your ſaid Orator, for that he is neither his Dioceſan, nor hath publiſhed, preached, nor held any opinion againſt the Catholick Faith (notwithſtanding the ſaid Biſhop of London detaineth him in the Cole-houſe in the Stocks, without either bed or any other thing to lye upon but ſtraw) and for that your ſaid Orator cannot appeal for his relief, from the ſaid Biſhop, to any other Judge, but the ſame Biſhop may refuſe the ſame by their Law, and therefore hath no ſuccour and help, but by this high Court

The ſtraight handling of John Philpot in the Biſhops Cole-houſe.

Anno 1555.

Court of Parliament, for the explanation of the said Act; therefore it may please you, that it may be enacted by the King and Queens Majesties, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, that no Bishop nor Ordinary shall commit or detain in Prison any suspected person or persons for the Catholick Faith, except he or they have spoken, written, or done some manifest act against the Catholick Faith, and the same to be lawfully proved against every such person or persons, by the testimony of two lawful Witnesses, to be brought before the said person or persons so accused, before he or they shall either be committed to prison, or convict for any such offence or offences; the said former Statute, made in the said first and second year of our said Sovereign Lord and Lady notwithstanding: whereby your said Orator shall not only be set at liberty, and divers other more remaining in Prison; but also the blood of divers of the Queens Majesties true and faithful Subjects preserved.

The Condemnation of the worthy Martyr of God, John Philpot.

Of this Book of Disputation in the Convocation, read before.

THese Books, Letters, Supplications, and other Matters being thus read, the Bishop demanded of him, if the Book intituled, The true Report of the Disputation, &c. were of his penning, or not? Whereunto Philpot answered, That it was a good and true Book, and of his own penning and setting forth.

The Bishops waxing now weary, and being not able by any sufficient ground, either of Gods Word, or of the true ancient Catholick Fathers, to convince and overcome him, fell by fair and flattering speech to perswade with him; promising, that if he would revoke his Opinions, and come home again to their Romish and Babylonical Church, he should not only be pardoned that which was past, but also they would with all favour and cheerfulness of heart, receive him again as a true Member thereof. Which words when Boner saw would take no place, he demanded of Mr. Philpot (and that with a charitable affection I warrant you) whether he had any just cause to alledge why he should not condemn him as an Heretick. Well, (quoth Mr. Philpot) your idolatrous Sacrament, which you have found out, ye would fain defend, but ye cannot, nor ever shall.

Ah, my Lord, what needed this question, when no reasonable answer could be allowed?

In the end the Bishop, seeing his unmoveable stedfastness in the Truth, did pronounce openly the Sentence of Condemnation against him. In the reading whereof, when he came to these words, Teque etiam tanquam hæreticum, obstinatum, pertinacem, & impœnitentem, &c. Mr. Philpot said, I thank God that I am an Heretick out of your cursed Church; I am no Heretick before God. But God bless you, and give you once grace to repent your wicked doings, and let all men beware of your bloody Church.

Sentence of Condemnation read against Mr. Philpot.

Mr. Philpots words in reading the Sentence.

Moreover, whiles Boner was about the midst of the Sentence, the Bishop of Bathe pulled him by the sleeve, and said, My Lord, my Lord, know of him first, whether he will recant, or no. Then Boner said, (full like himself) O let him alone; and so read forth the Sentence.

Mr. Philpot delivered to the Sheriffs.

And when he had done, he delivered him to the Sheriffs; and so two Officers brought him thorow the Bishops House into Pater-noster-Row, and there his Servant met him, and when he saw him, he said, Ah dear Master.

Mr. Philpot to his Servant.

Then Mr. Philpot said to his man, Content thy self, I shall do well enough; for thou shalt see me again.

Mr. Philpot brought into Newgate, his man perswaded to enter with him.

And so the Officers thrust him away, and had his Master to Newgate; and as he went, he said to the People, Ah, good People, blessed be God for this day; and so the Officers delivered him to the Keeper. Then his man thrust to go in after his Master, and one of the Officers said unto him, Hence Fellow, what wouldst thou have? And he said, I would go speak with my Master. Mr. Philpot then turned him about, and said to him, To morrow thou shalt speak with me.

Then the under Keeper said to Mr. Philpot, Is this your man? and he said, Yea. So he did licence his man to go in with him; and Mr. Philpot and his man were turned into a little Chamber on the right hand, and there remained a little time, until Alexander the chief Keeper did come unto him; who at his entring greeted him with these words; Ah, said he, hast not thou done well to bring thy self hither? Well, said Mr. Philpot, I must be content; for it is Gods appointment; and I shall desire you to let me have your gentle favour; for you and I have been of old Acquaintance. Well, said Alexander, I will shew thee gentleness and favour, so thou wilt be ruled by me. Then said Mr. Philpot, I pray you shew me what you would have me to do.

Talk between Mr. Philpot and Alexander the Keeper.

He said, If you would recant, I will shew you any pleasure I can. Nay, said Mr. Philpot, I will never recant, whilst I have my life, that which I have spoken, for it is most certain truth, and in witness hereof I will seal it with my blood. Then Alexander said, This is the saying of the whole pack of you Hereticks. Whereupon he commanded him to be set upon the block, and as many Irons upon his legs as he could bear, for that he would not follow his wicked mind.

Good Philpot loaden with Irons because he would not recant at Alexanders bidding.

Then the Clerk told Alexander in his ear, that Mr. Philpot had given his man money. And Alexander said to his man, What money hath thy Master given thee? He answered, My Master hath given me none. No, said Alexander, hath he given thee none? That will I know, for I will search thee. Do with me what you list, and search me all that you can, quoth his Servant; he hath given me a Token or two to send to his Friends, as to his Brother and Sisters. Ah, said Alexander unto Mr. Philpot, thou art a maintainer of Hereticks; Thy man should have gone to some of thine Affinity, but he shall be known well enough. Nay, said Mr. Philpot, I do send it to my Friends; there he is, let him make answer to it. But good Mr. Alexander, be so much my Friend, that these Irons may be taken off. Well, said Alexander, give me my Fees, and I will take them off; if not, thou shalt wear them still.

Alexander taketh Philpots Tokens from his man.

Then said Mr. Philpot, Sir, what is your Fee? He said, Four pound was his Fees. Ah, said Mr. Philpot, I have not so much; I am but a poor man, and I have been long in Prison. What wilt thou give me then, said Alexander? Sir (said he) I will give you twenty shillings, and that I will send my man for, or else I will lay my Gown to gage; for the time is not long (I am sure) that I shall be with you; for the Bp. said unto me that I should be soon dispatched.

Alexander the cruel Keeper requireth four pounds of Mr. Philpot for his Irons.

Then said Alexander unto him, what is that to me? and with that he departed from him, and commanded him to be had into Limbo, and so his commandment was fulfilled; but before he could be taken from the block, the Clerk would have a groat.

Mr. Philpot had into Limbo.

Then one Witterence, Steward of the House, took him on his back, and carried him down, his man knew not whether. Wherefore Mr. Philpot said to his man, go to Mr. Sheriff, and shew him how I am used, and desire Mr. Sheriff to be good unto me; and so his Servant went streight way, and took an honest man with him.

And when they came to Mr. Sheriff, (which was Mr. Macham) and shewed him how Mr. Philpot was handled in Newgate, the Sheriff hearing this, took his Ring off from his finger, and delivered it unto that honest man which came with Mr. Philpots man, and bad him go unto Alexander the Keeper, and commanded him to take off his Irons, and to handle him more gently, and to give his man again that which he had taken from him. And when they came again to the said Alexander, and told their message from the Sheriff, Alexander took the Ring, and said, Ah, I perceive that Mr. Sheriff is a bearer with him, and all such Hereticks as he is, therefore to morrow I will shew it to his betters: Yet at ten of the Clock he went into Mr. Philpot, where he lay, and took off his Irons, and gave him such things as he had taken before from his Servant.

Mr. MacHam Sheriff, a good man, sendeth his Ring to take off Mr. Philpots Irons, and to restore the mans Tokens. Note the spitefulness of this Keeper.

Mr. Philpot with much ado released of his Irons. Decemb. 17.

Upon Tuesday at Supper, being the seventeenth day of December, there came a Messenger from the Sheriffs, and bade Mr. Philpot make him ready, for the next day he should suffer, and be burned at a stake with fire. Mr. Philpot answered and said, I am ready; God grant me strength, and a joyful Resurrection. And so he went into his Chamber, and poured out his spirit unto the Lord God, giving him most hearty thanks that he of his mercy had made him worthy to suffer for his truth.

Mr. Philpot warned by the Sheriffs to prepare him against the next day to the fire. Decemb. 18.

In the morning the Sheriffs came according to the order, about eight of the Clock, and called for him, and he most joyfully came down unto them. And there his man did meet him, and ſaid, Ah dear Maſter, farewel: His Maſter ſaid unto him, Serve God, and he will help thee. And ſo he went with the Sheriffs to the place of Execution; and when he was entring into Smithfield, the way was foul, and two Officers took him up to bear him to the Stake. Then he ſaid merrily, What? will ye make me a Pope? I am content to go to my journeys end on foot. But firſt coming into Smithfield, he kneeled down there, ſaying theſe words, I will pay my vows in thee, O Smithfield.

Mr. Philpots brought to the place of martyrdom.

Mr. Philpots words going to the Stake.

And when he was come to the place of Suffering, he kiſſed the Stake, and ſaid, Shall I diſdain to ſuffer at this Stake, ſeeing my Redeemer did not refuſe to ſuffer moſt vile death upon the Croſs for me? And then with an obedient heart full meekly he ſaid the Cvj. Cvij. and Cviij. Pſalms: and when he had made an end of all his Prayers, he ſaid to the Officers; What have you done for me? and every one of them declared what they had done; and he gave to every of them money.

The martyrdome of Master Iohn Philpot Archdeacon, with the manner of his kneeling and praying at the Stake.

Then they bound him to the Stake, and ſet fire unto that conſtant Martyr: Who the eighteenth day of December, in the midſt of the fiery flames, yielding his ſoul into the hands of Almighty God, and ſtill like a Lamb gave up his breath, his body being conſumed into aſhes.

Thus haſt thou (gentle Reader) the life and doings of this learned and worthy Souldier of the Lord, John Philpot; with all his Examinations that came to our hands: firſt penned and written with his own hand, being marvellouſly reſerved from the ſight and hand of his enemies; who by all manner of means ſought not only to ſtop him from all writing, but alſo to ſpoil and deprive him of that which he had written. For the which cauſe he was many times ſtripped and ſearched in the Priſon of his Keeper: but yet ſo happily theſe his writings were conveyed and hid in places about him, or elſe his Keepers eyes ſo blinded, that notwithſtanding all this malicious purpoſe of the Biſhops, they are yet remaining, and come to light.

The writings and examinations of Mr. John Philpot, by the Providence of Almighty God, preſerved.

A Prayer to be ſaid at the Stake, of all them that God ſhall account worthy to ſuffer for his ſake.

A godly prayer to be ſaid at the time of martyrdom.

MErciful God and Father, to whom our Savicur Chriſt approached in his fear and need by reaſon of death, and found comfort; Gracious God and moſt bounteous Chriſt, on whom Stephen called in his extream need, and received ſtrength; moſt benign holy Spirit, which in the midſt of all croſſes of death didſt comfort the Apoſtle S. Paul with more conſolations in Chriſt, then he felt ſorrows and terrors, have mercy upon me miſerable, vile, and wretched ſinner, which now draw near the gates of death, deſerved both in ſoul and body eternally, by reaſon of manifold, horrible, old and new tranſgreſſions, which to thine eyes (O Lord) are open and known: Oh be merciful unto me, for the bitter death and blood-ſhedding of thine own only Son Jeſus Chriſt. And though thy juſtice doth require (in reſpect of my ſins) that now thou ſhouldſt not hear me, meaſuring me in the ſame meaſure I have meaſured thy Majeſty, contemning thy daily calls; yet let thy mercy which is above all thy works, and wherewith the earth is filled, let thy mercy (I ſay) prevail towards me, through and for the mediation of Chriſt our Saviour. And for whoſe ſake in that it hath pleaſed thee to bring me forth now as one of his witneſſes, and a record-bearer of thy verity and truth taught by him, to give my life therefore (to which dignity I do acknowledge, dear God, that there was never any ſo unworthy and ſo unmeet, no not the thief that hanged with him on the Croſs:) I moſt humbly therefore pray thee that thou wouldſt accordingly aid, help, and aſſiſt me with thy ſtrength and heavenly grace, that with Chriſt thy Son I may find comfort, with Stephen I may ſee thy preſence, and gracious power, with Paul, and all others, which for thy Names ſake have ſuffered affliction and death, I may find ſo preſent with me thy gracious conſolations, that I may by my death glorifie thy holy Name, propagate, and ratifie thy verity, comfort the hearts of the heavy, confirm thy Church in thy verity, convert ſome that are to be converted, and ſo depart forth of this miſerable world, where I do nothing but daily heap ſin upon ſin, and ſo enter into the fruition of thy bleſſed mercy; whereof now give and increaſe in me a lively truſt, ſenſe, and feeling, wherethrough the terrors of death, the torments of fire, the pangs of ſin, the darts of Satan, and the dolors of Hell may never depreſs me, but may be driven away through the working of that moſt gracious Spirit; which now plenteouſly endue me withal, that through the ſame Spirit I may offer (as I now deſire to do in Chriſt by him) my ſelf wholly, ſoul and body, to be a lively Sacrifice, holy and acceptable in thy ſight. Dear Father, whoſe I am, and always have been, even from my mothers womb, yea even before the world was made, to whom I commend my ſelf, ſoul and body, family and friends, Country and all the whole Church, yea even my very enemies, according to thy good pleaſure; beſeeching thee intirely to give once more to this Realm of England the bleſſing of thy Word again, with godly peace, to the teaching and ſetting forth of the ſame. O dear Father, now give me me grace to come unto thee: Purge and ſo purifie me by this fire in Chriſts death and paſſion through thy Spirit, that I may be a Burnt-offering of a ſweet ſmell in thy ſight which liveſt and reigneſt with the Son and the Holy Ghoſt, now and for evermore world without end, Amen.

Letters of Mr. Philpot.

A Letter which he ſent to the Chriſtian Congregation, exhorting them to refrain from the idolatrous Service of the Papiſts, and to ſerve God after his Word.

A Letter of Mr. Philpot to the Congregation.

IT is a lamentable thing to behold at this preſent in England the faithleſs departing both of men and women, from the true knowledge and uſe of Chriſts ſincere Religion, which ſo plentifully they have been taught, and do know, their own Conſciences bearing witneſs to the verity thereof. If that earth be curſed of God, which eſtſoons receiving moiſture and pleaſant dews from Heaven, doth not bring forth fruit accordingly; how much more grievous judgment ſhall ſuch perſons receive, which having received from the Father of Heaven the perfect knowledge of his word by the miniſtry thereof, do not ſhew forth Gods worſhip after the ſame? If the Lord will require in the day of Judgment a godly uſury of all manner of Talents which he lendeth unto men and women, how much more will he require the ſame of his pure Religion revealed unto us (which is of all other Talents the chiefeſt and moſt pertaining to our exerciſe in this life) if we hide the ſame in a Napkin, and ſet it not forth to the uſury of Gods glory, and edifying of his Church by true Confeſſion? God hath kindled the bright light of his Goſpel, which in times paſt was ſuppreſſed, and hid under the vile aſhes of mans Traditions, and hath cauſed the brightneſs thereof to ſhine in our hearts, to the end that the ſame might ſhine before men to the honour of his Name. It is not only given us to believe, but alſo to confeſs and declare what we believe in our outward converſation. For as S. Paul writeth to the Romans, The belief of the heart juſtifieth, and to acknowledge with the mouth maketh a man ſafe. It is all one before God, not to believe at all, and not to ſhew forth the lively works of our belief. For Chriſt ſaith, Either make the tree good and his fruits good; or elſe make the tree evil and the fruits evil; becauſe a good tree bringeth forth good fruits, as an evil tree doth evil fruits. So that the perſon which knoweth his Maſters will, and doth it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes. And not all they which ſay Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the Kingdom of God, but he that doth the will of the Father. And whoſoever in the time of trial is aſhamed of me (ſaith Chriſt) and of my words, of him the Son of Man will be aſhamed before his Father. After that we have built our ſelves into the true Church of God, it hath pleaſed him by giving us over into the hands of the wicked Synagogues to prove our building, and to have it known as well to the world as to our ſelves, that we have been wiſe builders into the true Church of God upon the Rock, and not on the Sand, and therefore now the Tempeſt is riſen, and the Storms do mightily blow againſt us, that we might notwithſtanding ſtand upright, and be firm in the Lord, to his honour and glory, and to our eternal felicity. There is no new thing happened unto us, for with ſuch Tempeſts and dangerous Weathers the Church of God hath continually been exerciſed. Now once again, as the Prophet Aggeus tells us, The Lord ſhaketh the earth, that thoſe might abide for ever, which be not overcome.

Therefore, my dearly beloved, be ſtable and immovable in the word of God, and in the faithful obſervation thereof, and let no man deceive you with vain words, ſaying, that you may keep your Faith to your ſelves, and diſſemble with Antichriſt, and to live at reſt and quietneſs in the world, as moſt men do, yielding to neceſſity. This is the wiſdom of the fleſh; but the wiſdom of the fleſh is death and enmity to God, as our Saviour for enſample aptly did declare in Peter, who exhorteth Chriſt not to go to Jeruſalem to celebrate the Paſſover, and there to be ſlain, but counſelled him to look better to himſelf.

Wiſdom of the fleſh not to be hearkned unto.

Rom. 8. 1 Cor. 6. Matth. 16.

Likewiſe the world would not have us to forſake it, neither to aſſociate our ſelves to the true Church, which is the Body of Chriſt, whereof we are lively Members, and to uſe the Sacraments after Gods word with the danger of our lives. But we muſt learn to anſwer the world as Chriſt did Peter, and ſay, Go behind me Satan, thou ſavoureſt not the things of God. Shall I not drink of the Cup which the Father giveth me? For it is better to be afflicted and to be ſlain in the Church of God, then to be counted the Son of the King, in the Synagogue of falſe Religion. Death for rightcouſneſs is not to be abhorred, but rather to be deſired, which aſſuredly bringeth with it the Crown of everlaſting Glory. Theſe bloody Executioners do not proſecute Chriſts Martyrs, but crown them with everlaſting felicity; we were born into this world to be witneſſes unto the Truth, both learned and unlearned.

Hebr 11. Pſal. 116.

Death for righteouſneſs bringeth felicity.

Now ſince the time is come that we muſt ſhew our Faith, and declare whether we will be Gods Servants in righteouſneſs and holineſs, as we have been taught, and are bound to follow, or elſe with hypocriſie to ſerve unrighteouſneſs: let us take good heed that we be found faithful in the Lords Covenant, and true Members of his Church, in the which through knowledge we are ingraffed; from the which if we fall by tranſgreſſion with the common ſort of people, it will more ſtreightly be required of us, then many yet do make account thereof. We cannot ſerve two Maſters; we may not halt on both ſides, and think to pleaſe God; we muſt be fervent in Gods cauſe, or elſe he will caſt us out from him. For by the firſt Commandment we are commanded to love God with all our heart, with all our mind, with all our power and ſtrength: but they are manifeſt tranſgreſſors of this Commandment, which with their heart, mind, or bodily power, do communicate with a ſtrange Religion, contrary to the word of God, in the Papiſtical Synagogue, which calleth it ſelf the Church, and is not. As greatly do they offend God now which ſo do, as the Iſraelites did in times paſt by forſaking Jeruſalem, the true Church of God, and by going to Bethel to ſerve God in a Congregation of their own ſetting up, and after their own Imaginations and Traditions: for the which doing God utterly deſtroyed all Iſrael, as all the Prophets almoſt do teſtifie. This happened unto them for our enſample, that we might beware to have any fellowſhip with any like Congregation to our deſtruction.

Godly counſel. Luke 18. 3 Reg. 18.

Apoc. 3.

3 Reg. 31. God will not be ſerved after mans imagination, but as himſelf preſcribeth.

God hath one Catholick Church diſperſed throughout the world, and therefore we are taught in our Creed to believe one Catholick Church, and to have communion therewith: which Catholick Church is grounded upon the foundation of the Prophets, and of the Apoſtles, and upon none other, as S. Paul witneſſeth to the Epheſians. Therefore whereſoever we perceive any people to worſhip God truly after his word, there we may be certain the Church of Chriſt to be; unto the which we ought to aſſociate our ſelves, and to deſire with the Prophet David, to praiſe God in the midſt of his Church. But if we behold through the iniquity of the time, ſegregations to be made with counterfeit Religion, otherwiſe then the word of God doth teach, we ought then, if we be required to be companions thereof, to ſay again with David, I have hated the Synagogue of the malignant, and will not ſit with the wicked. In the Apocalyps the Church of Epheſus is highly commended, becauſe ſhe tried ſuch as ſaid they were Apoſtles, and were not indeed, and therefore would not abide the company of them. Further, God commanded his People that they ſhould not ſeek Bethel, neither enter into Gilgal where Idolatry was uſed, by the mouth of his Prophet Amos. Alſo we muſt conſider that our Bodies be the Temple of God, and whoſoever (as S. Paul teacheth) doth prophane the Temple of God, him the Lord will deſtroy. May we then take the Temple of Chriſt, and make it the Member of an Harlot? All ſtrange Religion and Idolatry is counted whoredom with the Prophets, and more deteſtable in the ſight of God, than the adventurous abuſe of the Body.

2 Cor. 3.

Therefore the Princes of the earth, in the Revelation of S. John, be ſaid to go a whoring, when they are in love with falſe Religion, and follow the ſame. How then by any means may a Chriſtian man think it tolerable to be preſent at the Popiſh private Maſs (which is the very prophanation of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt) and at other idolatrous worſhippings and rites, which be not after the word of God, but rather to the derogation thereof, in ſetting mans Traditions above Gods Precepts, ſince God by his word judgeth all ſtrange Religion, which which is not according to his inſtitution, for whoredom and advoutry?

Not lawful for a true Chriſtian to come to the Maſs.

Some fondly think that the preſence of the Body is not material, ſo that the heart do not conſent to their wicked doings. But ſuch perſons little conſider what S. Paul writeth to the Corinthians, commanding them to Glorifie God as well in Body as in Soul.

Not enough to confeſs God in heart, but in mouth alſo.

Moreover, we can do no greater injury to the true Church of Chriſt, then to ſeem to have forſaken her, and diſallow her by cleaving to her adverſary: whereby it appeareth to others which be weak, that we allow the ſame, and ſo contrary to the word, do give a great offence to the Church of God, and do outwardly ſlander, as much as Men may, the truth of Chriſt. But wo be unto him by whom any ſuch offence cometh. Better it were for him to have a Milſtone tied about his neck, and to be caſt into the bottom of the Sea. Such be traytors to the truth, like unto Judas, who with a kiſs betrayed Chriſt. Our God is a jealous God, and cannot be content that we ſhould be of any other then of that unſpotted Church, whereof he is the head only, and wherein he hath planted us by Baptiſm. This jealouſie which God hath towards us, will cry for vengeance in the day of vengeance, againſt all ſuch as now have ſo large Conſciences to do that which is contrary to Gods Glory, and the ſincerity of his word, except they do in time repent, and cleave unſeparably to the Goſpel of Chriſt, how much ſoever at this preſent both Men and Women otherwiſe in their own corrupt judgment, do flatter themſelves. God willeth us to judge uprightly, and to allow and follow that which is holy and acceptable in his ſight, and to abſtain from all manner of evil, and therefore Chriſt commandeth us in the Goſpel to beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, which is Hypocriſie.

A leſſon for large Conſciences.

Reaſons proving that true Chriſtians ought in no wiſe to participate with Papiſts.

St. Paul to the Hebrews ſaith, if any Man withdraw himſelf from the Faith, his Soul ſhall have no pleaſure in him: therefore he ſaith alſo, That we are none ſuch as do withdraw our ſelves unto perdition, but we belong unto Faith, for the attainment of Life. St. John in the Apocalyps telleth us plainly that none of thoſe, who are written in the Book of Life, do receive the mark of the Beaſt, which is of the Papiſtical Synagogue, either in their foreheads, or elſe in their hands, that is apparently or obediently.

Heb. 10.

Apoc. 13.

Epheſ. 5.

Phil. 2.

St. Paul to the Philippians affirmeth, that we may not have any fellowſhip with the works of darkneſs, but in the midſt of this wicked and froward Generation we ought to ſhine like lights upholding the word of truth. Further he ſaith, that we may not touch any unclean thing; which ſignifieth that our outward converſation in forreign things ought to be pure and undefiled as well as the inward, that with a clean Spirit and rectified Body we might ſerve God juſtly in Holineſs and Righteouſneſs all the days of our Life.

2 Cor. 6.

Finally in the 18 of the Apocalyps, God biddeth us plainly to depart from the Babyloniſh Synagogue, and not to be partakers of her treſpaſs. S. Paul to the Theſſ. commandeth us in the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to withdraw our ſelves from every Brother that walketh inordinately, and not according to the inſtitution which he hath received of him.

Apoc. 18.

2 Theſ. 3.

Ponder ye therefore well, good Brethren and Siſters, theſe Scriptures which be written for your erudition and reformation, whereof one jot is not written in vain: which be utterly againſt all counterfeit illuſion to be uſed of us with the Papiſts in their phantaſtical Religion, and be adverſaries to all them that have ſo light Conſciences in ſo doing: and if they do not agree with this adverſary (I mean the Word of God) which is contrary to their attempts, he will (as is ſignified in the Goſpel) deliver them to the judge, which is Chriſt, and the judge will deliver them to the Executioner, that is to the Devil, and the Devil ſhall commit them to the horrible priſon of Hel-Fire (where is the portion of all Hypocrites) with ſulphure and brimſtone; with wailing and gnaſhing of teeth World without end. But yet many will ſay for their vain excuſe; God is merciful, and his mercy is over all. But the Scripture teacheth us, That curſed is he that ſinneth upon hope of forgiveneſs: Truth it is, that the mercy of God is above all his works, and yet but upon ſuch as fear him: for it is written in the Pſalms, The mercy of God is on them that fear him, and on ſuch as put their truſt in him. Where we may learn, that they only put their truſt in God, that ſerve him; and to fear God, is to turn from evil and do that is good. So that ſuch as do look to be partakers in Gods mercy, may not abide in that which is known to be manifeſt evil and deteſtable in the ſight of God.

Another ſort of perſons do make them a Cloak for the rain under the pretence of obedience to the magiſtrates, whom we ought to obey although they be wicked. But ſuch muſt learn of Chriſt to give to Cæſar that is Cæſars and to God that is due to God, and with S. Peter to obey the higher powers in the Lord, albeit they be evil if they command nothing contrary to Gods Word, otherwiſe we ought not to obey their commandments, although we ſhould ſuffer death therefore, as we have the Apoſtles for our example herein to follow, who anſwered the Magiſtrates as we ought to do in this caſe, not obeying their wicked precepts, ſaying, Judge you whether it be more righteous that we ſhould obey Man rather then God.

Obedience to Magiſtrates what, and how far.

Alſo Daniel choſe rather to be caſt into the Den of Lions to be devoured, then to obey the Kings wicked Commandments. If the blind lead the blind, both fall into the Ditch. There is no excuſe for the tranſgreſſion of Gods Word, whether a Man doth it voluntarily or at Commandment, although great Damnation is to them, by whom the offence cometh. Some others there be that for an extream refuge in their evil doings, do run to Gods predeſtination and election, ſaying, that if I be elected of God to Salvation, I ſhall be ſaved, whatſoever I do. But ſuch be great tempters of God, and abominable blaſphemers of Gods Holy Election and caſt themſelves down from the Pinacle of the Temple in preſumption, that God may preſerve them by his Angels through predeſtination. Such verily may reckon themſelves to be none of Gods elect Children, that will do evil that good may enſue; whoſe damnation is juſt, as S. Paul ſaith. Gods predeſtination and election ought to be with a ſimple eye conſidered, to make us more warily to walk in good and Godly converſation according to Gods Word, and not ſet cock in the hoop, and put all on Gods back to do wickedly at large: for the Elect Children of God muſt walk in righteouſneſs and holineſs after that they be once called to the true knowledge. For ſo ſaith Saint Paul to the Epheſ. That God hath choſen us before the Foundations of the World were laid, that we ſhould be holy and blameleſs in his ſight.

Epheſ. 1.

Therefore Saint Peter willeth us through good works to make our vocation and election certain to our ſelves, which we know not but by the good working of Gods Spirit in us, according to the rule of the Goſpel; and he that conformeth not himſelf to the ſame in Godly converſation, may juſtly tremble, and doubt that he is none of the elect Children of God, but of the viperous generation, and a Child of darkneſs. For the Children of light will walk in the works of light and not of darkneſs, though they fall, they do not lie ſtill.

Prov. 24.

Let all vain excuſations be ſet apart, and whiles ye have light, as Chriſt commandeth, believe the light and abide in the ſame, leſt eternal darkneſs overtake you unawares. The light is come into the World, but (alas) Men love darkneſs more then light. God give us his pure eye-ſalve to heal our blindneſs in this behalf. O that Men and women would be healed, and not ſeek to be wilfully blinded. The Lord open their eyes, that they may ſee how dangerous a thing it is to decline from the knowledge of truth, contrary to their Conſcience.

Heb. 10.

But what ſaid I, Conſcience? many affirm their Conſcience will bear them well enough to do all that they do, and to go to the Idolatrous Church to ſervice; whoſe Conſcience is very large to ſatisfie Man more then God. And although their Conſcience can bear them ſo to do, yet I am ſure that a good Conſcience will not permit them ſo to do; which cannot be good, unleſs it be directed after the knowledge of Gods Word: and therefore in Latin this feeling mind is called Conſcientia, which ſoundeth by interpretation, as much as with knowledge.

Large Conſcience.

And therefore if our Conſcience be led of her ſelf, and not after true knowledge, yet we are not ſo to be excuſed, as Saint Paul beareth witneſs ſaying, Although my Conſcience accuſeth me not, yet in this I am not juſtified. And he joyneth a good conſcience with theſe three Siſters, charity, a pure heart, and unfained Faith. Gods Commandments, a pure heart loveth and feareth God above all, and unfained faith is never aſhamed of the profeſſion of the Goſpel; whatſoever damage he ſhall ſuffer in Body thereby. The Lord which hath revealed his holy will unto us by his word, grant us never to be aſhamed of it, and give us Grace ſo earneſtly to cleave to his holy word and the true Church, that for no manner of worldly reſpect we become partakers of the works of Hypocriſie, which God doth abhor; ſo that we may be found Faithful in the Lords Teſtament to the end, both in heart, word, and deed, to the Glory of God and our Everlaſting Salvation, Amen.

John Philpot, priſoner in the Kings Bench for the teſtimony of the truth. 1555.

To his dear friend in the Lord, John Careleſs priſoner in the Kings Bench.

Another Letter of M. Philpot to Je. Careleſs.

MY dearly beloved Brother Careleſs, I have received your loving Letters full of love and compaſſion, inſomuch that they made my hard heart to weep, to ſee you ſo careful for one that hath been ſo unprofitable a member as I have been, and am in Chriſts Church. God make me worthy of that I am called unto, and I pray you ceaſe not to pray for me, but ceaſe to weep for him who hath not deſerved ſuch gentle tears: and praiſe God with me, for that I now approach the company of them, whoſe want you may worthily lament; God give your pittiful heart his inward conſolation. Indeed my dear Careleſs, I am in this World in Hell, and in the ſhadow of Death; but he that hath brought me for my deſerts down into Hell, ſhall ſhortly lift me up to Heaven, where I ſhall look continually for your coming and other my Faithful Brethren in the Kings Bench. And though I tell you that I am in Hell in the Judgment of this World, yet aſſuredly I feel in the ſame the conſolation of Heaven, I praiſe God; and this loathſom and horrible priſon is as pleaſant to me, as the walk in the Garden of the Kings Bench.

Experience of the Lords comfort in trouble.

You know, Brother Careleſs, that the way to Heaven out of this Life is very narrow, and we muſt ſtrive to enter in at a narrow gate. If God do mitigate the uglineſs of mine Impriſonment, what will he do in the rage of the fire whereunto I am appointed? And this hath hapned unto me, that I might be hereafter an enſample of comfort, if the like happen unto you, or to any other of my dear Brethren with you in theſe cruel days, in the which the devil ſo rageth at the Faithful Flock of Chriſt, but in vain (I truſt) againſt any of us, who be perſwaded that neither Life, neither death is able to ſeparate us from the love of Chriſts Goſpel, which is Gods high treaſure committed to our brittle veſſels to glorifie us by the ſame. God of his mercy make us Faithful Stewards to the end, and give us Grace to fear nothing whatſoever in his good pleaſure we ſhall ſuffer for the ſame. That I have not written unto you erſt, the cauſe is our ſtrait keeping and the want of light by night: for the day ſerveth us but a while in our dark cloſet. This is the firſt Letter that I have written ſince I came to priſon, beſides the report of mine Examinations; and I am fain to ſcribble it out in haſt.

Example of Chriſts comfort, to be taken by M. Philpot.

Commend me to all our Faithful Brethren, and bid them with a good courage look for their redemption, and frame themſelves to be hearty Souldiers in Chriſt. They have taken his preſt money a great while, and now let them ſhew themſelves ready to ſerve him faithfully, and not to flie out of the Lords Camp into the World, as many do. Let them remember that in the Apocalyps the fearful be excluded the Kingdom. Let us be of good cheer, for our Lord overcame the World, that we ſhould do the like. Bleſſed is the ſervant, whom when the Lord cometh, he findeth watching. O let us watch and pray earneſtly one for another that we be not led into temptation. Be joyful under the Croſs and praiſe the Lord continually, for this is the whole burnt Sacrifice which the Lord delighteth in. Commend me to my Father Hunt, and deſire him to love and continue in the unity of Chriſts true Church, which he hath begun, and then ſhall he make me more and more to joy under my Croſs with him. Tell my Brother Clements that he hath comforted me much by his loving token in ſignification of an unfained unity with us; let him increaſe my joy unto the end perfectly. The Lord of peace be with you all. Salute all my loving friends, M. Mering, M. Crooch, with the reſt, and ſpecially M. Marſhal, and his Wife, with great thanks for his kindneſs ſhewed unto me. Farewel my dear Careleſs. I have dallied with the Devil a while, but I am over the ſhoos: God ſend me well out.

Out of the Colehouſe, by your Brother, John Philpot.

Another Letter to John Careleſs, profitable to be read of all them which mourn in repentance for their Sins.

Another Letter of M. Philpot to the ſame party.

THE God of all Comfort, and the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſend unto thee, my dear Brother Careleſs, the inward conſolation of his Holy Spirit, in all the malicious aſſaults and troublous temptations of our common adverſary the Devil, Amen.

To this Letter Careleſs maketh a very Godly anſwer, which you ſhall ſee afterward in his Story. Pſal. 51.

That God giveth you ſo contrite a heart for your Sins I cannot but rejoice to behold the lively mark of the Children of God whoſe property is to think more lowly and vilely of themſelves then of any other, and oftentimes do ſet their Sins before them, that they might the more be ſtirred to bring forth the fruits of repentance, and learn to mourn in this World, that in another they might be glad and rejoice. Such a broken heart is a pleaſant Sacrifice unto God: O that I had the like contrite heart. God mollifie my ſtony heart, which lamenteth not in ſuch wiſe my former deteſtable iniquities. Praiſed be God that he hath given you this ſorrowful heart in reſpect of righteouſneſs, and I pray you let me be partaker of theſe Godly ſorrows for Sin, which be the teſtimony of the preſence of the Holy Ghoſt. Did not the ſword of ſorrow pierce the heart of the elect and Bleſſed Mother of our Lord? Did not Peter weep bitterly for his Sins, which was ſo beloved of Chriſt? Did not Mary Magdalen waſh the feet of our Saviour with her tears, and received therewithal remiſſion of her ſeven fold Sins?

Be of good comfort therefore mine own dear heart, in this thy ſorrow, for it is the earneſt peny of eternal conſolation. In thy ſorrow laugh, for the Spirit of God is with thee: Bleſſed be they (ſaith Chriſt) that mourn, for they ſhall be comforted. They went forth and wept, ſaith the Prophet, ſuch ſhall come again, having their gripes full of gladneſs. And although a ſorrowful heart, in conſideration of his Sins, be an acceptable Sacrifice before God, whereby we are ſtirred up to more thankfulneſs unto God, knowing that much is forgiven us that we might love the more, yet the Man of God muſt keep a meaſure in the ſame, leſt he be ſwallowed up by much ſorrow. Saint Paul would not the Theſſalonians to be ſorry as other Men which have no hope. ſuch a ſorrow is not commendable, but worketh Damnation, and is far from the Children of God, who are continually ſorrowful in God when they look upon their own unworthineſs, with hope of forgiveneſs. For God to this end by his ſpirit ſetteth the Sins of his elect ſtill before them, that where they perceive Sin to abound, there they might be aſſured that Grace ſhall ſuperabound; and bringeth them down unto Hell, that he might lift them up with greater joy unto Heaven. Wherefore mine own Bowels in Chriſt, as long as you are not void altogether of hope, be not daſmaied through your penſive heart for your Sins, how huge ſoever they have been, for God is able to forgive more then you are able to Sin: yea, and he will forgive him, which with hope is ſorry for his Sins.

Matth. 5. Pſal. 125. Pſal. 51. Luke 7.

Sorrow in a Chriſtian Man ought to be moderate. 1 Theſ. 4. 2 Cor. 7. Rom. 9.

But know Brother, that as oft as we do goe about, by the help of Gods Spirit, to do that is good, the evil Spirit Satan layeth hard wait to turn the good unto evil, and goeth about to mire the deteſtable darnel of deſperation with the godly ſorrow of a pure penitent heart. You be not ignorant of his malicious ſubtilty, and how that continually he aſſaulteth that good which the Grace of God planteth. I ſee the battel betwixt you and him, but the victory is yours, yea and that daily: For you have laid hold upon the Anchor of Salvation, which is hope in Chriſt, the which will not ſuffer you to be made aſhamed.

Satans practiſe to bring the Godly repentance of a Sinner to deſperation.

Be not diſcontented that you have this conflict: but be glad that God hath given you the ſame to try your Faith, and that you might appear daily worthy of the Kingdom of God, for the which you ſtrive. God beholdeth your ſtriving

ving Faith againſt Satan, and is pleaſed with your mighty reſiſtance. The Spirit which is in you, is mightier then all the adverſaries power. Tempt he may, and lying await at your heels, give you a fall unawares; but overcome he ſhall not: yea he cannot, for you are ſealed up already with a lively Faith to be the Child of God for ever: and whom God hath once ſealed for his own, him he never utterly forſaketh. The juſt falleth ſeven times, but he riſeth again. It is Mans frailty to fall, but it is the property of the Devils Child to lie ſtill.

Gods Children fall. The Devils Children ly ſtill.

Strife againſt Sin is a token of Gods Child. Luke 11.

This ſtrife againſt Sin is a ſufficient teſtimony that you are the Child of God: for if you were not, you ſhould feel no ſuch malice as he now troubleth you withal. When this ſtrong Goliah hath the hold, all things are in peace which he poſſeſſeth: and becauſe he hath you not, he will not ſuffer you unaſſaulted. But ſtand faſt, and hold out the Buckler of Faith, and with the Sword of Gods promiſes ſmite him on the ſcalp: that he may receive a deadly wound, and never be able to ſtand againſt you any more. Saint James telleth you that he is but a coward, ſaying, Reſiſt the Devil, and he will flye from thee. It is the will of God that he ſhould thus long tempt you and not go away as yet, or elſe he had done with you long ere this. He knoweth already that he ſhall receive the foil at your hands, and increaſe the Crown of your glory: for he that overcometh ſhall be Crowned. Therefore glory in your temptations, ſince they ſhall turn to your felicity. Be not afraid of your continual aſſaults which be occaſions of your daily victory. The Word of God abideth for ever, In what hour ſoever a Sinner repenteth him of his Sins, they be forgiven. Who can lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? Do you not perceive the manifeſt tokens of your election? Firſt, your vocation to the Goſpel, and after your vocation, the manifeſt gifts of the Spirit of God given unto you above many other of your condition, with Godlineſs which believeth and yieldeth to the authority of the Scriptures, and is zealous for the ſame? Seeing you are Gods own dearling, who can hurt you? Be not of a deject mind for theſe temptations, neither make your unfained friends to be more ſorrowful for you then need doth require.

James 4.

Since God hath willed you at your Baptiſm in Chriſt to be careleſs, why do you make your ſelf careful? Caſt all your care on him. Set the Lord before your eyes always, for he is on your right ſide, that you ſhould not be then moved. Behold the goodneſs of God toward me. I am careleſs, being faſt cloſed in a pair of ſtocks, which pinch me for very ſtraitneſs; and will you be careful? I would not have that unſeemly addition to your name. Be as your name pretendeth, for doubtleſs you have no other cauſe but ſo to be. Pray, I beſeech you, that I may be ſtill careleſs in my careful eſtate, as you have cauſe to be careleſs in your eaſier condition. Be thankful and put away all care, and then I ſhall be joyful in my ſtrait preſent care. Commend me to all our Brethren, and deſire them to pray for me, that I may overcome my temptations: for the Devil rageth againſt me: I am put in the ſtocks in a place alone, becauſe I would not anſwer to ſuch Articles, as they would charge me withal in a corner at the Biſhops appointment, and becauſe I did not come to Maſs when the Biſhop ſent for me. I will lye all the daies of my Life in the ſtocks by Gods Grace, rather then I will conſent to the wicked Generation. Praiſe God, and be joyful, that it hath pleaſed him to make us worthy to ſuffer ſomewhat for his name ſake. The Devil muſt rage for ten days. Commend me to Maſter F. and thank him for his Law Books: but neither Law nor Equity will take any place among theſe Blood-thirſty. I would for your ſake the unjuſt dealing were noted unto the Parliament-Houſe, if it might avail. God ſhorten theſe evil days. I have anſwered the Biſhop meetly plain already, and I ſaid to him, if he will call me in open judgment, I will anſwer him as plainly as he will require: otherwiſe I have refuſed, becauſe I fear they will condemn me in hugger mugger. The peace of God be with you my dear Brother. I can write no more for lack of light, and that I have written I cannot read my ſelf, and God knoweth it is written far uneaſily. I pray God you may pick out ſome underſtanding of my mind towards you. Written in a Cole-Houſe of darkneſs, out of a pair of painful ſtocks, by thine own in Chriſt,

Another Letter of Maſter Philpot, to certain Godly Women, forſaking their own Country for the Goſpel, full of fruitful precepts and leſſons for all good Women.

Another Letter of M. Philpot to certain Godly Women.

THe Spirit of truth, revealed unto you my dearly beloved by the Goſpel of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, be continually abiding with you, and augmented into a perfect building of you into the lively Temple of God, through the mighty operation of his holy power. Amen.

I read in the Evangeliſts, of certain Godly Women, that miniſtred unto Chriſt; following him in the days of his paſſion, and never forſook him, but being dead in his Grave, brought Oyl to anoint him, until that he had ſhewed himſelf unto them after his reſurrection, and bidden them ſhew unto his Diſciples, which at his paſſion were diſperſed, and tell them that he was riſen, and that they ſhould ſee him in Galile. To whom I may juſtly compare you (my loving Siſters in Chriſt) who of late have ſeen him ſuffer in his members, and have miniſtred to their neceſſity, anointing them with the comfortable Oyl of your charitable aſſiſtance, even to the death: and now ſince ye have ſeen Chriſt to live in the aſhes of them, whom the tyrants have ſlain, he willed you to go away upon juſt occaſion offered you, and to declare to our diſperſed Brethren and Siſters, that he is riſen, and liveth in his elect members in England, and by death doth overcome infidelity, and that they ſhall ſee him in Galile, which is by forſaking this World, and by a faithful deſire to paſs out of this World by thoſe ways, which he with his holy Martyrs hath gone on before.

Wholeſom and Godly precepts of Life.

God therefore (intire Siſters) direct your way, as he did Abraham and Tobias unto a ſtrange Land: God give you health both of Body and Soul, that ye may go from vertue to vertue, and grow from ſtrength to ſtrength, until ye may ſee face to face the God of Sion in his holy hill, with the innumerable company of his bleſſed Martyrs and Saints. Let there be continual aſcenſions unto Heaven in your hearts. Let there be no decreaſe of any vertue, which is already planted in you. Be as the light of the juſt, ſuch as Solomon ſaith, increaſeth to the perfect day, of the Lord. Let the ſtrength of God be commended in your weak Veſſels, as it is. Be examples of Faith and ſobriety, to all that ye ſhall come in company withal. Let your Godly converſation ſpeak where your Tongue may not, in the Congregation. Be ſwift to hear, and ſlow to ſpeak, after the Counſel of Saint James. Be not curious about other Mens doings, but be occupied in Prayer, and continual meditation, with reverent talking of the Word of God, without contentions among the Saints. Let your Faith ſhine in a ſtrange Countrey, as it hath done in your own, that your Father which is in Heaven, may be glorified by you to the end.

This farewel I ſend you, not as a thing needful (which know already what your duty is, and be deſirous to perform the ſame) but as one that would have you underſtand that he is mindful of your Godly Converſation, whereof he hath had good experience, and therefore writeth this to be a perpetual memorial betwixt you and him, until our meeting together before God, where we ſhall joy that we have here lovingly put one another in memory of our duty to perform it.

Farewel again mine own Bowels in Chriſt, and take me with you whereſoever you go, and leave your ſelves with me, that in Spirit we may be preſent one with another. Commend me to the whole Congregation of Chriſt, willing them not to leave their Country without witneſs of the Goſpel, after that we all be ſlain, which already be ſtalled up and appointed to the ſlaughter, and in the mean ſeaſon to pray earneſtly for our conſtancy, that Chriſt may be glorified in us and in them, both by Life and Death. Farewel in the Lord.

Yours for ever, John Philpot.

of Life, he ſanctifie you with daily increaſe of Vertue and Faith by his Holy Spirit, that you may appear a veſſel of Sanctification, in the midſt of this wicked & perverſe Generation, to the laud and praiſe of the Goſpel. Amen.

I have occaſion (mine own dear Siſter) to praiſe God in you for two cauſes: the one, that to your ability you are ready to ſhew your ſelf a natural loving Siſter to me your poor afflicted Brother, as by your gentle tokens you have eſtſoons teſtified being abſent, and alſo preſently viſiting me; which well declareth that you be a very natural Siſter indeed, and to be praiſed in this behalf. But in the other, that you be alſo a Siſter to me in Faith after Chriſts Goſpel, I am occaſioned to thank God ſo much the more, how much the one excelleth the other, and the ſpiritual conſanguinity is more perdurable then that which is of Fleſh and Blood, and is a worker of that which is by nature: for commonly ſuch as be ungodly, be unnatural, and only lovers of themſelves, as daily experience teacheth us. The living Lord, which through the incorruptible ſeed of his word hath begotten you to be my leige Siſter, give you Grace ſo to grow in that Generation, that you may increaſe to a perfect Age in the Lord, to be my Siſter with Chriſt for ever.

Spiritual conſanguinity and natural compared.

Look therefore that you continue a Faithful Siſter as you are called and are Godly entered, not only to me, but to all the Church of Chriſt, yea to Chriſt himſelf, who voucheth you in this your unfained Faith, worthy to be his Siſter. Conſider this dignity to ſurmount all the vain dignities of the World, and let it accordingly prevail more with you then all Earthly delights: For thereby you are called to an equal proportion of the Everlaſting Inheritance of Chriſt, if now in no wiſe you do ſhew your ſelf an unnatural Siſter to him in forſaking him in trouble, which I truſt you will never for any kind of Worldly reſpect do. You are under dangerous temptations to be turned from that natural love you owe unto Chriſt, and you ſhall be tried with Gods people through a ſieve of great affliction: for ſo Satan deſireth us to be ſifted, that through fear of ſharp troubles we might fall from the ſtableneſs of our Faith, and ſo be deprived of that honour, joy, and reward, which is prepared for ſuch as continue Faithful Brothers and Siſters in the Lords Covenant to the end. Therefore the Wiſe Man in the Book of Eccleſiaſticus, biddeth them that come to the ſervice of the Lord, To prepare themſelves to ſuffer temptations.

The ſieve of afflictions. Luke 22.

Eccleſ. 2.

Since then that for the Glory of God and our Faith, we are called now to abide the brunt of them, and that when our adverſary hath done all that he can, yet we may be ſtable and ſtand; this Chriſt our firſt begotten Brother looketh for at our hands, and all our Brethren and Siſters in Heaven deſire to ſee our Faith through afflictions to be perfect, that we might fulfill their number: and the Univerſal Church here militant, rejoyceth at our conſtancy, all whom by the contrary we ſhould make ſorry, to the danger of the loſs both of Body and Soul. Fear not therefore, whatſoever be threatned of the wicked World; prepare your back, and ſee it be ready to carry Chriſts Croſs. And if you ſee any outwardneſs in you (as the Fleſh is continually repugnant to the Will of God) ask with Faithful Prayer, that the good Spirit of God may lead your Sinful Fleſh whither it would not: for if we will dwell in the Fleſh and follow the Counſel thereof, we ſhall never do the Will of God, neither work that tendeth to our Salvation.

Chriſt our firſt born Brother.

A Chriſtian Mans Back ſhould always bereadie to bear Chriſts Croſs.

You are at this preſent in the confines and Borders of Babylon, where you are in danger to drink of the Whores Cup, unleſs you be vigilant in Prayer. Take heed the Serpent ſeduce you not from the ſimplicity of your Faith, as he did our firſt Mother Eve. Let not Worldly fellowſhip make you partaker of iniquity. He that toucheth Tar, cannot but be defiled thereby. With ſuch as be perverſe, a Man ſhall ſoon be perverted; with the holy you ſhall be holy. Therefore ſay continually with the Prophet David, Pſalm 35. Unto the Saints that be on the Earth, all my will is on them. You have been ſanctified and made pure through the truth; take heed you be not unholied and defiled, leſt the laſt be worſe then the firſt. I write not this becauſe I ſtand in any doubt of your ſincere continuance, of the which I have had ſo good experience. But becauſe the days be evil, and in the ſame it is the duty of every of us to exhort and ſtir up one another; I am bold to put you (my good Siſter) in remembrance of that which doth not a little comfort me to remember; in my troubles and daily temptations. Wherefore I doubt not, you will take that in good part which cometh from your Brother both in Spirit and Body, who tendreth your Salvation as earneſtly as his own, that we might joy together eternally with ſuch joy as the world ſhall never be able to take from us. Thanks be unto God, you have begun to run a good and a great time well in the ways of the Lord: Run out the race to the end, which you have begun, and then ſhall you receive the Crown of Glory. None ſhall be Crowned, but ſuch as lawfully ſtrive. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good, and the Lord ſhall make you one of thoſe Faithful Virgins that ſhall follow the Lamb whereſoever he goeth; the which Chriſt grant both you & me, Amen.

Commend me to all them that love me in the Lord unfainedly. God increaſe our Faith, and give us never to be aſhamed of his Goſpel. That ſame requeſt which I have made to my Brother Thomas, I make alſo to you, deſiring you by all means you can to accompliſh my requeſt, that my ſureties might be ſatisfied with that is mine own, to the contentation of my mind, which cannot be quiet until they be diſcharged: therefore I pray you help to purchaſe quietneſs, that I might depart out of this World in peace. My diſſolution I look for daily, but the Lord knoweth how unworthy I am of ſo high an honour, as to die for the teſtimony of his truth. Pray that God would vouchſafe to make me worthy, as he hath done, of long Impriſonment, for the which his name be praiſed for ever. Pray and look for the coming of the Lord, whoſe wrath is great over us, and I will pray for you as long as I live. The 9. of July in the Kings Bench.

Another Letter of John Philpot to certain Godly Brethren.

Another Letter of M. Philpot containing Godly exhortations.

THe Grace of God the Father, and the peace of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt his eternal Son, and the conſolation of the Holy Ghoſt our comforter, ſtrengthen your hearts, and comfort your minds, that you may rejoyce, and live in the truth of Chriſts Goſpel to the end, Amen.

He commendeth their Faithful zeal to Gods Word.

I do much rejoyce, dearly beloved in the Lord, to hear of your conſtant Faith in the Word of God, which you have ſo purely received; which do not with the worldlings decline from the purity thereof, albeit you ſuffer grief and trouble thereby; for the which I praiſe God moſt heartily: and the Lord of all ſtrength, who hath begun this good work in you, make it perfect to the end, as I doubt not but he will, for the Faithful zeal ye have to his truth and to his afflicted Church. Therefore that ye may the better ſtand and bear the brunt of many temptations, which you are all like to be aſſaulted withal in theſe wicked and ſtormy days; I thought it good, as it is the duty of one Chriſtian Man to exhort another in the time of trouble, to put you in remembrance thereof, and to will you with the Wiſe Man to prepare your ſelves to temptations; and to beware that ye, which yet do ſtand by the goodneſs of God, may not fall from your lively knowledge and hope. It is an eaſie thing to begin to do well, but to continue out in well doing, is the only property of the Children of God, and ſuch as aſſuredly ſhall be ſaved. For ſo ſaith our Saviour in his Goſpel, Bleſſed are they that perſevere to the end.

He exhorteth them to continue and to ſtand faſt.

Let not therefore this certainty of your Salvation, which is continuance in the ſincerity of Faith, ſlide from you. Eſteem it more then all the riches and pleaſures of this World, for it is the moſt acceptable treaſure of eternal life. This is that precious ſtone, for the which the wiſe Merchant Man, after the Goſpel, doth ſell all that he hath, and buyeth the ſame. God in the 3. of the Apocal. doth ſignifie to the Church, that there ſhall come a time of temptation upon the whole World, to try the dwellers on the earth. From the danger of the which temptation all ſuch ſhall be delivered as obſerve his word: which word there is called the word of patience; to give us to underſtand that we muſt be ready to ſuffer all kind of injuries and ſlanders for the profeſſion thereof.

Saint Peter telleth us now we are afflicted with divers assays, as it is need it should so be, That the trial of our Faith being much more precious then Gold that perisheth, and yet is tried by fire, might redound to the laud, Glory, and honour of Jesus Christ. S. Paul to the Hebrews sheweth us, that Christ our Saviour was in his humanity made perfect by afflictions, that we being called to perfection in him, might more willingly sustain the troubles of the World, by the which God giveth all them that be exercised in the same for his sake, his holiness. And in the 12. Chapter of the said Epistle is written, My Son, refuse not the correction of the Lord, nor shrink when thou art rebuked of him: for the Lord doth chastise every Son whom he receiveth, &c. Christ in the Gospel of Saint John biddeth his Disciples to look after afflictions, saying, In the World ye shall have trouble, but in me ye shall have joy. And therefore in the midst of their trouble, in the 21. of Saint Luke he biddeth them look up and lift up their heads, for your redemption, saith he, is at hand. And in the 22. he saith to all such as be afflicted for him, you are those that have abidden with me in my temptations, and therefore I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed for me, to eat and drink upon my Table in my Kingdom.

Heb. 2.

John 16.

Luke 21.

Luke 22.

The fruit that cometh by bearing of the Cross.

Oh how glorious be the Crosses of Christ, which bring the bearers of them unto so blessed an end! Shall we not be glad to be partakers of such shame as may bring us to so high a dignity? God open our eyes to see all things as they be, and to judge uprightly. Then doubtless we would think with Moses, that it is better to be afflicted with the people of God, then to be counted the King of Egypts Son. Then should we joyfully say with David in all our adversities and troubles, It is good (O Lord) thou hast brought me low, to the end I might learn thy righteousness. Therefore S. Paul would not glory in any other thing of the World, but in the Cross of Christ, and in other his infirmities: We have the Commandment of Christ, daily to take up his Cross and follow him. We have the Godly ensambles of all his Apostles and Holy Martyrs, which with great joy and exultation have suffered the loss of all Lands, Goods, and Life, for the hope of a better reward: which is laid up for all those in Heaven, that unfainedly cleave to the Gospel, and never be ashamed thereof.

The delights of the World nothing comparable to them that are to come.

Great is the felicity of the World to the outward Man, and very pleasant are the transitory delights thereof: but the reward of the righteous after the Word of God, doth incomparably excel them all, insomuch that S. Paul to the Romans doth plainly affirm, that all the tribulations of this World cannot deserve that Glory which shall be shewed unto us.

Let us therefore (good Brethren and Sisters) be merry and glad in these troublesome days, the which be sent of God to declare our Faith, and to bring us to the end and fruition of that which we hope for. If we would enter into the Lords Sanctuary, and behold what is prepared for us, we could not but desire the Lord to hast the day of our death, in the which we might set forth by true Confession his Glory. Neither should we be afraid to meet our adversaries, which so earnestly seek our spoil and death, as Christ did Judas and that wicked rout, which came to apprehend him, saying; I am he whom ye seek. It is commanded us by the Gospel, not to fear them that kill the Body, but to fear God, who can cast both Body and Soul into Hell-Fire. So much we are bound to observe this Commandment as any other which God hath given us. The Lord increase our Faith, that we fear God more than Man. The Lord give us such love towards him and his truth, that we may be content to forsake all and follow him. Now will it appear what we love best; for to that we love, we will stick. There is none worthy to be counted a Christian, except he can find in his heart for Christs sake, if the confession of his truth doth require it, to renounce all which he hath and follow him; and in so doing he gaineth an hundred fold more in this Life (as our Saviour said to Peter) and hereafter is assured of eternal Life. Behold, I pray you, what he loseth which in this Life receiveth an hundred for one, with assurance of eternal Life. O happy Exchange! Perchance your outward Man will say; If I were sure of this great recompence here, I could be glad to forsake all; But where is this hundred fold in this Life to be found? yes truly; for in stead of the Worldly Riches which thou dost forsake, which be but temporal, thou hast found the everlasting Riches of Heaven, which be glory, honour, and praise, both before God, Angels, and Men; and for an Earthly habitation, hast an eternal mansion with Christ in Heaven; for even now thou art of the City and Household of the Saints with God, as it is verified in the fourth to the Philippians. For Worldly peace, which can last but a while, thou dost possess the peace of God, which passeth all understanding; and for the loss of a few friends, thou art made a fellow of the innumerable company of Heaven, and a perpetual friend of all those that have died in the Lord, from the beginning of the World. Is not this more then an hundred fold? Is not the peace of God which we in this World have through Faithful imitation of Christ (which the World cannot take from us) ten thousand fold more, then those things that most highly be esteemed in the World, without the peace of God? All the peace of the World is no peace, but a meer anguish and a gnawing fury of Hell: As of late God hath set example before our eyes, to teach us how horrible an evil it is to forsake the peace of Christs truth, which breedeth a worm in conscience that never shall rest.

Consideration of joys to come.

The note of a true Christian.

Anno 1555.

How a Christian Man gaineth an hundred fold in this Life. Phil. 4.

A comparison between the loss and gain that cometh by following of Christ.

Peace with God a thing incomparable. The lack of Gods peace a thing most miserable.

Oh that we would weigh this with indifferent ballances. Then should we not be dismayed of this troublous time, neither sorrow after a Worldly manner, for the loss which we are now like to sustain, as the weak faithless persons do, which love their goods more then God, and the things visible above those which be invisible: but rather would heartily rejoyce and be thankful, that it pleased God to call us to be Souldiers in his cause against the works of Hypocrisie, and to make us like unto our Saviour Christ in suffering, whereby we may assure our selves of his Eternal Glory: For blessed are they, saith Christ, that suffer persecution for righteousness sake. And as S. Paul witnesseth to Timothy; If we die with Christ, we shall live with Christ; and if we deny him, he will deny us.

2 Tim. 2.

O that we would enter into the veil of Gods promises. Then should we with S. Paul to the Philippians, reject all, and count all things but for dross, so that we may gain Christ. God which is the lightner of all darkness, and putter away of all blindness, anoint our eyes with the true eyesalve, that we might behold his glory, and our eternal felicity, which is hidden with Christ, and prepared for us that do abide in his Testament: for blessed is that servant, whom the Master when he cometh (as Christ said) doth find faithful. Let us therefore watch and pray one for another, that we yield not in any point of our Religion to the Antichristian Synagogue, and that we be not overthrown of these temptations. Stand therefore, and be no cowards in the cause of your salvation; for his Spirit that is in us, is stronger then he which in the World doth now rage against us. Let us not put out the Spirit of God from us, by whose might we shall overcome our enemies, and then death shall be as great a gain to us as it was to the Blessed Apostle Saint Paul. Why then do ye mourn? Why do ye weep? why be ye so careful; as though God hath forsaken you? he is never more present with us, then when we be in trouble, if we do not forsake him. We are in his hands, and no Body can do us any injury or wrong without his good will and pleasure. He hath commanded his Angels to keep us, that we stumble not at a stone without his divine providence. The Devil cannot hurt any of us, and much less any of his Ministers, without the good will of our eternal Father.

Philip. 3.

He exhorteth to be joyful in afflictions.

Therefore let us be of good comfort, and continually give thanks unto God for our estate, whatsoever it be; for if we murmure against the same, we murmure against God, who sendeth the same: which if we do, we kick but against the prick, and provoke more the wrath of God against us; which by patient suffering, otherwise would sooner be turned into our favour through Faithful Prayer.

To be patient, and not to murmure in affliction.

I beseech you with Saint Paul, to give your Bodies pure and holy Sacrifices unto God. He hath given us Bodies to bestow unto his glory, and not after our own concupiscence. If many years God hath suffered us to use our Bodies, which be his Temples, after the lust of the Flesh, in vain delights, not according to his glory; is it not our duty

duty in the latter end of our life, the more willingly to yield unto Gods glory our bodies, with all that we have, in demonſtration of true repentance of that we have evil ſpent before? Cannot the example of the bleſſed man Job horribly afflicted, cauſe us to ſay? The Lord hath given it, the Lord hath taken it: bleſſed be the name of the Lord. Even as it hath pleaſed the Lord, ſo is it come to paſs: If we caſt our whole care likewiſe upon God, he will turn our miſery into felicity, as well as he did to Job. God tempteth us now as he did our Father Abraham, commanding him to ſlay his Son Iſaac in Sacrifice to him; which Iſaac by interpretation doth ſignifie mirth and joy. Who by his obedience preſerved Iſaac unto long life, and offered in his ſtead a Ram that was tied by the horns in the brambles. Semblably we are all commanded to Sacrifice unto God our Iſaac, which is our joy and conſolation: the which if we be ready to do, as Abraham was, our joy ſhall not periſh, but live, and be increaſed, although our Ram be ſacrificed for our Iſaac: which doth ſignifie that the pride and concupiſcence of our fleſh intangled through ſin, with the cares of this ſtinging world, muſt be mortified for the preſervation and perfect augmentation of our mirth and joy, which is ſealed up for us in Chriſt.

Job 1.

Geneſ. 22.

How to ſacrifice our Iſaac to God.

And to withſtand theſe preſent temptations wherewithal we are now encombred, ye cannot have a better remedy then to ſet before your eyes how our Saviour Chriſt overcame them in the deſart, and to follow his enſample? that if the Devil himſelf or any other by him, willeth you to make ſtones Bread, that is, to take ſuch a worldly wiſe way, that you may have your fair houſes, Lands and Goods to live on ſtill; ye muſt ſay, that man liveth not only by Bread, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God,

Remedies againſt the temptations of the Devil and the world.

Again, if the Devil councelleth you to caſt your ſelves down to the earth, as to revoke your ſincere belief and godly converſation, and to be conformable to the Learned men of the world, pretending that God will be well enough content therewith; ye muſt anſwer that it is written, that a man ſhall not tempt his Lord God.

Chriſts temptations myſtically applied.

Further, if the Devil offer you large promiſes of honour, dignity, and poſſeſſions, ſo that ye will worſhip Idols in his Synagogue, ye muſt ſay, Go behind me Satan, for it is otherwiſe written, that a man muſt worſhip his Lord God, and ſerve him only.

Finally, if your Mother, Brother, Siſter, Wife, Child, Kinſman, or Friend, do ſeek of you to do otherwiſe then the Word of God hath taught you, ye muſt ſay with Chriſt, that they are your Mothers, Brothers, Siſters, Wives, Children, Kinſmen, which do the will of God the Father. To the which will the Lord for his mercy conform us all unfainedly to the end, Amen,

Your loving and faithful Brother in Chriſt, in Captivity, John Philpot, Anno 1555.

To his Friend and faithful Brother in the Lord, Maſter Robert Harrington

Another Letter of Jo. Philpot to M. Harrington, his Friend.

GEntle Mr. Harrington, I cannot tell what condign thanks I may give unto God for you, in reſpect of the great gentleneſs and pain which you have taken for the relief of me and of other our afflicted Brethren in Chriſt. God be praiſed for his mercy, whoſe loving providence we have ſeen towards us by ſuch faithful ſtewards as you have been towards a great many Bleſſed be you of God for the loving care which you have taken for his poor flock. God hath reſerved your reward of thanks in Heaven, and therefore I go not about to render you any, leſt I might ſeem to judge that you looked for that here, which is reſerved to a better place. I thank God for that I have found by your faithful and diligent induſtry, and God forgive me my unworthineſs for ſo great benefits. God give me grace to ſerve him faithfully, and to run out my race with joy. Glorious is the courſe of the Martyrs of Chriſt at this day. Never had the elect of God a better time for their glory than this is. Now may they be aſſured under the Croſs, that they are Chriſts Diſciples for ever.

Me think I ſee you deſiring to be under the ſame. The fleſh draweth back, but the Spirit ſaith, it muſt be brought whither it would not. Here is the victory of the World: here is true faith and everlaſting glory. Who is he which deſireth not to be found faithful to his Maſter? And now is the time that every faithful Servant of Chriſt hath juſt opportunity to ſhew himſelf a glorious Souldier in the Lords fight. Now do the Amalekites invade the true Iſraelites, that the Iſraelites might with ſpeed be glorified, I need not for want of underſtanding to admoniſh you hereof, but as a willing Souldier in Chriſt, to exhort you ſo to run as you may get the victory, and that ſpeedily with us. A man that is bid to a glorious feaſt, wiſheth his Friend to go with him, and be partaker thereof. God doth call me moſt unworthy, among other, to drink of the Bride-Cup of his Son, whereby we ſhall be made worthy (as many of our Brethren have been before us) to ſit at the right hand and at the left hand of Chriſt. O what unſpeakable condition is that? May any worldly thing ſtay us from the deſire thereof? Since we ſeek the Kingdom of God, why do we not apprehend it, being ſo near offered unto us?

Let us approach near unto God, and God will draw near unto us. God draw us after him, that we may all run after the ſavour of his ſweet ointments. Chriſt anoint us, that we may be ſuppled in theſe evil days to run lightly unto the glory of the Lord. Shame, impriſonment, loſs of goods, and ſhedding of our Blood, be the juſt price which we muſt willingly beſtow for the ſame. Wherefore (dearly Beloved in the Lord) let not the great charges keep you back from buying this glory: for the reward is ten thouſand fold greater then the price.

Reward greater than the price. Godly Matrimony how to be uſed.

That you have married a wife, whom God bleſs, I cannot excuſe you from this Mart, but you muſt bring your wife for an uſury to the Lord, whoſe pleaſure is in godly yoke-fellows. I wiſh you to be as I am, except theſe horrible bands, but yet moſt comfortable to the Spirit, aſſuring you that we are made worthy through Chriſt of the Kingdom for the which we ſuffer. Praiſed be the Lord for the affliction which we ſuffer, and he give us ſtrength to continue to the end.

Commend me to Mr. Heath, and tell him that I would wiſh him with me, to prove how apt he is to carry the Croſs of Chriſt. I pray for his continuance in Chriſt, as for mine own. commend me to his wife, and to Mrs. Hall, certifying them that I am brought to the gates of Hell, that I might never enter into the ſame, but be raiſed up from Hell to Heaven, through the word that ſanctifieth us. Commend me to Mr. Elſing and his wife, and thank them that they remembred to provide me ſome eaſe in Priſon, and tell them that though my Lords Cole-houſe be but very black, yet it is more to be deſired of the faithful, than the Queens Palace. God make her a joyful Mother, and preſerve them both to the comfort of Gods People. Thus for this time farewel dear Brother. Written in poſt-haſt becauſe of ſtrait keeping.

This day I look to be called before the Commiſſioners again. Pray (dear Brother) for the Spirit of wiſdom to remain with me. Commend me to your wife, and I thank you both for your tokens. Your token I have ſent to your wife; and my Token unto you, is my faithful heart with this Letter. Commend me to all my Friends, and tell them, I thank God I am cheerful in Chriſt, wiſhing them to fear God more then man, and to learn to deſpiſe earneſtly the vanities of this World; deſiring you all to pray for me, that I may end my journey with fidelity, Amen.

John Philpot.

Here followeth another Letter of Mr. Philpot to the Lady Vane: which becauſe for the length I could not wholly inſert, I have excerpted certain ſpecialties thereout as followeth.

THe principal Spirit of God the Father, given unto us by Chriſt our merciful Saviour, confirm, ſtrengthen, and ſtabliſh you in the true knowledge of the Goſpel, that your faithful heart (worſhipful and dear Siſter in the Lord) may attain and taſt with all the Saints what is the height, the depth, the length, and the breadth of the ſweet Croſs of Chriſt, Amen, &c.

Oh, happy are you amongſt all other women, that have found this precious Stone which is hidden in the Goſpel; for the which we ought to ſell all other things, and to purchaſe the ſame. Oh happy woman, whoſe heart God hath moved and inlarged to be in the profeſſion thereof. Others ſeek worldly goods, honours, and delights; but you ſeek with a good underſtanding to ſerve God in Spirit and verity. This is the gate that leadeth to Heaven, this is your portion for ever. By this you ſhall ſee God face to face (which ſight is unſpeakable joy) and by this ſhall ye ſee a full ſight of all the beautiful Heavenly Powers, and of all the celeſtial Paradiſe. By this ſhall you know them that you never knew, and be joyous and glad with thoſe which you have known here in God, world without end, &c.

He bewaileth the ſtate of England. Plagues propheſied to England though the Goſpel be reſtored again.

Ah, I lament the infidelity of England, that after ſo great light is ſtept into ſo huge darkneſs again. The Servant that knoweth his maſters will and doth it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes. Ah, great be the plagues that hang over England, yea though the Goſpel ſhould be reſtored again. Happy ſhall that perſon be whom the Lord ſhall take out of this world, not to ſee them. Ah the great perjury which men have run into ſo wilfully againſt God by receiving Antichriſt again and his wicked Laws? which do threaten a great ruine unto England. Oh that the Lord would turn his juſt judgments upon the Authors of the truce breaking between God and us, that they might be brought low (as Nabuchadonoſor was) that his People might be delivered, and his glory exalted. God grant that that good luck which you hope ſhortly to come upon the houſe of God, be a true propheſie, and not a well wiſhing only. Ah Lord, take away thy heavy hand from us, and ſtretch it out upon thine enemies thoſe hypocrites, as thou haſt begun, that they may be confounded. O let not the weak periſh for want of knowledge through our ſin. Although thou kill us, yet will we put our truſt in thee.

Good luck foreſhewed in reſtoring again the Goſpel.

Thus (dear heart) you teach me to pray with you in writing. God hear your prayers, and give us the Spirit of effectual Prayer, to pour out our hearts continually together before God, that we may find mercy both for our ſelves, and for our afflicted Brethren and Siſters. I cannot but praiſe God in you, for that pitiful heart that taketh other folks calamities to heart, as your own. Bleſſed be they that mourn, for ſuch ſhall be comforted. God wipe away all tears from your pitiful eyes, and ſorrow from your merciful heart, that you may (as doubtleſs you ſhall do ſhortly) rejoyce with his elect for ever. You have ſo armed me to the Lords battle both inwardly and outwardly, that except I be a very Coward, I cannot faint, but overcome by death. You have appointed me to ſo good and gracious a General of the field, to ſo victorious a Captain, and to ſo favourable a Marſhall, that if I ſhould not go on luſtily, there were no ſpectacle of heavenly manhood in me. I will preſent your Coat-armour before my Captain, and in the ſame I truſt by him to overcome. The Scarf I deſire as an outward ſign to ſhew our enemies, who ſee not our glorious end, neither what God worketh inwardly in us, through the blindneſs of their hearts, that they perſecute Chriſts Croſs in us, whereby he hath ſealed up the Truth of his Goſpel by his death unto us, that we by our death (if need be) might confirm the ſame, and never be aſhamed whatſoever torment we do ſuffer for his Names ſake; and our weak Brethren ſeeing the ſame might be more incouraged to take up Chriſts Croſs, and to follow him. God give us grace to do all things to his glory, Amen, &c.

Philpots Scarf.

The world wondreth how we can be merry in ſuch extreme miſery, but our God is Omnipotent, which turneth miſery into felicity. Believe me (dear Siſter) there is no ſuch joy in the world as the People of Chriſt have under the Croſs. I ſpeak by experience; therefore believe me, and fear nothing that the world can do unto you. For when they impriſon our bodies, they ſet our Souls at liberty with God. When they caſt us down, they lift us up; yea, when they kill us, then do they bring us to everlaſting life. And what greater glory can there be, then to be at conformity with Chriſt? which afflictions do work in us.

Experience of Gods comfort in the time of affliction. Perſecutors when they priſon mens Bodies, they ſet their Souls at liberty.

God open our eyes to ſee more and more the glory of God in the Croſs of Jeſus Chriſt, and make us worthy partakers of the ſame. Let us rejoyce in nothing with St Paul but in the Croſs of Jeſus Chriſt, by whom the world is crucified unto us, and we to the world. The Croſs of Chriſt be our ſtandard to fight under for ever. Anno 1556.

Whiles I am thus talking with you of our common conſolation, I forget how I trouble you with my rude and unordinate tediouſneſs: but you muſt impute it to love which cannot quickly depart from them whom he loveth, but deſireth to pour himſelf into their boſoms.

Therefore though your fleſh would be offended (as it might juſtly be) at ſuch rudeneſs, yet your Spirit will ſay nay, which taketh all things in good part that cometh of love. And now I am departing yet will I take my leave ere I go, and would fain ſpeak ſomewhat that might declare my ſincere love to you for ever: Farewel O elect veſſel of the Lord, to the comfort of his afflicted flock, farewel on earth, whom in Heaven I am ſure I ſhall not forget. Farewel under the Croſs moſt joyfully and until we meet, always remember what Chriſt ſaith; Be of good cheer, for I have overcome the world, &c.

God pour his Spirit abundantly upon you, mine own dear bowels in Chriſt, until you may come to ſee the God of all Gods with his elect in the everlaſting Sion. I ſend to you the kiſs of Peace, with the which I do moſt entirely take my leave of you at this preſent. It is neceſſary we depart hence, or elſe we could not be glorified. Your heart is heavy becauſe I ſay I muſt depart from you: It is the calling of the merciful Father, wherewithal you are content, and ſo am I. Be of good comfort, hold out your buckler of Faith: for by the ſtrength thereof we ſhall ſhortly meet in eternal glory; to the which Chriſt bring both us Amen, Amen. The 10. of December. 1555.

Death why ſhould I fear thee? ſince thou canſt not hurt me, but rid me from miſery unto eternal glory.

Dead to the world, and living to Chriſt, your own Brother, ſealed up in the verity of the Goſpel for ever.

John Philpot

Another Letter of Mr. Philpot written to the ſame Lady, being a great ſupporter of him.

Another Letter of Mr. Philpot to a certain godly Lady.

I Cannot but moſt heartily give God thanks for theſe his gifts in you, whoſe brightneſs many beholding that are weak, are much encouraged to ſeek God likewiſe, and to cleave to him, having the enſample of ſo faithful and conſtant a Gentlewoman before their eyes. If the Queen of the South ſhall riſe with the men of Chriſts generation, and condemn them, for that ſhe came from the end of the world to hear the wiſedom of Solomon? than ſhall your ſincere and godly converſation, thus ſhining in this dangerous time of the trial of Chriſts People (being a woman of worſhipful eſtate and wealthy condition) condemn in the latter day a great many of theſe faint-hearted Goſpellers, which ſo ſoon be gone back and turned from the truth, at the voice of a hand-maiden; ſeeing that neither the fear of impriſonment, neither the poſſeſſion of the world, (wherewithal you are ſufficiently indued above a great many) can ſeparate you from the love of the truth, which God hath revealed unto you. whereby it appeareth that the ſeed of Gods Word which was ſown in you, fell neither in the high way, neither among the thorns, neither upon the ſtones, but upon a good ground, which is bleſſed of God, and bringeth forth fruit with great affliction, an hundred fold to the glory of God, and the increaſe of his Church, &c.

Againſt faint hearted Goſpellers.

In conſideration whereof St. James biddeth us highly to rejoyce, whenſoever we fall into many temptations, knowing that it is but the trial of our Faith, that we might bring forth that excellent vertue Patience, by the which we are made like to our Redeemer Chriſt, with whom we here being like in ſuffering, aſſuredly ſhall hereafter be partakers of his eternal glory. Therefore St Paul ſaith; God forbid that I ſhould glory in any thing but in the Croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. I that am under the Croſs with you (thanks be given to God therefore) have felt in the ſame more true joy and conſolation, then ever I did by any benefit that God hath given me in my life before. For the more the world doth hate us, the nigher God is unto us, and there is no

Anno 1556.

no perfect joy but in God. Wherefore Christ said; In me ye shall have joy, but in the World affliction. Blessed be God which sendeth us this affliction, that we might perfectly joy in him. For this cause in the ripest time of iniquity, and in the most fervent season of persecution of the True Church, which Christ in the 21. of Luke prophesied to come, he willeth us to be of good cheer, and to lift up our heads, for our redemption is at hand.

John 16.

Luke 21.

Oh that the Lord would come and deliver us from this World, which is a vale of misery, unto his own Kingdom, where floweth perpetual joy and Consolation. And verily that is the true and onely joy which is conceived, not of the Creature, but of the Creator, the which when we do possess, no body can take it away from us. To the which joy all other joys being compared, are but mournings, all delights sorrow, all sweetness sowre, all beauty filth, and finally all other things that be counted pleasant, are tediousness. Your own self is better witness of this then I: Ask your self, with whom you are best acquainted. Doth not the Holy Ghost speak the same in your heart? Have you not perswaded your self this to be true, before I wrote thereof? For how should you being a Woman, and a young Gentlewoman, beautiful, and at your own liberty, have overcome this your frail kind and age, and despised your excellent beauty and estate, unless all those things which be subject to the senses had been counted of you vile, and little to be esteemed in comparison of those things which inwardly do comfort you to overcome the Flesh, the World, and the Devil?

Perfect joy considered.

Comparison between the joy in God and the joy in this World.

God increase your joy in all spiritual things, and stablish your hope to the day of eternal rest. You have forsaken darkness, and are entred into light, God grant the same may shine still in you, until the perfect day come of the Lord, in the which is all our Consolation. Here we must be darkned, that there we may appear as bright as the Sun in the face of the whole World, and of all them that now condemn us for our well-doing; whose Judges then we shall be, to their horrible grief, though now wrongfully they judge us. Pray heartily, and that often, that God once again for his Christs sake would be merciful to his afflicted Church in England. Faithful prayer is the onely remedy that we have against the fiery darts of the Devil, that be kindled against us. By prayer the Amalechites shall be overcome, and the roarings of the Lion, which seeketh still to devour us, shall be stopped and put to silence. The Lord stop Leviathans mouth, that he swallow not up Gods silly People, according to his expectation.

Gods Saints shall be as Judges against their Adversaries.

Praise the Lord for the faithful Testimony and Sacrifice which two of our Brethren of late have through fire rendred to the Truth of the Gospel, which now triumpheth by the death of godly Martyrs. The Lord is at had hand, therefore watch and pray. The last of May. 1555. Captive in the Kings Bench.

The Gospel triumpheth by the death of Martyrs.

Yours with heart in Christ,
John Philpot.

Another Letter of Mr. Philpot to the godly Lady Vane.

Another letter of Jo. Philpot to the Lady Vane.

GOd the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ increase in your godly heart the faith of the Gospel, which is your eternal inheritance, and the Holy Ghost comfort your Spirit with all Spiritual Consolation, to the day of the Lord, Amen.

Lady Vane a liberal benefactor to Gods Saints.

I cannot but praise God most highly and earnestly (my dear and faithful Lady) for the great and unfained love which you bear unto me in Christ, declared oftentimes, as well now as of late, by manifest and liberal tokens. Blessed be God that hath made you so worthy a member in his Kingdom. For it cannot be but such shall reap with abundance in time of reward, that here do sow so plenteously in well doing; Albeit I am most unworthy to receive any such benefit at your hands, as in respect of a pillar of Christs Church, which am scarce a shadow thereof. But the zeal of Christs Church in you wisheth me to be such a one as the time doth require. God fulfil your desire of me, that I may be found constant, and no wandring star. I am not worthy of the name of a Prophet, or of a Minister of Gods Word, for that I have (being letted by the iniquity of the time) little or nothing laboured therein. I am a friend of our common Spouse Jesus, and do rejoyce of the verity of his word; for the which (praised be his name) he hath counted me worthy to suffer: and indeed who that giveth a draught of water in the name of a Disciple (as Christ promised) shall not lose his reward. Therefore that your gentleness doth in the name of him, which I am not, the Lord recompence unto you in all his blessings, which he is accustomed to pour on them which love his flock unfainedly.

Mark 9.

Good Lady, you have to joy that the Kingdom of God is thus continually before your eyes, and that you are not ashamed of the bands of Christ, which you with his People in part do suffer. They may be assured of the glory everlasting, which here are not ashamed to take up the Cross of Christ, and to follow him. Here we must weep and lament, whiles the World laugheth and triumpheth over us; but our tears shall shortly be turned into unspeakable joy, and we shall eternally be merry together, when the World shall lament their infidelity without end, &c.

I would I were able to do any thing that might shew condign thanks for that sincere love you bear unto me in Christ: you adjure me (as it were) by your gentle letters to be bold on you in all my needs. I thank God which ceaseth not to provide for his, I lack nothing at this present, but onely hability to thank your faithful heart for your goodness towards me. I love you and not yours, as it is meet Christians to love one another in God; and your faith which I behold in you, is more worth unto me then all your possessions. And I think I shall not need long to be chargeable unto you, for that this week I look for Commissioners to sit on me, and my fellow-prisoners in prison, lest the Spirit of our breath might blow further abroad. The will of God be done. We are not so good as John the Baptist which was beheaded in prison. Darkness cannot abide the light. Therefore their doings must declare what they are. We are as sheep appointed for a sacrifice to the Lord. We must not fear the fire for our Lord is a consuming fire; which will put out the fierceness of raging torments from us. Be not afraid of them that can kill the body, but fear him that can cast both body and soul into hell fire. God forbid that we should rejoyce otherwise then in the Cross of Christ, and pray that he would make us worthy to suffer for his sake. God will have our faith tried and known; and therefore let us willingly humble our selves under the mighty hand of God, that he may gloriously lift us up in his good time. There is none perfectly faithful indeed till he can say with S. Paul, I am perswaded that neither death, neither life, neither angels, neither princes or powers, neither things present, neither things to come, neither highness, neither lowness, neither any other creature is able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. This faith God plant both in you and me unmovably. In this faith we have to rejoyce, and in none other.

A perfect christian man how he is known. Rom. 8.

All the tribulations of the World are not worthy of the eternal weight of glory which is prepared for them, that here do with patience abide the Cross. Wherefore let us be strong with the strength in him, that is able to make us strong, and lament the weakness, I might say the infidelity of our faint Gospellers. Christ whom we would pretend to have put upon us, is the strength of God, and how then may they be weak where Christ is? We have more to be glad, touching our selves, of this time, then we have had of any time before, in the which we have so ready away to go unto God, and so good occasion to shew our duty in glorifying his holy name. For if we be imprisoned in this cause, we are blessed. If we lose all that we have, we are blessed an hundred fold. If we die, we are blessed eternally; so that in suffering of persecutions, all is full of blessings. Be blessed therefore (O elect Lady) of God, with the blessed of God, and flee (as you do) the concupiscence of the World. Embrace that which is perfect, and joyfully look for the coming and Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. Thus desiring God to preserve you to his true peace, and to give you victory of that temptation which now is come to try our faith, Christ be with you, and bless you both in Body and Soul; and my prayer shall follow you whersoever you go, as I desire that yours may be with me. The last week I sent your beneficence to Oxford; I could not before have a Covenient

The time of tribulation better for a Christian then the time of joy.

Meſſenger. As ſoon as I have word, you ſhall be ſatisfied of your requeſt. Love me as you do, and the God of Love be with you. The 20. day of Auguſt.

By yours, with all his power in the Lord, John Philpot.

Another Letter full of ſpiritual Conſolation to the ſaid Lady.

Another Letter of Mr. Philpot to the ſame Lady.

THe mercy of God the Father, and the conſolation of the Holy Ghoſt through Jeſus Chriſt, be with you, and ſtrengthen you my dear Mother and Siſter in the Lord, in theſe dangerous days, to the Crown of eternal Glory, which is now offered to all faithful Souldiers in the Goſpel, Amen.

As your good Ladyſhip doth deſire to hear from me, ſo am I deſirous to write, as your gentleneſs and daily goodneſs bindeth me. But Satan of late hath letted me, who envying all good exerciſes which I have had and received by mine eaſie impriſonment in times paſt, hath brought me out of the Kings Bench into the Biſhop of Londons Cole-houſe, a dark and an ugly Priſon as any is about London, (but my dark Body of ſin hath well deſerved the ſame, and the Lord now hath brought me into outward darkneſs, that I might the more be lightened by him, as he is moſt preſent with his Children in the midſt of darkneſs,) where I cannot be ſuffered to have any Candle-light, neither Ink nor Paper, but by ſtealth. Wherefore I cannot write to you as I would, neither as my duty is. As Chriſt, my Maſter, was ſent from Annas to Caiaphas, ſo am I ſent from Wincheſter Dioceſs to London, I truſt to make a ſpeedy end of my courſe; God give me grace and patience to be a faithful follower of my Maſter. I have been already this Seven-night in his Cole-houſe, and have of late been four times called to mine Anſwer, but hitherto not called to Judgment which I do daily look for; but I fear they will prolong me, and try me by ſtrait Impriſonment a while, in the which Gods will be done.

Experience of Chriſt, comforting his Saints in their perſecution.

Pray (dear Lady) that my Faith faint not, which I praiſe God is preſently more lively with me than it hath been in times paſt. I taſt and feel the faithfulneſs of God in his promiſe, who hath promiſed to be with his in their trouble, and to deliver them. I thank the Lord, I am not alone, but have ſix other faithful Companions; who in our darkneſs do chearfully ſing hymns and praiſes unto God for his great goodneſs. We are ſo joyful, that I wiſh you part of my joy. For you that are ſo careful of my bodily relief, how can I but wiſh your ſpiritual conſolation, and that abundantly? Let not (dear Heart) my ſtrait Impriſonment any thing moleſt you: for it hath added and daily doth unto my joy; but rather be glad and thankful unto God with me, that it hath pleaſed him to make me, moſt wretched ſinner, worthy to ſuffer any thing for his ſake. Hitherto we have not reſiſted unto blood. God make us never to count our blood more precious in our eyes than his Truth.

Ah, my dear Siſter, I thank you again for the laſt Letter you ſent me; it is a ſingular comfort unto me, as oft as I read the ſame. I have it in my boſom, and will carry the ſame even to the Stake with me, in witneſs that Chriſt hath ſo conſtant and faithful a Lady in England. God ſuccour and keep that ſpirit in you; for it is the very Spirit of Adoption of the Child of God. Such chearful and holy Spirits under the Croſs be acceptable Sacrifices in the ſight of God; for Chriſt came to caſt fire into the Earth, and looketh that it ſhould be kindled. Be you fervent in ſpirit in our Chriſts cauſe, as you have begun, for that is the principal ſpirit wherewithal David deſired to be confirmed. O, how do I rejoyce, your Ladiſhip to go arm in arm with me unto Chriſt, or rather before me? I cannot but joy of ſuch a worſhipful Fellow. Me thinketh I ſee you to mourn, and deſire to be looſed out of the earthly and frail habitacle of this Body. O, how amiable and pleaſant is it to dwell in the Lords Tabernacle? Our Chriſt and his heavenly company look for us; let us haſt and run thereto, for behold the Lord is ready to embrace us. Mine own bowels in the Lord, be merry in the Lord with your afflicted Brother, who daily offereth your merciful alms, which moſt unworthily I do receive ſtill of you, unto the Lord. But now (dear Mother) you need not to burthen ſo much your ſelf (as my laſt Letters did ſignifie) for that my chargable Impriſonment is cut off, and a little now ſerveth me; wherefore I pray you ſend no more until I ſend to you, for I have ſufficient and abound. Gods peace be with you for ever. Out of my Lord of Londons Cole-houſe, the laſt of October.

Your own, John Philpot.

Another Letter of Mr. Philpot to the ſaid Lady, wherein partly he complaineth of the diſſimulation and perjury of Engliſhmen, falling again to the Pope, and partly he expreſſeth his joy in his afflictions.

Another Letter of M. Philpot. By this Senacherib he meaneth the death of the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

I Cannot but joy with you (my heartily Beloved in Chriſt) of the fall of Senacherib: ſince it is to the glory of God, and to the conſolation of his Church, to ſee the fall of their enemies before their face, according as it is written, The juſt ſhall rejoyce, when he ſeeth the vengeance of the wicked. God make this your joy perfect; for as concerning my ſelf, I count not to ſee thoſe good days whereof you have a glimmering in this life. For although the Cockatrice be dead, yet his peſtilent Chickens, with the Whore of Babylon, ſtill liveth. But a great hope there is of their ſhort confuſion, becauſe God doth not proſper their doings according to their expectation. Moſt happy ſhall he be, whom the Lord ſhall ſooneſt take out of this life, that he may not ſee the plagues which the manifeſt perjury, and the manifold Idolatry and deteſtable diſſimulation, and that of ſuch as do know the Truth, do threaten to come.

The Lord is juſt, and all unrighteouſneſs diſpleaſeth him, and either here or elſe in another world he will puniſh this groſs Infidelity of the world: but his elect, and ſuch as he loveth, will he puniſh here, that they ſhould not be condemned hereafter with the world eternally: we have nothing ſo much to rejoyce in, as in the Croſs of Jeſus Chriſt, and in that we are partakers of his afflictions, which be the earneſt-peny of that eternal Kingdom, which he upon the Croſs for us hath purchaſed. For as Paul his faithful witneſs ſaith, If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall reign with him. If we die with him, we ſhall live with him.

Wherefore (mine own dear Bowels) praiſe God with me moſt intirely, that it hath pleaſed him now mercifully to viſit the ſins of my youth, and my huge unthankfulneſs, and by the ſame doth give me much conſolation, that he aſſureth me of his great goodneſs and mercy, and turneth his Fatherly caſtigation into my Crown of glory. O good God! what am I on whom he ſhould ſhew this great mercy? To him that is immortal, inviſible, and only wiſe, be all honour, praiſe, and glory therefore, Amen.

He expreſſeth the great joy which Gods Priſoners feel in their ſufferings.

This is the day that the Lord hath made, let us rejoyce and be glad in the ſame. This is the way, though it be narrow, which is full of the Peace of God, and leadeth to eternal Bliſs. O how my heart leapeth for joy, that I am ſo near the apprehenſion thereof! God forgive me mine unthankfulneſs and unworthineſs of ſo great glory. The Swords which pierced Maries heart in the Paſſion of our Saviour, which daily alſo go through your faithful heart, be more glorious and to be deſired than the golden Scepters of this World. O bleſſed be they that mourn in this world to God ward, for they ſhall eternally be comforted! God make my ſtony heart to mourn more than it doth. I have ſo much joy of the reward that is prepared for me moſt wretched Sinner, that though I be in place of darkneſs and mourning, yet I cannot lament, but both night and day am ſo joyful, as though I were under no Croſs at all: yea, in all the days of my life I was never ſo merry, the Name of the Lord be praiſed therefore for ever and ever, and he pardon mine unthankfulneſs. Our enemies do fret, fume, and gnaſh their Teeth to ſee and hear that we, under this grievous affliction in the world, can be ſo merry. We are of them counted as deſperate perſons, for the certain hope and feeling which we have of our everlaſting ſalvation: and it is no marvel, for the worldly men cannot perceive the things of God, it is meer fooliſhneſs and abomination to them.

John Philpot never ſo merry in all his life before.

Be thankful unto our God (mine own dear helper) for his wonderous working in his choſen People. Pray inſtantly that this joy be never taken from us, for it paſſeth all the delights of this World. This is the peace of God which ſurmounteth all underſtanding: this peace the more his choſen be afflicted, the more they feel, and therefore cannot faint, neither for fire, neither for water. Let us pray for our weak Brethren and Siſters ſake, that it may pleaſe God to alleviat the grievous and intolerable burden of theſe cruel days. But touching our ſelves, let us heartily beſeech our Saviour to vouchſafe to give us this glorious gift to ſuffer for his Goſpels ſake, and that we may think the ſhame of the World to be our glory, as it is indeed. God increaſe our Faith, and open our eyes to behold what is prepared for us. I lack nothing, praiſe be to God. I truſt my Marriage Garment is ready. Your own lover, John Philpot.

A Letter of Mr. Philpot to a friend of his, priſoner the ſame time in Newgate, wherein is debated and diſcuſſed the matter or queſtion of Infants to be Baptized.

A Letter of Mr. Philpot, ſtabliſhing a certain Brother in the matter of Baptizing of Infants.

THE God of all light and underſtanding lighten your heart with all true knowledge of his word, and make you perfect to the day of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whereunto you are now called, through the mighty operation of his Holy Spirit, Amen.

I received yeſternight from you (dear Brother, Saint, and fellow-priſoner for the truth of Chriſts Goſpel) a Letter, wherein you gently require my judgment concerning the Baptiſm of Infants, which is the effect thereof. And before I do ſhew you what I have learned out of Gods Word and of his true and infallible Church touching the ſame, I think it not out of the matter firſt to declare what viſion I had the ſame night whiles muſing on your Letter I fell aſleep, knowing that God doth not without cauſe reveal to his People who have their minds fixed on him, ſpecial and ſpiritual Revelations to their comfort, as a taſte of their joy and Kingdom to come, which Fleſh and Blood cannot comprehend.

A viſion revealed to M. Philpot upon a Letter to be anſwered

Being in the midſt of my ſweet reſt, it ſeemed me to ſee a great beautiful City, all of the colour of azure, and white, four ſquare in a marvellous beautiful compoſition in the midſt of the ſky, the ſight whereof ſo inwardly comforted me, that I am not able to expreſs the Conſolation I had thereof, yea the remembrance thereof cauſeth as yet my heart to leap for joy: and as charity is no churl, but would others to be partakers of his delight, ſo me thought I called to others (I cannot tell whom) and whiles they came and we together beheld the ſame, by and by to my great grief it vaded away.

The viſion expounded.

This dream I thing not to have come of the illuſion of the ſenſes, becauſe it brought with it ſo much ſpiritual joy, and I take it to be of the working of Gods Spirit for the contentation of your requeſt, as he wrought in Peter to ſatisfie Cornelius. Therefore I interpret this beautiful City to be the glorious Church of Chriſt, and the appearance of it in the ſky, ſignifieth the Heavenly State thereof, whoſe Converſation is in Heaven, and that according to the Primitive Church which is now in Heaven, men ought to meaſure and judge the Church of Chriſt now in earth, for as the Prophet David ſaith; The foundations thereof be in the holy hils, and glorious things be ſpoken of the City of God. And the marvellous quadrature of the ſame, I take to ſignifie the univerſal agreement in the ſame, and that all the Church here militant ought to conſent to the Primitive Church throughout the four parts of the World, as the Prophet affirmeth, ſaying; God maketh us to dwell after one manner in one houſe. And that I conceived ſo wonderful joy at the contemplation thereof, I underſtand the unſpeakable joy which they have that be at unity with Chriſts Primitive Church: For there is joy in the Holy Ghoſt, and peace, which paſſeth all underſtanding, as it is written in the Pſalms; As of joyful perſons is the dwelling of all them that be in thee. And that I called others to the fruition of this viſion, and to behold this wonderful City, I conſtrue it by the will of God this Viſion to have come upon me muſing on your Letter, to the end, that under this figure I might have occaſion to move you with many others, to behold the Primitive Church in all your opinions concerning faith, and to conform your ſelf in all points to the ſame, which is the pillar and ſtabliſhment of truth, and teacheth the true uſe of the Sacraments, and having with a greater fulneſs then we have now, the firſt fruits of the Holy Ghoſt, did declare the true interpretation of the Scriptures according to all verity, even as our Saviour promiſed to ſend them another Comforter, which ſhould teach them all truth.

The Primitive example for us to follow. Pſal. 67.

And ſince all truth was taught and revealed to the Primitive Church, which is our Mother, let us all that be obedient Children of God, ſubmit our ſelves to the judgment of the Church for the better underſtanding of the Articles of our faith, and of the doubtful ſentences of the Scripture. Let us not go about to ſhew in us, by following any private mans interpretation upon the Word, another Spirit then they of the Primitive Church had, leſt we deceive our ſelves. For there is but one Faith and one Spirit, which is not contrary to himſelf, neither otherwiſe now teacheth us then he did them. Therefore let us believe as they have taught us of the Scriptures, and be at peace with them, according as the true Catholick Church is at this day: and the God of peace aſſuredly will be with us, and deliver us out of all our Worldly troubles and miſeries, and make us partakers of their joy and bliſs, through our obedience to faith with them.

Therefore God commandeth us in Job, to aſk of the elder generation, and to ſearch diligently the memory of the Fathers. For we are but yeſterdays Children, and be ignorant, and our days are like a ſhadow, and they ſhall teach thee (ſaith the Lord) and ſpeak to thee, and ſhall utter words from their hearts. And by Solomon we are commanded, not to reject the direction of our Mother. The Lord grant you to direct your ſteps in all things after her, and to abhor contention with her. For as S. Paul writeth; If any man be contentious, neither we, neither the Church of God hath any ſuch cuſtom.

Job. 8.

1 Cor. 11.

Hitherto I have ſhewed you (good Brother S.) my judgment generally of that you ſtand in doubt and diſſent from others, to the which I wiſh you as mine own heart to be conformable, and then doubtleſs you cannot err, but boldly may be glad in your troubles, and triumph at the hour of your death, that you ſhall dy in the Church of God a faithful Martyr, and receive the Crown of eternal glory. And thus much have I written upon the occaſion of a Viſion before God unfained. But that you may not think that I go about to ſatisfie you with uncertain Viſions only, and not after Gods Word, I will take the ground of your Letter, and ſpecially anſwer to the ſame by the Scriptures, and by infallible reaſons deduced out of the ſame, and prove the Baptiſm of Infants to be lawful, commendable, and neceſſary, whereof you ſeem to ſtand in doubt.

Proof by teſtimonies and Scriptures.

Baptiſm of Infants of old antiquity in the Church.

Indeed if you look upon the Papiſtical Synagogue onely, which had corrupted Gods Word by falſe interpretations, and hath perverted the true uſe of Chriſts Sacraments, you might ſeem to have good handfaſt of your opinion againſt the Baptiſm of Infants. But for as much as it is of more antiquity, and hath his beginning from Gods Word, and from the uſe of the Primitive Church, it muſt not in reſpect of the abuſe in the Popiſh Church be neglected, or thought not expedient to be uſed in Chriſt Church. Auxentius, one of the Arrians ſect, with his adherents, was one of the firſt that denied the Baptiſm of Children, and next after him Pelagius the Heretick, and ſome other there were in S. Bernards time, as it doth appear by his writings, and in our days the Anabaptiſts, an inordinate kind of men ſtirred up by the Devil, to the deſtruction of the Goſpel. But the Catholick truth delivered unto us by the Scriptures, plainly determineth, that all ſuch are to be Baptized, as whom God acknowledgeth for his People, and voucheth them worthy of Sanctification or remiſſion of their ſins. Therefore ſince that Infants be in the number or ſcroll of Gods People, and be partakers of the promiſe by their purification in Chriſt, it muſt needs follow thereby, that they ought to be baptized as well as thoſe that can profeſs their faith. For we judge the People of God as well by the free and liberal promiſe of God, as by the Confeſſion of Faith. For to whomſoever God promiſeth himſelf to be their God, and whom he acknowledgeth for his, thoſe no man without great impiety may exclude from the number of the faithful. But God promiſeth that he will not onely be the God of ſuch as do profeſs him, but alſo of infants, promiſing them his grace and remiſſion of ſins, as it appeareth by the words of the Covenant made unto Abraham. I will ſet my Covenant between thee and me (ſaith the Lord) and between thy ſeed after thee in their generations, with an everlaſting Covenant, to be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed after thee. To the which Covenant Circumciſion was added to be a ſign of ſanctification as well in Children as in men; and no man may think that this promiſe is abrogated with Circumciſion and other Ceremonial Laws. For Chriſt came to fulfil the promiſes, and not to diſſolve them. Therefore in the Goſpel he ſaith of Infants, that is, of ſuch as yet believed not; Let the little ones come unto me, and forbid them not, for of ſuch is the Kingdom of Heaven. Again, It is not the will of your Father which is in Heaven, that any of theſe little ones do periſh. Alſo, He that receiveth me. Take heed therefore that ye deſpiſe not one of theſe babes, for I tell you their Angels do continually ſee in heaven my Fathers face. And what may be ſaid more plainer then this? It is not the will of the Heavenly Father, that the Infants ſhould periſh; whereby we may gather that he receiveth them freely unto his grace, although as yet they confeſs not their faith. Since then that the word of the promiſes, which is contained in Baptiſm, pertaineth as well to Children as to men, why ſhould the ſign of the promiſe, which is Baptiſm in water be withdrawn from Children, when Chriſt himſelf commandeth them to be received of us, and promiſeth the reward of a Prophet to thoſe that receive ſuch a little infant, as he for an Example did put before his Diſciples?

The People of God is to be judged by his free promiſes, and not by their Confeſſion:

Gen. 17.

Matth. 5.

Matth. 10.

Matth. 19.

Matth. 18.

Now will I prove with manifeſt Arguments that Children ought to be Baptized, and that the Apoſtles of Chriſt did Baptize Children. The Lord commanded his Apoſtles to Baptize all Nations; therefore alſo Children ought to be Baptized, for they are comprehended under this word, All Nations.

Matth. 28. Arguments proving the Baptiſm of Children to be of God, and that the Apoſtles Baptized Children.

Further, whom God doth account among the faithful, they are faithful, for it was ſaid to Peter, That thing which God hath purified, thou ſhalt not ſay to be common or unclean: But God doth repute Children among the faithful: Ergo, they be faithful, except we had rather to reſiſt God, and ſeem ſtronger and wiſer then he.

Acts 10.

And without all doubt the Apoſtles Baptized thoſe which Chriſt commanded: but he commanded the faithful to be Baptized, among the which infants be reckoned: The Apoſtles then Baptized infants.

Another argument. 1 Cor. 1.

The Goſpel is more then Baptiſm, for Paul ſaid; The Lord ſent me to preach the Goſpel, and not to Baptize: not that he denied abſolutely that he was ſent to Baptize, but that he preferred Doctrine before Baptiſm, for the Lord commanded both to the Apoſtles: but Children be received by the Doctrine of the Goſpel of God, and not refuſed: therefore what perſon being of reaſon may deny them Baptiſm, which is a thing leſſer then the Goſpel? for in the Sacraments be two things to be conſidered, the thing ſignified, and the ſign, and the thing ſignified is greater then the ſign, and from the thing ſignified in Baptiſm, Children are not excluded; who therefore may deny them the ſign, which is Baptiſm in water?

1 Cor. 1. Another argument.

In Sacraments two things to be conſidered.

Saint Peter could not deny them to be Baptized in water, to whom he ſaw the Holy Ghoſt given, which is the certain ſign of Gods People: For he ſaith in the, Acts, May any body forbid them to be Baptized in water who have received the Holy Ghoſt as well as we? Therefore S. Peter denied not Baptiſm to infants, for he knew certainly both by the Doctrine of Chriſt, and by the Covenant which is everlaſting, that the Kingdom of Heaven pertained to infants.

Acts 10.

Another Reaſon.

None be received into the Kingdom of Heaven, but ſuch as God loveth, and which are indued with the Spirit: for whoſo hath not the Spirit of God, he is none of his. But infants be beloved of God, and therefore want not the Spirit of God: wherefore if they have the Spirit of God as well as men, if they be numbred among the People of God as well as we that be of age, who (I pray you) may well withſtand Children to be Baptized with water, in the name of the Lord?

Anno 1556.

Another reaſon. Rom. 8.

The Apoſtles in times paſt being yet not ſufficiently inſtructed, did murmur againſt thoſe which brought their Children unto the Lord, but the Lord rebuked them, and ſaid; Let the Babes come unto me. Why then do not theſe Rebellious Anabaptiſts obey the Commandment of the Lord? For what do they now adays elſe that bring their Children to Baptiſm, then that they did in times paſt, which brought their Children to the Lord, and our Lord received them, and putting his hands on them, bleſſed them, and both by words and by gentle behaviour towards them, declared manifeſtly that Children be the People of God, and entirely beloved of God. But ſome will ſay, Why then did not Chriſt Baptize them? Becauſe it is written, Ieſus himſelf Baptized not, but his Diſciples.

Another reaſon.

Matth. 19.

Objection.

Moreover, Circumciſion in the old Law was miniſtred to infants; therefore Baptiſm ought to be miniſtred in the new Law unto Children. For Baptiſm is come in the ſtead of Circumciſion, as Saint Paul witneſſeth, ſaying to the Coloſſians; By Chriſt ye are Circumciſed with a Circumciſion which is without hands, when ye put off the Body of ſin of the Fleſh, by the Circumciſion of Chriſt, being buried together with him through Baptiſm. Behold, Paul calleth Baptiſm the Circumciſion of a Chriſtian man, which is done without hands, but that with hands no man any longer ought to be Circumciſed, albeit the myſtery of Circumciſion do ſtill remain in faithful People.

John. 4.

Another reaſon. Coloſſ. 2.

To this I may add, that the Servants of God were always ready to miniſter the Sacraments to them, for whom they were inſtituted. As for an example, we may behold Joſua, who moſt diligently procured the People of Iſrael to be Circumciſed before they entred into the land of promiſe; but ſince the Apoſtles were the Preachers of the word, and the very faithful Servants of Ieſus Chriſt, who may hereafter doubt that they Baptized Infants, ſince Baptiſm is in place of Circumciſion?

Another reaſon.

Ioſ. 5.

Item, the Apoſtles did attemperate all their doings to the ſhadows and figures of the old Teſtament: therefore it is certain that they did attemperate Baptiſm accordingly to Circumciſion, and Baptized Children becauſe they were under the figure of Baptiſm; for the People of Iſrael paſſed through the Red Sea, and the bottom of the watter of Iordan, with their Children. And although the Children be not always expreſſed, neither the Women in the Holy Scriptures, yet they are comprehended and underſtood in the ſame.

Another reaſon.

Alſo the Scripture evidently telleth us, that the Apoſtles Baptized whole Families or houſholds: But the Children are comprehended in a Family or houſhold, as the chiefeſt and deareſt part thereof: Therefore we may conclude, that the Apoſtles did Baptize Infants or Children, and not onely men of lawful age. And that the houſe or houſhold is taken for Man, Woman, and Child, it is manifeſt in the 17. of Geneſis, and alſo in that Ioſeph doth call Iacob with all his Houſe, to come out of the Land of Canaan into Egypt.

Another reaſon.

Finally, I can declare out of ancient Writers, that the Baptiſm of Infants hath continued from the Apoſtles time unto ours, neither that it was inſtituted by any Councils, neither of the Pope, nor of other men, but commanded from the Scripture by the Apoſtles themſelves. Origen upon the declaration of Saint Pauls Epiſtle to the Romans, expounding the ſixth Chapter, ſaith, That the Church of Chriſt received the Baptiſm of Infants from the very Apoſtles. Saint Hierome maketh mention of the Baptiſm of Infants, in the third book againſt the Pelagians, and in his Epiſtle to Leta. S. Auguſtine reciteth for this purpoſe a place out of John Biſhop of Conſtantinople, in

Also S. Augustine in writing against the Donatists in the 4*th* Book, Chap. 23, and 24. saith, That the Baptism of Infants was not derived from the authority of man, neither of Councils, but from the tradition or doctrine of the Apostles.

Cyril upon Leviticus, Chap. 8. approveth the Baptism of Children, and condemneth the iteration of Baptism. These Authorities of men I do alleadge, not to tye the Baptism of Children unto the Testimonies of men, but to shew how Mens Testimonies do agree with Gods Word, and that the verity of Antiquity is on our side, and that the Anabaptists have nothing but Lyes for them, and new imaginations, which feign the baptism of Children to be the Popes commandment.

After this will I answer to the sum of your Arguments for the contrary. The first, which includeth all the rest, is, It is written, Go ye into all the world, and preach the glad tidings to all Creatures. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved: but he that believeth not, shall be damned, &c.

To this I answer, That nothing is added to Gods Word by baptism of Children, as you pretend, but that is done which the same Word doth require, for that Children are accounted of Christ in the Gospel among the number of such as believe, as it appeareth by these words, He that offendeth one of these little Babes which believe in me, it were better for him to have a Mill-stone tyed about his neck, and to be cast into the bottom of the Sea. Where plainly Christ calleth such as be not able to confess their Faith, Believers, because of his meer grace he reputeth them for Believers. And this is no wonder so to be taken, since God imputeth Faith for Righteousness unto Men that be of riper age: for both in Men and Children, righteousness, acceptation, sanctification is of meer grace, and by imputation, that the glory of Gods grace might be praised.

Matth. 18.

Righteousness and acceptation, is only by imputation and meer grace.

And that the Children of faithful Parents are sanctified, and among such as do believe, is apparent in the 1 Cor. 7. And whereas you do gather by the order of the words in the said commandment of Christ, that Children ought to be taught before they be baptized, and to this end you alleadge many places out of the Acts, proving that such as confessed their Faith first, were baptized: I answer, that if the order of words might weigh any thing in this cause, we have the Scripture that maketh as well for us. For in St. Mark we read, that John did baptize in the Desart, preaching the baptism of Repentance. In the which place we see baptizing go before, and preaching to follow after.

1 Cor. 7.

Mark 1.

And also I will declare this place of Matthew, exactly considered, to make for the use of baptism in Children; for St. Matthew hath it written in this wise, All power is given me (saith the Lord) in heaven and in earth, therefore going forth μαθητεύσατε, that is, Disciple ye, (as I may express the signification of the word;) that is, make or gather to me Disciples of all Nations. And following, he declareth the way how they should gather to him Disciples out of all Nations, baptizing them and teaching; by baptizing and teaching ye shall procure a Church to me. And both these aptly and briefly severally he setteth forth, saying, Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. Now then Baptism goeth before Doctrine.

Matth. 28.

The place Matthew 28. (He that believeth and is baptized) opened.

But hereby I do not gather, that the Gentiles, which never heard any thing before of God, and of the Son of God, and of the Holy Ghost, ought to be baptized, neither they would permit themselves to be baptized before they knew to what end. But this I have declared to shew you upon how feeble foundation the Anabaptists be grounded. And plainly it is not true which they imagine of this Text, that the Lord did only command such to be baptized whom the Apostles had first of all taught. Neither here verily is signified who only be to be baptized, but he speaketh of such as be at perfect age, and of the first foundations of Faith, and of the Church to be planted among the Gentiles, which were as yet rude and ignorant of Religion.

Such as be of age may hear, believe and confess that which is preached and taught, but so cannot Infants; therefore we may justly collect, that he speaketh here nothing of Infants or Children. But for all this they ought not to be excluded from baptism.

It is a general Rule, He that doth not labour, must not eat. But who is so barbarous that might think hereby, that Children should be famished?

In the first converting of Infidels, believing ought to go before baptizing: but where Faith is received, Gods Grace and Sacraments go not by age, but as well be Children of the faithful received as the Fathers.

The Lord sent his Apostles at the beginning of his setting up of his true Religion unto all Nations, unto such as were both ignorant of God, and were out of the Covenant of God; and truly such persons it behoved not first to be baptized, and afterward taught; but first to be taught, and after baptized. If at this day we should go to the Turks to convert them to the Faith of Christ, verily first we ought to teach them, and afterward baptize such as would yield to be the Servants of Christ. Likewise the Lord himself in time past did, when first he renewed the Covenant with Abraham, and ordained Circumcision to be a Seal of the Covenant after that Abraham was circumcised. But he, when he perceived the Infants also to pertain to the Covenant, and that Circumcision was the sealing up of the Covenant, did not only circumcise Ismael his Son, that was 13. years of age, but all other Infants that were born in his house, among whom we reckon Isaac.

Even so faithful People which were converted from Heathen Idolatry by the preaching of the Gospel, and confessing the Faith, were baptized; when they understood their Children to be counted among the People of God, and that Baptism was the token of the People of God, they procured also their Children to be baptized. Therefore, as it is written, Abraham circumcised all the male Children of his house. Semblably we read in the acts and writings of the Apostles, that after the Master of the house was turned to the Faith, all the whole house was baptized. And as concerning those which of old time were compelled to confess their Faith before they received Baptism, which were called Catechumeni, they were such as with our Fore-fathers came from the Gentiles into the Church, who being yet rude of Faith, they did instruct in the principles of their Belief, and afterward they did baptize them; but the same ancient Fathers notwithstanding did baptize the Children of Faithful men, as I have already partly declared.

Why Children of Christian Parents be received to Baptism.

Catechumeni, is as much to say, as young Novices and beginners in Christs Faith.

And because you do require a hasty answer of your Letter of one that is but a dull writer, I am here enforced to cease particularly to go through your Letter in answering thereto, knowing that I have fully answered every part thereof, in that I have already written, although not in such order as it had been meet, and as I purposed. But forasmuch as I understand that you will be no Contentious man, neither in this matter, neither in any other, contrary to the judgment of Christs Primitive Church, which is the body and fulness of Christ, I desire you in the entire love of him, or rather Christ desireth you by me (that your joy may be perfect, whereto you are now called) to submit your judgment to that Church, and to be at peace and unity in the same; that the Coat of Christ which ought to be without seam, but now alas most miserably is torn in pieces by many dangerous Sects and damnable Opinions, may appear by you in no part to have been rent, neither that any giddy head in these Dog-days, might take an ensample by you to dissent from Christs true Church: I beseech thee, dear Brother in the Gospel, follow the steps of the Faith of the glorious Martyrs in the Primitive Church, and of such as at this day follow the same; decline from them neither to the right hand nor to the left. Then shall Death, be it never so bitter, be more sweeter than this life; then shall Christ with all the Heavenly Jerusalem triumphantly embrace your spirit with unspeakable gladness and exaltation, who in this Earth was content to joyn your spirit with their ſpirits, according as it is commanded by the Word, that the ſpirit of the Prophets ſhould be ſubject to the Prophets. One thing ask with David ere you depart, and require the ſame, that you may dwell with a full accord in his Houſe, for there is glory and worſhip: and ſo with Simeon in the Temple embracing Chriſt, depart in peace: to the which Peace Chriſt bring both you and me, and all our loving Brethren that love God in the unity of Faith, by ſuch ways as ſhall pleaſe him, to his glory. Let the bitter paſſion of Chriſt, which he ſuffered for your ſake, and the horrible torments which the godly Martyrs of Chriſt have endured before us, and alſo the ineſtimable reward of your life to come, which is hidden yet a little while from you with Chriſt, ſtrengthen, comfort, and encourage you to the end of that glorious race which you are in, Amen.

1 Cor. 14.

Concerning the party to whom this Letter was written, note that he was converted and afterward died in the ſame Faith as this Letter did perſwade him.

Your Yoke-fellow in Captivity for the verity of Chriſts Goſpel, to live and dye with you in the unity of Faith.

John Philpot.

Divers other Letters were written by Mr. Philpot to divers, but theſe as moſt principal I have excerpted and inſerted. Amongſt which I thought here not much impertinent to the place, to adjoyn another certain Letter of a godly and zealous Goſpeller (whoſe name in her writing doth not appear) who in defending and commending the quarrel of this Mr. John Philpot, Chriſts moſt famous and worthy Martyr, was therefore troubled and brought before Biſhop Boner. And therefore being appointed by the ſaid Biſhop to appear upon a certain day to anſwer for her ſelf; indeed kept not her day with the Biſhop, but inſtead of her appearance ſent him this Letter here following.

Wo be unto the Idolatrous Shepheards of England, that feed themſelves. Should not the Shepheards feed the Flock? but ye have eaten the fat, ye have cloathed you with the wool; the beſt fed have ye ſlain, but the Flock have ye not nouriſhed, the weak have ye not holden up, the ſick have you not healed, the broken have you not bound together, the out-caſts have ye not brought again, the loſt have ye not ſought, but churliſhly and cruelly have ye ruled them, Ezek. 34.

FOraſmuch (my Lord) as my buſineſs is ſuch that I cannot come to your Lordſhip, according to my promiſe, I have been ſo bold to write theſe few words unto you, partly to excuſe mine abſence, and partly to anſwer your Lordſhips demands at my laſt moſt happy departure from you. As touching the breach of my Promiſe with you in not coming again at the hour appointed, your Lordſhip ſhall underſtand that I take the counſel of the Angel, which warned the Wiſe men not to come again to Herod according to their promiſe, but to turn home again another way. Now, my Lord, I perceiving your Lordſhip to be a more cruel Tyrant than ever was Herod, and more deſirous to deſtroy Chriſt in his poor Members than ever he was, which to deſtroy Chriſt killed his own Son, I thought good to take the Angels counſel, and to come no more at you; for I ſee that you are ſet all in a rage like a ravening Wolf againſt the poor Lambs of Chriſt, appointed to the ſlaughter for the teſtimony of the Truth. Indeed you are called the common Cut-throat and general Slaughter-ſlave to all the Biſhops of England; and therefore it is wiſdom for me and all other ſimple Sheep of the Lord, to keep us out of your Butchers-ſtall as long as we can: eſpecially ſeeing that you have ſuch ſtore already, that you are not able to drink all their Blood, leſt you ſhould break your Belly; and therefore let them lye ſtill and dye for hunger. Therefore (my Lord) I thought it good to tarry a time until your Lordſhips ſtomach were come to you a little better; for I do perceive by your great fat Cheeks, that you lack no Lambs-fleſh yet, and belike you are almoſt glutted with ſupping ſo much Blood, and therefore you will let ſome of the leaneſt dye in Priſon, which will then be meat good enough for your barking Beagles, Harpsfield and his Fellows: but yet, my Lord, it were a great deal more for your Lordſhips Honour, if your Chaplains might have the meat roaſted in Smithfield at the fire of the Stake, yea, and when it is ſomething fat and fair-liking; for now they have nothing but ſkin and bones, and if the Dogs come haſtily to it, they may chance ſhortly to be choaked, and then your hunting will be hindered greatly, if it be not altogether marred. I hear ſay, my Lord, that ſome of the butcherly Curs came of late to my houſe to ſeek their Prey, and that they go round about the City (as David ſaith) grinning and grudging that they have not meat enough; therefore belike they have killed my poor Brethren and Siſters that have lain ſo long upon the Butcherly-Stall, and eaten them up: for I hear ſay their Friends could not be ſuffered to ſee them theſe three days and more; therefore I perceive now that if I had come again according to my promiſe, your Lordſhip, like a ravening Wolf, or elſe ſome of your Hell-hounds would quickly have worried me: but I ſee well my appointed time is not yet come, therefore I will yet live and thank him for my deliverance, with continual Songs of laud and praiſe. Thus have I been bold to trouble your Lordſhip with telling you the truth, and the very cauſe that I came not to you again according to my unpurpoſed Promiſe. I truſt your Lordſhip will take this in good part, and accept it as a lawful excuſe, and not doubting but your Lordſhip would have done the like, if you had been in my caſe.

Now as concerning the ſecond part that cauſed me to write unto your Lordſhip, which is to anſwer unto your ſubtle or rather cruel demand of my Judgment of the death of that bleſſed Martyr of Chriſt Jeſus, good Maſter John Philpot, I will anſwer your Lordſhip ſimply and plainly, what peril ſoever ſhall come thereof. Truly, my Lord, I do not only think, but I am alſo moſt certain and ſure, that he as a very man of God, died a true Martyr and conſtant Confeſſor of his dear Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to whom he did moſt faithfully commit his ſweet Soul, who will ſurely keep the ſame with him in joy for evermore. Alſo, my Lord, I do verily believe and know that your Lordſhip hath committed an horrible and moſt cruel murther in the unjuſt condemning and killing of him, and that you ſhall make as heavy an acconnt for his Blood, which ſhortly ſhall be required at your hand, as ever your great Grandfather cruel Cain did or ſhall do for his innocent Brother Abel. Moreover, becauſe I am credibly informed that your Lordſhip doth believe, and have in ſecret ſaid, that there is no Hell, I certifie you, that your Lordſhip did never any thing in all your life that ſo much did redound to your Lordſhips diſhonour, and perpetual ſhame and infamy, as your killing the Body of this bleſſed Prophet doth; eſpecially ſeeing that he was none of your Dioceſs, nor had offended any of your Lordſhips deviliſh and cruel Laws. Verily I hear almoſt every Body ſay in all places where I come, that your Lordſhip is made the common Slaughter-ſlave to all your Fellows, Bite-ſheep, Biſhops I would ſay; yea, the very Papiſts themſelves begin now to abhor your blood-thirſtineſs, and ſpeak ſhame of your Tyranny. Like Tyranny, believe me my Lord, every Child that can any whit ſpeak, can call upon by your name and ſay, Bloody Boner is Biſhop of London, and every man hath it as perfectly upon his fingers ends, as his Pater noſter, how many you for your part have burned with fire, and famiſhed in priſon; they ſay the whole ſum ſurmounteth to forty Perſons within this three quarters of this year. Therefore, my Lord, though your Lordſhip believeth that there is neither Heaven nor Hell, nor God nor Devil: yet if your Lordſhip love your own honeſty, which was loſt long agone, you were beſt to ſurceaſe from this cruel burning of true Chriſtian men, and alſo from murthering of ſome in Priſon; for that indeed offendeth mens minds moſt; yea, even your old friends the rankeſt Papiſts that be. For, ſay they, Felix the Heathen Ruler did not forbid Pauls Friends to viſit him in Priſon, and to bring him neceſſary relief; and therefore it is a very great ſhame and

ſin, to ſee a Biſhop that beareth the name of a Chriſtian, to be more cruel upon his poor Brethren, than an Heathen, Turk, or Infidel.

This is mens ſayings in every place, not only of this Realm, but alſo of the moſt part of the World, and the common talk they have of your Lordſhip; Therefore I thought to be bold ſo with your Lordſhip, as to tell you of it, though perchance you will give me but ſmall thanks for my labour. Well, as for that, I put it to your Lordſhips choice, for I have as much already as I look for: Finally, my Lord, I will give you to underſtand, that the death of this conſtant Martyr and valiant Souldier of Jeſus Chriſt hath given a greater ſhake towards the overthrowing of your Papiſtical Kingdom, than you ſhall ever be able to recover again theſe ſeven years, do the beſt you can, and ſet as many crafty dawbers to patch it up with untempered Clay as you will; yea, though prating Pendleton, that wicked Apoſtata, apply all his wily wits to help them. Verily, my Lord, by all mens reports, his bleſſed life could never have done the like ſorrow to Satans Synagogue, whereof ſome ſay your Lordſhip is a mighty Member, as his happy death hath done. You have broken a Pot indeed, but the precious Word contained therein is ſo notably therewithal ſhed abroad, that the ſweet ſavour thereof hath wonderfully well refreſhed all the true Houſhold or Congregation of Chriſt, that they cannot abide any more the ſtinking ſavour of your filthy Ware that came from the dunghil of Rome, though your Lordſhips Judaſſes do ſet them to ſale every where to fill your Bags. I put your Lordſhip out of doubt, that if you do break any more ſuch Pots, you will marr your own Market altogether: for I promiſe you, moſt men begin to miſlike your deviliſh doings, and wonderfully to loath your Popiſh Pedlary Wares.

Thus have I (according to your Lordſhips commandments) ſhewed you ſimply what I think of that good mans death, whoſe Blood crieth for vengeance againſt your Lordſhips butcherly bloody proceedings in the ears of the Lord of Hoſts, who will ſhortly revenge the ſame upon your pillid Pate, and upon the reſt of all your Poll-ſhorn Brethren, the very marked Cattel of the great Antichriſt of Rome. The meaſure of his Iniquity is filled up to the brim, therefore will God ſhortly pour in double unto your deſerved deſtruction. And then I when your new made Proſelytes will be glad to cover their Crowns with a Cow-turd (ſaving your Lordſhips Reverence I ſhould have ſaid firſt.) Well, I rather deſire their converſion than confuſion, the Lord ſend the one of them ſhortly, as may be moſt to his glory, Amen.

I ſignifie alſo unto your Lordſhip, that the railing words which your lying Preacher ſhewed forth of his filthy Fountain upon Sunday againſt the dear Servant of God, good Maſter Philpot, do greatly redound to your Lordſhips diſhoneſty, and much deface your ſpiritual Honour. Verily I ſee that the great wrath of God hath ſo blinded your eyes, that you ſee not what is with you, nor what is againſt you, but ſtill you vomit out your own ſhame, and make all the world wonder upon you. Was it not enough for you to condemn him moſt unjuſtly, yea contrary to your own Laws, and to kill his innocent Body moſt tyrannouſly, but you muſt alſo ſet a lying Limb of the Devil to blaſpheme, ſlander, and belye him now he is dead? Oh Viperous generation, ſeed of the Serpent, and right Children of the Devil! Full well do you counterfeit your Fathers ſteps, whom Chriſt calleth a Murtherer, and a Lyar from the beginning; which two things be the only weapons of your War, wherewith you maintain all your miſchief, that is to ſay, Lying and Murther; for thoſe whom ye cannot overcome with your lying perſwaſions, them you kill moſt cruelly, and then blaſpheme and belye them with railing Sentences when they are dead. But all this will not blind the People of God, nor yet make them any whit the leſs believe the Truth, nor abate their love from the true Preachers thereof, yea, it is a true ſign and a token that they are the very Diſciples of Chriſt; for he hath ſaid, Bleſſed are ye when men revile you, and ſay all manner of evil ſayings againſt you for my Names ſake. Rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven. And doubtleſs great is the good mans reward in Heaven by this time, as your Lordſhips damnation ſhall be great in Hell, except you repent and ſurceaſe from ſhedding innocent Blood. But it is to be feared your heart is hardened as Pharaohs was, ſeeing that with Judas ye have ſold and betrayed your Maſter. Take heed, my Lord, leſt you come to the ſame end or a worſe than he did. For verily I cannot perceive how you ſhould eſcape it long; therefore ſay not, but a Woman gave you warning, if you liſt to take it. And as for the obtaining of your Popiſh purpoſe in ſuppreſſing the Truth, I put you out of doubt, you ſhall not obtain it ſo long as you go this way to work as ye do; for verily I believe that you have loſt the hearts of 20000. that were rank Papiſts within this twelve Months.

It is found very true that one holy Doctor ſaith, The Blood of the Martyrs is the Seed of the Goſpel; when one is put to death a thouſand doth riſe for him. And that this is true, you may well perceive by the hearty love that the People ſhewed unto good Maſter Philpot at his going to his death. They went not about to make an Idol of him, as your Adders-brood would bear men in hand; but they worſhipped God which gave ſuch ſtrength to his dear Child, to dye ſo conſtantly for the teſtimony of his Truth, unto the utter deſtruction of that deteſtable Idolatry which your Lordſhip doth moſt deviliſhly maintain with the force of Fire, Faggots, and Sword: yea, and rather than fail, to famiſh Men in Priſon again, as ye have done already. It is reported of your own Tormentors, that the ſix Priſoners that you have in your Priſon, be put in ſix ſeveral places all the day, and every night brought together, and ſet in the Stocks. Forſooth, my Lord, this doth get you a foul name all abroad the Countrey, and yet all will not help your Lordſhips peſtilent purpoſe, but every way hinder the ſame. For Zorobabel will be found no lyar, which ſaid, The Truth ſhall have victory. You do but ſtrive againſt the ſtream, and kick againſt the prick; the Lord doth laugh your doings to ſcorn, and will bring all your counſels and devices to nought (as knoweth the Lord God) who of his great mercy ſhortly convert your Lordſhip, or utterly confound you, and get his Name a glory over you, Amen.

Your Lordſhips Orator, who prayeth daily to God that he may reward you according to your deeds, Anno 1556.

The Story of ſeven Martyrs ſuffering together at London, for the teſtimony of Chriſts Goſpel.

THe Catholick Prelates of the Popes band being as yet not ſatisfied with this their one years bloody murthering of the Reverend, Learned, and principal Members of Chriſts Church (whereof there were now very few, which either were not conſumed by moſt cruel fire, or elſe, for the avoiding of their Popiſh rage, compelled to flee their natural Country) continued ſtill this next year alſo, which was Anno 1556. in no leſs cruelty towards the poor, ſimple and inferiour ſort of People (I mean in degree, though God be praiſed, not in ſtedfaſtneſs) having yet ſometimes amongſt them ſuch as were both learned and of good eſtimation, as in continuance of this ſtory ſhall appear.

Wherefore (as the firſt Fruits thereof) to begin this year withal, about the 27. day of January were burned in Smithfield at London theſe ſeven perſons hereafter following, to wit:

Thomas Whittle, Prieſt.
Bartlet Green, Gentleman.
John Tudſon, Artificer.
John Went, Artificer.
Thomas Browne.
Iſabel Foſter, Wife.

All which Seven, as they were burned together in one fire, ſo were they likewiſe all upon one ſort and form of Articles condemned in one day. Howbeit, foraſmuch as the gifts of God in them were diverſe (ſome more abounding in knowledge than others) their dealings withal were alſo diverſe, as ſhall be more plainly perceived in the diſcourſing of their ſeveral proceſſes hereafter following. And therefore for the better underſtanding hereof, I will firſt (by the leave of the Lord) paſſing over their private Articles and Examinations had at ſundry times in the Biſhops houſe, ſet forth their general Examinations in the publick Conſiſtory, upon the Biſhops Articles there miniſtred unto them, with their Anſwers alſo unto the ſame, according as they all agreed after one manner and ſort together, as here by the words both of the Articles, and their Anſwers under-written, may appear.

1. FIrſt, that thou N. haſt firmly, ſtedfaſtly, and conſtantly believed in times paſt, and ſo doſt now believe at this preſent, that there is here in Earth a Catholick Church, in the which Catholick Church the Faith and Religion of Chriſt is truly profeſſed, allowed, received, kept and retained of all faithful and true Chriſtian People.

The Godfathers Faith.

3. Item. That thou the ſaid N. waſt in times paſt baptized in the Faith of the ſaid Catholick Church, profeſſing by thy Godfathers and Godmother, the Faith and Religion of Chriſt and the obſervation thereof, renouncing there the Devil and all his pomps and works, and was by the ſaid Sacrament of Baptiſm incorporate to the Catholick Church, and made a faithful Member thereof.

4. Item, That thou the ſaid N. coming to the age of fourteen years, and ſo to the age of diſcretion, didſt not depart from the ſaid Profeſſion and Faith, nor didſt miſlike any part of the ſame Faith or doings, but didſt like a faithful Chriſtian perſon abide and continue in all the ſame by the ſpace of certain years, ratifying and confirming all the ſame.

9. Item. That all and ſingular the premiſſes have been, and be true and manifeſt, and thy ſelf not only infamed and ſuſpected thereof, but alſo culpable therein; and by reaſon of the ſame, thou waſt and art of the Juriſdiction of me Edmund, Biſhop of London, and before me, according to the order of the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, are to be convented, and alſo by me to be puniſhed and reformed.

Here follow likewiſe their Anſwers, in general, made to the Articles above rehearſed.

And firſt concerning the firſt Article, in believing there is a Catholick Church.

TO the firſt Article they altogether agreeing, affirmed the ſame to be true: John Tudſon, and Thomas Brown, further adding, that the Church of England, as it was at that preſent uſed, was no part of the true Catholick Church. Anſwer to the 1. Article.

Concerning the ſecond Article, that there be in the Church ſeven Sacraments.

To the ſecond Article they anſwered, that they acknowledged but only two Sacraments in Chriſts Catholick Church, that is to ſay, Baptiſm, and the Supper of the Lord; John Went and Tudſon affirming, that the Sacrament of the Altar, as it is uſed, is an Idol, and no Sacrament at all. To the 2. Article.

Concerning the third Article, that they were firſt baptized in the Faith of the Catholick Church, profeſſing by their Godfathers the profeſſion of the ſame, &c.

To the third Article they all agreed, and confeſſed it to be true, that they were baptized in the Faith of Chriſt, and of the Church then taught; and afterward during the time of King Edward the ſixth, they hearing the Goſpel preached, and the Truth opened, followed the order of the Religion and Doctrine then uſed and ſet forth in the reign of the ſaid King Edward. To the 3. Article.

Concerning the fourth Article, that they for the ſpace of certain years did ratifie or allow, and not depart from any part of the profeſſion of the ſame Church.

To this fourth Article they granted alſo and agreed; John Went adding moreover, that about ſeven years paſt, he then being about twenty years of age, began to miſlike certain things uſed in the Church of England, as the miniſtration of the Sacrament of the Altar; likewiſe all the Ceremonies of the ſaid Church, and did likewiſe at that preſent time miſlike the ſame as they were uſed, although his Godfathers and Godmother promiſed for him the contrary. To the 4. Article.

John Tudſon added alſo in much like ſort, and ſaid, that when he came to the years of diſcretion, that is about nine years paſt, being about eighteen years of age, he did miſlike the Doctrine and Religion then taught and ſet forth in the Church of England, ſaving in King Edwards time, in whoſe time the Goſpel was truly ſet forth: and further ſaid, that the Doctrine ſet forth in the

Queens

Queens reign was not agreeable to Gods Word, nor yet to the true Catholick Church that Christ ſpeaketh of, &c.

The Faith which they were baptized in, was in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, believing the Articles of the Creed, with promiſe made to abrenounce the Devil, the Fleſh, and the World, of the which Faith their Godfathers and Godmothers were Sureties for them, and in this Faith they continue ſtill. As for other Ceremonies and abuſes of the Church, they never made any promiſe in their Baptiſm: To ſwerve from the corruptions of the See of Rome, and ſacrifice of the Maſs, is not to go from the Catholick Church of Chriſt.

Iſabel Foſter with other granted, adding likewiſe, and ſaying to the ſaid four Articles, that ſhe continued in the ſame Faith and Religion which ſhe was baptized in, after ſhe came to the years of diſcretion as other Common People did; howbeit, blindly and without knowledge, till the reign of King Edward the ſixth: at which time ſhe hearing the Goſpel truly preached and opened to the People, received thereupon the Faith and Religion then taught and ſet forth, &c.

Concerning the fifth Article, that they of late years have ſwerved and gone away, miſliked, and ſpoken againſt the profeſſion of the ſame Church, at leaſt ſome part thereof, eſpecially the Sacrifice of the Maſs, the Sacrament of the Altar, and the Authority of the Church of Rome.

To the fifth Article, they anſwered the ſame to be true, according to the contents thereof: Thomas Whittle adding moreover, that he had ſwerved and gone away, and not in whole but in part, not from the whole Catholick Church, but from the Church of Rome, in ſpeaking againſt the Maſs, the Sacrifice thereof, and the See of Rome.

Joan Laſhford (alias Joan Warn) granting with the other the ſaid Article, addeth moreover, that ſhe never hitherto ſwerved or went away, nor yet doth, from any part of Chriſts Catholick Faith and Religion? but ſaith, that from the time ſhe was Eleven years of age, ſhe hath miſliked the ſacrifice of the Maſs, the Sacrament of the Altar, and the Authority of the See of Rome, with the Doctrine thereof, becauſe they be againſt Chriſts Catholick Church, and the right Faith of the ſame.

Bartlet Green anſwering with the other to this Article, addeth and ſaith, that he ſwerved not from the Catholick Faith, but only from the Church of Rome, &c.

Concerning the ſixth Article, that they refuſe to be reconciled to the unity of the ſaid Church of Rome.

To the ſixth Article.

To the ſixth Article they anſwer and confeſs the ſame to be true, rendring the cauſe thereof, becauſe (ſay they) the ſame Church and Doctrine therein ſet forth and taught, diſagreeth from the unity of Chriſts Word, and the true Catholick Faith, &c.

The Catholick Church, and the Church of Rome, are two things.

Whereunto Bartlet Green anſwered that he is contented to be reconciled to the unity of Chriſts Catholick Church, but not of the Church of Rome.

In like manner added alſo John Went.

Concerning the ſeventh Article, that they refuſe to come to hear Maſs, and to receive the ſaid Sacrament, calling it an Idol, &c.

To the ſeventh Article. The Maſs diſſonant from the Word of the Goſpel. The Maſs full of Idolatry. John Went repenteth his going to Maſs.

To the ſeventh Article they anſwer, and confeſs the contents thereof to be true, giving withal the reaſon and cauſe of this their ſo doing, for that the Maſs with the Sacrament therof, as it was then uſed and ſet forth in the Church of England, is diſſonant to the word and teaching of the People, &c.

John Went furthermore ſaid, as concerning the Maſs, that he believeth no leſs, but the Maſs which he calleth the Supper of the Lord, as it is now uſed in the Realm of England, is naught, full of Idolatry, and againſt Gods Word ſo far as he ſeeth it; howbeit, he ſaith that ſince the Queens Coronation by chance he hath been preſent where the Maſs hath been ſaid, whereof he is ſorry.

Iſabel Foſter alſo anſwering to the ſaid Articles, with the other before, confeſſed moreover, that ſince Queen Maries reign ſhe hath not heard Maſs, nor received the Sacrament, but hath refuſed to come in place where it was miniſtred: for ſhe knoweth no ſuch Sacrament to be. And being demanded of her Belief in the ſame, ſhe ſaith, that there is but only material Bread, and material Wine, and not the real ſubſtance of the Body of Chriſt in the ſame Sacrament: for ſo ſhe hath been taught to believe by the Preachers in the time of King Edward, whom ſhe believeth to have preached the Truth in that behalf.

Concerning the eighth Article, that they were ſent by the Commiſſioners to the Biſhop to be examined and impriſoned.

To the eighth Article they grant the ſame and the contents thereof to be ſo. To the 8. Article.

Thomas Whittle adding and affirming that the Lord Chancellor that then was, ſent him up to the Biſhop there preſent.

Bartlet Green added, that he was ſent up to the ſaid Biſhop, but for no offence herein Articulate.

John Went ſaid, that Dr Story, Queen Maries Commiſſioner, examined him upon the Sacrament and becauſe he denied the Real preſence, he preſented this Examinate to the Biſhop.

John Tudſon likewiſe examined by Mr. Cholmley and Doctor Story, upon the ſame matters, and for not coming to the Church, and accuſed by the ſame, becauſe he would not agree to them, was ſent to the Biſhop.

Thomas Brown alſo ſaid, that he for not coming to the Church of St. Brides, was brought by the Conſtable to the Biſhop, &c.

Joan Warne. confeſſed that ſhe was ſent by Doctor Story to the Biſhop of London, about twelve weeks ago, ſince which time ſhe hath continued with the ſaid Biſhop. Of this Joan Warne read before.

Concerning the ninth Article.

To the ninth Article they confeſs and ſay, that as they believe the premiſſes before by them confeſſed to be true, ſo they deny not the ſame to be manifeſt, and that they be of the juriſdiction of London. To the 9. Article.

And thus having expreſſed their Articles, with their anſwers joyntly made unto the ſame, it remaineth further more fully to diſcourſe the ſtories, and handling of all the ſeven aforeſaid Martyrs ſeverally and particularly by themſelves, firſt beginning with Thomas Whittle.

The Story of all theſe ſeven Martyrs, particularly deſcribed, in order here followeth, and firſt of Thomas Whittle, who firſt recanting, then returning again, with great conſtancy and fortitude ſtood to the defence of Chriſts Doctrine againſt the Papiſts, to the fire.

Tho. Whittle, Martyr.

IN the ſtory of Mr. Philpot, mention was made before, of a married Prieſt, whom he found in the Colehouſe at his firſt coming thither, in heavineſs of mind and great ſorrow, for recanting the Doctrine which he had taught in King Edwards days, whoſe name was Thomas Whittle of Eſſex; and thus lieth his ſtory. This Thomas Whittle, after he had been expulſed from the place in Eſſex where he ſerved, went abroad where he might, now here and there, as occaſion was miniſtred, preaching and ſowing the Goſpel of Chriſt. At length being apprehended by one Edmund Alablaſter, in hope of reward and promotion, which he miſerably gaped after, he was brought firſt as priſoner before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, who then was fallen lately ſick of his diſeaſe, whereof not long after he died moſt ſtrangely. But the apprehender for his profered ſervice was highly checked and rated of the Biſhop, asking if there were no man unto whom he might bring ſuch Raſcals, but to him. Hence (quoth he) out of my ſight thou Varlet, what doſt thou trouble me with ſuch matters? The greedy Cormorant being thus defeated of his deſired prey, yet thinking to ſeek and to hunt further, carried his Priſoner to the Biſhop of London, with whom what an evil meſs of handling this Whittle had, and how he was by the Biſhop all to beaten and buffeted about the face, by this his own narration in a Letter ſent unto his Friend, manifeſtly may appear. Edmund Alablaſter, after a promoter and perſecutor.

Tho. Whittle reporteth of the manner of his handling with Biſhop Boner.

Upon Thurſday which was the tenth of January, the Biſhop of London ſent for me Thomas Whittle Miniſter, out of the Porters-lodge, where I had been all night, lying upon the earth upon a Pallet where I had as painful a night of ſickneſs as ever I had, God be thanked. And when I came before him, he talked with me many things of the Sacrament ſo groſly, as is not worthy to be rehearſed. And amongſt other things he asked me if I would have come to Maſs that morning if he had ſent for me.

Where-

Tho. Whittle beaten on the face by Boner.

Whereunto I anſwered, that I would have come to him at his commandment, but to your Maſs (ſaid I) I have ſmall affection. At which anſwer he was diſpleaſed ſore, and ſaid, I ſhould be fed with Bread and Water. And as I followed him through the great Hall, he turned back and beat me with his Fiſt, firſt on the one Cheek, and then on the other, as the ſign of my beating did many days appear. And then he led me into a little Salt-houſe, where I had no Straw nor Bed, but lay two nights on a Table, and ſlept ſoundly, I thank God.

Epiſcopum non percuſſorem eſſe oportet. Tit. 1.

Then, upon the Friday next after, I was brought to my Lord, and he then gave me many fair words, and ſaid he would be good to me. And ſo he going to Fulham, committed me to Dr. Harpsfield, that he and I in that Afternoon ſhould commune together, and draw out certain Articles, whereunto if I would ſubſcribe, I ſhould be diſmiſſed. But Dr. Harpsfield ſent not for me till night, and then perſwaded me very ſore to forſake my Opinions. I anſwered, I held nothing but the Truth, and therefore I could not ſo lightly turn there-from. So I thought I ſhould at that time have had no more ado: but he had made a certain Bill, which the Regiſter pulled out of his boſom, and read it. The Bill indeed was very eaſily made, and therefore more dangerous: for the effect thereof was, to deteſt all Errors and Hereſies againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, and other Sacraments, and to believe the Faith of the Catholick Church, and live accordingly.

Tho. Whittle convented before Dr. Harpsfield.

The Copy of this Bill here mentioned, if it pleaſe the gentle Reader to peruſe, ſo as it came to our hands we have hereunto adjoyned, written, and contained in their own words, as followeth to be ſeen.

The Bill of Submiſſion, offered to Thomas Whittle to ſubſcribe.

The bill of ſubmiſſion put to Tho. Whittle to ſubſcribe unto.

I Thomas Whittle Prieſt, of the Dioceſs of London, knowledge and confeſs with my mouth, agreeing with my heart before you Reverend Father in God, Edmund Biſhop of London, my Ordinary, that I do deteſt and abhor all manner of Hereſies and Errors againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, or any of the Sacraments of the Church, which Hereſies and Errors have heretofore been condemned in any wiſe by the Catholick Church: and I do proteſt and declare by theſe preſents, that I do both now hold, and alſo intend by Gods grace always hereafter to hold, obſerve and keep, in all points the Catholick Faith and Belief of Chriſts Church, according as this Church of England, being a member of the ſaid Catholick Church, doth now profeſs and keep, and in no wiſe to ſwerve, decline, or go from the ſaid Faith, during my natural life, ſubmitting my ſelf fully and wholly to you, Reverend Father, my ſaid Ordinary, in all things concerning my reformation and amendment at all times. In witneſs whereof I the ſaid Thomas Whittle Prieſt, have hereunto ſubſcribed my name, written, &c.

Tho. Whittle through infirmity ſubſcribeth to the Bill.

To this Bill I did indeed ſet my hand, being much deſired and counſelled ſo to do; and the fleſh being always deſirous to have liberty, I conſidered not throughly the inconvenience that might come thereupon; and reſpit I deſired to have had, but earneſtly they deſired me to ſubſcribe. Now when I had ſo done, I had little joy thereof. For by and by my Mind and Conſcience told me by Gods Word that I had done evil, by ſuch a ſleight means to ſhake off the ſweet Croſs of Chriſt: and yet it was not my ſeeking, as God he knoweth, but altogether came of them. Oh the crafty ſubtilty of Satan in his Members! Let every man that God ſhall deliver into their hands, take good heed, and cleave faſt to Chriſt: for they will leave no corner of his Conſcience unſought, but will attempt all guileful and ſubtle means to corrupt him, to fall both from God and his Truth. But yet let no man deſpair of Gods help, for Peter did fall and riſe again. And David ſaith, A righteous man though he fall, he ſhall not be caſt away: for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. For I for my part have felt my infirmities, and yet have I found Gods preſent help and comfort in time of need, I thank him therefore.

Tho. Whittle compunected in conſcience, for forſaking of the Croſs of Chriſt. A good warning for all faithful Chriſtians not to fall into the crafty hands of the Papiſts.

Comfort againſt deſpair.

The night after I had ſubſcribed, I was ſore grieved, and for ſorrow of Conſcience could not ſleep. For in the deliverance of my Body out of bonds, which I might have had, I could find no joy nor comfort, but ſtill was in my Conſcience tormented more and more, being aſſured by Gods Spirit and his Word, that I through evil counſel and adviſement had done amiſs. And both with diſquietneſs of mind, and with my other cruel handling, I was ſickly, lying upon the ground when the Keeper came; and ſo I deſired him to pray Dr. Harpsfield to come to me, and ſo he did. Anno 1556.

T. Whittle repenteth his recantation.

And when he came, and the Regiſter with him, I told him that I was not well at eaſe, but eſpecially I told him I was grieved very much in my Conſcience and mind, becauſe I had ſubſcribed. And I ſaid, that my Conſcience had ſo accuſed me, through the juſt judgment of God and his Word, that I had felt Hell in my Conſcience, and Satan ready to devour me: and therefore I pray you Mr. Harpsfield (ſaid I) let me have the Bill again, for I will not ſtand to it. So he gently commanded it to be fetched, and gave it me, and ſuffered me to put out my name, whereof I was right glad when I had ſo done, although death ſhould follow. And hereby I had experience of Gods providence and mercy towards me, who trieth his people, and ſuffereth them to fall, but not to be loſt: for in the midſt of this temptation and trouble, he gave me warning of my deed, and alſo delivered me, his name be praiſed for evermore, Amen.

Experience of Gods providence, ſuffering his People to fall, but not to be loſt.

Neither Devil nor cruel Tyrant can pluck any of Chriſts Sheep out of his hand. Of the which flock of Chriſts Sheep I truſt undoubtedly I am one by means of his death and blood-ſhedding, which ſhall at the laſt day ſtand at his right hand, and receive with other his bleſſed Benediction. And now being condemned to dye, my Conſcience and Mind, I praiſe God is quiet in Chriſt, and I by his grace am very well willing and content to give over this Body to the death, for the teſtimony of his Truth and pure Religion, againſt Antichriſt and all his falſe Religion and Doctrine. They that report otherwiſe of me, ſpeak not truly. And as for Fountain, I ſaw him not all this while.

Peace of Conſcience a great Treaſure.

By me Thomas Whittle, Miniſter.

Concerning the troubled mind of this godly man, and tearing his name out of the Bill, here followeth the report of the ſame, written in the Letters both of the ſaid Harpsfield, and alſo of Johnſon the Regiſter, being then preſent thereat, and reporters of the ſame unto the Biſhop, as in their Letters hereto annexed is to be ſeen.

The Copy of Nicholas Harpsfields Letter, touching Mr. Whittle, written to Boner Biſhop of London.

A Letter of M. Harpsfield declaring how Tho. Whittle rent his ſubſcription out of the Biſhops Regiſter.

PLeaſeth your good Lordſhip to underſtand, that yeſterday I dined with my Lord of Exceter, who ſoon after my firſt coming to him, asked me what news? I anſwered, none but good that I had heard. No, ſaith he. Why, it is a rumor in the City, that to morrow the Queens Grace will take her journey towards the King. I anſwered, that I thought it not to be any whit true, but an invention of Hereticks: yea, and further, ſaith he, there is a report made abroad of my Lord your Maſter, that he is in diſcomfort, and therefore will ſuffer no man to come unto him. When I heard thus much, I began to laugh, and to declare how untrue this report was: ſo that my Lord (who before was very ſad) afterward knowing the Truth, rejoyced much to hear that all was well with your Lordſhip, and deſired me to have his hearty Commendations to your Lordſhip.

One of my Lord of Pembrokes Retinue, a very handſom Man, and as far as I can yet learn, a Catholick, is a ſuter to your Lordſhip to have licence to erect a School: and the order which he intendeth to uſe, is contained in this printed Paper, which I ſend here incloſed to your Lordſhip. I would be glad for my Lord of Pembrokes ſake, that he underſtood, that upon my motion your Lordſhip were content he ſhould teach as he intendeth. Mr. Johnſon and I have travelled with the Prieſt, and he hath ſubſcribed his name to this draught which is herein incloſed, and hath promiſed he will ſtand to the ſame before your Lordſhip.

When

Anno 1556.

When I had written thus much, ſuddenly came tidings to me, that Jordanis converſus eſt retrorſum. Cluney coming to the Prieſt, found him lying proſtrate, and groaning as though he ſhould have died forthwith. Then Cluney took him up, and ſet him upon a Stool, and came to me, and told me of this Revel. It chanced that Mr. Johnſon was with me, and we went to this fond Heretick, and found him lying all along, holding his hands up, and looking hypocritically towards Heaven. I cauſed Thomas More and Cluney to ſet him on the Stool, and with much ado at length he told me, that Satan had been with him in the night, and told him that he was damned, and weeping he prayed Mr. Johnſon and me to ſee the Bill, whereunto he ſubſcribed, and when he ſaw it, he tore out his name, è libro ſcilicet viventium. Me thinketh by him he will needs burn a Fagot, neither is there any other likelyhood of the young Woman. I have enquired of the two perſons which ſue to have a Licence to eat fleſh. And the Woman of Chriſts-Church is indeed very much diſeaſed, and hath been long diſeaſed, and ſhe and her Husband both Catholick. of the other yet I can learn nothing. Thus Jeſus evermore preſerve your good Lordſhip, and my Miſtreſs your Lordſhips Siſter, with all yours. This preſent Saturday.

He meaneth of the return again of T. Whittle.

This young Woman was Joan Warne, otherwiſe named Joan Laſſford, who was burned alſo with the ſame Whittle.

Your Lordſhips moſt bounden Servant,
Nicholas Harpsfield.

Here followeth another Letter of Robert Johnſon Regiſter, touching Thomas Whittle, written to Boner Biſhop of London.

Another Letter of Johnſon, touching the ſaid T. Whittle.

MY bounden duty premiſed, pleaſeth your Lordſhip to underſtand, that this laſt Friday in the Afternoon, Mr. Archdeacon of London did diligently travel with Sir Thomas Whittle. I being preſent, and perceiving his conformity, as outwardly appeared, deviſed this Submiſſion, and he being content therewith did ſubſcribe the ſame. But now this Saturday morning Mr. Archdeacon and I, upon Cluneys report, declaring that he feigned himſelf to be diſtracted of his ſenſes, went unto him, to whom he declared, that Satan in the night time appeared unto him, and ſaid that he was damned, for that he had done againſt his Conſcience in ſubſcribing to the ſaid Submiſſion, with other like words, &c. And then Mr. Archdeacon, at his earneſt requeſt, delivered unto him the Submiſſion. And thereupon the ſaid Whittle did tear out his ſubſcription, made in the foot of the ſame, as your Lordſhip ſhall perceive by the Submiſſion ſent now unto your Lordſhip by Mr. Archdeacon; wherewith the ſaid Whittle was ſomewhat quieted.

Touching Joan Laſſford.

And as touching Joan Laſhford, Mr. Archdeacon did likewiſe travel with her, and ſhewing her Sir Thomas Submiſſion, which I read unto her two times, demanded if ſhe could be content to make the like Submiſſion, and ſhe deſired reſpit until this morning. And being now eftſoons demanded, in like wiſe ſaith, that ſhe will not make any thing in writing, nor put any ſign thereunto. Mr. Archdeacon and I intend this Afternoon to examine the ſaid Sir Thomas upon Articles: for as yet there doth appear nothing in writing againſt him, as knoweth Almighty God, who preſerve your good Lordſhip in proſperity long with honour to endure.

From London this Saturday.

By your Lordſhips daily Beads-man, and bounden Servant,
Robert Johnſon.

The Condemnation, Death, and Martyrdom of Thomas Whittle.

The laſt Examination of T. Whittle.

CONcerning the words and anſwers of the ſaid Thomas Whittle at his laſt Examination before the Biſhop, upon the 14. day of January, the year above-expreſſed, Boner with other his fellow Bonerlings ſitting in his Conſiſtory at Afternoon, firſt called forth Thomas Whittle, with whom he began in effect as followeth. Becauſe ye be a Prieſt (ſaith he) as I and other Biſhops here be, and did receive the order of Prieſthood, after the right and form of the Catholick Church, ye ſhall not think but I will miniſter juſtice as well unto you as unto other. And then the ſaid Boner in further communication did charge him, that where in times paſt he had ſaid Maſs according to the Order then uſed, the ſame Whittle now of late had ſpoken and railed againſt the ſame, ſaying that it was Idolatry and Abomination. Whereunto Thomas Whittle anſwering again, ſaid, that at ſuch time as he ſo ſaid Maſs, he was then ignorant, &c. adding moreover, that the elevation of the Sacrament at the Maſs, giveth occaſion of Idolatry to them that be ignorant and unlearned.

Elevation of the Sacrament cauſe of Idolatry.

After this the Biſhop making haſt to the Articles (which in all his Examinations ever he harped upon) came to this Article, That thou waſt in times paſt baptized in the Faith of the Catholick Church.

B. Boners Argument, He was baptized in the Faith of the Catholick Church: Ergo, he was baptized in the Faith of Rome.

To this the ſaid Whittle inferred again, I was baptized in the Faith of the Catholick Church, although I did forſake the Church of Rome. And ye, my Lord, do call theſe Hereſies, that be no Hereſies, and do charge me therewith as Hereſies, and ye ground your ſelf upon that Religion, which is not agreeable to Gods Word, &c.

Then the ſaid victorious Souldier and Servant of our Saviour, conſtant in the Verity received and profeſſed, was again admoniſhed, and with perſwaſions intreated by the Biſhop; who becauſe he would not agree unto the ſame, the Biſhop forthwith proceeded, firſt to his actual degradation, that is, to unprieſt him of all his Prieſtly trinkets and Clerkly habit. The order and manner of which their Popiſh and moſt vain degradation, before in the ſtory of Biſhop Hooper is to be ſeen. Then Whittle in the midſt of the Ceremonies, when he ſaw them ſo buſie in degrading him, after their Father the Popes Pontifical faſhion, ſaid unto them, Paul and Titus had not ſo much to do with their Prieſts and Biſhops. And farther, ſpeaking to the Biſhop, he ſaid unto him, My Lord, your Religion ſtandeth moſt with the Church of Rome, and not with the Catholick Church of Chriſt.

T. Whittle degraded.

Whittles words to B. Boner.

The Biſhop after this, according to his accuſtomed formal proceedings, aſſayed him yet again with words rather than with ſubſtantial Arguments, to conform him to his Religion. Who then denying ſo to do, ſaid, As for your Religion, I cannot be perſwaded that it is according to Gods Word.

The Biſhop then asked what fault he found in the adminiſtration of the Sacrament of the Altar.

Whittle anſwered and ſaid, it is not uſed according to Chriſts Inſtitution, in that it is privately and not openly done. And alſo for that it is miniſtred but in one kind to the Lay People, which is againſt Chriſts Ordinance. Farther, Chriſt commanded it not to be elevated nor adored: For the adoration and elevation cannot be approved by Scripture.

Cauſes why the adminiſtration of the Popiſh Sacrament is to be reproved.

Well, quoth Boner, my Lords here and other Learned men have ſhewed great Learning for thy converſion, wherefore if thou wilt yet return to the Faith and Religion of the Catholick Church, I will receive thee thereunto, and not commit thee to the Secular Power, &c. To make ſhort, Whittle, ſtrengthned with the grace of the Lord, ſtood ſtrong and unmovable in that he had affirmed. Wherefore the Sentence being read, the next day following he was committed to the Secular Power, and ſo in few days after brought to the fire with the other ſix aforenamed, ſealing up the teſtimony of his Doctrine with his Blood, which he willingly and chearfully gave for witneſs of the Truth.

Letters of Thomas Whittle.

A Letter of Thomas Whittle to John Careleſs, Priſoner in the Kings-Bench.

A Letter of T. Whittle written to John Careleſs.

THE Peace of God in Chriſt be with you continually, dearly beloved Brother in Chriſt, with the aſſiſtance of Gods grace and Holy Spirit, to the working and performing of thoſe things which may comfort and edifie his Church (as ye daily do) to the glory of his Name, and the increaſe of your joy and ſolace of Soul in this life, and alſo your reward in Heaven, with Chriſt our Captain, whoſe faithful Souldier ye are, in the life to come, Amen.

I have greatly rejoyced(my dear Heart) with thanks to God for you, ſince I have heard of your Faith and love which you bear towards God and his Saints, with a moſt godly ardent zeal to the vertue of Chriſts Doctrine and Religion, which I have heard by the report of many, but ſpecially by the declaring of that valiant Captain in Chriſts Church, that ſtout Champion in Gods cauſe, that ſpectacle to the world, I mean our good Brother Philpot, who now lieth under the Altar, and ſweetly enjoyeth the promiſed reward. And ſpecially I and my condemned Fellows give thanks to God for your loving and comfortable Letter in the deepneſs of our trouble (after the fleſh) ſent unto us to the conſolation of us all, but muſt ſpecially to me moſt ſinful miſer on mine own behalf, but happy, I hope, through Gods loving kindneſs in Chriſt ſhewed unto me; who ſuffered me to faint and fail through humane infirmity, by the working of the Arch-enemy in his ſworn Souldiers the Biſhops and Prieſts. In whom ſo lively appeareth the very viſage and ſhape of Satan, that a man (if it were not prejudice to Gods Word) might well affirm them to be Devils incarnate, as I by experience do ſpeak. Wherefore, who ſo ſhall for Conſcience matters come in their hands, had need of the wilineſs of the Serpent to ſave his head, though it be with the wounding of his Body, and to take diligent heed how he conſenteth to their wicked writings, or ſetteth his hand to their conveyances.

His judgment and experience of Popiſh Prelates.

So did they aſſault me and craftily tempt me to their wicked ways, or at leaſt to a denegation of my Faith and true Opinions, though it were but by colour and diſſimulation. And (alas) ſomething they did prevail. Not that I did any thing at all like their Opinions and falſe Papiſtical Religion, or elſe doubted of the Truth wherein I ſtand, but only the infirmity of the fleſh beguiled me, deſiring liberty by an unlawful means; God lay it not to my charge at that day, and ſo I heartily deſire you to pray. Howbeit, uncertain I am whether more profit came thereby: profit to me, in that God ſuffered Satan to buffet me by his foreſaid miniſter of miſchief, ſhewing me mine infirmity, that I ſhould not boaſt nor rejoyce in my ſelf, but only in the Lord? who when he had led me to hell in my Conſcience through the reſpect of his fearful judgments againſt me for my fearfulneſs, miſtruſt, and crafty cloaking in ſuch ſpiritual and weighty matters (in the which agony and diſtreſs I found this old verſe true, Non patitur ludum fama, fides, oculus.) yet he brought me from thence again to the magnifying of his Name, ſuſpecting of fleſh and Blood, and conſolation of mine own Soul, or elſe that I might feel diſprofit in offending the Congregation of God, which peradventure will rather adjudge my fall to come of doubtfulneſs in my Doctrine and Religion, then of humane imbecillity.

The burden of a troubled Conſcience.

Well, of the importune burthen of a troubled Conſcience for denying or diſſembling the known verity, I by experience could ſay very much more, which perhaps I will declare by writing, to the warning of others, if God grant time: For now am I and my Fellows ready to go hence even for Chriſts cauſe; Gods name be praiſed, who hath hereto called us. Pray, I pray you, that we may end our courſe with joy, and at your appointed time you ſhall come after. But as the Lord hath kept you, ſo will he preſerve your life ſtill, to the intent you ſhould labour (as you do) to appeaſe and convince theſe ungodly contentions and controverſies, which now do too much reign, brawling about terms to no edification. God is diſhonoured, the Church diſquieted, and occaſion to ſpeak evil of the Goſpel miniſtred to our Adverſaries. But ſuch is the ſubtilty of Satan, that whom he cannot win with groſs Idolatry in open Religion, them he ſeeketh to corrupt and deceive in Opinions, in a private profeſſion. But here I will abruptly leave, leſt with my rude and ſimple vein I ſhould be tedious unto you, deſiring you (my loving Brother) if it ſhall not ſeem grievous unto you, to write unto me and my Fellows, yet once again, if you have leiſure, and we time to the ſame.

He writeth for the Examinations of M. Philpot.

Provide me Mr. Philpots nine Examinations for a Friend of mine, and I ſhall pay you therefore, by the leave of Almighty God our heavenly Father, who correcteth all his dear Children in this world, that they ſhould not be damned with the world, and trieth the Faith of his Saints through many tribulations, that being found conſtant to the end, he may crown his own gifts in them, and in Heaven highly reward them; whither I truſt to go before, looking for you to follow (my faithful Friend) that we may ſing perpetual praiſe to our loving Lord God for victory over Satan and ſin, won for us by Jeſus Chriſt God and Man, our only and ſufficient Saviour and Advocate, Amen. Farewel, and pray in Faith. Anno 1556.

Yours Thomas Whittle Miniſter, and now condemned to die for the Goſpels ſake. 1556. Jan. 21.

All my Fellows ſalute you. Salute all our faithful Brethren with you.

To my dear Friend and Brother John Went and other his Priſon-fellows in Lollards Tower.

HE that preſerved Joſeph Priſoner in Egypt, fed Daniel in the Lions Den, and delivered Paul, Peter, and the Apoſtles out of Priſon, vouchſafe of his goodneſs to keep, feed, and deliver you my good Brother Went, with the other our fellow Souldiers your Priſon-fellows, as may be moſt to his glory, to your conſolation, and the edification of his Church. Acts 16.

I cannot but praiſe God moſt earneſtly, when I hear of your conſtancy in the Faith, and joy in the Croſs of Chriſt, which you now bear and ſuffer together, with many other good members of Chriſt, which is a token that by Chriſt you are counted worthy the Kingdom of God, as Paul ſaith. And though the world counteth the yoke and Croſs of Chriſt as a moſt pernicious and hurtful thing, yet we which have taſted how friendly the Lord is, cannot but rejoyce in this perſecution as touching our ſelves; inaſmuch as the cauſe for the which we ſuffer is the Lords cauſe and not ours, at whoſe hand if we endure to the end, we ſhall receive, through his liberal promiſe in Chriſt, not only a great reward in Heaven, but alſo the Kingdom of Heaven it ſelf, and alſo in the mean ſeaſon be ſure to be defended and cared for, ſo that we ſhall lack no neceſſary things, neither a hair of our heads ſhall periſh without his knowledge. Oh what is he that would miſtruſt, or not gladly ſerve ſo loving a Father? O how unhappy are they that forſake him and put their truſt in man; But how bleſſed are they that for his love and for his holy words ſake, in theſe troubleſom days do commit their Souls and Bodies into his hands with well doing, counting it greater happineſs and riches to ſuffer rebuke with Chriſt and his Church, then to enjoy the pleaſures of this life, for a little ſhort ſeaſon? This Croſs that we now bear hath been common to all the faithful from Abel hitherto, and ſhall be to the end, becauſe the Devil, having great wrath againſt God and his Chriſt, cannot abide that he ſhould for his manifold mercies be lauded and magnified, and Chriſt to be taken and believed upon for our only ſufficient Redeemer, Saviour and Advocate: and therefore becauſe we will not deny Chriſt, nor diſſemble with our Faith, but openly proteſt and profeſs the ſame before the world, he ſeeketh by all means to ſtir up his wicked members, to perſecute and kill the bodies of the true Chriſtians; as St. John ſaith, The Devil ſhall caſt ſome of you into Priſon. And David ſaith, I believed, and therefore have I ſpoken, but I was ſore troubled. This notwithſtanding, go forward dear Brethren, as ye have begun, to fight the Lords battle, conſidering Chriſt the Captain of your war, who will both fight for you, give you victory, and alſo highly reward your pains. Conſider to your comfort the notable and chief Shepherds and Souldiers of Chriſt, which are gone before us in theſe days, I mean theſe learned and goly Biſhops, Doctors and other Miniſters of Gods Word; whoſe Faith and exanples we that be inferiors ought to follow, as St. Paul ſaith; Remember them that have declared unto you the Word of God, the end of whoſe converſation ſee that ye look upon, and follow their Faith. The grace and bleſſing of God, with the miniſtry of his holy Angels, be with you for ever, Amen. All my Priſon-fellows greet you.

To all the true professors and lovers of Gods Holy Gospel within the City of London.

A Letter of Th. Whittle to the true professors of the City of London.

THe same faith for the which Abraham was counted righteous, and Mary blessed, the Lord God increase and make stable in your hearts, my dear and faithful Brethren and Sisters of London, for ever and ever, Amen.

Rom. 4. Luke 1.

Dearly beloved, be not troubled in this heat which is now come amongst you to try you, as though some strange thing had hapned unto you, but rejoyce in as much as ye are partakers of Christs passions, that when his glory appeareth, ye may be merry and glad, &c. Out of these words of S. Peter, I gather most specially these four Notes. First, that persecution happeneth to Christs Church for their trial, that is, for the probation and proof of their faith. Which faith, like as it is known with God in the depth of our hearts, so will he have it made manifest to the whole World through persecution; that so it may evidently appear that he hath such a Church and People upon earth, which so trusteth in him and feareth his holy Name, that no kind of persecution, pains, nor death shall be able to separate them from the love of him. And thus was Abraham tried, and Job tempted, that their faith, which before lay hid almost in their hearts, might be made known to the whole World to be so stedfast and strong, that neither the Devil, natural love, nor any other enemie could be able to beleave them thereof. Whereby also God was to be magnified, who hath tried his People by many tribulations, and also standeth by them in the midst of their troubles, to deliver them by life or death as he seeth best: like as he assisted Lot, and delivered him out of his enemies hands: Joseph out of the hands of his Brethren and out of prison: Paul from his enemies in Damasco, and the Apostles out of the stocks and prison.

Four Notes.

Rom 8. Gen. 22. Job 1.

Rom. 9. 2 Cor. 11. Acts 16. Gen. 4. 2 Macch. 6. Acts 7. Matth. 17.

These with many more he delivered to life; and also he delivered Abel, Eleazar, Stephen, and John Baptist, with other many by death, and hath also by the trial of their faith made them good Presidents, and examples to us and all that come after, to suffer affliction in the like cause; as S. James saith, Take, my Brethren (saith he) the Prophets for an ensample of suffering Adversity and of long patience, which spake unto you in the Name of the Lord: behold we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have known what end the Lord made with him, for the Lord is very pitiful and merciful. Also the Lord trieth us, to let us see our own hearts and thoughts, that no Hypocrisie or ambition deceive us, and that the strong in Christ may pray that he fall not, but endure to the end; and that those that fall through fearful infirmity, might speedily repent and rise again with Peter, and also that the weak ones might bewail their weakness, and cry with David, Psal. 6. Have mercy upon me O Lord, for I am weak: O Lord heal me, for all my bones are vexed.

Jam. 5. 4.

Of this opening of the heart by persecution spake Holy Simeon to Mary Christs Mother when he said, The Sword, that is, the Cross of persecution, shall pierce thy Soul, that the thoughts of many hearts may be opened. For like as a King, that should go to Battel, is compelled to look in his coffers what treasure he hath, and also what number and puissance of men and weapons he hath, so that if he himself be unready and unarmed to bicker with his enemy, he surceaseth and taketh truce for a time: even so we by persecutions have our hearts opened, that we may look therein to see what faith in Christ we have, and what strength to withstand the enemies, and to bear the Cross, that if we be rich in these Treasures, we might rejoyce, and valiantly go to Battel; or if we want these things, we might with all speed call and cry upon him which giveth all good gifts to those that ask them. Item, the Cross trieth the good People from the bad, the faithful from the worldlings and Hypocrites, and also cleanseth and scoureth the faithful hearts from all corruption and filthiness both of the Flesh and the Spirit. And even as Iron, except it be often scoured, will soon wax rusty: so except our sinful hearts and Flesh be often scoured with the whetstone of the Cross, they will soon corrupt and overgrow with the rust of all filthiness and sin. And therefore it is meet and good for us (as the wise man saith, Syrach 2.) that as gold and silver is tried in the fire, so should the hearts of acceptable men be tryed in the furnace of Adversity. Abide the trial (dear friends) that ye may obtain the Crown of life. Fight manfully in this the Lords cause, that ye may obtain a glorious victory here, and receive a great reward in Heaven hereafter.

Luke 2.

The Cross trieth the good People from the bad.

As ye are called Christians and would be angry to be called Jews or Turks, so declare your Christianity by following the steps of Christ, whose name ye bear; suffer with him and for his Gospels sake, rather then to deny him or to defile your Faith and Conscience with false worshipping of Romish Religion.

Take up your Cross (my dear hearts) now when it is offered you, and go up with Christ to Jerusalem amongst the Bishops, Priests, and Rulers, if God call you thereto, and they will anon send you to Calvary: from whence (dying in the cause of the Gospel, wherein our good Preachers and Brethren have given their lives) your Souls (I warrant you) through Christ Jesus shall ascend to God that gave them, and that body shall come after at the last day, and so shall ye dwell with the Lord for ever in unspeakable joy and bliss. Oh blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousness sake, as Christs People in this Jewish England now doth; for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. O my beloved, let your minds on this Kingdom where Christ our head and King is; considering that as the brute beast looketh down-wards with the face towards the earth: so man is made contrariwise with his face looking upwards towards the Heavens, because his Conversation should be in Heaven and Heavenly things, and not upon the earth and earthly things, as Saint Paul saith, Colos. 3. Set your minds on things which are above, where Christ is. And again he saith, Phil. 3. Our Conversation is in Heaven, from whence we look for our Saviour, who will change our vile Bodys, and make them like to his glorious Body. Oh the glorious estate that we be called unto! The Lord preserve us harmless to his eternal Kingdom through Christs Jesus our Lord, Amen.

The second thing that I note in the foresaid words of Peter, is, that he calleth persecution no strange thing. And truth it is: for which of the Prophets were not persecuted with Christ and his Apostles, and some of them in the end cruelly killed for the truths sake? Caine killed Abel, Isaac was persecuted of Ismael, Jacob was hated of Esau, Joseph was prisoned and set in the stocks, the Prohet Esay was cut in two with a Saw, Ieremy was stoned, Micheas was buffeted and fed with Bread and Water, Helias was sore persecuted, Eleazer, and the Woman with her seven Sons were cruelly killed. What Christ and the Apostles suffered it is well known. So that by many tribulations (as Paul saith, Acts 14.) we must enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. All the Holy Prophets, Christ, and his Apostles suffered such afflictions not for evil doing, but for preaching Gods Word, for rebuking of the World of sin, and for their faith in Jesus Christ.

3 Regum. 4. Regum. 2 Mac. 07.

This is the ordinance of God (my friends) this is the high-way to Heaven, by corporal death to eternal life; as Christ saith, Joh. 5. He that heareth my words and believeth in him that sent me, hath eternal life, and shall not come into judgment, but is escaped from death to life. Let us never fear death which is killed by Christ, but believe in him and live for ever, as Paul saith, Rom. 8. There is no damnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, which walk not after the Flesh, but after the Spirit. And again Paul saith, 1 Cor. 15. Death where is thy sting? Hell where is thy victory? Thanks be to God which hath given us victory through Jesus Christ.

Besides this, ye have seen and daily do see the Blood of your good Preachers and Brethren, which hath been shed in the Gospels cause in this sinful Sodom, this Bloody Jerusalem, this, unhappy City of London. Let not their Blood be forgotten, nor the Blood of your good Bishop Ridley, who like a shepheard, to your comfort and example hath given his life for his sheep. Good S. Paul saith, Heb. 13. Remember them that have spoken to you the Word of God, and look upon the end of their Conversation, and follow their faith.

Example of Gods Martyrs. John 10.

The Devil ever stirreth up false Teachers, as he hath done now over all England, as Peter, Paul, and Jude prophesied it should be, to poyson and kill our Souls with the false doctrine. And where he faileth of his purpoſe that way, then moveth he his members to perſecute the ſilly carkaſſes of the Saints, becauſe they will not deny nor diſſemble their pure faith in our living Chriſt, and confeſs a dead bready Chriſt, and honour the ſame as CHRIST God and Man, contrary to Gods Commandment, Exod. 10.

This is the working of Satan, who knowing his own juſt damnation, would all mankind to be partakers with him of the ſame; ſuch a mortal hatred beareth he againſt God and his People. And therefore when this wicked tempter could not kill Chriſt, with ſubtil tentation to fall down and worſhip him, then he ſtirred up his Servants the Biſhops, and Phariſees to kill his Body, whereby notwithſtanding the Devil loſt his title and intereſt which he had to mans Soul, and man by his precious paſſion and death was ranſomed from the Devil, Death and Hell, to immortality and life everlaſting: and ſo when Satan thought to have wonne all in killing of Chriſt, he loſt all: and ſo ſhall he do in us if we abide conſtant and ſtrong in the faith of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt unto the end. God grant it for his mercys ſake in Chriſt. Bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him, Amen.

1 John 5. 2 Cor. 10. Matth. 4. Where Satan could not bring Chriſt to fall down and worſhip him, he ſet the Phariſees to kill him.

Wherefore (my hearty beloved Brethren and Siſters) be of good comfort through Jeſus Chriſt, for he that is in us is ſtronger then he that is in the World. Therefore draw ye near to God, and he will draw near to you. Reſiſt the Devil, and he will (as James ſaith) flee from you. Beware of the leaven of the Phariſees. Touch not pitch leſt you be defiled therewith. Eat no ſwines fleſh, for it is againſt the law; I mean defile not your ſelves either inwardly or outwardly with this falſe and wicked Religion of Antichriſt: for it is nothing elſe but pitch and ſwines fleſh. Beware of the Beaſts mark, leſt ye drink of the cup of Gods wrath. If God have given you knowledge and faith, diſſemble not therewith. Deny not the known verity before men, leſt Chriſt deny you before his Father. Come away from Babylon, as John biddeth you, Apoc. 18. and touch no unclean thing, but ſeparate your ſelves from the company of the ungodly, as Paul commandeth you. Whatſoever you have done amiſs heretofore, now repent ye and amend: for with the Lord there is mercy and plentious redemption, Pſalm 126.

James. 2. Matth. 16. Apoc. 13. 14. 2 Cor. 6.

The third note.

The third thing and note which I gather out of the foreſaid words of Peter, is this, that he ſaith, Rejoyce becauſe ye are partakers of Chriſts paſſion. Our ſufferings, (my welbeloved) are Chriſts ſufferings, and that injury that is done to us for his ſake, he reckoneth it to be done to himſelf, as he ſaid to Saint Paul, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Therefore we ought to rejoyce in our ſufferings, as Paul writeth, which we ſuffer with Chriſt and one with another, as Peter ſaith, and ſo to fulfil that which is behind of the paſſions of Chriſt in our fleſh; which Chriſt hath, by his paſſion, fully redeemed and ſaved us in his own perſon: howbeit his Elect muſt ſuffer with him and for him unto the Worlds end, that he may be glorified in them, and they thereby corrected and cleanſed from ſin in this World, and be made more meet Temples for the Holy Ghoſt, and alſo obtain a great reward in heaven for their ſuffering for righteouſneſs ſake, according to his promiſe. And therefore I ſay (my Brethren) rejoyce in the Lord always, and again I ſay rejoyce. Let us rejoyce in the Croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whereby the World is crucified to us, and we to it.

Acts 9. Coloſſ. 1. Matth 6. Phil. 3. Gal. 6.

The fourth note

And why ſhould we ſo greatly rejoyce in the Croſs of Chriſt, which we now ſuffer? Becauſe (ſaith Peter) when his glory appeareth, we may be merry and glad. And this is the fourth note that I gather out of his words above written. Wherein is ſet out the reward of ſuffering, not to be had in this World; but at his coming to judgment when we ſhall be raiſed again: and then ſhall they that have ſown in tears, reap in joy, as Chriſt ſaith, Bleſſed are they that weep here: for they ſhall laugh. Bleſſed are ye when men hate you, and thruſt you out of their company, railing on you, and abhorring your name as an evil thing for the Son of mans ſake; rejoyce ye in that day and be glad, for your reward is great in Heaven.

Luke 6.

Wherefore (my dearly beloved) through the hope of this Heavenly Joy and Reward, which he that cannot lie hath promiſed (which joy is ſo great that no ear hath heard, no eye hath ſeen, nor the heart can think, where we ſhall dwell for ever in the Heavenly City, the celeſtiall Jeruſalem, in the preſence of God the Father, and Jeſus Chriſt our Mediator, as Paul ſaith, and in the company of innumerable Angels, and with the Spirits and Souls of all faithful and juſt men) rejoyce and be glad: and ſeeing ye be called to ſo great glory, ſee that you make your election and vocation ſure by good works, and ſpecially by ſuffering adverſity for the Goſpels ſake: for it is given us of God (ſaith Paul) not onely to believe in Chriſt, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake. Continue in prayer, and pray for me that I may end my courſe with joy. Have Brotherly love amongſt your ſelves, which is a token that ye be Chriſts Diſciples. Edifie and comfort one another in the Word of the Lord, and the God of peace and love be with you always, Amen. For your liberality and kindneſs ſhewed upon the priſoners and afflicted People of God in this time of perſecution, the Lord will reward you when he cometh to reward every man according to their deeds, and will not leave a cup of cold water beſtowed upon his faithful People unrewarded. God make you rich in all grace, that ye always having ſufficient, may be rich unto all manner of good works.

1 Cor. 2. Heb. 12. 1 Pet. 2. Phil. 3. John 14. Matth. 10. 2 Cor. 8.

The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the love of God, and the fellowſhip of the Holy Ghoſt, be with you always. Amen.

Your Brother now in bonds for the Goſpel,

Thomas Whittle.

To my loving and faithful Brother, J. Carleſs, priſoner in the King Bench.

Another Letter of T. Whittle.

THe ſame faith, for the which Abraham was accounted juſt, and Mary bleſſed, whereby alſo all juſt men live, the Lord God our loving Father increaſe and ſtabliſh in you and me, to the obtaining of eternal life in our alone and ſweet Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. Amen.

I cannot worthily and ſufficiently praiſe God (my heartily beloved Brother) for the conſolation and joy that I have received by reaſon of your loving Letters, repenting me much that I being ſo long ſo near you, did not enterpriſe to ſtirr up Familiarity and Communication between us by writing, to mutual conſolation in Chriſt. For what is there upon earth wherein to rejoyce (where all things are tranſitory and vain, yea man himſelf, reſpecting this life:) but (as David ſaith, Pſal. 16.) the Saints that dwell upon the earth, and ſuch as excel in vertue? But here now I conſider, that if the fellowſhip, love, and joy of faithful Men and Children of God being as we now be in double Bondage, the Body within clay walls, and the Soul within theſe frail earthly Bodys, be ſo great and comfortable; how unſpeakable will theſe joys be, when we ſhall be delivered from all corruption into the glorious liberty of the Sons of God? Where we ſhall be preſent together continually in our glorified Bodys beholding the face of our Father preſently (whom now we ſee but in the glaſs of Faith) with his dear Son Chriſt our Redeemer and Brother, and the bleſſed company of Angels and all faithful ſaved Souls.

The ſociety of Saints.

Oh the incomparable good things and Heavenly treaſures laid up for us in Heaven by Chriſt Jeſus! For the obtaining whereof, we ought to ſet light by all temporal grief and tranſitory afflictions, ſo much the more, in that our good God is faithful, and will not ſuffer us to be tempted above our ſtrength, and that namely in the end of our life, when the tree where it falleth lyeth ſtill, as the Preacher ſaith, Eccleſ. 11. when every one, cauſa ſua dormit, & cauſa ſua reſurget: for elſe before the end he ſuffereth his ſometime to fall, but not finally to periſh: as Peter ſinked upon the ſea, but yet was not drowned; and ſinned grievouſly upon the land through infirmity denying his Maſter, but yet found mercy: for the righteous falleth often times. And Chriſts Holy Apoſtles are taught to ſay, Remitte nobis debita noſtra. yea though the righteous fall, ſaith David, he ſhall not be caſt away, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. Oh the bottomleſs mercy of God towards us miſerable Sinners! He vouchſafe to plant in my heart true repentance and faith,

Gods Saints ſuffered ſometimes to fall, but not finally to periſh.

Anno 1556.

Faith, to the obtaining of remiſſion of all my ſins in the mercies of God, and merits of Chriſt his Son, and thereto I pray you ſay, Amen.

Oh my dearly Beloved, it greiveth me to ſee the ſpoyl and havock that Saul maketh with the Congregation of Chriſt: but what remedy? This is Gods will and ordinance, that his People ſhall here both be puniſhed in the fleſh and tryed in their Faith: as it is written, Many are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of all; for by a ſtrait path and narrow door muſt we enter. Whither? Into the joyful Kingdom of Heaven: therefore bleſſed are you and others that ſuffer perſecution for Chriſts ſake, for the profeſſion of the ſame. Pray for me and my Fellows (good Brother) that we may fight a good fight, that we may keep the Faith, and end our courſe with joyful gladneſs, for now the time of our deliverance is at hand. The Lord guide, defend, and keep us and you, and all his People in our journey, that we may ſafely through a ſhort death, paſs to that long laſting life.

Farewel, my dear and loving Brother and fellow-ſouldier in Chriſt; farewel, I ſay, in him who receive our Souls in peace when they ſhall depart from theſe Tabernacles, and he grant us a joyful Reſurrection, and a merry meeting at the laſt day, and continual dwelling together in his eternal heavenly Kingdom, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

Yours with my poor Prayer; other pleaſure can I do you none, Thomas Whittle, Miniſter.

Welfare of Soul.

Welfare of Body.

MY dear and welbeloved Brethren in Chriſt, Mr. Filles and Cuthert, I wiſh you all welfare of Soul and Body. Welfare to the Soul, is repentance of ſin, faithful affiance in Chriſt Jeſus, and a godly life. Welfare to the Body, is the health of the ſame, with all neceſſary things for this Body life. The Soul of man is immortal, and therefore ought to be well kept, leſt immortality to joy ſhould turn to immortality of ſorrow. As for the Body be it never ſo well kept and much made of, yet ſhortly by nature will it periſh and decay: But thoſe that are ingrafted and incorporated into Chriſt by true Faith, feeling the motion of Gods holy Spirit as a pledge of their election and inheritance, exciting and ſtirring them not only to ſeek heavenly things, but alſo to hate vice, and imbrace vertue, will not only do theſe things, but alſo if need require, will gladly take up their Croſs and follow their Captain, their King, and their Saviour Jeſus Chriſt (as his poor afflicted Church of England now doth) againſt that falſe and Antichriſtian Doctrine and Reiglion now uſed, and ſpecially that blaſphemous Maſs, wherein Chriſts Supper and holy Ordinance is altogether perverted and abuſed, contrary to his inſtitution and to Pauls proceedings: ſo that that which they have in their Maſs, is neither Sacrament of Chriſt, nor yet Sacrifice for ſin, as the Prieſts falſly pretend. It is a Sacrament, that is, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, a viſible ſigne of inviſible grace, when it is miniſtred to the Communicants according to Chriſts example, and as it was of late years in this Realm. And as for Sacrifice, there is none to be made now for ſin: for Chriſt with one Sacrifice hath perfected for ever thoſe that are ſanctified.

Matth. 26. Mark 14. Luke 22.

2 Cor. 11. No Sacrifice of the Maſs is to be made for ſin.

Heb. 9. 10.

Beware of falſe Religion, and mens vain Traditions, and ſerve God with reverence and godly fear according to the Doctrine of his Goſpel, whereto cleave ye that ye may be bleſſed, though of wicked me ye be hated and accurſed. Rather drink of the Cup of Chriſt with his Church than of the Cup of that Roſe coloured whore of Babylon, which is full of abominations. Rather ſtrive ye to go Heaven by the path which is ſtrait to fleſh and Blood, with the little flock, then to go in the wide way, following the inticements of the world and the fleſh, which leadeth to damnation.

Luke 11. Apoc. 18.

Like as Chriſt ſuffered in the fleſh, ſaith Saint Peter, ſo arm ye your ſelves with the ſame mind: for Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving us example to follow his foot-ſteps. Bleſſed are they that ſuffer for his ſake, great is their reward in Heaven. He that overcometh (ſaith St. John, Apoc. 2. 3.) ſhall eat of the Tree of life; he ſhall have a Crown of life, and not to be hurt of the ſecond death? he ſhall be cloathed with white array, and not be put out of the Book of life; yea, I will confeſs his name, ſaith Chriſt, before my Father and before his Angels, and he ſhall be a pillar in the houſe of God, and ſit with me on my ſeat. And thus I bid you farewel; mine own Brethren and dear Fellows in Chriſt. Whoſe grace and peace be alway with you, Amen.

1 Pet. 4. 3.

This world I do forſake.
To Chriſt I me take,
And for his Goſpels ſake,
Patiently death I take.
My Body to the duſt,
Now to return it muſt:
My Soul I know full well,
With my God it ſhall dwell.

Thomas Whittle.

Another Letter of Thomas Whittle written to a certain godly Woman.

Another Letter of T. Whittle to a godly Woman.

OH my dear and loving Siſter in Chriſt, be not diſmayed in this ſtorm of perſecution: for Paul calleth the Goſpel the word of the Croſs, becauſe it is never truly taught, but the Croſs and cruel Perſecution immediately and neceſſarily doth follow the ſame, and therefore it is a manifeſt token of Gods Truth and hath been here and is ſtill abroad, and that is the cauſe of the rage and cruelty of Satan againſt Chriſt and his members, which muſt be corrected for their ſins in this world: their Faith muſt be tryed, that after tryal and patient ſuffering the Faithful may receive the Crown of glory. Fear not therefore, my welbeloved, but proceed in the knowledge and fear of God, and he will keep you from all evil. Call upon his holy name, and he will ſtrengthen you and aſſiſt you in all your ways: and if it pleaſe him to lay his Croſs upon you for his Goſpels ſake, refuſe it not, neither ſhake it off by unlawful means, leſt you ſhould (as God forbid) find a more grievous Croſs and torment of Conſcience, if you ſhould diſſemble and deny the known verity, than is any perſecution or death of Body. Oh how happy are they that ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſs ſake? their reward is great in Heaven. The momentany afflictions of this life are not worthy of the glory that ſhall be ſhewed upon us. Oh remember the godly women of the old Teſtament and new, which lived in Gods ſervice and fear, and therefore are now in bliſs and commended for ever: and namely Judith, Heſter, Abigal, the Mother of the ſeven Sons, Mary Elizabeth, Suſanna, Lidia, and Phebe, and others. Set their examples before your eyes, and fear nothing, for Satan is conquered by our Saviour Chriſt; ſin is put to flight, and the gate of immortality and eternal life is ſet wide open; God grant we may enter therein through the door Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

To be ſtrong againſt Satan, and not to fear perſecution.

Good counſel, not to forſake the Lord for perſecution.

Whereof when he had once taſted, it became unto him as the fountain of lively water, that our Saviour Chriſt ſpake of to the Woman of Samaria, ſo as he never thirſted any more, but had a Well ſpringing unto everlaſting life. Inſomuch as when he was called by his friends from the Univerſity, and was placed in the Temple at London, there to attain to the knowledge of the Common Laws of the Realm, he yet continued ſtill in his former ſtudy and earneſt profeſſion of the Goſpel; wherein alſo he did not a little profit. Howbeit (ſuch is the frailty of our corrupt nature, without the ſpecial aſſiſtance of Gods Holy Spirit) through the continual accompanying, and fellowſhip of ſuch Worldly (I will not ſay too much youthful) young Gentlemen, as are commonly in that and the like houſes, he became by little and little a compartner of their fond follies, and youthful vanities, aſwel in his apparel as alſo in banquettings, and other ſuperfluous exceſſes: which he afterward (being again called by Gods merciful correction) did ſore lament and bewail, as appeareth by his own teſtimony notified, and left in a book of a certain friend of his, a little before his death, written with his own hand, in manner as followeth.

Mr. Green ſtudent in the Temple at London.

This did Mr. Bartlet Green write in Mr. Bartram Calthrops Book.

A good note or leſſon for young Lawyers to mark and follow.

TWo things have very much troubled me whileſt I was in the Temple, Pride and Gluttony; which under the colour of glory and good fellowſhip, drew me almoſt from God. Againſt both there is one remedy, by prayer earneſt, and without ceaſing. And forſomuch as vainglory is ſo ſubtle an Adverſary, that almoſt it woundeth deadly, ere ever a man can perceive himſelf to be ſmitten, therefore we ought ſo much the rather by continual prayer, to labour for humbleneſs of mind. Truly gluttony beginneth under a charitable pretence of mutual love and ſociety, and hath in it moſt uncharitableneſs. When we ſeek to refreſh our bodys, that they may be the more apt to ſerve God, and perform our dutys towards our neighbours, then ſtealeth it in as a privy thief, and murdereth both Body and Soul, that now it is not apt to pray, or ſerve God, apt to ſtudy, or labour for our neighbour.. Let us therefore watch and be ſober: For our Adverſary the Devil walketh about like a roaring Lion, ſeeking whom he may devour, And remember what Solomon ſaith, Melior eſt patiens viro forti, & qui dominatur animo expugnatore urbium. i. A patient man is better then a ſtrong warriour, and he that conquereth his own ſtomach, is better then he that Conquereth Towns and Cities.

Barlet Greene.

Thus we ſee the fatherly kindneſs of our moſt gracious and merciful God, who never ſuffereth his elect Children ſo to fall, that they lie ſtill in ſecurity of ſin, but oftentimes quickneth them up by ſome ſuch means, as perhaps they think leaſt of, as he did here this his ſtrayed ſheep. And now therefore to return to our hiſtory: for the better maintenance of himſelf in theſe his ſtudies, and other his affairs, he had a large exhibition of his Grandfather, Mr. Doctor Bartlet, who during the time of Greens impriſonment made unto him large offers of great livings, if he would recant, and (forſaking the truth, and Goſpel of Chriſt) come home again to the Church and Synagogue of Rome. But thoſe his perſwaſions (the Lord be therefore praiſed) took ſmal effect in his faithful heart, as the ſequel did declare. He was a man beloved of all men, (except of the Papiſts, who love none that love the truth) and ſo he well deſerved: for he was of a meek, humble, diſcreet, and moſt gentle behaviour to all. Injurious he was to none, beneficial to many, eſpecially to thoſe that were of the houſhold of Faith; as appeareth amongſt other, by his friendly dealing with Mr. Chriſtopher Goodman, being at that preſent a poor exile beyond the Seas. With whom this Bartlet Greene (as well for his toward learning, as alſo for his ſober and godly behaviour) had often ſociety in Oxford, in the days of good King Edward: which now, notwithſtanding his friends miſery and Baniſhment, he did not lightly forget; and that turned as it chanced (not without the providence of Almighty God) to the great grief of both; the one of heart, for the loſs of his friend, and the other of Body in ſuffering the cruell and murdering rage of Papiſts.

Large gifts offered Mr. Green by D. Bartlet to return to the Church of Rome.

Anno 1556.

Friendſhip between Chriſtopher Goodman and Mr. Green.

The cauſe hereof was a Letter which Green did write unto the ſaid Goodman, containing as well the report of certain demands or queſtions, which were caſt abroad in London (as appeareth hereafter in a Letter of his own penning, which he meant to have ſent unto Mr. Philpot, wherein he declareth his full uſage before the Biſhop of London and others) as alſo an anſwer to a queſtion made by the ſaid Chriſtopher Goodman, in a Letter written unto him, in which he required to have the certainty of the report which was ſpread amongſt them on the other ſide of the Seas, that the Queen was dead. Whereunto Mr. Green anſwered ſimply, and as the truth then was, that ſhe was not dead.

Occaſion of apprehending of Mr. Green came by Letters intercepted.

Theſe Letters with many other, written to divers of the godly exiles, by their friends here in England, being delivered to a meſſenger to carry over, came by the apprehenſion of the ſaid bearer, unto the hands of the King and Queens Council. Who at their convenient leiſure (which in thoſe days by ſome of them was quickly found out for ſuch matters) peruſed the whole number of the ſaid Letters, and amongſt them eſpied this Letter of Mr. Greens, written unto his friend Chriſtopher Goodman: in the Contents whereof (amongſt other news and private matters) they found theſe words; the Queen is not yet dead. Which words were onely written as an anſwer, to certifie Mr. Goodman of the truth of his former demand. Howbeit (to ſome of the Council) they ſeemed very hainous words, yea, treaſon they would have made them, if the Law would have ſuffered. Which when they could not do (and being yet very loath to let any ſuch depart freely, whom they ſuſpected to be a favourer of the Goſpel) they then examined him upon his faith in Religion, but upon what points, it is not certainly known.

Mr. Greens examined by the Council of his faith.

Neverthleſs (as it ſeemeth) his anſwers were ſuch, as little pleaſed them (eſpecially the annointed ſort) and therefore after they had detained him in priſon, as well in the Tower of London, as elſewhere, they ſent him at laſt unto Boner Biſhop of London, to be ordered according to his Eccleſiaſtical Law; as appeareth by their Letters ſent unto the Biſhop, with the ſaid priſoner alſo: wherein it may appear, that Sir John Bourne (then Secretary to the Queen) was a chief ſtirrer in ſuch caſes, yea and an entiſer of others of the Council; who otherwiſe (if for fear they durſt) would have been content to have let ſuch matters alone. The Lord forgive them their weakneſs (if it be his good pleaſure) and give them true repentance, Amen.

A Letter from the Council to Boner.

AFter our hearty commendations to your good Lordſhip, we ſend to the ſame herewith the Body of one Bartlet Greene, who hath of good time remained in the Tower for his obſtinate ſtanding in matters againſt the Catholick Religion, whom the King and Queens Majeſtys pleaſures are (becauſe he is of your Lordſhips Dioceſs) ye Poſtſcript. I Sir John Bourne will wait upon your Lordſhip, and ſignifie further the King and Queens Majeſties pleaſure hereſn.

Now that ye may the better underſtand the certainty of his handling, after this his coming unto Boners cuſtody, I have thought it good to put forth his own Letter, containing at large the diſcourſe of the ſame. Which Letter he wrote, and did mean to have ſent unto Mr.Philpot, but was prevented, belike either by Philpots death, or elſe (and rather) by the wily watching of his Keeper: for it came (by what means I know not certainly) unto the Biſhops hands, and being delivered unto his Regiſter, was found in one of his Books of Record. The Copy whereof here followeth.

A Letter of Bartlet Green, written unto John Philpot, *containing beſides other particular matter betwixt him and Mr.*Philpot, a brief rehearſal of his handling, and certain his Conferences with Boner and others, at his firſt coming to the Biſhops.

Mr. Green preſented before B. Boner.

THat which was wanting in talk (through my default) at your being here, I have ſupplied by writing in your abſence, now at the length getting ſome opportunity and leiſure. The 17. day of November, being brought hither by two of the Clock at Afternoon, I was preſented before my Lord of London and other two Biſhops, Mr. Deane, Mr. Roper, Mr. Welch, Dr.Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, and other two or three, all ſitting at one Table. There were alſo preſent Dr. Dale, Mr.George Mordant, Mr. Dee. Then after the Biſhop of London had read unto himſelf the Letter that came from the Council, he ſpake with more words, but (as I remember) to this effect; that the cauſe of their aſſembly was, to hear mine Examination, whereunto he had authority by the Council, and had provided M.Welch and another, whoſe name I know not (but well I remember, though he obtained it not, yet deſired he my Lord, that I might hear the Councils Letters) to be there if any matters of the Common Law ſhould ariſe, to diſcuſs them, he intreated my Lord to determine all Controverſies of Scriptures; and as for the Civil Law, he and Dr.Dale ſhould take on them.

M. Dee was yet under bond of Recognisance for the good appearing and forth coming till Chriſtmas next after.

M. Green commitged firſt to the Fleet, and upon what occaſion.

Wherefore he demanded of me the cauſe of mine Impriſonment: I ſaid, that the occaſion of mine Apprehenſion was a Letter which I wrote to one Chriſtopher Goodman, wherein (certifying him of ſuch News as happened here) among the reſt, I wrote that there were certain printed Papers of Queſtions ſcattered abroad. Whereupon, being ſuſpected to be privy unto the deviſing or publiſhing of the ſame, I was committed to the Fleet: but ſithence heard, I nothing thereof, after the Commiſſioners had received my ſubmiſſion. The ſum whereof was, that as I was ſure there neither could be true witneſſes, nor probable conjecture againſt me in that behalf; ſo refuſed I no puniſhment, if they of their Conſciences would judge me privy to the deviſing, printing, or publiſhing of thoſe Queſtions. But my Lord affirming that there was another cauſe of mine Impriſonment ſithence, demanded if I had not after, ſince I was committed to the Fleet, ſpoken or written ſomewhat againſt the natural preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Then deſired I his Lordſhip to be good unto me, truſting that he would put me to anſwer to no new matters, except I were firſt diſcharged of the old. And when I ſtood long in that, Mr.Welch anſwered, that it was procured that I ſhould ſo do, right well. For albeit I were Impriſoned for Treaſon, if during the time of endurance I had maintained Hereſie, that were no ſufficient allegation againſt the Ordinary; neither whether I were before him acquitted or condemned, ſhould it take away the former fault. Then my Lord affirming that I was not brought before him but for Hereſie, and the other Gentleman ſaying; that doubtleſs I was diſcharged of my former matter; my deſire was, that I might be charged according to the order of the Law, to hear my Accuſers.

D. Chedſey witneſſeth againſt Mr. Green.

Then Dr.Chedſey was ſent for, who reported that in the preſence of Mr.Moſley and the Lieutenant of the Tower, I ſpake againſt the real preſence and the ſacrifice of the Maſs, and that I affirmed that their Church was the Church of Antichriſt.

Talk between Mr. Green and the Commiſſioners.

Is not this true, quoth my Lord? I ſaid, Yea. Will you continue therein, quoth he? Yea, ſaid I. Wilt thou then maintain it by Learning, ſaid he? Therein, quoth I, I ſhould ſhew my ſelf to have little wit, knowing mine own youth and ignorance, if I would take on me to maintain any Controverſie againſt ſo many grave and learned Men. But my Conſcience was ſatisfied in the Truth, which was ſufficient to my ſalvation.

Roper. Conſcience? (quoth Mr.Roper) ſo ſhall every Jew and Turk be ſaved.

We had hereafter much talk to no purpoſe, and eſpecially on my part, who felt in my ſelf, through cold and open air, much dulneſs of wit and memory. At the length I was asked what Conſcience was: and I ſaid, the certifying of the Truth.

Perſwaſion of M. Welch to M. Green.

Mr. Welch. With that Mr. Welch roſe up, deſiring leave to talk with me alone. So he taking me aſide into another Chamber, ſaid that he was ſorry for my trouble, and would gladly ſee me at liberty: he marvelled, that I being a young Man, would ſtand againſt all the Learned men of the Realm, yea and contrary to the whole determination of the Catholick Church from Chriſts time, in a matter wherein I could have no great Learning; I muſt not think mine own wit better than all mens, but ſhould believe them that were Learned. I promiſe you (quoth he) I have read all Peter Martyrs Book, and Cranmers, and all the reſt of them, and have conferred them with the contrary, as Roffenſis, and the Biſhop of Wincheſter, &c. and could not perceive but that there was one continual Truth, which from the beginning had been maintained; and thoſe that at any time ſevered from this unity, were anſwered, and anſwered again. This was the ſum of his Tale, which lacked neither wit nor eloquence.

Anſwer of M. Green to M. Welch.

Mr. Green. Then ſpake I: Foraſmuch as it pleaſeth your Maſterſhip to uſe me ſo familiarly (for ſo he behaved himſelf towards me, as though I had been his equal) I ſhall open my mind freely unto you, deſiring you to take it in good worth. I conſider my youth, lack of wit and learning, which would God it were but a little under the opinion that ſome men have of me. But God is not bound to time, wit, or knowledge, but rather chuſeth infirma mundi, ut confunderet fortia, neither can men appoint bounds to Gods mercy: For, I will have compaſſion (ſaith he) on whom I will ſhew mercy. There is no reſpect of perſons with God, whether it be old or young, rich or poor, wiſe or fooliſh, Fiſher or Basket-maker. God giveth knowledge of his Truth, through his free grace, to whom he liſt, James 1. Neither do I think my ſelf only to have the Truth, but ſtedfaſtly believe that Chriſt hath his Spouſe the Catholick and Univerſal Church, diſperſed in many Realms where it pleaſeth him, Spiritus ubi vult ſpirat: no more is he addicted to any one place, than to the perſon and quality of one man. Of this Church I nothing doubt my ſelf to be a member, truſting to be ſaved by the Faith that is taught in the ſame. But how this Church is known, is in a manner the end of all Controverſie. And the true marks of Chriſts Church, is the true preaching of his Word and miniſtring of his Sacraments. Theſe marks were ſealed by the Apoſtles, and confirmed by the ancient Fathers, till at the length they were, through the wickedneſs of men and the Devil, ſore worn, and almoſt utterly taken away. But God be praiſed that he hath renewed the print, that his Truth may be known in many places. For my ſelf, I call God to witneſs, I have none hope in mine own wit and learning, which is very ſmall; but I was perſwaded thereto by him,

him, as by an * inſtrument, that is excellent in all good learning and living. And God is my record, that chiefly I ſought it of him by continual prayer with tears.

* By this inſtrument he meaneth Peter Martyr. Mr. Green ſeeking his knowledge of God with tears.

Furthermore, what I have done herein, it is not needful for me to ſpeak: but one thing (I ſay) I wiſh of God with all my heart, that all men which are of contrary judgment, would ſeek the truth in like manner. Now I am brought hither before a great many of Biſhops, and learned men, to be made a fool and a laughing ſtock, but I weigh it not a ruſh: for God knoweth that my whole ſtudy is to pleaſe him: Beſides that, I care not for mans pleaſure, or diſpleaſure.

Mr. Welſh replyeth to Mr. Green.

Mr. Welch. No Mr. Green, quoth he, think not ſo uncharitably of any man, but judge rather that men labour for your Souls health, as for their own. But alaſs, how will you condemn all our Forefathers? Or how can you think your ſelf to be of the Catholick Church, without any continuance, and contrary to the judgment of all learned men?

Green. Then ſaid I, Sir I have none Authority to judge any man: nevertheleſs, I doubt not but that I am of the true Catholick Church, howſoever our learned men here judge of me.

Welch. Why then, ſaid he, do you ſuppoſe your own wit and learning better then all theirs? if you do not give credit only to them, other learned men ſhall reſort unto you, that ſhall perſwade you by the Scriptures and Doctors.

Green. Sir, quoth I, God knoweth that I refuſe not to learn of any Child, but I would imbrace the truth from the mouth of a natural fool, in any thing wherein I am Ignorant, and that in all things, ſaving my faith: But concerning the truth, wherein I am throughly perſwaded, I cannot ſubmit my ſelf to learn, unleſs it be, as your Maſterſhip ſaid, that I peruſed to books on both ſides. For ſo might I make my ſelf an indifferent judge; otherwiſe I may be ſeduced.

And here we fell out again in a long talk of the Church wherein his learning and wit was much above mine: but in the end I told him I was perſwaded, and that he did but loſe his labour.

Welch. Why then (quoth he) what ſhall I report to my Lord?

Green. Even as pleaſeth you, quoth I, or elſe you may ſay that I would be glad to learn, if I had books on both ſides. So he going in, the Biſhops (even then riſen, and ready to depart) asked how he liked me? He anſwered, In faith my Lord, he will be glad to learn. Which words when they were taken, leſt they ſhould miſtake his meaning and mine, I ſaid, yea my Lord, ſo that I may have books on both ſides, as Calvin, and my Lord of Canterburies books, and ſuch other. Well, quoth my Lord, I will ſatisfie thy mind therein alſo; and they all were in great hope, that ſhortly I ſhould become a good Catholick as they call it.

Then was I brought into my Lords inner Chamber (* where you were) and there was put in a Chamber with Maſter Dee, who intreated me very friendly. That night I ſupped at my Lords table, and lay with Maſter Dee in the Chamber you did ſee. On the morrow I was ſerved at dinner from my Lords Table, and at night did eat in the Hall with his Gentlemen; where I have been placed ever ſithence, and fared wonderful well. Yea to ſay the truth, I had my liberty within the bounds of his Lordſhips houſe: for my lodging and fare, ſcarce have I been at any time abroad in better caſe ſo long together, and have found ſo much gentleneſs of my Lord, and his Chaplains, and others Servants, that I ſhould eaſily have forgotten that I was in priſon, were it not that this great chear was often powdred with unſavory ſauces of examinations, exhortations, poſings, and diſputations.

* Where Philpot was, he meaneth, to whom he worte this Letter.

Friendly entertainment of Mr. Green in B. Boners houſe for a time.

For ſhortly after ſupper the firſt Munday at night, I was had into my Lords Bed-chamber, and there he would know of me how I came firſt into theſe Hereſies: I ſaid I was perſwaded thereto by the Scriptures, and Authorities of the Doctors, alledged by Peter Martyr in his Lectures upon the eleventh Chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, whiles he intreated there on that place De cæna Domini, by the ſpace of a Month together. But then then my Lord inforced the plainneſs of Chriſts Words, and his Almighty power, demanding of me, what reaſon ſhould move me from the literal ſenſe of the words: but I having no luſt to thoſe matters, would have alledged that there were books ſufficient of that matter, as Peter Martyr, Cranmer and Oecolam padius: nevertheleſs when this ſhift would not ſerve, but I was conſtrained to ſay ſomewhat, I ſaid I was moved from the literall ſenſe by the manner of ſpeaking, by the Circumſtance, and by Conference of other places of the Scriptures. It is evident that Chriſt took bread, and that he ſhewed them (they ſeeing it) Bread, which he affirmed to be his Body.

Mr. Green had in private examination before the Biſhop. Mr Green urged with the literal ſenſe of the words (this is my Body.

Anno 1556.

Cauſes moving Mr. Green from the literal ſenſe of the words aforeſaid.

Argument.

Chriſt affirmed that bread was his Body.

But that affirmation taken literally, can by no means be true.

Ergo, the words, if they be taken according to the Letter, cannot be true.

For this predication, Panis eſt corpus Chriſti, or corpus Chriſti eſt panis, is neither identica nor accidentalis, nor eſſentialis prædicatio. Wherefore of neceſſity I muſt ſay it was ſpoken in the like ſenſe, as Chriſt was a door, a vine, and a way. Neither can it ſerve to ſay; that it was not of Bread that he affirmed to be his Body, and that for two cauſes.

Why the words of Chriſt of his Body muſt be take n ſpiritually.

For whatſoever he ſhewed, that was Bread; for nought elſe was ſeen.

Argument.

But that which he ſhewed he affirmed to be his Body.

Ergo, he Affirmed of Bread that it was his Body.

The ſecond reaſon is; for that it was not changed before, ſeeing benedixit, is gratias egit, or elſe Chriſt affirmed no true propoſition, and you are without Authority.

In the end of this Letter, there were noted theſe ſentences following, collected for Confirmation of his former aſſertions, videlicet, Reaſons moving Mr. Green to take the words ſpritually, not literally.

Eadem locutio poculi, i. The ſame phraſe is uſed and ſpoken, upon the cup.

Dicitur poſtea panis. It is called Bread in the ſame place afterward.

Eadem ratione rejecero corpus, qua tu panem, i. By the ſame reaſon as it may be denied to be Bread, it may be denied to be the Body.

Aſcendit in cœlum, i. His Body aſcended into Heaven.

Corpore nobis factus eſt ſimilis in omnibus poſt nativitatem. At noſtrum corpus non poteſt eſſe in duobus locis. Ergo, &c. In Body he was like to us in all things after his nativity (ſin excepted.) Seeing then our Body cannot be two places at once: Ergo, neither his.

Diſcipuli non ſtupebant, &c. His Diſciples took it as no miracle nor wonder.

The laſt Examination and Condemnation of Mr. Green.

The laſt examination of Mr. Green.

THus (as it ſeemeth) for this time they left off. But not long after the Biſhop perceiving Greens learning and conſtancy to be ſuch, as neither he, nor any of his Doctors and Chaplains could by the Scriptures reſell, began then to object and put in practice his chief and ſtrongeſt argument againſt him; which was the rigour of the Law, and cruelty of Execution: an argument I enſure you, which without the ſpecial grace of our God to fleſh is importable. And therefore uſing Laws a cloak of his tyranny, the 28. day of November, the ſaid Bp. examined him upon certain points of Chriſtian Religion. Whereunto when he had anſwered, the Biſhop appointed the Regiſter (as their moſt common manner is) to draw thereout an order of confeſſion. Which being afterwards read unto Green, was alſo ſubſcribed by him, as a confirmation of his former aſſertions: The tenour whereof here enſueth.

The confeſſion and ſaying of Bartlet Green.

A draught of Mr. Greens confeſſion, gathered by the Biſhops Regiſter.

BArtlet Green born in the City of London in the Pariſh of Baſſingſhal of the Dioceſs of London, and of the age of 25. years, being examined in the Biſhops palace, the 27. day of November, Anno 1555. upon certain Articles, anſwered as foloweth. viz. that neither in the time of King Edward, after the Tranſubſtantiation denied.

In which receiving and uſing, this Examinate ſaith, that the other aforenamed did receive the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and that they received material Bread and material Wine, no ſubſtance thereof changed, and ſo no real preſence of the Body and Blood of Chriſt there being, but only grace added thereto. And further, this Examinate ſaith, that he had heretofore, during the Reign of the Queens Majeſty aforeſaid, refuſed, and ſo now doth refuſe to come and hear Maſs, and to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, as they are now uſed and miniſtred in this Church of England, becauſe he ſaith, that concerning the Maſs, he cannot be perſwaded in his Conſcience, that the Sacrifice pretended to be in the ſame, is agreeable to Gods Word, or maintainable by the ſame? and that without deadly offence he cannot worſhip the Body and Blood of Chriſt, that is pretended to be there. And as concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, this Examinate ſaith, that he heretofore during the ſaid Reign hath refuſed, and now doth refuſe to receive the ſame, as is now uſed in this Church of England, becauſe it is not uſed according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, but both in a ſtrange Tongue, and alſo not miniſtred in both kinds; and beſides that, contrary to Gods Word it is there taught, that the thing there miniſtred is to be adored, as the real and true Body of Chriſt. And furthermore this Examinate ſaith, that during the ſaid Reign he hath not been confeſſed to the Prieſt, nor received Abſolution at his hands, becauſe he is not bound by Gods Word to make auricular Confeſſion.

Bartlet Green.

Many other Conferences and publick Examinations they brought him unto. But in the end (ſeeing his ſtedfaſtneſs of Faith to be ſuch, as againſt the which neither their threatnings, nor yet their flattering promiſes could prevail) the 15. day of January the Biſhop cauſed him with the reſt above-named, to be brought into the Conſiſtory in Pauls; where being ſet in his Judgment Seat, accompanied with Fecknam, then Dean of the ſame Church, and other his Chaplains, after he had condemned the other Six, he then calling for Bartlet Green, began with theſe, or the like words:

M. Green with the other ſix Martyrs brought to the Conſiſtory.

Honourable Audience, I think it beſt to open unto you the Converſation of this man, called Bartlet Green. And becauſe you ſhall not charge me, that I go about to ſeek any mans Blood, here you ſhall hear the Councils Letters, which they ſent with him unto me. The effect whereof is; that whereas he had been of long time in the Tower of London for Hereſie, they have now ſent him unto me to be ordered, according to the Laws therefore provided. And now to thee Bartlet Green I propoſe theſe nine Articles. Then he read the Articles above mentioned, which were generally objected to all theſe ſeven Priſoners, to wit, Thomas Whittle, John Tudſon, John Went, Thomas Brown, Iſabel Foſter, Joan Laſhford, Bartlet Green.

B. Boners words to the Audience.

Nine Articles put to M. Green.

M. Green not ſuffered to anſwer to the Articles.

But when Maſter Green would have anſwered them particularly, he was put to ſilence, with promiſe that he ſhould have time to anſwer ſufficiently, and therefore the Biſhop proceeding ſaid, that when Green came firſt to his houſe, he deſired to have the Books of the ancient Doctors of the Church to read, which he ſaid he granted him.

Whereunto Green anſwered and ſaid, that if the Doctors were with indifferent judgment weighed, they made more a great deal with him, then they did with them.

Doctors read with indifferent judgment, make more againſt the Papiſts, than with them.

Feck. Upon which words Fecknam, Dean of of Pauls, ſtood up, and marvelling why he ſaid ſo, asked him if he would be content to ſtand to the judgment of the Doctors.

Green. Green then ſaid, that he was content to ſtand to the Doctors judgment.

Feck. I will then propound unto you (quoth Fecknam) the Doctors, and interpret them your ſelf. So he alledged a place of Chryſoſtom, Ad Popul. Antioch. Which was this, Elias aſcendens melotem ſuum poſt ſe reliquit: Chriſtus vero aſcendens carnem ſuam aſſumpſit, & eandem poſt ſe reliquit i. Elias going up, left his Cloak behind him: but Chriſt aſcending up took his fleſh, and alſo left it behind him. And he demanded Green, how he underſtood the place.

Chryſoſt. ad Pop. Antioch.

Green. Then Green prayed him that he would conferr the Doctors ſayings together, and therefore alledged the ſame Doctor again, writing upon the 1 Cor 10. An non eſt panis quem nos benedicimus, communicatio corporis Domini? Nonne eſt calix, &c. i. Is not the Bread which we bleſs the Communication of the Lords Body? Whereby he proved that this Doctor called this Sacrament but a ſign of the Lords Body. Many other words of probation and denial were betwixt them.

Chryſoſt. in 1 Cor. 10.

Feck. At laſt Fecknam demanded of him, how long he had been of this Opinion. For Mr. Green (ſaid he) you confeſſed once to me, that when you were at Oxford at School, you were called the rankeſt Papiſt in that Houſe, and being compelled to go to the Lecture of Peter Martyr, you were converted from your old Doctrine.

Green. And Green confeſſed the ſame.

Feck. Then again he ſaid, that Green told him that the ſaid Peter Martyr was a Papiſt in his firſt coming to Oxford. Whereupon he made an exclamation, and prayed the People to conſider how vain his Doctrine that he profeſſed was, which was grounded upon one man, and that upon ſo unconſtant a man as Peter Martyr, which perceiving the wicked intent of the Council, was content to pleaſe them, and forſake the true and Catholick Faith.

M. Green firſt a rank Papiſt. unſtrue report of P. Martyr.

Green. Green ſaid that he grounded not his Faith upon Martyr, nor any other, nor did believe ſo becauſe Martyr believed the ſame? but becauſe that he had heard the Scriptures, and the Doctors of the Church truly and wholſomly expounded by him; neither had he any regard of the man, but of the word which he ſpake. And further he ſaid, that he heard the ſaid Mr. Peter ſay often, that he had not as yet, while he was a Papiſt, read Chryſoſtom upon the tenth to the Corinths, nor many other places of the Doctors: but when he had read them, and well conſidered them, he was content to yield to the Doctors, having firſt humbled himſelf in prayer, deſiring God to illuminate him, and bring him to the true underſtanding of the Scripture. Which thing (ſaid Green) if you my Lord would do, I do not doubt, but God would open your eyes, and ſhew you his Truth, no more then I do doubt his words to be true that ſaith; Aſk, and it ſhall be given to you; knock and it ſhall be opened unto you, &c.

P. Martyr firſt turned from Popery to the Truth by prayer and reading the Doctors.

Feck. Then Fecknam asked him, what he thought of this Article; Sanctam Eccleſiam Catholicam.

Green. And Green anſwered, that he did believe one holy and univerſal Church throughout all the world.

One holy Catholick Church.

Feck. Then Fecknam ſaid, that he would fain have a ſure mark and token, whereby he might know this Church? and therefore he prayed Green to define unto him this Church.

Green. Green anſwered, that this Church did agree in verity of the true Doctrine of Chriſt, and was known by the true adminiſtration of his Sacraments.

True marks of the Church.

Feck. Whereupon Fecknam ſaid, that he would prove the Church whereof he was, to be never agreeing in Doctrine, but always to have been in Controverſie in their Religion. For (ſaid he) Luther and Zuinglius could never agree in their writings or ſayings, nor Oecolampadius with Caroloſtadius, nor Caroloſtadius with either either Zuinglius or Luther, &c. for Luther writing upon the Sacrament of the Altar, ſaid, that in hoc pane, vel ſub hoc pane corpus Domini accipimus. Zuinglius controlling him, ſaid, Sub ſigno panis corpus Domini accipimus. And the other controlled him in like caſe.

Diſagreement noted amongſt Profeſſors of the Goſpel by Fecknam.

The Goſpellers in words ſeem to diſſent, but in effect do agree with the Word.

Green. Then Mr. Green proved their opinions of the Sacrament to be one in effect, being rightly weighed: and though their words did not ſound all one, yet they meant one thing; and their Opinions were all one, as he proved by divers other examples.

Fecknam. Then Fecknam deſired him that he would not ſo wilfully caſt himſelf away, but to be rather conformable to reaſon, and that my Lord Biſhop there preſent would be good unto him, and would grant him reſpit (if he would demand it) for a fortnight or three weeks, and that he ſhould chuſe any Learned man whom he would, and ſhould go with him home to his houſe, and that he whom he would chuſe, would willingly take the pains to read and confer the Doctors with him, and open the Doctors minds and meanings unto him.

Boner forbiddeth M. Green to be called Maſter.

Boner. Then Boner ſaid, that he was proud, and an obſtinate Boy; and therefore he bade Fecknam to hold his peace, and to call him no more Mr. Green: for (ſaid he) you ought not to call an Heretick Maſter.

Note the blind ignorance of Pendleton, as though the Kingdom of Chriſt was not gotten at the death of Chriſt.

Pendleton. After this Dr. Pendleton alleadged to him this Text out of the 22. of Luke; Ex hoc non manducabo illud donec impleatur in regno Dei. Here (ſaid he) you muſt confeſs your Opinion to be falſe, elſe you muſt ſay that Chriſt was a lyar: for Chriſt ſaid, I will eat no more of this, while it be fulfilled in my Fathers Kingdom. If Chriſt did eat no more the Bread when he ſpake theſe words, then muſt you ſay that he was a lyar: for he did eat Bread after with his Diſciples before he aſcended. But if you ſay he did eat his Body then, and after but Bread, it will not agree with the Scriptures, nor with good reaſon.

This Biſhop belike was the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Green. Then Green anſwered and ſaid, that this was ſpoken by an anticipation, as one of their own Biſhops, (which is now dead) did ſay.

Pendleton. Then Dr. Pendleton ſaid, that that was no ſufficient diſcharge, nor no ſufficient anſwer for him in this caſe; for (ſaid he) it is well known that the Biſhop was of a contrary Opinion to you, and that he died a good Chriſtian man.

Green. To which words Green ſaid, I do not call him to witneſs in this caſe, as though he were a ſufficient man, to prove my ſaying to be true in this matter: but I do alledge him againſt you, as Paul did the Scripture, which he found graven in the Altar of the Athenians, againſt themſelves, ignoto Deo.

Theſe with many other words were between them, which I do overpaſs, becauſe it were too long to ſtand upon recital of every thing. Laſt of all the Biſhop asked him, if he would recant. He ſaid nay, he would not. But my Lord (ſaid he) in old time there were no men put to death for their Conſcience, until ſuch time as Biſhops found the means to make it death to believe contrary to them; but Excommunication (my Lord) was the greateſt penalty which men had for their Conſcience; yea, inſomuch that S. Auguſtine wrote, and commanded that no man ſhould be put to death for his Opinion.

In the old time Excommunication was the greateſt penalty in matters of Faith and Conſcience.

Boner. Then Boner ſaid, that when S. Auguſtine ſaw what inconveniences followed of that Commandment, he wrote again to the temporal Rulers, commanding them to puniſh their Bodies alſo.

Green. But, ſaid Green, he bade not put them to death.

Bon. He bade puniſh them, quoth Boner.

Green. Yea, ſaid Green, but not put them to death.

Boner. That they ſhould be puniſhed, quoth Boner again.

Sentence given againſt Mr. Green.

This talk ended, he asked Green if he would recant, and return to their Romiſh Mother. Which when he denied, the Biſhop pronounced the Sentence definitive againſt him, and ſo committed him to the Sheriffs of London, who cauſed him to be carried to Newgate.

And as he was going thither, there met with him two Gentlemen, being both his ſpecial Friends, minding belike to comfort this their perſecuted Brother: but at their meeting, their loving and friendly hearts (not able any longer to hide themſelves) were manifeſted by the abundance of their pitiful tears. To whom, when Green ſaw them, he ſaid in theſe or like words, Ah my Friends, is this your comfort you are come to give me, in this my occaſion of heavineſs? Muſt I, who needed to have comfort miniſtred to me, become now a comforter of you? And thus declaring his moſt quiet and peaceable Mind and Conſcience, he chearfully ſpake to them and others, until he came to the Priſon door, into the which he joyfully entred, and there remained always either in Prayer (whereunto he much gave himſelf) or elſe in ſome other godly meditations and exerciſes, unto the 28. day of January, when he with his other above-mentioned Brethren went moſt chearfully unto the place of their torments, often repeating, as well by the way, as alſo at the Stake, theſe Latin Verſes following.

The words of M. Green to his Friends, by the way going to Newgate.

Chriſte Deus, ſine te ſpes eſt mihi nulla ſalutis:
Te duce vera ſequor, te duce falſa nego.

Verſes of M. Green written in his Friends Books.

In Engliſh thus,

O Chriſt, my God, ſure hope of health,
Beſides thee have I none:
The truth I love, and falſhood hate,
By thee my Guide alone.

During the time of his Impriſonment in Newgate, divers of his Friends had acceſs unto him, to whom he gave ſundry godly Exhortations, wherewith they were not only well contented, but for better remembrance as well of the ſame his inſtructions, as alſo of his own good and godly perſon, they deſired him to write ſomewhat in their Books, which requeſt he willingly granted, as in manner here enſueth.

Theſe Verſes were written in a Book of M. Huſſey of the Temple.

Behold thy ſelf by me,
Such one was I, as thou:
And thou in time ſhalt be,
Even duſt as I am now.
Bartlet Green.

Theſe Verſes were alſo written in a Book of Mr. William Fleetwood, of the ſame Houſe.

My Reſting-road is found,
Vain hope and hap adieu:
Love whom you liſt with change,
Death ſhall me rid from you.
Barlet Green.

The ſingular modeſty and humble nature of M. Green.

Amongſt other divers and ſingular good vertues of this good man, ſpecially in him was to be noted ſuch a modeſt nature, ſo humbly thinking of himſelf, as in few men is to be found, ever dejecting himſelf under that was in him, and ever ſeeming to be leſs than he was, ſo that nothing leſs he could abide, than to hear of his praiſe or commendation; as well declareth not only his Letter written to Mr. Philpot, wherein he doth earneſtly expoſtulate with him, for ſlandering him with praiſe of his wit and learning, and other manifold vertues of great excellency; but alſo by his own ſpeech and anſwers in his Examination, wherein he caſteth from him all knowledge of learning and cunning, when notwithſtanding he had more in him, than to any mans eyes did appear.

So great and admirable was this gift of modeſty grafted in the nature of him, ſo far abhorring from all pride and arrogancy, that as he could not abide any thing that was ſpoken to his advancement or praiſe; ſo neither did there appear in him any ſhew or brag in thoſe things wherein he might juſtly glory, which were his puniſhments and ſufferings for the cauſe and quarrel of Chriſt. For when he was beaten and ſcourged with rods by Biſhop Boner (which ſcarce any man would believe, nor I neither, but that I heard it of him, which heard it out of his mouth) and he greatly rejoyced in the ſame, yet his ſhamefaſt modeſty was ſuch, that never he would expreſs any mention thereof, leſt he ſhould ſeem to glory too much in himſelf, ſave that only he opened the ſame to one Mr. Cotton of the Temple, a friend of his, a little before his death.

Moreover, to his rare and maidenly modeſty in him was alſo adjoyned the like nature of mercy and pitiful compaſſion; which affection though it ſeemeth to be little regarded of ſome, yet in my mind is there no other thing wrought in nature, wherein man reſembleth more truly the Image of the high Majeſty of Almighty God, then this. And as in this reſpect of merciful tenderneſs, man only excelleth all other beaſts; ſo almoſt no leſs may this man ſeem to paſs many other men, whoſe cuſtomable property and exerciſe was to viſit the poor Priſoners with him in Priſon both with Bodily relief, and alſo with Spiritual comfort: and finding many of them (I mean ſuch as were there for theft and other naughty facts) very penitent and ſorry for their evel demeanours, in hope of their amendment, did not only by mouth, but alſo by his Letters require, yea, as it were of duty in love, did charge his Friends to travel for their deliverances; ſuch was the pity and charitable mercy of this godly and moſt true member of Chriſts Church, as appeareth by this Letter here following.

The pitiful nature of Mr. Green.

To my very loving Friends and Maſters Mr. Goring, Mr. Fernham, Mr. Fleetwood, Mr. Ruſſwel, Mr. Bell, Mr. Huſſey, Mr. Calthrop, Mr. Bowyer, and other my Maſters of the Temple, Bartlet Green wiſheth health of Body and Soul.

A Letter of M. B*artlet Green* to certain of his loving Friends in the Temple.

VEry Friends are they which are knit together with the knot of Charity; Charity doth not decay, but increaſe in them that die faithfully: whereof it followeth, that though we be abſent in body, yet are we preſent in the ſpirit, coupled together with the unity of Faith in the bond of peace, which is love. How is he worthy the name of a Friend, that meaſureth his Friendſhip with the diſtance of a place, or parting of perſons? If thy friend be out of ſight, is thy friendſhip ended? If he be gone into the Country, wilt thou ceaſe to love him? If he be paſſed the Seas, will you ſo forſake him? If he be carried into Heaven, is charity hindred thereby

What true friendſhip is. True friendſhip is not meaſured by diſtance of place or of perſons.

On the one ſide we have the uſe of the Fathers from the Primitive Church, that gave thanks for their friends that died in the Faith, to prove that Charity died not with death. On the other ſide (ſaith Horace) Cœlum non animum mutant, qui trans mare currunt.

What ſpeak I of Horace? Saith not St. Paul the ſame thing? For we are members of his Body, of his fleſh, and of his Blood, yea, we are members one of another. Is the hand or arm, foot or leg a member, when it is diſſevered from the Body? How can we be members, except we be joyned together? What is the line that coupleth us, but love? When all things ſhall fail, love faileth never. Hope hath his end, when we get that he hoped for. Faith is finiſhed in Heaven, love endureth for ever: Love (I ſay) that proceedeth of Charity; for carnal love, when that which he loveth is loſt, doth periſh with the fleſh. Neither was that ever but fleſhly love, which by diſtance of place, or ſevering of bodies is parted aſunder. If love be the end or ſum of the Law, if Heaven and Earth ſhall periſh, yet one jot of Gods Word ſhall not decay, why ſhould we think that love laſteth not for ever?

Love only coupleth together. All other things fail. Love only endureth for ever.

I need not to write much to you my friends, neither can I have leiſure now that the Keepers are riſen: but this I ſay; If we keep Chriſts Commandment in loving each other, as he loved us, then ſhould our love be everlaſting. This friendſhip Paul felt when it moved him to ſay, that neither length nor breadth (meaning no diſtance of place) neither height nor depth ſhould ſever him from the love of Chriſt. Weigh well this place, and mete it with Pauls meaſures; ſo ſhall we find that if our love be untainted, it can never be ended. Now may you ſay, Why writeſt thou this? certainly to the end that if our friendſhip be ſtable, you may accompliſh this the laſt requeſt of your friend, and perform after my death the friendſhip we began in our life, that amity may increaſe until God make it perfect at our next meeting together.

Love unfeigned never endeth.

Mr. Fleetwood, I beſeech you remember Wittrance and Cook, two ſingular men amongſt common Priſoners. Mr. Fernham and Mr. Bell, with Mr. Huſſey (as I hope) will dipatch Palmer and Richardſon with his Companions. I pray you Mr. Palmer think on John Grove, an honeſt poor man Trafford and Rice Apprice his Accomplices: My Couſin Thomas Witton (a Scrivener in Lombard-ſtreet) hath promiſed to further their delivery: at the leaſt he can inſtruct you which way to work, I doubt not but that Mr. Bowyer will labour for the good wife Cooper for ſhe is worthy to be holpen) and Berard the Frenchman. There be alſo divers other well diſpoſed men, whoſe deliverance if ye will not labour for, yet I humbly beſeech you to ſeek their relief, as you ſhall ſee cauſe: namely, of Henry Apprice, Lancelot, Hobbes, Lother, Homes, Carre, and Bockingham, a young man of goodly gifts in Wit and learning, and (ſaving that he is ſomewhat wild) likely to do well hereafter. There be alſo two women, Coningham and Alice Alexander that may proye honeſt. For theſe and all other poor Priſoners here I make this my humble ſute and prayer to you all my Maſters, and eſpecially good friends, beſeeching you of all bonds of amity, for the precious Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, in the bowels of mercy, to tender the cauſes of miſerable Captives; help to clothe Chriſt, viſit the afflicted, comfort the ſorrowful, and relieve the needy. The very God of peace guide your hearts to have mercy on the poor, and love faithfully together, Amen. This preſent Monday when I look to die, and live for ever.

The ſute of M. Green for the ſaving of certain poor Priſoners in Newgate.

Yours as ever, Bartlet Green.

Another Letter of M. Green to Mrs. Elizabeth Clark.

WOuld God (if it were his pleaſure) that with this Letter I might ſend you my heart and mind, and whatſoever there is in me elſe, that pertaineth to God: So ſhould I think it the beſt meſſage, and happieſt Letter that ever I could write. But though I obtain not my deſire, yet ſhall I not ceaſe with continual Prayer to labour for you, deſiring Almighty God to increaſe that which he hath long ſince begun in you, of ſober life, and earneſt zeal towards his Religion. In Faith (as ſaith St. Paul) ſhe that is a true widow and friendleſs, putteth her truſt in God, continuing day and night in ſupplication and Prayer; but ſhe that liveth in pleaſure is dead, even yet alive. And verily a true widow is ſhe that hath married Chriſt, forſaking the vanities of the world, and luſt of the fleſh. For as the married woman careth how to love, pleaſe, and ſerve her husband; ſo ought the widow to give all her heart and Soul, thoughts and words, ſtudies and labours, faithfully to love God, vertuouſly to bring up her Children and houſhold, and diligently to provide for the poor and oppreſſed.

Therefore St. Paul firſt inſtructeth a widow how to behave her ſelf, that is, Not to live in pleaſure, then to watch unto prayer, is the only means to obtain all our deſires; ſtedfaſtly laying up all our truſt in God, as David right well ſaith, Firſt eſchew evil, then do good. Of Anna, the praiſe was written, that ſhe never went out of the Temple, but ſerved God with faſting and prayer night and day; ſo well had ſhe eſpouſed Chriſt. Judith wore a Smock of hair, continuing in faſting, and had good report of all men.

The next care that belongeth to a widow, is, that ſhe bring up her Children and houſhold godly in the nurture and information of the Lord. Whereof St. Paul ſaith; If any have Children or Nephews, let them learn firſt to rule their own houſe godly, and to recompence their elders. The incontinency and covetouſneſs of Phineas and Ophny, corrected by Ely their Father, provoked Gods vengance upon him and all his kindred. The over tender love of Abſalom expelled David from his Kingdom. The unrebuked ſins of Ammon incouraged Abſalom to ſlay his Brother; moſt manifeſt examples againſt the Parents, for the offences of their Children.

Of

Of the laſt part Saint Paul ſheweth that a widow ſhould be choſen, If ſhe have nouriſhed her Children, if ſhe have been liberal to ſtrangers, if ſhe have waſhed the Saints feet, and if ſhe have miniſtred to them in Adverſity. Herein it is evident how earneſtly Saint Paul would have widows bent towards the poor; for that (as though they onely had been therefore meet) he appointed onely widows to miniſter to the Saints, and to gather for the poor. Which uſe alſo continued almoſt throughout the Primitive Church, that widows had the charge and gathering for the poor men and ſtrangers.

The office and exerciſe of Chriſtian widows in the primitive Church.

Of your neighbours I need not to put you in Remembrance, ſeeing you daily feed them with good Hoſpitality by which means alſo many foreiners are of you relieved: but of the poor Almſ-houſes, and miſerable priſoners here in London, many lacking their liberty without cauſe, ſome under the Colour of Religion, ſome onely kept for fees, and ſome on private mens diſpleaſure. Alas that Chriſt ſo hungereth, and no man will feed him; is ſore oppreſt with thirſt, and no man will give him drink; deſtitute of all lodging, and not relieved; naked, and not clothed; ſick, and not viſited; impriſoned, and not ſeen.

In times paſt men could beſtow large ſums of money on copes, veſtiments, and ornaments of the Church. Why rather follow we not * St. Ambroſes example, which ſold the ſame for the relief of the poor, or Chryſoſtoms Commandment, which willed firſt to deck and garniſh the living Temple of God? But alas, ſuch is the wickedneſs of theſe our laſt days, that nothing moveth us; neither the pure Doctrine, the godlineſs of life, nor good examples of the Ancient Fathers. If in any thing they erred, if they have written any thing that ſerveth for ſects and diſſention, that will their charitable Children imbrace, publiſh and maintain with ſword, fagot, and fire: But all in vain; they ſtrive againſt the ſtream. For though in deſpite of the truth, by force of the cares of crafty perſwaſion, they may bring themſelves into the Haven of Hell: yet can they not make all men believe that the banks move whileſt the ſhip ſaileth, nor ever ſhall be able to turn the direct courſe of the ſtream of Gods Truth. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſtrengthen you in all pure Doctrine and upright living, and give you grace vertuouſly to bring up your Children and Family, and carefully to provide for the poor and opreſſed, Amen. At Newgate the 20. of January. Anno 1556.

* St Ambroſe took from the Church, and gave to the poor; we take from the poor their tithes and impropriations, & give them to Churche and miniſters where is nothing but ſinging and idleneſs.

Another certain writing of Mr. Bartlet Green.

Another certain writing of Mr. Bartlet Green

BEtter is the day of death (ſaith Solomon) then the day of birth. Man that is born of a Woman liveth but a ſhort time, and is repleniſhed with many miſeries; but happy are the dead that die in the Lord. Man of woman is born in travel, to live in miſery; man through Chriſt doth dy in joy, and live in felicity. He is born to dy, and dieth to live. Straight as he cometh into the World, with cries he uttereth his miſerable eſtate; ſtraight as he departeth, with ſongs he praiſeth God for ever. Scarce yet in his cradle, three deadly enemies aſſault him; after death no Adverſary may annoy him. Whileſt he is here, he diſpleaſeth God; when he is dead, he fulfilleth his will. In this life here he dieth through ſin; in the life to come he liveth in righteouſneſs. Through many tribulations in earth he is ſtill purged; with joy unſpeakable in Heaven is he made pure for ever. Here he dieth every hour; there he liveth continually. Here is ſin; there is righteouſneſs. Here is time; there is eternity. Here is hatred; there is love. Here is pain; there is pleaſure. Here is miſery; there is felicity. Here is corruption; there is immortality. Here we ſee vanity; there ſhall we behold the Majeſty of God with triumphant and unſpeakable joy in glory everlaſting. Seek therefore the things that are above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father; unto whom, with the Son and the Holy Ghoſt, be all honour and glory, World without end, Amen.

Yours in Chriſt, Bartlet Green.

Divers other Letters and matters there were beſide which this Servant of God did write, as namely certain notes and extracts in Latine out of the Doctors and other Authors for his memory, whereby is declared how ſtudious he was in the ſearching and knowledge of the Law of God, although his profeſſion was the temporal Law. Where I would to God he were not among the Lawyers ſuch a Phenix, that he had very few or no fellows to flie with him, or to follow his ſteps. But God is to be praiſed, that although we read of few or none among that ſort that died as he did, yet good witneſs doth ſpring up daily of the ſame profeſſion, to ſuch towardneſs and godly zeal, that ſome hope already appeareth ſhortly to come to paſs, that this godly Phenix ſhall not flie alone. Theſe aforeſaid notes and gatherings of his out of the Doctors were taken from him by Boner, being found about him, which was to him no little grief. He among the reſt was firſt apprehended, but laſt of them condemned, which was the fifteenth day of January, and afterward burned with the other Martyrs, the 27. of the ſame Month. Anno 1556.

A commendation of Lawyers.

3. Thomas Brown, Martyr.

Ex Regiſt. Tho. Brown Martyr.

Thomas Brown, born in the Pariſh of Hiſton within the Dioceſs of Ely, came afterwards to London, where he dwelled in the Pariſh of Saint Brides in Fleet-ſtreet, a Married Man, of the age of thirty ſeven years; who becauſe he came not to his Pariſh Church, was preſented by the Conſtable of the Pariſh to Boner. As touching whoſe Articles, whereupon he was examined by the ſaid Boner, with his anſwers alſo annexed to the ſame, mention goeth before, as in the general proceſs of him and of the reſt may appear. This Thomas Brown being had to Fulham, with the other there to be examined was required upon Thurſday, being the 26. day of September, to come into the Chappel to hear Maſs, which he refuſing to do, went into the Warren, there kneeled among the trees. For this he was greatly charged of the Biſhop, as for an hainous matter, becauſe he ſaid it was done in deſpite and contempt of their Maſs; which ſeemed to the Biſhop and his Chaplains no ſmall offence. At length being produced to his laſt examination before the ſaid Biſhop the fifteenth day of January, there to hear ſentence definitive againſt him; firſt he was required with many fair words and gloſing promiſes to revoke his Doctrin, to whom the foreſaid Biſhop ſpeaking theſe words, ſaid, Brown, ye have been before me many times and oft, and I have travelled with thee, to win thee from thine errours; yet thou, and ſuch like, have and do report that I go about to ſeek thy Blood &c.

Tho. Brown presented by the Conſtable of S. Brides.

Brown kneeleth among the trees at Maſs time.

B. Boners words to Tho. Brown.

To whom the ſaid Thomas Brown anſwered again; Yea, my Lord (ſaith he) indeed ye be a Bloodſucker, and I would I had as much Blood as is water in the Sea, for you to ſuck.

B. Boner charged to be a Bloodſucker.

Boner then proceeding to the Articles, when he had read them unto him again, as he had done divers times before, asked him whether he was content and willing to reliniquiſh thoſe his Hereſies and erroneous opinions (as he called them) and return again unto the Unity of the Catholick Faith. Whereunto he made anſwer again, ſaying, if they were Hereſies, he would forſake them. They be Hereſies (quoth the Biſhop.) How will ye prove it, ſaid Brown? for I will not go from mine anſwer, except you can prove them to be Hereſies, which ye ſhall never do. For that which you call Hereſie, is no Hereſie. With that Boner, not able, or elſe not diſpoſed to ſupply the part of a ſufficient teacher, in proving that which the other had denied by good Authority and Doctrine of the Scripture, went about with words and promiſe of pardon to allure him to renounce thoſe his Hereſies, as he called them, and to return unto the Unity of his Mother the Catholick Church, &c.

The anſwer of Tho. Brown to B. Boner.

To whom the ſaid Thomas inferred again, as followeth; Prove it (ſaid he) to be Hereſie, that I do hold and maintain, and I will turn to you. But you condemn me, becauſe I will not confeſs and believe the Bread in the Sacrament of the Altar (as you call it) to be the Body of Chriſt, and therefore ye ſpill mine and ſuch like innocents Blood, being the Queens true ſubjects, for which you ſhall anſwer, and that ſhortly.

Anno 1556.

Sentence read againſt Tho. Brown.

After this being ſpoken, Boner (as he had done to the other before) read in writing the Sentence definitive againſt him. The Copy and Form of which Sentence wherewith the Papiſts were wont to condemn all the innocent Saints of Chriſt, is above expreſſed. And ſo this done, he was committed to the Sheriffs to be had away, and burned the 27th day of the ſaid Month of January, conſtantly abiding with the other the Popes torments for the true Confeſſion of his Chriſtian Faith.

4. John Tudſon, Martyr.

John Tudſon, Martyr. January 27.

THe ſame day and time, when the foreſaid Thomas Brown with his Fellows was condemned (as is above rehearſed) being the fifteenth day of January, was alſo produced John Tudſon, with the reſt of the ſaid Company, unto the like Condemnation. This John Tudſon was born in Ipſwich, in the County of Suffolk, after that Apprentice in London, dwelling with one George Goodyear of the Pariſh of S. Mary Botolph, within the Dioceſs of London, who being complained of to Sir Richard Chomley and Dr. Story, was by them ſent unto Boner Biſhop of London, and was divers times before him in Examination.

The Articles and Interrogatories miniſtred unto him, as unto the reſt, before are ſpecified, with his Anſwers alſo to the ſame annexed, &c. After this he was brought unto the open Conſiſtory; where the ſaid bleſſed and true Servant of the Lord John Tudſon, appearing before the ſaid Biſhop and his Complices, was moved with ſundry perſwaſions (as their manner is) to go from his opinion (which they named Hereſie) and to perſiſt in the unity of the Church which they were of; but he, conſtantly perſiſting in that which he had received by the Preachers in King Edwards time, refuſed ſo to do, ſaying, there was no Hereſie in his Anſwers. For I, ſaid he, defie all Hereſie. The Biſhop yet ſtill uſed his old accuſtomed perſwaſions to remove him, promiſing moreover all his offences and errors (as he called them) to be forgiven him, if he would return, &c. Then ſaid Tudſon, Tell me wherein I have offended, and I will return. Then ſaid the Biſhop, In your Anſwers. No, ſaid Tudſon again, I have not therein offended; and ye (my Lord) pretend Charity, but nothing thereof appeareth in your works. Thus after a few words, the Biſhop did likewiſe promulgate againſt him Sentence of Condemnation; which being read, the godly and conſtant Martyr was committed to the Secular Power, and ſo with much patience finiſhed this life with the other above named, the 27th day of January.

5. John Went, Martyr.

John Went, Martyr. January 27.

John Went born in Langham in Eſſex, within the Dioceſs of London, of the Age of 27. and a Sheerman by Occupation, firſt was examined (as partly is touched before) by Dr. Story upon the Sacrament of his Popiſh Altar; and becauſe the poor man did not accord with him throughly in the Real Preſence of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, the ſaid Story did ſend him up to Boner B. of London. Who likewiſe, after divers Examinations upon the Articles aforeſaid in the Conſiſtory, attempted the like manner of perſwaſions with him, as he did to the other, to retant and return. To whom, in few words, the ſaid Went anſwered again, He would not, but that by the leave of God, he would ſtand firm and conſtant in that he had ſaid. And when the Biſhop yet notwithſtanding did ſtill urge and call upon him with words and fair gloſſes, to give over himſelf to their opinion, he could have no other anſwer of him but this, No, I ſay as I have ſaid, &c. Whereupon being condemned by the Biſhops Sentence, he was committed unto the Sheriffs (whom that ſhameleſs Shaveling at that time abuſed for his Servile Butchers) and ſo brought to his Martyrdom, which he with no leſs conſtancy ſuffered to the end, with the reſt of that bleſſed Society of Martyrs above named.

6. Iſabel Foſter, Martyr.

Iſabel Foſter, Martyr. January 27.

WIth theſe five Perſons above recited and condemned, were alſo two Women in the ſaid Company condemned the ſame time, and likewiſe burned for the ſame cauſe; the one a Wife, called Iſabel Foſter, the other a Maid, named Joan Warn, or otherwiſe, Laſhford.

Iſabel Foſter conſtant in confeſſing Chriſts Goſpel.

This foreſaid Iſabel was born in Grafeſtock in the Dioceſs of Carliſle, and afterwards married to one John Foſter, Cutler, of the Pariſh of St. Brides in Fleetſtreet, being of the Age of five and fifty years. She likewiſe, for not coming unto the Church, being ſent unto Boner, and ſo impriſoned, was ſundry times examined by the ſaid Biſhop, but never overcome, nor removed from the conſtant Confeſſion of Chriſts Goſpel.

At length, coming unto her final Examination before the Biſhop in the Conſiſtory the fifteenth day of the ſaid Month of January, ſhe was moved again, whether ſhe would yet go from her former Anſwers. Whereunto ſhe gave a reſolute Anſwer in few words; I will not (ſaith ſhe) go from them by Gods grace; and thereunto did adhere, neither being caſt down by the menacing threats of the Biſhop, nor yet yielding through his alluring inticements, promiſing both life and liberty, if ſhe would aſſociate her ſelf in the Unity of the Catholick Church. Whereunto ſhe ſaid again in this wiſe, That ſhe truſted ſhe was never out of the Catholick Church, &c. and ſo perſiſting in the ſame, continued conſtant till the Sentence definitive was pronounced, and then ſhe was committed by commandment of the Biſhop to the Secular Power, and ſo brought a few days after to the Stake, the Seven and twentieth day of the foreſaid Month; where ſhe like a faithful Witneſs of the Lords Truth (with the other five aforeſaid) ended her troubles here, to find a better reſt in the Kingdom of Chriſt our Saviour.

The words of Iſabel Foſter at her laſt Examination.

Iſabel Foſter condemned.

7. Joan Laſhford, alias Joan Warne, Martyr.

IN a certain place of theſe Acts and Monuments heretofore, mention was made of one Elizabeth Warne, who with her Husband John Warne (as is aforeſaid) in the beginning of Queen Maries Reign, was apprehended in Bowe Church-yard for being there at a Communion; and both ſuffered for the ſame, firſt the Man in the Month of May, then the Wife in July after; and now the Daughter in the Month of January followed her Parents in the ſame Martyrdom. Furthermore, in the ſame place following mention was made alſo of Dr. Story, who there (we ſaid) was ſomewhat near unto the ſaid Parties, either in Kindred or Alliance; albeit, as I underſtand ſince of ſome, there was no Kindred between them, but only that ſhe was his Servant. Yet notwithſtanding, the ſaid Dr. Story (as it is above ſpecified) before he was Commiſſioner, made interceſſion for the Parties to Dr. Martyn then Commiſſioner: but afterward being placed in Commiſſion himſelf, he ſo far forgot himſelf, and his old Servant, that he became no ſmall Procurer of their deaths. I will not here expoſtulate with the hard heart of that man, nor with his inconſtancy: who yet notwithſtanding, after he had brought them to death, was arreſted himſelf for three-ſcore pounds, charged with Debt in their behalf; which if it be true, it may thereby appear that he was in ſome piece of kindred joyned or allied unto them. But leaving that perſon unto the good pleaſure of the Lord, let us return unto that we have in hand.

Joan Laſhford, alias Joan Warne, Martyr. January 27.

Dr. Story firſt interceſſor for John Warne and his daughter, and afterward the chiefeſt Perſecutor againſt them.

This Joan Laſhford, born in the Pariſh of Little Alhallows in Thames-ſtreet, was the Daughter of one Robert Laſhford Cutler, and of the foreſaid Elizabeth, who afterward was married to John Warne Upholſter, who (as is ſaid) was perſecuted for the Goſpel of God to the burning fire; and after him his Wife; and after her, this Joan Laſhford her Daughter; who, about the Age of twenty years, miniſtring to her Father and Mother in Priſon, ſuſpected and known to be of the ſame Doctrine and Religion, was ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, by Dr. Story, (as is above in her Anſwers to the Articles declared) and ſo committed to the Compter in the Poultrey, where ſhe remained the ſpace of five weeks, and from thence had to Newgate, where ſhe continued the ſpace of certain Months.

Joan Laſhford daughter of Eliz. Warne.

The daughter burned after the father and mother.

After that, remaining Priſoner in the Cuſtody of the ſaid Boner, her Confeſſion was, being examined, that the whole twelve month before, and more, ſhe came unto no Popiſh Maſs Service in the Church, neither would do, either to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, or to be confeſſed, becauſe her Conſcience would not ſuffer her ſo to do; confeſſing and proteſting, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, there is not the real preſence of Chriſts Body and Blood; nor that auricular confeſſion or abſolution after the Popiſh ſort, was neceſſary, nor the Maſs to be good, or according unto the Scripture, but ſaid that both the ſaid Sacrament, confeſſion, abſolution, and the Maſs, with all other their ſuperfluous Sacraments, ceremonies, and divine ſervice, as then uſed in this Realm of England, were moſt vile, and contrary to Chriſts words and inſtitution; ſo that neither they were at the beginning, nor ſhall be at the latter end. This godly Damoſel, feeble and tender of age, yet ſtrong by Grace, in this her Confeſſion and Faith ſtood ſo firm, that neither the flattering promiſes, nor the violent threats of the Biſhops could turn her, but being moved and exhorted by the Biſhop to return to the Catholick unity of the Church, ſaid boldly to him again; If ye will leave off your abomination, ſo I will return, and otherwiſe I will not.

Superſtuous and Popiſh Ceremonies.

The words of Joan Laſſford at her laſt examination.

Whereupon the Biſhop yet again promiſed her pardon of all her errours (as he called them) if ſhe would be conformed. To this ſhe anſwered again, ſaying unto the Biſhop; Do as it pleaſeth you, and I pray God that you may do that which may pleaſe God.

The ſentence and condemnation of Joan Laſſford. January 27.

And thus ſhe conſtantly perſevering in the Lords holy truth, was by the ſentence definitive condemned and committed unto the Sheriffs, by whom the foreſaid ſeven and twentieth day of January ſhe with the reſt being brought unto the Stake, there waſhed her Clothes in the Blood of the Lamb, dying moſt conſtantly for his Word and Truth, to whom moſt lovingly ſhe eſpouſed her ſelf.

And thus much concerning the Life, Story, and Condemnation of theſe ſeven Martyrs, afore ſpecified.

Five other Martyrs in Canterbury, four Women and one Man, at two Stakes and one fire, altogether burned.

January 31. After theſe ſeven before rehearſed, martyred together in Smithfield, ſhortly after in the ſame Month, the 31. day of January. followed another like fellowſhip of Godly Martyrs at Canterbury, four Women and one Man, whoſe names be theſe:

4 Women and one Man, Martyrs.

- John Lomas, a young Man,
- Anne Albright,
- Joan Catmer,
- Agnes Snoth, Widow,
- Joan Sole, Wife.

1. John Lomas, Martyr.

John Lomas of the Pariſh of Tenderden, detected and preſented of that Religion which the Papiſts call Hereſie, and cited upon the ſame to appear at Canterbury, examined there of the firſt Article, whether he believed the Catholick Church or no, anſwered thus; that he believed ſo much as is contained in Gods Book, and no more. John Lomas Martyr.

Then being aſſigned to appear again under the pain of the Law the next Wedneſday ſevennight after, which was the 17. day of January, the ſaid Lomas examined whether he would be confeſſed of a Prieſt or no, anſwered and ſaid, that he found it not written that he ſhould be confeſſed to any Prieſt in Gods Book, neither would be confeſſed, unleſs he were accuſed by ſome Man of Sin. Again, examined whether he believed the Body of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament of the Altar really under the forms of Bread and Wine after the Conſecration or no, he anſwered that he believed no realty of Chriſts Body to be in the Sacrament; neither found he written, that he is there under form or treſſel, but he believed ſo much as is written. Being then demanded whether he believed that there is a Catholick Church or no, and whether he would be content to be a member of the ſame, he anſwered thereunto, that he believed ſo much as was written in Gods Book, and other anſwer then this he refuſed to give, &c. Whereupon the ſentence was given and read againſt him the 18. day of January; and ſo committed to the ſecular power, he conſtantly ſuffered for the Conſcience of a True Faith, with the other four Women here following.

2. Agnes Snoth, Martyr.

Agnes Snoth Widow, of the Pariſh of Smarden, likewiſe accuſed and cited for the true profeſſion of Chriſts Religion, was divers times examined before the Phariſaical Fathers. Who, there compelled to anſwer to ſuch Articles and interrogatories as ſhould be miniſtred unto her, firſt denied to be confeſſed to a Prieſt; notwithſtanding, ſhe denied not to confeſs her offences as one to another, but not auricularly to any Prieſt. And as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, ſhe proteſted that if ſhe or any other did receive the Sacrament ſo as Chriſt & his Apoſtles after him did deliver it, then ſhe and they did did receive it to their comfort: but as it is now uſed in the Church, ſhe ſaid that no man could otherwiſe receive it than to his damnation, as ſhe thought. Afterward being examined again concerning Penance, whether it were a Sacrament or no, ſhe plainly denied the ſame, and that the Popiſh manner of their Abſolution was not conſonant to the Word, nor neceſſary to be taken; with ſuch other like, agreeing with the Anſwers and Confeſſion of John Lomas before mentioned. Whereupon the Sentence being likewiſe read, ſhe was committed to the Sheriffs of Canterbury, and ſo ſuffering Martyrdom with the reſt, declared her ſelf a perfect and conſtant witneſs of Chriſt and of his truth the 31 day of January.

Penance is denied to be a Sacrament.

Agnes Snot condemned and committed to the Secular Power.

3. Anne Albright, alias Champnes, Martyr.

Anne Albright Martyr.

AGainſt Anne Albright, likewiſe appearing before the Judge and his Colleagues, it it was alſo objected concerning the ſame matter of Confeſſion. Whereunto ſhe anſwered in theſe words, ſaying, That ſhe would not be confeſſed of a Prieſt, and added moreover, ſpeaking unto the Prieſts, You Prieſts (ſaid ſhe) are the Children of Perdition, and can do no good by your Confeſſion. And likewiſe ſpeaking unto the Judge and his Aſſiſtance, ſhe told them that they were Subverters of Chriſts Truth.

Anne Albright denieth the Sacrament of the Altar.

And as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, ſhe ſaid it was a naughty and abominable Idol, and ſo utterly denied the ſame Sacrament. Thus perſiſting and perſevering in her former ſayings and anſwers, ſhe was condemned the ſaid eighteenth day of the ſaid Month, with the other above mentioned; with whom alſo ſhe ſuffered quietly, and with great comfort, for the right of Chriſts Religion.

Condemnation of Anne Albright, January 18.

Joan Sole Martyr. January 31.

IN the like manner Joan Sole, of the Pariſh of Horton, was condemned of the ſame Phariſees and Prieſts, for not allowing Confeſſion Auricular, and for denying the Real Preſence and Subſtance of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament of the Altar. Who, after their Phariſaical Sentence being promulgate, was brought by the Sheriffs to the Stake with the other four, and ſuſtained the like Martyrdom with them, through the aſſiſtance of Gods holy Grace and Spirit mightily working in her, to the glory of his Name, and confirmation of his Truth.

Condemnation of Joan Sole Martyr. January 18.

5. Joan Catmer.

Joan Catmer Martyr.

THe fifth and laſt of this heavenly Company of Martyrs, was Joan Catmer of the Pariſh of Hith, wife (as it ſhould ſeem) of George Catmer burned before. Who being asked what ſhe ſaid to Confeſſion made to a Prieſt, denied to be confeſſed to any ſuch Prieſt. And moreover, the Judge ſpeaking of the Sacrament of the Altar, ſhe ſaid and affirmed, That ſhe believed not in that Sacrament, as it was then uſed, for that it was made, ſaid ſhe, a very Idol. In this her Confeſſion ſhe remaining and perſiſting, was by the like Sentence cruelly of them condemned, and ſo ſuffered with the foreſaid Thomas Lomas, and the other three fellow Martyrs, ratifying and confeſſing with their blood the true knowledge and doctrine of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt Jeſus our Saviour.

January 31.

Theſe five perſons were burnt at two Stakes, and one fire, together at Canterbury, as is before ſaid: Who, when the fire was flaming about their ears, did ſing Pſalms. Whereat the good Knight, Sir John Norton, being there preſent, wept bitterly at the ſight thereof.

The life, ſtate, and ſtory of the Reverend Paſtor and Prelate, Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Martyr, burned at Oxford, for the Confeſſion of Chriſts true Doctrine under Queen Mary, An. 1556. March 21.

March 21. Tho. Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Martyr.

AS concerning the life and eſtate of that moſt reverend Father in God, and worthy Prelate of godly memory, Thomas Cranmer late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and of the original cauſe and occaſion of his preferment unto his Archiepiſcopal Dignity, who of many hath been thought to have procured the ſame by friendſhip only, and of ſome other eſteemed unworthy ſo high a Vocation: It is firſt therefore to be noted and conſidered, that the ſame Thomas Cranmer coming of an ancient Parentage, from the Conqueſt to be deduced, and continuing ſince in the name and family of a Gentleman, was born in a Village called Arſelacton in Nottinghamſhire, of whoſe ſaid name and family there remaineth at theſe days one Mannor and Manſion-houſe in Lincolnſhire, called Cranmer Hall, &c. Sometimes of Heritage of the ſaid ſtock and family. Who being from his Infancy kept at School, and brought up not without much good Civility, came in proceſs of time unto the Univerſity of Cambridge, and there proſpering in right good knowledge amongſt the better ſort of Students, was choſen Fellow of Jeſus Colledge in Cambridge. And ſo being Maſter of Art, and Fellow of the ſame Colledge, it chanced him to marry a Gentleman's Daughter: by means whereof he loſt and gave over his Fellowſhip there, and became the Reader in Buckingham Colledge; and for that he would with more diligence apply that his Office of Reading, he placed his ſaid Wife in an Inn, called the Dolphin in Cambridge, the Wife of the Houſe being of Affinity unto her. By reaſon whereof, and for that his often reſort unto his Wife in that Inn, he was much marked of ſome Popiſh Merchants; whereupon roſe the ſlanderous noiſe and report againſt him, after he was preferred to the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury, raiſed up by the malicious diſdain of certain malignant Adverſaries to Chriſt and his Truth, bruting abroad every where, that he was but an Hoſtler, and therefore without all good learning. Of whoſe malicious reports, one of their practiſes in that behalf ſhall hereafter be declared, as place and time ſhall ſerve.

Cranmer Reader in Buckingham Colledge.

But in the mean time to return to the matter preſent: Whilſt this ſaid Mr. Cranmer continued as a Reader in Buckingham Colledge, his Wife died in Childbed. After whoſe death, the Maſters and Fellows of Jeſus Colledge deſirous again of their old Companion, namely, for his towardlineſs in learning, choſe him again Fellow of the ſame Colledge. Where he remaining at his Study, became in few years after the Reader of Divinity Lecture in the ſame Colledge, and in ſuch ſpecial eſtimation and reputation with the whole Univerſity, that being Doctor of Divinity, he was commonly appointed one of the Heads (which are two or three of the chiefeſt learned men) to examine ſuch as yearly proceed in Commencement, either Batchelors or Doctors of Divinity, by whoſe approbation the whole Univerſity licenſeth them to proceed unto their degree; and again by whoſe diſallowance the Univerſity alſo rejecteth them for a time to proceed, until they be better furniſhed with more knowledge.

Tho. Cranmer after the deceaſe of his wife, choſen fellow into Jeſus Colledge.

Tho. Cranmer made Reader in Jeſus Colledge, and Doctor of Divinity.

Dr. Cranmer publick examiner in Cambridge of them that were to proceed.

Now, Doctor Cranmer, ever much favouring the knowledge of the Scripture, would never admit any to proceed in Divinity, unleſs they were ſubſtantially ſeen in the ſtory of the Bible: by means whereof certain Friers, and other religious perſons, who were principally brought up in the ſtudy of School Authors, without regard had to the Authority of Scriptures, were commonly rejected by him; ſo that he was greatly, for that his ſevere examination, of the religious ſort much hated, and had in great indignation: and yet it came to paſs in the end, that divers of them being thus compelled to ſtudy the Scriptures, became afterwards very well learned and well affected; inſomuch, that when they proceeded Doctors of Divinity, they could not overmuch extoll and commend Mr. Doctor Cranmers goodneſs towards them, who had for a time put them back, to aſpire unto better knowledge and perfection. Among whom Dr. Barret a white Frier, who afterwards dwelt at Norwich, was after that ſort handled, giving him no leſs commendation for his happy rejecting of him for a better amendment. Thus much I repeat, that our apiſh and Popiſh ſort of ignorant Prieſts, may well underſtand that this his exerciſe, kind of life, and vocation was not altogether Hoſtler like.

Friers in hatred with Dr Cranmer, Dr. Barret.

Anno 1556.

Dr. Cranmer appointed to be Fellow of the Cardinals Colledge in Oxford, refused.

Well, to go forwards; Like as he was neither in fame unknown, nor in knowledge obscure, so was he greatly solicited by Dr. Capon, to have been one of the Fellows in the foundation of Cardinal Wolseys Colledge in Oxford, which he utterly refused, not without danger of indignation. Notwithstanding foreseeing that which after chanced, to the utter confusion of many well affected learned men there, without consideration (beeause mans glory was there more sought for than Gods) he stood to the danger of the said indignation, which chanced more prosperously unto him within few years after than he looked for. For whiles he thus continued in Cambridge, the great and weighty Cause of King Henry the Eighth, his Divorce with the Lady Katherine Dowager of Spain, came into question; which being many ways by the space of two or three years amongst the Canonists, Civilians, and other learned men diversly disputed and debated, it came to pass that this said Dr. Cranmer, by reason that the Plague was in Cambridge, resorted to Waltham Abbey, to one Mr. Cressеys House there, whose Wife was of kin to the said Mr. Cranmer. And for that he had two Sons of the said Cressey with him at Cambridge as his Pupils, he rested at Waltham Cross, at the House of the said Mr. Cressey, with the said two Children, during that Summer time whiles the Plague reigned.

Question of the Kings divorce with Katherine Dowager.

Of this Campeius, and discourse of his Legacy, read before.

In this Summer time Cardinal Campeius and Cardinal Wolsey, being in Commission from the Pope, to hear and determine that great Cause in controversie between the King and the Queen, his pretended Wife, dallied and delayed all the Summer time until the Month of August came, in hearing the said Cause in controversie debated. When August was come, the said Cardinals little minding to proceed to Sentence giving, took occasion to finish their Commission, and not further to determine therein, pretending that it was not permitted by the Laws to keep Courts of Ecclesiastical matters in Harvest time: which sudden stay and giving over of the said Commission by both the Cardinals, being unknown to the King, it so much moved him, that he taking it as a mock at the Cardinals hands, commanded the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk to dispatch forthwith Cardinal Campeius home again to Rome; and so in haste removed himself from London to Waltham for a night or twain, whiles his Houshold removed to Greenwich: by means whereof it chanced that the Harbengers lodged Doctor Stephens, Secretary, and Doctor Foxe, Almoner (who were the chief furtherers, preferrers, and defenders on the Kings behalf of the said Cause) in the House of the said Mr. Cressey, where the said Dr. Cranmer was also lodged and resident. When Supper time came, they all three Doctors met together; Doctor Stephens and Doctor Foxe much marvelling of Doctor Cranmers being there. Who declared to them the cause of his there being, namely, for that the Plague was in Cambridge. And as they were of old Acquaintance, so the Secretary and the Almoner right well entertained Doctor Cranmer, minding to understand part of his Opinion touching their great business they had in hand. And so as good occasion served, whiles they were at Supper, they conferred with Dr. Cranmer concerning the Kings Cause, requesting him of his Judgment and Opinion what he thought therein.

Ste. Gardiner and D. Foxe, chief stirrers of the Kings Divorce.

Dr. Stephens, Dr. Foxe, Dr. Cranmer conferring together in the Kings Cause.

Whereto Dr. Cranmer answered, That he could say little to the matter, for that he had not studied nor looked for it. Notwithstanding he said to them, that in his Opinion they made more ado in prosecuting the Law Ecclesiastical, then needed. It were better, as I suppose, quoth Dr. Cranmer, that the question, Whether a man may marry his Brothers wife, or no? were decided and discussed by the Divines, and by the Authority of the Word of God, whereby the Conscience of the Prince might be better satisfied and quieted, then thus from year to year by frustratory delays to prolong the time, leaving the very truth of the matter unboulted out by the Word of God. There is but one truth in it, which the Scripture will soon declare, make open and manifest, being by learned men well handled, and that may be as well done in England in the Universities here, as at Rome, or elsewhere in any forreign Nation, the Authority whereof will compel any Judge soon to come to a definitive Sentence: and therefore, as I take it, you might this way have made an end of this matter long since. When Dr. Cranmer had thus ended his tale, the other two well liked of his device, and wished that they had so proceeded aforetime, and thereupon conceived some matter of that device to instruct the King withal, who then was minded to send to Rome again for a new Commission.

Dr. Cranmers anſwer in the queſtion of the Kings divorce.

Dr. Cranmers device well liked of.

Now the next day, when the King removed to Greenwich, like as he took himself not well handled by the Cardinals in thus deferring his Cause, so his mind being unquieted, and desirous of an end of his long and tedious Sute, he called unto him these his two principal doers in his said Cause, namely, the said Dr. Stephens and Dr. Foxe, saying unto them, What now my Masters (quoth the King) shall we do in this infinite Cause of mine? I see by it there must be a new Commission procured from Rome, and when we shall have an end, God knoweth, and not I.

The King troubled about the divorce.

When the King had said somewhat his mind herein, the Almoner, Dr. Foxe, said unto the King again, We trust that there shall be better ways devised for your Majesty, then to make travel so far as to Rome any more in your Highnesses Cause, which by chance was put into our heads this other night being at Waltham. The King being very desirous to understand his meaning, said, Who hath taken in hand to instruct you by any better or shorter way to proceed in our said Cause? Then said Dr. Foxe, It chanced us to be lodged at Waltham in Mr. Cressеys House this other night, your Highness being there, where we met with an old Acquaintance of ours, named Doctor Cranmer, with whom having Conference concerning your Highnesses Cause, he thought that the next way were, first to instruct and quiet your Majesties Conscience by trying your Highnesses Question out by the Authority of the Word of God, and thereupon to proceed to a final Sentence. With this Report the Secretary was not content with the Almoner, for that he did not utter this device as of their own invention. And when the Secretary would have seemed by colourable words to make it appear to the King, that they of themselves had devised that means; the King then said, Where is this Dr. Cranmer? Is he still at Waltham? They answered, that they left him there. Marry (said the King) I will surely speak with him, and therefore let him be sent for out of hand. I perceive (quoth the King) that that man hath the Sow by the right ear. And if I had known this device but two years ago, it had been in my way a great piece of money, and had also rid me out of much disquietness.

Dr. Cranmer deviſe & reported to the King.

Note the glorious head of Dr. Stephens.

Whereupon Dr. Cranmer was sent for, and being removed from Waltham to Cambridge, and so towards his Friends in Nottinghamshire, a Post went for him. But when he came to London, he began to quarrel with these two his Acquaintances, that he by their means was thus troubled and brought thither to be cumbred in a matter, wherein he had nothing at all travelled in study; and therefore most instantly intreated them, that they would make his excuse in such sort, that he might be dispatched away from coming in the Kings presence. They promised and took the matter upon them so to do, if by any means they might compass it. But all was in vain; for the more they began to excuse Dr. Cranmers absence, the more the King chid with them, for that they brought him not out of hand to his presence, so that no excuse serving, he was fain undelaiedly to come to the Court unto the King, whom the gentle Prince benignly accepting, demanded his name, and said unto him, Were you not at Waltham such a time, in the company of my Secretary and my Almoner? Doctor Cranmer affirming the same; the King said again, Had you not conference with them concerning our matter of Divorce now in question after this sort, repeating the manner and order thereof? That is right true, if it please your Highness, quoth Doctor Cranmer. Well (said the King) I well perceive that you have the right scope of this matter. You must understand (quoth the King) that I have been long troubled in Conscience, and now I perceive that by this means I might have been long ago relieved one way or other from the same, if we had this way proceeded. And therefore, Master Doctor, I pray you, and nevertheless because you

Dr. Cranmer ſeeketh excuſes, both to come unto the King & preſence.

Dr. Cranmer brought to the King.

Talk between the King and Dr. Cranmer.

The King troubled in Conſcience.

Anno 1556.

you are a Subject, I charge and command you (all your other buſineſs and affairs ſet apart) to take ſome pains to ſee this my cauſe to be furthered according to your device, as much as it may lye in you, ſo that I may ſhortly underſtand whereunto I may truſt. For this I proteſt before God and the World, that I ſeek not to be divorced from the Queen, if by any means I might juſtly be perſwaded that this our Matrimony were inviolable, and not againſt the Laws of God; for otherwiſe there was never cauſe to move me to ſeek any ſuch extremity. Neither was there ever Prince had a more gentle, a more obedient and loving Companion and Wife than the Queen is, nor did I ever fanſie woman in all reſpects better, if this doubt had not riſen; aſſuring you that for the ſingular vertues wherewith ſhe is indued, beſides the conſideration of her noble ſtock, I could be right well contented ſtill to remain with her, if ſo it would ſtand with the will and pleaſure of Almighty God. And thus greatly commending her many and ſingular qualities, the King ſaid, I therefore pray you with an indifferent eye, and with as much dexterity as lieth in you, that you for your part do handle the matter for the diſcharging of both our Conſciences.

Mark this you Papiſts which ſo raſhly judge the Kings divorce, and the Popes overthrow to have ſprung of light cauſes.

Dr. Cranmer excuſing and diſabling himſelf to the King.

Dr. Cranmer much diſabling himſelf to meddle in ſo weighty a matter, beſought the Kings Highneſs to commit the trial and examining of this matter by the Word of God, unto the beſt learned men of both his Univerſities, Cambridge and Oxford. You ſay well, ſaid the King, and I am content therewith. But yet nevertheleſs, I will have you ſpecially to write your mind therein. And ſo calling the Earl of Wiltſhire to him, ſaid, I pray you my Lord, let Dr. Cranmer have entertainment in your Houſe at Durham-Place for a time, to the intent he may be there quiet to accompliſh my requeſt, and let him lack neither Books, nor any thing requiſite for his ſtudy. And thus after the Kings departure, Dr. Cranmer went with my Lord of Wiltſhire unto his Houſe, wherein he incontinently wrote his mind concerning the Kings queſtion; adding to the ſame, beſides the Authorities of the Scriptures, of general Councils and of ancient Writers, alſo his Opinion which was this; That the Biſhop of Rome had no ſuch Authority, as whereby he might diſpenſe with the Word of God and the Scripture. When Dr. Cranmer had made this Book, and committed it to the King, the King ſaid to him, Will you abide by this that you have here written before the Biſhop of Rome? That will I do, by Gods grace, quoth Dr. Cranmer, if your Majeſty do ſend me thither. Marry (quoth the King) I will ſend you even to him in a ſure Ambaſſage.

Dr. Cranmer aſſigned by the King to ſearch the Scriptures in the cauſe of his divorce.

The King firſt given to underſtand that the Pope hath no authority to diſpenſe with the Word of God.

And thus by means of Dr. Cranmers handling of this matter with the King, not only certain learned men were ſent abroad to the moſt part of the Univerſities in Chriſtendom, to diſpute the queſtion, but alſo the ſame being by Commiſſion diſputed by the Divines in both the Univerſities of Cambridge and Oxford, it was there concluded, That no ſuch Matrimony was by the Word of God lawful.

The Kings matter removed from the Popes Canon Law, to the trial of the Scriptures.

The Kings marriage found by Gods Word unlawful.

Whereupon a ſolemn Ambaſſage was then prepared and ſent to the Biſhop of Rome, then being at Bonony, wherein went the Earl of Wiltſhire, Dr. Cranmer, Dr. Stokeſley, Dr. Carne, Dr. Bennet, and divers other learned men and Gentlemen.

Dr. Cranmer with others ſent to Rome Ambaſſador to the Pope.

And when the time came that they ſhould come before the Biſhop of Rome to declare the cauſe of their Ambaſſage, the Biſhop ſitting on high in his Cloth of Eſtate, and in his rich Apparel, with his Sandals on his feet, offering as it were his foot to be kiſſed of the Ambaſſadors; the Earl of Wiltſhire diſdaining thereat, ſtood ſtill, and made no countenance thereunto, ſo that all the reſt kept themſelves from that Idolatry.

The Engliſh Ambaſſadors not haſty to kiſs the Popes foot.

Howbeit, one thing is not here to be omitted, as a prognoſticate of our Separation from the See of Rome, which then chanced by a Spaniel of the Earl of Wiltſhire. For he having there a great Spaniel which came out of England with him, ſtood directly between the Earl and the Biſhop of Rome.

The unmannerly nature of a Dog preſuming to kiſs the Popes foot.

When the ſaid Biſhop had advanced forth his foot to be kiſſed, now whether the Spaniel perceived the Biſhops foot of another nature than it ought to be; and ſo taking it to be ſome kind of repaſt, or whether it was the will of God to ſhew ſome token by a Dog unto the Biſhop of his inordinate pride, that his feet were more meet to be bitten of Dogs, than kiſſed of Chriſtian men; the Spaniel (I ſay) when the Biſhop extended his foot to be kiſt, no man regarding the ſame, ſtreight-way (as though he had been of purpoſe appointed thereunto) went directly to the Popes feet, and not only kiſſed the ſame unmannerly with his mouth, but as ſome plainly reported and affirmed, took faſt with his mouth the great toe of the Pope, ſo that in haſte he pulled in his glorious feet from the Spaniel. Whereat our men ſmiling in their ſleeves, what they thought, God knoweth. But in fine, the Pontifical Biſhop after that, ſought no more at that preſent for kiſſing his feet, but without any further Ceremony gave ear to the Ambaſſadors what they had to ſay.

Who entring there before the Biſhop, offered on the Kings behalf to be defended, that no man Jure Divino, could or ought to marry his Brothers wife, and that the Biſhop of Rome by no means ought to diſpenſe to the contrary: Divers promiſes were made, and ſundry days appointed, wherein the queſtion ſhould have been diſputed, and when our part was ready to anſwer, no man there appeared to diſpute in that behalf. So in the end, the Biſhop making to our Ambaſſadors good Countenance, and gratifying Dr. Cranmer with the Office of the Penitentiariſhip, diſmiſſed them undiſputed withal.

Arguing to the Popes face, that contrary to the Word of God, he had no power to diſpenſe.

Dr. Cranmer made the Popes Penitentiary.

Whereupon the Earl of Wiltſhire, and the other Commiſſioners, ſaving Dr. Cranmer, returned home again into England. And forthwith Dr. Cranmer went to the Emperour, being in his Journey towards Vienna, in Expedition againſt the Turk, there to anſwer ſuch learned men of the Emperours Council, as would or could ſay any thing to the contrary part. Where amongſt the reſt, at the ſame time was Cornelius Agrippa, an high Officer in the Emperors Court, who having private Conference with Dr. Cranmer in the queſtion, was ſo fully reſolved and ſatisfied in the matter, that afterwards there was never diſputation openly offered to Dr. Cranmer in that behalf. For through the perſwaſion of Agrippa, all other learned men there were much diſcouraged: Inſomuch, that after Dr. Cranmer was returned into England, Agrippa fell into ſuch diſpleaſure with the Emperor, as ſome men thought, that becauſe of the hindering and diſcouraging ſo much the contrary part, he was committed to Priſon, where he for ſorrow ended his life, as it was reported. In the mean ſpace, while the Emperor returned home from Vienna thorow Germany, Dr. Cranmer in that Voyage had conference with divers learned men of Germany concerning the ſaid queſtion, who very ambiguouſly heretofore conceiving the cauſe, were fully reſolved and ſatisfied by him.

Dr. Cranmer Ambaſſador to the Emperor.

Conference between B. Cranmer and Cornelius Agrippa.

This matter thus proſpering on Dr. Cranmers behalf, as well touching the Kings queſtion, as concerning the invalidity of the Biſhop of Romes Authority, Biſhop Warham, then Arcbiſhop of Canterbury, departed this tranſitory life, whereby that Dignity then being in the Kings gift and diſpoſition, was immediately given to Dr. Cranmer, as worthy for his Travel of ſuch a Promotion. Thus much touching the preferment of Dr. Cranmer unto his Dignity, and by what means he atchieved unto the ſame: not by flattery, nor by bribes, nor by any other unlawful means; which thing I have more at large diſcourſed, to ſtop the railing mouths of ſuch, who being themſelves obſcure and unlearned, ſhame not to detract ſo learned a man moſt ignominiouſly with the ſirname of an Hoſtler, whom for his godly zeal unto ſincere Religion, they ought with much humility to have had in regard and reputation.

Dr. Cranmer made Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Now as concerning his behaviour and trade of life towards God and the World, being now entred into his ſaid Dignity, and forſomuch as the Apoſtle S. Paul writing to two Biſhops, Timothy and Titus, ſetteth out unto us a perfect deſcription of a true Biſhop, with all the properties and conditions belonging to the ſame, unto the which exemplar it ſhall be hard in theſe ſtrange days to find the Image of any Biſhop correſpondent; yet for example ſake let us take this Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and try him by the rule thereof, to ſee either how near he cometh to the deſcription of S. Paul, or elſe how far off he ſwerveth from the common courſe of other in his time, of his calling. The rule of S. Paul is to be found, 1 Tim. 3. alſo in his Epiſtle to Titus, chap. 1. in theſe words:

The rule of a true Biſhop.

A Biſhop muſt be faultleſs, as becometh the Miniſter of God. Not ſtubborn, nor angry, no drunkard, no fighter, nor given to filthy lucre; but harbarous, one that loveth goodneſs, ſober-minded, righteous, holy, temperate, and ſuch as cleaveth unto the true Word and Doctrine, that he may be able to exhort, &c.

A Miniſter muſt be faultleſs.

Unto this rule and touch-ſtone, to lay now the life and converſation of this Archbiſhop, we will firſt begin with that which is thus written; A Biſhop muſt be faultleſs, as becometh the Miniſter of God. Like as no man is without ſin, and every man carrieth with him his eſpecial vice and fault: ſo yet nevertheleſs, the Apoſtle meaneth, that the Biſhop and Miniſter muſt be faultleſs, in compariſon of the common converſation of men of the world, which ſeem more licentiouſly to live at their own liberties and pleaſures, then the Biſhop or Miniſter ought to do, having ſmall regard unto good example giving: which a Biſhop and Miniſter moſt carefully ought to conſider, leſt by his diſſolute life the word of God be ſlandered and evil ſpoken of. Which thing to avoid, and the better to accompliſh this Precept of the Apoſtle, this worthy man evermore gave himſelf to continual ſtudy, not breaking that order that he in the Univerſity commonly uſed, that is, by five of the clock in the morning at his Book, and ſo conſuming the time in ſtudy and prayer until nine of the clock; he then applied himſelf (if the Princes affairs did not call him away) until dinner time to hear Suters, and to diſpatch ſuch matters as appertained unto his ſpecial cure and charge, committing his temporal affairs, both of his houſhold and other forreign buſineſs, unto his Officers. So that ſuch things were never impediments either to his ſtudy, or to his Paſtoral Charge, which principally conſiſted in reformation of corrupt Religion, and in ſetting forth of true and ſincere Doctrine. For the moſt part always being in Commiſſion, he aſſociated himſelf with learned men for ſifting and bolting out of one matter or other, for the commodity and profit of the Church of England. By means whereof, and what for his private ſtudy, he was never idle; beſides that, he accounted it no idle point to beſtow one hour or twain of the day in reading over ſuch works and books as daily came from beyond the Seas.

The order of D. Cranmers ſtudy.

After dinner, if any Suters were attendant, he would very diligently hear them, and diſpatch them in ſuch ſort as every man commended his lenity and gentleneſs, although the caſe required that ſome whiles divers of them were committed by him to Priſon. And having no Suters after dinner, for an hour or thereabout he would play at the Cheſs, or behold ſuch as could play. That done, then again to his ordinary ſtudy, at the which commonly he for the moſt part ſtood, and ſeldom ſate; and there continuing until five of the clock, beſtowed that hour in hearing the Common Prayer, and walking or uſing ſome honeſt paſtime until Supper time. At Supper, if he had no appetite (as many times he would not ſup) yet would he ſit down at the Table, having his ordinary proviſion of his Meſs furniſhed with expedient Company, he wearing on his hands his gloves, becauſe he would (as it were) thereby wean himſelf from eating of meat, but yet keeping the Company with ſuch fruitful talk as did repaſt and much delight the hearers, ſo that by this means Hoſpitality was well furniſhed, and the Alms-cheſt well maintained for relief of the Poor. After Supper, he would conſume one hour at the leaſt in walking, or ſome other honeſt paſtime, and then again until nine of the clock, at one kind of ſtudy or other. So that no hour of the day was ſpent in vain, but the ſame was ſo beſtowed, as tended to the glory of God, the ſervice of the Prince, or the commodity of the Church. Which his well beſtowing of his time procured to him moſt happily a good report of all men, to be in reſpect of other mens converſation faultleſs, as it became the Miniſter of God.

The temperate diet of Doctor Cranmer.

That a Biſhop ought not to be ſtubborn.

Anno 1555.

Secondly, it is required, That a Biſhop ought not to be ſtubborn. With which kind of vice, without great wrong, this Archbiſhop in no wiſe ought to be charged; whoſe Nature was ſuch, as none more gentle, or ſooner won to an honeſt ſuit or purpoſe, ſpecially in ſuch things, wherein by his word, writing, counſel, or deed, he might gratifie either any gentle or noble man, or do good to any mean perſon, or elſe relieve the needy and poor. Only in cauſes pertaining to God or his Prince, no man more ſtout, more conſtant, or more hard to be won; as in that part his earneſt defence in the Parliament Houſe, above three days together, in diſputing againſt the ſix Articles of Gardiners device, can teſtifie. And though the King would needs have them upon ſome politick conſideration to go forward, yet he ſo handled himſelf as well in the Parliament Houſe, as afterwards by writing, ſo obediently and with ſuch humble behaviour in words towards his Prince, proteſting the cauſe not to be his, but Almighty Gods, who was the Author of all truth, that the King did not only well like his defence (willing him to depart out of the Parliament Houſe, into the Council Chamber, whilſt the Act ſhould paſs and be granted for ſafeguard of his Conſcience; which he with humble proteſtation refuſed, hoping that his Majeſty in proceſs of time would revoke them again) but alſo after the Parliament was finiſhed, the King perceiving the zealous affection that the Archbiſhop bare towards the defence of his cauſe, which many ways by Scriptures and manifold Authorities and Reaſons he had ſubſtantially confirmed and defended, ſent the Lord Cromwel, then Vicegerent, with the two Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, and all the Lords of the Parliament, to dine with him at Lambeth; where it was declared by the Vicegerent, and the two Dukes, that it was the Kings pleaſure, that they all ſhould in his Highneſs behalf, cheriſh, comfort, and animate him, as one that for his travel in that Parliament had ſhewed himſelf both greatly learned, and alſo diſcreet and wiſe, and therefore they willed him not to be diſcouraged for any thing that was paſſed contrary to his allegations. He moſt humbly thanked the Kings Majeſty of his great goodneſs towards him; and them for all their pains, ſaying, I hope in God, that hereafter my allegations and authorities ſhall take place to the Glory of God and the commodity of the Realm; in the mean time I will ſatisfie my ſelf with the honourable conſent of your Honours, and the whole Parliament.

Cranmer ſtout and conſtant in Gods Cauſe.

D. Cranmer ſtout enemy againſt the ſix Articles.

Of this coming of the Lord Cromwel, and the two Dukes to the Archbiſhop read before.

Here is to be noted, that this Mans ſtout and Godly defence of the truth herein ſo bound the Princes Conſcience, that he would not permit the truth in that Man to be clean overthrown with Authority and Power; and therefore this way God working in the Princes mind, a plain token was declared hereby, that all things were not ſo ſincerely handled in the confirmation of the ſaid ſix Articles as it ought to have been; for elſe the Prince might have had a juſt cauſe to have born his great indignation towards the Archbiſhop. Let us pray that both the like ſtoutneſs may be perceived in all Eccleſiaſtical and learned Men where the truth ought to be defended and alſo the like relenting and flexibility may take place in Princes and Noble Men; when they ſhall have occaſion offered them to maintain the ſame, ſo that they utterly overwhelm not the truth by ſelf-will, power and Authority. Now in the end this Archbiſhops conſtancy was ſuch towards Gods Cauſe, that he confirmed all his doings by bitter death in the fire, without reſpect of any Worldly Treaſure or pleaſure. And as touching his ſtoutneſs in his Princes cauſe, the contrary reſiſtance of the Duke of Northumberland againſt him proved right well his good mind that way; which chanced by reaſon that he would not conſent unto the diſſolving of Chanteries, until the King came of age, to the intent that they might then better ſerve to furniſh his Royal Eſtate, then to have ſo great Treaſure conſumed in his nonage. Which his ſtoutneſs; joyned with ſuch ſimplicity, ſurely was thought to divers of the Council, a thing incredible, ſpecially in ſuch ſort to contend with him, who was ſo accounted in this Realm, as few or none would or durſt gainſtand him.

Example for Eccleſiaſtical Paſtors.

Archb. Cranmer in diſpleaſure about the employing of Chantry Lands.

So

Anno 1555.

So dear was to him the cauſe of God, and of his Prince, that for the one he would not keep his Conſcience clogged, nor for the other ſurk or hide his head. Otherwiſe (as it is ſaid) his very enemies might eaſily entreat him in any cauſe reaſonable; and ſuch things as he granted, he did without any ſuſpition of upbraiding or meed therefore: So that he was altogether void of the vice of ſtubbornneſs, and rather culpable of overmuch facility and gentleneſs.

Not angry.

The ſingular patience of this Archbiſhop.

Then followeth, Not angry. Surely if overmuch patience may be a vice, this Man may ſeem peradventure to offend rather on this part then on the contrary. Albeit for all his doings I cannot ſay: for the moſt part, ſuch was his mortification that way, that few we ſhall find in whom the ſaying of our Saviour Chriſt ſo much prevailed as with him, who would not only have a Man to forgive his enemies, but alſo to pray for them; that leſſon never went out of his memory. For it was known that he had many cruel enemies, not for his own deſerts, but only for his Religion ſake: and yet whatſoever he was that ſought his hinderance, either in goods, eſtimation or life, and upon conference would ſeem never ſo ſlenderly any thing to relent or excuſe himſelf, he would both forget the offence committed, and alſo evermore afterwards friendly entertain him, and ſhew ſuch pleaſure to him, as by any means poſſible he might perform or declare: inſomuch that it came into a common Proverb: Do unto my L. of Canterbury diſpleaſure, or a ſhrewd turn, and then you may be ſure to have him your friend whiles he liveth. Of which his gentle diſpoſition in abſtaining from revengement, amongſt many examples thereof, I will repeat here one.

A ſtory between the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and a Popiſh Prieſt his enemy.

It chanced an ignorant Prieſt and Parſon in the North parts (the town is not now in remembrance, but he was a kinſman of one Cherſey a Grocer, dwelling within London, being one of thoſe prieſts that uſe more to ſtudy at the Alehouſe, then in his Chamber or in his ſtudy.) to ſit on a time with his honeſt neighbours at the Alehouſe within his own Pariſh, where was communication miniſtred in commendation of my Lord Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury. This ſaid Parſon, envying his name only for Religion ſake, ſaid to his neighbours; what make you of him, quoth he, he was but an hoſtler, and hath no more learning then the Goſelings that go yonder on the green, with ſuch like ſlanderous and uncomly words. Theſe honeſt neighbours of his, not well bearing thoſe his unſeemly words, articled againſt him, and ſent their complaint to the Lord Cromwel, then Vicegerent in cauſes Eccleſiaſtical; who ſent for the Prieſt, and committed him to the Fleet, minding to have had him recant thoſe his ſlanderous words at Pauls Croſs. Howbeit the Lord Cromwel, having great affairs of the Prince then in hand, forgat his Priſoner in the Fleet. So that this Cherſey the Grocer, underſtanding that his kinſman was in durance in the Fleet, only for ſpeaking words againſt my Lord of Canterbury conſulted with the Prieſt, and between them deviſed to make ſute rather unto the Archbiſhop for his deliverance, then to the Lord Cromwel, before whom he was accuſed: underſtanding right well that there was great diverſity of natures between thoſe two Eſtates, the one gentle and full of clemency, and the other ſevere and ſomewhat intractable, namely, againſt a Papiſt: So that Cherſey took upon him firſt to try my Lord of Canterburies benignity, namely, for that his couſins accuſation touched only the offence againſt him, and none other. Whereupon the ſaid Cherſey came to one of the Archbiſhops Gentlemen (whoſe Father bought yearly all his Spices and Fruit of the ſaid Cherſey, and ſo thereby of familiar acquaintance with the Gentleman) who opening to him the trouble wherein his kinſman was, requeſted that he would be a means to my Lord his Maſter, to hear his ſute in the behalf of his kinſman.

The railing of a Popiſh Prieſt againſt Doctor Cranmer.

Cherſey ſuing for his kinſman to the Archbiſhop.

The matter was moved. The Archbiſhop like as he was of nature gentle, and of much clemency, ſo would he never ſhew himſelf ſtrange unto ſuters but incontinently ſent for the ſaid Cherſey. When he came before him, Cherſey declared, that there was a kinſman of his in the Fleet, a Prieſt of the North Country, and as I may tell your Grace the truth (quoth Cherſey) a Man of ſmall civility, and of leſs learning. And yet he hath a Parſonage there, which now (by reaſon that my Lord Cromwel hath laid him in Priſon) being in his Cure, is unſerved; and he hath continued in durance above two months, and is called to no anſwer, and knows not when he ſhall come to any end, ſo that this his impriſonment conſumeth his ſubſtance, and will utterly undo him, unleſs your Grace be his good Lord. I know not the Man (ſaid the Archbiſhop) nor what he hath done why he ſhould be thus in trouble.

Said Cherſey again, he only hath offended againſt your Grace, and againſt no Man elſe, as may well be perceived by the Articles objected againſt him, the Copy whereof the ſaid Cherſey then exhibited to the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury. who well peruſing the ſaid Articles ſaid, This is the common talk of all the ignorant papiſtical Prieſts in England againſt me. Surely, ſaid he, I was never made privy to this accuſation, and of his indurance I never heard before this time. Notwithſtanding, if there be nothing elſe to charge him withal againſt the Prince, or any of the Council, I will at your requeſt take order with him, and ſend him home again to his cure to do his duty; and ſo thereupon ſent his ring to the Warden of the Fleet, willing him to ſend the priſoner unto him, with his keeper at afternoon.

The Prieſt ſent for to the Archbiſhop.

When the keeper had brought the priſoner at the hour appointed, and Cherſey had well inſtructed his couſin in any wiſe to ſubmit himſelf to the Archbiſhop, confeſſing his fault, whereby that way he ſhould moſt eaſily have an end and win his favour; thus the Parſon being brought into the garden at Lambeth, and there the Archbiſhop ſitting under the vine demanded of the Parſon, what was the cauſe of his indurance, and who committed him to the Fleet. The Parſon anſwered and ſaid, that the Lord Cromwel ſent him thither, for that certain malicious pariſhioners of his pariſh had wrongfully accuſed him of words which he never ſpake nor meant; Cherſey hearing his fooliſh couſin ſo far out of the way from his former inſtruction, ſaid, Thou daſtardly dolt and varlet, is this thy promiſe that thou madeſt to me? Are there not a great number of thy honeſt neighbours hands againſt thee, to prove thee a liar? Surely my Lord (quoth Cherſey) it is pity to do him good. I am ſorry that I have troubled your Grace thus far with him.

The Archbiſhops words to the Parſon.

Well, ſaid the Archbiſhop unto the Parſon, if you have not offended me, I can do you no good: for I am intreated to help one out of trouble that hath offended againſt me. If my Lord Cromwel hath committed you to priſon wrongfully, that lieth in himſelf to amend and not in me. If your offence only hath touched me, I will be bold to do ſomewhat for your friends ſake here. If you have not offended againſt me, then have I nothing to do with you, but that you may go and remain from whence you came. Lord what ado his kinſman Cherſey made with him, calling him all kind of opprobrious names? In the end my Lord of Canterbury ſeeming to riſe and go his ways, the fond Prieſt fell on his knees, and ſaid, I beſeech your Grace to forgive me this offence, aſſuring your Grace that I ſpake thoſe words being drunk and not well adviſed. Ah, ſaid my Lord, this is ſomewhat, and yet it is no good excuſe: for drunkenneſs evermore uttereth that which lieth hid in the heart of Man when he is ſober, alledging a Text or twain out of the Scriptures concerning the vice of drunkenneſs, which cometh not now to remembrance.

The Prieſt confeſſeth his fault to the Archb.

Now therefore (ſaid the Archbiſhop) that you acknowledge ſomewhat your fault, I am content to commune with you, hoping that you are at this preſent of an indifferent ſobriety. Tell me then, quoth he, did you ever ſee me, or were you ever acquainted with me before this day? The Prieſt anſwered and ſaid, that never in his life he ſaw his Grace. Why then (ſaid the Archbiſhop) what occaſion had you to call me an hoſtler, and that I had not ſo much learning as the Goſelings which then went on the green before you face? If I have no learning you may now try it, and be out of doubt thereof: therefore I pray you appoſe me, either in Grammar or in other liberal Sciences, for I have at one time or other taſted partly of them. Or elſe if you are a Divine, ſay ſomwhat that way.

The Prieſts anſwer.

The prieſt being amazed at my Lords familiar talk, made anſwer and ſaid; I beſeech your Grace to pardon me. I am altogether unlearned, and underſtand not the Latin

Tongue

Tongue, but very ſimply. My only ſtudy hath been to ſay my ſervice and Maſs, fair and deliberate, which I can do as well as any Prieſt in the Countrey where I dwell, I thank God. Well, ſaid the other, if you will not appoſe me, I will be ſo bold to appoſe you, and yet as eaſily as I can deviſe, and that only in the ſtory of the Bible now in Engliſh, in which I ſuppoſe that you are daily exerciſed. Tell me therefore who was King Davids Father, ſaid my Lord. The Prieſt ſtood ſtill pauſing a while, and ſaid, In good faith my Lord, I have forgotten his name. Then ſaid the other again to him, If you cannot tell that, I pray you tell me then, who was Solomons Father? The fond fooliſh Prieſt without all conſideration what was demanded of him before, made anſwer, Good my Lord bear with me, I am no further ſeen in the Bible, then is daily read in our ſervice in the Church.

The Maſs Prieſt ignorant in the Scripture.

The Archbiſhop then anſwering, ſaid, this my queſtion may be found well anſwered in your ſervice. But I now well perceive, howſoever ye have judged heretofore of my learning, ſure I am that you have none at all. But this is the common practice of all you that be ignorant and ſuperſtitious Prieſts, to ſlander, backbite, and hate all ſuch as are learned and well affected towards Gods Word and ſincere Religion. Common Reaſon might have taught you what an unlikely thing it was, and contrary to all manner of reaſon, that a Prince having two Univerſities within his Realm of well learned Men, and deſirous to be reſolved of as doubtful a queſtion as in theſe many years the like was not moved within Chriſtendom, ſhould be driven to that neceſſity for the defence of his cauſe, to ſend out of his Realm an Hoſtler, being a Man of no better knowledge then is a Goſling, in an Embaſſage to anſwer all learned Men, both in the Court of Rome, and the Emperours Court, in ſo difficult a queſtion as toucheth the Kings Matrimony, and the divorce thereof. I ſay, if you were Men of any reaſonable conſideration, you might think it both unſeemly and uncomly for a Prince ſo to do. But look where malice reigneth in Man, there reaſon can take no place; and therefore I ſee by it, that you all are at a point with me, that no reaſon or authority can perſwade you to favour my name, who never meant evil to you, but your both commodity and profit. Howbeit, God amend you all, forgive you, and ſend you better minds.

Evil will never ſaith well.

The Archbiſhop forgiveth and diſmiſſeth the Prieſt.

With theſe words the Prieſt ſeemed to weep, and deſired his Grace to pardon his fault and frailty, ſo that by this means he might return to his Cure again, and he would ſure recant thoſe his fooliſh words before his Pariſhioners ſo ſoon as he came home, and would become a new Man. Well, ſaid the Archbiſhop, ſo had you need: and giving him a godly admonition to refuſe the haunting of the Alehouſe, and to beſtow his time better in the continual reading of the Scriptures, he diſmiſſed him from the Fleet.

The Lord Cromwel offended with the Archb. in forgiving the Popiſh Prieſt.

The Lord Cromwel, perceiving within a fortnight after that his priſoner was ſent home without any open puniſhment, came to Lambeth unto the Archbiſhop, and in a great heat ſaid to him, My Lord, I underſtand that you have diſpatched the Northern Prieſt, that I of late ſent to the Fleet, home again, who unhoneſtly railed of you, and called you an Hoſtler.

Indeed I have ſo done (ſaid he again) for that in his abſence the people of his Cure wanted their Divine Service. It is very devout Divine Service that he ſaith, quoth the Lord Cromwel; It were more meet for him to be an Hoſtler then a curate, who ſticked not to call you an Hoſtler. But I thought ſo much what you would do, and therefore I would not tell you of his knavery when I ſent him to priſon. Howbeit henceforth, they ſhall cut your throat before that I ſay any thing more to them on your behalf. Why? What would you have done with him, quoth the Archbiſhop? there was nothing laid to his charge, other then words ſpoken againſt me, and now the Man is repentant and well reconciled, and hath been at great charges in priſon: it is time therefore that he were rid out of his trouble. Well, ſaid my Lord Cromwel, I meant that he ſhould have preached at Pauls Croſs a recantation before he had gone home. That had been well done, quoth the other, for then you would have had all the World as well to wonder at me as at him. Well, well, ſaid the Lord Cromwel, we ſhall ſo long bear with theſe Poliſh knaves, that at length they will bring us indeed to be wondred at of the whole World.

The Archbiſhop defendeth his enemy that before railed upon him.

Anno 1556.

This example among other, ſerveth to declare that there remained ſmall deſire of revenging in the ſaid Archbiſhop. But what ſhould I ſay more? His quietneſs and mortification this way was ſuch, that it is reported of all that knew him, that he never raged ſo far with any of his houſhold Servants, as once to call the meaneſt of them varlet, or knave in anger, much leſs to reprove a ſtranger with any reproachful words. Much unlike in this part to the property (as it ſeemeth) of ſome other inferiour Biſhops of this Realm, which have not ſpared to ſlie in the faces, to pluck off the beards, to burn the hands, to beat and ſcourge with rods the Bodies of both Gentlemen, married Men and other, having almoſt nothing elſe in Mouth, but fools and knaves, &c. and yet after all this, think themſelves good perfect Biſhops, after the rule which followeth and ſaith.

The Archbiſhop Cranmer was never heard to call any of his houſhold once varlet or knave.

No ſtriker, no fighter.

No ſtriker, no fighter. From which kind of vice, the nature of this Archbiſhop was ſo far off, as was his Doctrine which he profeſſed, and death which he ſuffered, far off from all condition and example of blind Popery. After the prohibition of theſe foreſaid vices, ſucceedeth the Mother of all good vertues neceſſarily required of all true Chriſtians, but chiefly of a Spiritual Prelate, which is,

Not given to filthy lucre, but harborous.

Not given to filthy lucre, but harborous.

Not given to filthy lucre, but harborous, &c. The contrary whereof, was ſo odious unto St. Paul, that he eſteemed the ſame no leſs then a kind of Idolatry, in that it maketh Men forget their duty to God ſo far, and inſtead of him to worſhip their Treaſure. How little this Prelate we ſpeak of was infected with this vice, and how he was no niggard, all kind of people that knew him, as well learned beyond the Seas and on this ſide, to whom yearly he gave in exhibition no ſmall ſums of mony, as other, both Gentlemen, mean Men, and poor Men, who had in their neceſſity that which he could conveniently ſpare, lend, or make, can well teſtifie. And albeit ſuch was his liberality to all ſorts of Men, that no Man did lack whom he could do for, either in giving or lending; yet nevertheleſs ſuch was again his circumſpection, that when he was apprehended and committed by Queen Mary to the Tower, he owed no Man living a peny that could or would demand any duty of him, but ſatisfied every Man to the uttermoſt; whereas no ſmall ſums of Mony were owing him of divers perſons, which by breaking their bils and obligations he freely forgave, and ſuppreſſed before his attainder. Inſomuch that when he perceived the fatal end of King Edward ſhould work to him no good ſucceſs touching his Body and Goods, he incontinently called for his Officers, his Steward and others, commanding them in any wiſe to pay where any peny was owing, which was out of hand diſpatched. And then he ſaid, now I thank God I am mine own Man, and in Conſcience, with Gods help able elſe to anſwer all the World and Worldly Adverſities, which ſome Men ſuppoſe he might alſo have avoided, if he would have been Counſelled by ſome of his Friends. It followeth moreover:

The liberal doings of this Archbiſhop.

The Archbiſhop clearing all his debts before his attainder.

Harborous.

And as touching this word Harborous, whereby is meant the good maintenance of Hoſpitality; ſo little was this property lacking in him, that ſome Men miſliking the ſame, thought it rather a houſe of overmuch laviſhing and unprofitable expence. But as nothing can be ſo well done, which by ſome other ſhall not be maligned and detracted; ſo neither did this Man lack his Cavillers, ſome finding fault with his overmuch prodigality, ſome on the contrary part repining and complaining of his ſpare houſe, and ſtraight order, much under the ſtate of his revenews and calling. Of which two, the firſt ſort muſt conſider the cauſes which moved him to that liberal and large kind of expences. Wherein here cometh to be conſidered, the time wherein he ſerved; which was when reformation formation of Religion firſt began to be advanced. In which time the whole weight and care of the ſame moſt chiefly depended upon his hand. During which ſeaſon, almoſt for the ſpace of ſixteen years together, his houſe was never lightly unfurniſhed of a number both of learned Men and Commiſſioners, from time to time appointed for deciding of Eccleſiaſtical affairs.

And thus as he ſeemed to ſome over-large and laviſh ing more then needed in hoſpitality; ſo on the other ſide there wanted not ſome, of whom he was much noted and accuſed again, yea and alſo complained of to King Henry the eighth for too ſlender and niggardly houſekeeping, as not worthy to be accounted the hoſpitality of a mean Gentleman, as here following ſhall appear.

After that the ample and great poſſeſſions, revenues, jewels, rich ornaments, and other treaſures of the Abbeys were diſſolved and brought into the Kings hands, in the diſſolving whereof many cormorants were fed and ſatisfied, and yet not ſo fully ſatisfied, but that within a few years they began to wax hungry again: and for ſo much as no more could be ſcraped now out of Abbeys, they began to ſeek how by ſome other prey to ſatisfie their appetites, which was to tickle the Kings Ears with the rich revenue of the Biſhops Lands. And to bring this deviſe to paſs, they procured Sir Thomas Seimour Knight of the privy Chamber, to be a promoter of the matter; who not in all points much favouring the Archbiſhop, having time and a convenient occaſion, declared to the King that my Lord of Canterbury did nothing elſe but ſell his woods, and let his Leaſes by great and many fines, making havock of all the Royalties of the Archbiſhoprick, and that only to the intent to gather up treaſure for his wife and Children, keeping no manner of Hoſpitality, in reſpect of ſo great a revenue; advertiſing the King further, that it was the opinion of many wiſe Men, that it were more meet for the Biſhops to have a ſufficient yearly ſtipend in money out of the Exchequer, then to be cumbred with thoſe temporal affairs of their Royalties, being impediments unto their ſtudy, and paſtoral charge, and his Highneſs to have their Lands and Royalties converted to his proper uſe, which beſides their honeſt ſtipends would be unto his Majeſty no ſmall commodity and profit.

The Biſhops Lands ſought.

Untruth told to the King of the Archbiſhop of Canterburies houſekeeping.

When the King had heard his fair tale, he ſaid little thereunto, other then this. Well (quoth he) we will talk more of this matter at another time. Now, within a fortnight after or thereabout (whether by chance, or of ſet purpoſe, it is not known) it came to paſs, that one day his Highneſs going to dinner had waſhed, Sir Thomas Seimor then holding the Ewer, and ſaid to the ſaid Sir Thomas, Go you out of hand to Lambeth unto my Lord of Canterbury, and bid him to be with me at two of the Clock at afternoon, and fail not. Sir Thomas ſtraightways went to Lambeth, and as he came to the gate the Porter being in the lodge, came out, and conveighed him to the Hall, which was throughly furniſhed and ſet, both with the houſhold ſervants and ſtrangers, with four principal head meſſes of officers, as daily it was accuſtomed to be. When Sir Thomas Seimor ſaw that ſtately large Hall ſo well ſet and furniſhed, being therewith abaſhed, and ſomewhat guilty of an untruth told to the King before, he retired back, and would needs have gone to the Archb. of Canterbury by the Chappel, and not through the Hall. Richard Nevel Gentleman, then Steward of the Houſhold, perceiving his retire, came by and by unto him, and after gentle entertainment demanded of him whether he would ſpeak with my Lord or no? Sir Thomas ſaid, that he muſt needs do ſo from the Kings Highneſs, ſaying unto him, and this way I am going to my Lords Grace. Sir, ſaid the Steward, you cannot go that way, for the door is faſt ſhut, in the dinner time; and ſo by gentle means brought him up to my Lords Chamber thorow the Hall, who then was at dinner: with whom he dined after he had done his meſſage, whoſe ordinary fair might always well beſeem a right honourable perſonage. When dinner was ſcarce done, Sir Thomas took his leave of my Lord, and went again to the Court.

The Kings anſwer to the complainer of the Archbiſhop.

The Archb. of Canterburies houſekeeping.

So ſoon as the Kings Highneſs ſaw him, he ſaid to him; have you been with my Lord of Canterbury? Sir Thomas anſwered, That I have if it pleaſe your Majeſty, and he will be with your Highneſs ſtraightways. Dined you not with him, ſaid the King? Yes Sir (ſaid he) that have I done. And with that word, whether he eſpied by the Kings countenance, or by his words any thing tending to diſpleaſure, he ſtraightway without delay kneeled down upon his knee, and ſaid, I beſeech your Majeſty to pardon me: I do now well remember and underſtand, that of late I told your Highneſs a great untruth concerning my Lord of Canterburies houſe-keeping; but from henceforth I intend never to believe that perſon which did put that vain tale into my head: For I aſſure your Highneſs that I never ſaw ſo honourable a Hall ſet in this Realm (beſides your Majeſties Hall) in all my life, with better order, and ſo well furniſhed in each degree. If I had not ſeen it my ſelf, I could never have believed it, and himſelf alſo ſo honourably ſerved.

The compleiner aſketh pardon of the King for his untrue report.

Ah Sir, quoth the Kings Highneſs, Have you now eſpied the truth? I thought you would tell me another tale when you had been there. He was a very varlet (quoth the King) that told you that tale: for he ſpendeth (ah good Man ſaid the King) all that he hath in houſe-keeping. But now I perceive which way the wind bloweth. There are a ſort of you to whom I have liberally given of the poſſeſſions and revenues of the ſuppreſſed Monaſteries, which like as you have lightly gotten, ſo have you more unthriftily ſpent, ſome at dice, other ſome in gay apparel, and other ways worſe I fear me: and now that all is gone you would fain have me make another chevance with the Biſhops Lands, to accompliſh your greedy appetites. But let no other Biſhops beſtow their revenues worſe then my Lord of Canterbury doth, then ſhall you have no cauſe to complain of their keeping of houſe.

The King ſpeaketh in defence of the Archb. of Canterbury.

And thus the tale being ſhut up, and ended by the Kings Highneſs, neither Sir Thomas Seimor, nor any other on his behalf ever after duſt renew, or revive that ſute or any more in King Henries days; ſo that it may be evident to all indifferent Men, the liberality of the Archbiſhop in houſe-keeping what it was, which being defended, and commended by the Prince himſelf, rather may give a good example to his poſterity to follow, then was then to be depraved of any private Subject, ſuch as knew him not.

In which Archbiſhop this moreover is to be noted, with a memorandum touching the relief of the poor, impotent, ſick, and ſuch as then came from the wars at Bullen, and other parts beyond the Seas, lame, wounded, and deſtitute: for whom he provided, beſides his manſion houſe at Beckisborn in Kent, the Parſonage Barn well furniſhed with certain lodgings for the ſick and maimed Souldiers. To whom were alſo appointed the almoner, a Phyſician, and a Surgeon to attend upon them, and to dreſs and cure ſuch as were not able to reſort to their Countreys, having daily from the Biſhops kitchin hot broth and meat: for otherwiſe the common alms of the houſhold was beſtowed upon the poor neighbours of the Shire. And when any of the impotent did recover and were able to travel, they had convenient mony delivered to bear their charges, according to the number of miles from that place diſtant. And this good example of mercy and liberal benignity, I thought here good not in ſilence to be ſuppreſſed, whereby other may be moved according to their vocation, to walk in the ſteps of no leſs liberality, then in him in this behalf appeared.

The Alms of the Archbiſhop towards the poor.

One that loveth goodneſs, ſober minded, righteous, holy, and temperate.

Now followeth together theſe vertues, One that loveth goodneſs, ſober minded, righteous, holy, and temperate. As concerning theſe qualities, the trade of his life before joyned with his benign and gentle diſpoſition, do teſtify that he could not be void of theſe good vertues reigning in him, which was ſo abundantly adorned with the other, which above we have declared.

To cleave faſt unto the true word of Doctrine, that he may be able to exhort with wholeſom learning, and to reprove them that ſay againſt it.

Then concludeth Saint Paul with the moſt exceſſent

vertue of all other to be wiſhed in a Prelate of the Church. For if this conſtancy be not in him to this end, that is, To cleave faſt unto the true word of Doctrine, that he may be able to exhort with wholeſom learning and to improve them that ſay againſt it: If he be void (I ſay) of theſe gifts and graces, he is worthy of no commendation, but ſhall ſeem an Idol, and a deceiver of the World. Neither ſhall he deſerve the name of a Biſhop, if either for dread or meed, affection or favour, he do at any time or in any point ſwerve from the truth. As in this behalf the worthy conſtancy of this ſaid Archbiſhop never, for the moſt part ſhrunk for any manner of ſtorm; but was ſo many ways tried, that neither favour of his Prince, nor fear of the indignation of the ſame, nor any other worldly reſpect could alienate or change his purpoſe, grounded upon that infallible Doctrine of the Goſpel. Notwithſtanding, his conſtant defence of Gods truth was ever joyned with ſuch meekneſs toward the King, that he never took occaſion of offence againſt him.

To cleave faſt to the Word of Doctrine able to exhort in wholſom learning, and to reprove the gain-ſayer. Titus 1.

Archb. Cranmer ever conſtant in defence of Chriſts truth and Goſpel.

At the time of ſetting forth the ſix Articles, mention was made before in the ſtory of King Henry the eighth, how adventurouſly this Archbiſhop Thomas Cranmer did oppoſe himſelf, ſtanding as it were, poſt alone, againſt the whole Parliament diſputing and replying three days together againſt the ſaid Articles. Inſomuch, that the King, when neither he could miſlike his reaſons, and yet would needs have theſe Articles to paſs, required him to abſent himſelf for the time out of the Chamber, while the Act ſhould paſs, and ſo he did, and how the King afterward ſent all the Lords of the Parliament unto the Archbiſhop to Lambeth to cheer his mind again, that he might not be diſcouraged, all which appeareth above expreſſed: And this was done during yet the ſtate and time of the Lord Cromwels Authority. And now that it may appear likewiſe, that after the decay of the Lord Cromwel, yet his conſtancy in Chriſts cauſe did not decay, you ſhall hear what followeth after.

For after the apprehenſion of the Lord Cromwel, when the Adverſaries of the Goſpel thought all things ſure now on their ſide; it was ſo appointed amongſt them, that ten or twelve Biſhops, and other learned Men, joyned together in Commiſſion, came to the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury for the eſtabliſhing of certain Articles of our Religion, which the Papiſts then thought to win to their purpoſe againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop. For having now the Lord Cromwel faſt and ſure, they thought all had been ſafe, and ſure for ever: as indeed, to all Mens reaſonable conſideration, that time appeared ſo dangerous; that there was no manner of hope that Religion reformed ſhould any one week longer ſtand, ſuch account was then made of the Kings untowardneſs thereunto. Inſomuch, that of all thoſe Commiſſioners there was not one left to ſtay on the Archbiſhops part but he alone againſt them all ſtood in the defence of the truth; and thoſe that he moſt truſted to, namely, Biſhop Heath, and Biſhop Skip left him in the plain field, who then ſo turned againſt him, that they took upon them to perſwade him to their purpoſe: and having him down from the reſt of the Commiſſioners into his Garden at Lambeth, there by all manner of effectual perſwaſions intreated him to leave of his overmuch conſtancy, and to incline unto the Kings intent, who was fully ſet to have it otherwiſe then he then had penned, or meant to have ſet abroad. When thoſe two his familiars, with one or two others his friends, had uſed all their eloquence and policy, he little regarding their inconſtancy and remiſneſs in Gods cauſe or quarrel, ſaid unto them right notably.

The Archb. alone ſtandeth in defence of the truth.

B. Heath, and B. Skip forſake the Archb. in the plain field.

The Archb. incenſed by B. Heath and Skip to give over the defence of the Goſpel.

The anſwer of the Archb. to D. Heath and Skip.

You make much ado to have me come to your purpoſe, alledging that it is the Kings pleaſure to have the Articles, in that ſort you have deviſed them, to proceed; and now that you do perceive his Highneſs by ſiniſter information to be bent that way, you think it a convenient thing to apply unto his Highneſs mind. You be my friends both, eſpecially the one of you I did put to his Majeſty as of truſt. Beware (I ſay) what you do: There is but one truth in our Articles to be concluded upon, which if you do hide from his Highneſs by conſenting unto a contrary Doctrine, and then after in proceſs of time, when the truth cannot be hidden from him, his Highneſs ſhall perceive how that you have dealt colourably with him, I know his Graces nature ſo well (quoth the Archbiſhop) that he will never after truſt and credit you, or put any good confidence in you. And as you are both my friends, ſo therefore I will you to beware thereof in time, and diſcharge your Conſciences in maintenance of the truth. But all this would not ſerve, for they ſtill ſwerved; and in diſcharging of his Conſcience and declaring the truth unto the King, GOD ſo wrought with the King, that his Highneſs joyned with him againſt the reſt, ſo that the Book of Articles paſſing on his ſide, he wan the Gole from them all, contrary to all their expectations, when many wagers would have been laid in London, that he ſhould have been laid up with Cromwel at that time in the Tower for his ſtiff ſtanding to his tackle. After that day there could neither Councellour, Biſhop, nor Papiſt win him out of the King favour.

Anno 1556.

Notwithſtanding, not long after that, certain of the Council, whoſe names need not to be repeated, by the inticement and provocation of his ancient enemy the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and other of the ſame ſect, attempted the King againſt him, declaring plainly, that the Realm was ſo infected with Hereſies and Hereticks, that it was dangerous for his Highneſs farther to permit it unreformed, leſt peradventure by long ſuffering, ſuch contention ſhould ariſe, and enſue in the Realm among his Subjects, that thereby might ſpring horrible commotions, and uproars, like as in ſome parts of Germany it did not long ago. The enormity whereof they could not impute to any ſo much, as to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who by his own Preaching, and his Chaplains, had filled the whole Realm full of divers pernicious Hereſies. The King would needs know his accuſers. They anſwered that foraſmuch as he was a Counſellor, no Man durſt take upon him to accuſe him; but if it would pleaſe his Highneſs to commit him to the Tower for a time, there would be accuſations and proofs enow againſt him: for otherwiſe, juſt teſtimony and witneſs againſt him would not appear, and therefore your Highneſs (ſaid they) muſt needs give us the counſel, liberty and leave to commit him to durance.

The Papiſts buſy to bring the Archb. out of credit with the King.

The Archb. again accuſed to the King.

The King perceiving their importunate ſute againſt the Archbiſhop (but yet meaning not to have him wronged, and utterly given over into their hands) granted unto them that they ſhould the next day commit him to the Tower for his trial. When night came, the King ſent Sir Anthony Deny about midnight to Lambeth to the Archbiſhop, willing him forthwith to reſort unto him at the Court. The meſſage done, the Archbiſhop ſpeedily addreſſed himſelf to the Court, and coming into the Gallery, where the King walked, and tarried for him, his Highneſs ſaid, Ah, my Lord of Canterbury, I can tell you news. For divers weighty conſiderations it is determined by me, and the Council, that you to morrow at nine of the Clock ſhall be committed to the Tower, for that you and your Chaplains (as information is given us) have taught and Preached, and thereby ſown within the Realm ſuch a number of execrable Hereſies, that it is feared, the whole Realm being infected with them; no ſmall contentions, and commotions will riſe thereby amongſt my Subjects, as of late days the like was in divers parts of Germany: and therefore the Council have requeſted me, for the trial of the matter, to ſuffer them to commit you to the Tower, or elſe no Man dare come forth, as witneſs in theſe matters, you being a Counſellor.

The King ſent Sir Anthony Deny at midnight for the Archbiſhop.

The Kings words and advice for the ſupportation of the Archbiſhop.

When the King had ſaid his mind, the Archbiſhop kneeled down and ſaid, I am content, if it pleaſe your Grace, with all my heart, to go thither at your Highneſs commandment, and I moſt humbly thank your Majeſty that I may come to my trial; for there be that have many ways ſlandered me, and now this way I hope to try my ſelf not worthy of ſuch report.

The Archb. anſwer to the King.

The King perceiving the Mans uprightneſs, joyned with ſuch ſimplicity, ſaid; O Lord, what manner of Man be you? What ſimplicity is in you? I had thought that you would rather have ſued to us to have taken the pains to have heard you and your accuſers together for your trial, without any ſuch indurance. Do you not know, what ſtate you be in with the whole World, and how many great enemies you have? Do you not conſider what an eaſie thing it is, to procure three or four falſe knaves to witneſs againſt you? Think you to have better luck that

Anno 1556.

The Kings favourable care and conſideration toward the Archbiſhop of Cant.

that way, then your Maſter Chriſt had? I ſee by it you will run head-long to your undoing, if I would ſuffer you. Your enemies ſhall not ſo prevail againſt you, for I have otherwiſe deviſed with my ſelf to keep you out of their hands. Yet notwithſtanding to morrow when the Counſil ſhall ſit, and ſend for you, reſort unto them, and if in charging you with this matter, they do commit you to the Tower, require of them, becauſe you are one of them, a Counſellour, that you may have your accuſers brought before them without any further indurance, and uſe for your ſelf as good perſwaſions that way as you may deviſe; and if no intreaty or reaſonable requeſt will ſerve, then deliver unto them this my ring (which then the King delivered unto the Archbiſhop) and ſay unto them, if there be no remedy my Lords, but that I muſt needs go to the Tower, then I revoke my cauſe from you, and appeal to the Kings own perſon by this his token unto you all; for (ſaid the King then unto the Archbiſhop) ſo ſoon as they ſhall ſee this my ring, they know it ſo well, that they ſhall underſtand that I have reſumed the whole cauſe into mine own hands and determination, and that I have diſcharged them thereof.

The K. ſendeth his Signet in the behalf of the Arch. of Cant.

The Archbiſhop perceiving the Kings benignity ſo much to himwards, had much ado to forbear tears. Well ſaid the King, Go your ways my Lord, and do as I have bidden you. My Lord humbling himſelf with thanks, took his leave of the Kings Highneſs for that night.

The Archb. being one of the Council, made to ſtand at the Council Chamber door waiting.

On the morrow about nine of the clock before noon, the Council ſent a Gentleman Uſher for the Archbiſhop who when he came to the Council Chamber door, could not be let in; but of purpoſe (as it ſeemed) was compelled there to wait among the Pages, Lackies and Servingmen all alone. Doctor Buts the Kings Phyſician reſorting that way, and eſpying how my Lord of Canterbury was handled, went to the Kings Highneſs, and ſaid, My Lord of Canterbury, if it pleaſe your Grace, is well promoted: for now he is become a Lackey or a Serving Man, for yonder he hath ſtood this half hour at the Council Chamber door amongſt them. It is not ſo (quoth the King) I trow; the Council hath not ſo little diſcretion as to uſe the Metropolitan of the Realm in that ſort, ſpecially being one of their own number. But let them alone (ſaid the King) and we ſhall hear more ſoon.

D. Buts, the Kings Phiſician a friend of the Archbiſhops.

The Archb. called before the Council.

Anon the Archbiſhop was called into the Council Chamber, to whom was alledged, as before is rehearſed. The Archbiſhop anſwered in like ſort, as the King had adviſed him; and in the end when he perceived that no manner of perſwaſion or intreaty could ſerve, he delivered them the Kings Ring, revoking his cauſe into the Kings hands. The whole Councel being thereat ſomwhat amazed the Earl of Bedford with a loud voice, confirming his Words with a Solemn Oath, ſaid, When you firſt began the matter my Lords, I told you what would come of it. Do you think that the King will ſuffer this Mans finger to ake? Much more (I warrant you) will he defend his life againſt brabling varlets? You do but cumber your ſelves to hear tales and fables againſt him. And ſo incontinently upon the receipt of the Kings token, they all aroſe, and carried the King his ring, ſurrendring that matter as the order and uſe was, into his own hands.

The Councel being ſet againſt the Archbiſhop, he ſheweth the Kings ring, and appealeth from them.

The Kings words to the Council in defence of the Archbiſhop.

When they were all come to the Kings preſence, his Highneſs with a ſevere countenance ſaid unto them; Ah my Lords, I thought I had had wiſer Men of my Councel then now I find you. What diſcretion was this in you, thus to make the Primate of the Realm, and one of you in Office, to wait at the Council Chamber door amongſt ſerving Men? You might have conſidered that he was a Counſellor as well as you, and you had no ſuch Commiſſion of me ſo to handle him. I was content that you ſhould try him as a Counſellor, and not as a mean Subject. But now I well perceive that things be done againſt him maliciouſly, and if ſome of you might have had your minds, you would have tried him to the uttermoſt. But I do you all to wit, and proteſt, that if a Prince may be beholding unto his Subject (and ſo, ſolemnly laying his hand upon his Breſt, ſaid) by the Faith I owe to God, I take this Man here, my Lord of Canterbury, to be of all other a moſt Faithful Subject unto us, and one to whom we are much beholding, giving him great commendations otherwiſe. And with that one or two of the chiefeſt of the Council, making their excuſe, declared, that in requeſting his indurance, it was rather meant for his tryal, and his purgation againſt the common fame, and ſlander of the World, than for any malice conceived againſt him. Well, well, my Lords (quoth the King) take him and well uſe him, as he is worthy to be, and make no more ado. And with that every Man caught him by the hand, and made fair weather of altogethers, which might eaſily be done with that Man.

The Lords of the Council glad to be friends again with the Archb.

And it was much to be marvelled, that they would go ſo far with him, thus to ſeek his undoing, underſtanding this well before, that the King moſt entirely loved him, and always would ſtand in his defence whoſoever ſpake againſt him; as many other times the Kings patience was by ſiniſter informations againſt him tried. Inſomuch that the Lord Cromwel was evermore wont to ſay unto him, My Lord of Canterbury, you are moſt happy of all Men: for you may do and ſpeak what you liſt; and ſay what all Men can againſt you, the King will never believe one word to your detriment or hindrance. I am ſure I take more pains than all the Council doth, and ſpend more largely in the Kings affairs, as well beyond the Seas as on this ſide: yea I aſſure you, even very ſpies in other forreign Realms, at Rome and elſewhere, coſt me above 1000. marks a year: and do what I can to bring matters to knowledge, for the commodity of the King and the Realm, I am every day chidden, and many falſe tales now and then believed againſt me; and therefore you are moſt happy, for in no point can you be diſcredited with the King. To this the Archbiſhop again anſwering, if the Kings Majeſty were not good to me that way, I were not able to ſtand and indure one whole week, but your Wiſdom and Policy is ſuch, that you are able to ſhift well enough for your ſelf.

The King a great ſupporter of Cranmer.

The L. Cromwels words to the Archbiſhop.

Now when the Kings Highneſs had thus benignly and mercifully diſpatched the ſaid Archbiſhop from this ſore accuſation by the Council laid againſt him, all Wiſe Men would have thought that it had been meer folly afterwards to have attempted any matter againſt him: but yet look where malice reigneth, there neither reaſon nor honeſty can take place. Such therefore as had conceived deep rancor and diſpleaſure againſt him, ceaſed not to perſecute him by all poſſible means. Then brought they againſt him a new kind of accuſation, and cauſed Sir John Goſtwike Knight, a Man of a contrary Religion, to accuſe the Archbiſhop openly in the Parliament Houſe, laying to his charge his Sermons Preached at Sandwich, and his Lectures read at Canterbury, wherein ſhould be contained manifeſt Hereſies againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, &c. Which accuſation came to the Kings ear. Why (quoth the King) where dwelleth Goſtwike? As I take it, either in Bedfordſhire or Buckinghamſhire, and hath he ſo open an ear that he can hear my Lord of Canterbury Preaching out of Kent? This is very likely, ſaid the King. If he had been a Kentiſhman, there had been ſomething worthy of conſideration: but as for Goſtwike, I know him well enough, and what good Religion he is of. Go to him and tell him, ſaid the King to one of his privy Chamber, if he go not to my L. of Cant. and ſo reconcile himſelf to him, that he may become his good Lord, I will pull the Goſlings Feathers ſo, that hereafter he ſhall have little luſt to ſlander the Metropolitane, or any other learned Man. When Sir J. Goſtwike heard theſe words, it was no need to bid him haſt himſelf to Lambeth unto the Metropolitan, making to him as many friends as poſſibly he might. When he came to the Archb. he was fain to diſcloſe unto him, by what means he was procured to do that he did, requeſting his clemency to be his good Lord, or elſe he took himſelf utterly undone, being ſo in the Kings indignation, as he underſtood he was by that afore declared, which ſute was ſoon won at his hand: and ſo the Archb. caſting into the ſatchel behind him all thoſe Sir J. Goſtwikes ingratitudes, went to the King, and wan to Sir John his Princes favour again. And thus the King made a ſhort end of this accuſation.

Another accuſation brought into the Parliament Houſe by Sir John Goſtwike againſt the Archbiſhop.

Goſtwike checkt of the King for accuſing the Archbiſhop.

Goſtwike glad to fall in again with the Archb. of Canterbury.

Well, here you may perceive that malicious invention went not the wiſeſt way to work, to procure a ſtranger dwelling a far off, to accuſe the Archb. of his Doctrine Preached in his Dioceſs: and therefore hath blind malice learned ſome more wiſdom now to accuſe their Archbiſhop in in ſuch ſort as he ſhall never be able to avoid it. And therefore it was procured by his ancient enemies, that not only the Prebendaries of his Cathedral Church in Canterbury, but alſo the moſt famous Juſtices of Peace in the ſhire ſhould accuſe him, article againſt him; which in very deed was moſt ſubſtantially brought to paſs, and the Articles both well written and ſubſcribed, were delivered to the Kings Highneſs, as a thing of ſuch effect, that there muſt needs follow to the ſaid Archbiſhop, both indignation of the Prince, and condign puniſhment for his grievous offence committed by him and his Chaplains, in Preaching ſuch erroneous Doctrine as they did within his Dioceſs of Canterbury; whereof they being ſuch witneſſes of credit, no Man had cauſe to doubt of their circumſpect doings. This accuſation particularly ſent out was delivered to the King by ſome of the Councils means: When the King had peruſed the Book, he wrapt it up, and put it in his ſleeve; and finding occaſion to ſolace himſelf upon the Thames, came with his Barge furniſhed with his Muſicians a long by Lambeth Bridge towards Chelſey. The noiſe of the Muſicians provoked the Archbiſhop to reſort to the Bridge to do his duty, and to ſalute his Prince. Whom when the King had perceived to ſtand at the Bridge, eſtſoons he commanded the Watermen to draw towards the ſhoar, and ſo came ſtraight to the Bridge.

New accuſation by Prebendaries and Juſtices of Kent againſt the Archbiſhop.

Articles put to the King againſt D. Cranmer.

Ah my Chaplain, ſaid the King to the Archbiſhop, come into the Barge to me. The Archbiſhop declared to his Highneſs, that he would take his own Barge and wait upon his Majeſty. No ſaid the King, you muſt come into my Barge, for I have to talk with you. When the King and the Archbiſhop all alone in the Barge were ſet together, ſaid the King to the Archbiſhop, I have news out of Kent for you my Lord. The Archbiſhop anſwered, good I hope, if it pleaſe your Highneſs. Marry, ſaid the King, they be ſo good, that I now know the greateſt Hetetick in Kent, and with that pulled out of his ſleeve the Book of Articles againſt both the ſaid Arcb. and his Preachers, and gave the Book to him, willing him to peruſe the ſame. When the Archb. had read the Articles, and ſaw himſelf ſo uncourteouſly handled of his own Church whereof he was head, I mean of the Prebendaries of his Cathedral Church, and of ſuch his neighbours as he had many ways gratified, I mean the Juſtices of the Peace, it much grieved him. Notwithſtanding he kneeled down to the King, and beſought his Majeſty to grant out a Commiſſion to whomſoever it pleaſed his Highneſs, for them to try out the truth of this accuſation. In very deed (ſaid th King) I do ſo mean, and you your ſelf ſhall be chief Commiſſioner, to adjoyn to you ſuch two or three more as you ſhall think good your ſelf. Then it will be thought (quoth the Archb. to the King) that it is not indifferent, if it pleaſe your Grace, that I ſhould be mine own judge, and my Chaplains alſo. Well, ſaid the King, I will have none other but your ſelf, and ſuch as you will appoint. For I am ſure that you will not halt with me in any thing, although you be driven to accuſe your ſelf, and I know partly how this gear proceedeth, and if you handle the matter wiſely, you ſhall find a prety conſpiracy deviſed againſt you. Whom will you have with you, ſaid the King? Whom it ſhall pleaſe your Grace to name, quoth the Archbiſhop. I will appoint D. Belhouſe for one, name you the other, ſaid the King, meet for that purpoſe. My Chancellor, Doct. Cox, and Huſſey my Regiſter, ſaid the Archbiſhop are Men expert to examine ſuch troubleſom matters. Well, ſaid the King, let there be a Commiſſion made forth, and out of hand get you into Kent, and advertiſe me of your doings.

The King maketh the Archb. privy of the Articles.

Commiſſion appointed to be ſent into Kent, for trial of the Articles.

Commiſſioners appointed to Cranmer D. Belhouſe, D. Cox Chancellor, M. Huſſey Regiſter.

They came into Kent, and there they ſate about three weeks to boult out who was the firſt occaſion of this accuſation, for thereof the King would chiefly be advertiſed. Now the Inquiſition being begun by the Commiſſioners, every Man ſhrunk in his horns, and no Man would confeſs any thing to the purpoſe. For Doctor Cox and Huſſey, being friendly unto the Papiſts, handled the matter ſo, that they would permit nothing material to come to light. This thing being well perceived by one of the Archbiſhops Servants, his Secretary, he wrote incontinently unto Doctor Buts and Maſter Deny, declaring that if the Kings Majeſty did not ſend ſome other to aſſiſt my Lord, than thoſe that then were there with him, it were not poſſible that any thing ſhould come to light: and therefore wiſhed that Doctor Lee or ſome other ſtout Man that had been exerciſed in the Kings Eccleſiaſtical affairs in his Viſitations, might be ſent to the Archbiſhop. Upon theſe Letters Dr. Lee was ſent for to York by the King, and having the Kings farther mind declared unto him, when he came to the Court, he reſorted incontinently into Kent, ſo that on All-hallow even he delivered to the Archbiſhop the Kings Ring, with a declaration of his Highneſs farther pleaſure: and by and by upon his meſſage done, he appointed the Archbiſhop aforeſaid to name him a doſen or ſixteen of his Officers and Gentlemen, ſuch as had both diſcretion, wit, and audacity, to whom he gave in Commiſſion from the King, to ſearch both the purſes, cheſts, and Chambers of all thoſe that were deemed or ſuſpected to be of this confederacy, both within the Cathedral Church and without, and ſuch Letters or writings as they could find about them, to bring them to the Archbiſhop and him.

D. Cox Chan. and M. Huſſey falſe to the Archb. This Secretary was M. Rolph Morice witneſs and drawer of this ſtory.

Anno 1556.

D. Lee of York, appointed Commiſſioner with the Archb. for trying out the conſpiracy.

Theſe Men thus appointed, went in one hour and inſtant to the perſons houſes and places, that they were appointed unto; and within four hours afterwards the whole conſpiracy was diſcloſed by finding of Letters, ſome from the Biſhop of Wincheſter, ſome from Doctor London at Oxford, and from Juſtices of the Shire, with other; ſo that the firſt beginning, the proceeding, and what ſhould have been the end of their conſpiracy, was now made manifeſt. Certain Chambers and Cheſts of Gentlemen of the Shire were alſo ſearched, where alſo were found Letters ſerving to this purpoſe. Amongſt all other came to my Lords hands two Letters, one of the Suffragan of Dover; and another of Doctor Barbar a Civilian, whom continually the Archbiſhop retained with him in houſhold for expedition of matters in ſute before him, as a Counſellor in the Law when need required. Theſe two Men being well promoted by the Archbiſhop, he uſed ever in ſuch familiarity, that when the Suffragan, being a Prebend of Canterbury, came to him, he always ſet him at his own meſs, and the other never from his table, as Men in whom he had much delight and comfort, when time of care and penſiveneſs chanced. But that which they did, was altogether counterfeit, and the Devil was turned into the Angel of light, for they were both of this confederacy.

The conſpiracy of the Papiſts againſt the Archbiſhop found out. The Biſhop of Winche[ſter], [Lon]don, the Suffragan of Dover, D. Barbar, with certain Juſtices of Kent, chief conſpirers againſt the Archbiſhop. Domeſtical enemies and conſpirers againſt their Maſter.

When my Lord had gotten theſe their Letters into his hands, he on a day, when it chanced the Suffragan to come to him to his houſe at Bekisburn, called to him into his ſtudy the ſaid Suffragan of Dover and Doctor Barbar, ſaying, Come your ways with me, for I muſt have your advice in a matter. When they were with him in his ſtudy altogether, he ſaid to them, you twain be Men in whom I have had much confidence, and truſt; you muſt now give me ſome good Counſel, for I am ſhamefully abuſed with one or twain to whom I have ſhewed all my ſecrets from time to time, and did truſt them as my ſelf. The matter is ſo now fallen out, that they not only have diſcloſed my ſecrets, but alſo have taken upon them to accuſe me of Hereſie and are become witneſſes againſt me. I require you therefore of your good advice how I ſhall behave my ſelf towards them. You are both my friends, and ſuch as I always have uſed when I needed Counſel. What ſay you to the matter, quoth the Archbiſhop?

Privy talk between the Archbiſhop and his Suffragan, and D. Barbar.

Marry, quoth Doctor Barbar, ſuch villains and knaves (ſaving your honor) were worthy to be hanged out of hand without any other Law. Hanging were too good, quoth the Suffragan, and if there lacked one to do Execution, I would be hangman my ſelf.

The Suffragan and Civilian give judgment againſt themſelves.

At theſe words, the Archbiſhop caſt up his hands to Heaven, and ſaid, Oh Lord moſt merciful God, whom may a Man truſt now adays? It is moſt true which is ſaid, Maledictus qui confidit in homine, & ponit carnem brachium ſuum. There was never Man handled as I am: but O Lord thou haſt evermore defended me, and lent me one great friend and Maſter (meaning the King) without whoſe protection I were not able to ſtand upright one day unoverthrown, I praiſe thy holy name therefore: and with that he pulled out of his boſom their two Letters, and ſaid, Know ye theſe Letters my Maſters? With that they fell down upon their Knees, and deſired forgiveneſs, declaring how they a year before were attempted to do the ſame, and ſo very lamentably weeping and bewailing their doings, beſought his Grace to pardon and forgive them. Well, ſaid the gentle Archbiſhop, God make you both good men, I never deſerved this at your hands: but aſk God forgiveneſs, againſt whom you have highly offended. If ſuch men as you are not to be truſted, what ſhould I do alive? I perceive now, that there is no fidelity or truſt amongſt men. I am brought to this point now, that I fear my left hand will accuſe my right hand. I need not much marvel hereat, for our Saviour Chriſt truly propheſied of ſuch a world to come in the latter days. I beſeech him of his great mercy to finiſh that time ſhortly; and ſo departing, he diſmiſſed them both with gentle and comfortable words, in ſuch ſort that never after appeared in his countenance or words any remembrance thereof.

The falſe Suffragan, and Barbar the Civilian, ask the Archbiſhop forgiveneſs.

The Archb. forgiveth his enemies.

Now, when all thoſe Letters and Accuſations were found, they were put into a Cheſt, the Kings Majeſty minding to have peruſed ſome of them, and to have partly puniſhed the Principals of it. The Cheſt and Writings were brought to Lambeth; At what time began the Parliament. Lord what ado there was to procure the King a Subſidy, to the intent that thereupon might enſue a Pardon, which indeed followed, and ſo nothing was done, other than their falſhood known. This was the laſt puſh of the Pike that was inferred againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop in King Henry the Eighth his days: for never after durſt any man move matter againſt him in his time.

And thus have ye both the working and diſcloſing of this Popiſh Conſpiracy againſt this worthy Archbiſhop and Martyr of Chriſt, Thomas Cranmer. In the which Conſpiracy, for ſo much as complaint was alſo made unto the King of his Chaplains and good Preachers in Kent, it ſhall not be out of the ſtory ſomething likewiſe to touch thereof, eſpecially of Richard Turner, then Preacher the ſame time in this Archbiſhops Dioceſs, and Curate to Mr. Morice the Archbiſhops Secretary, in the Town of Chartham, by whoſe diligent preaching a great part of this heart-burning of the Papiſts took his firſt kindling againſt the Archbiſhop. Touching the deſcription of which ſtory, becauſe by me nothing ſhall be ſaid, either more or leſs, than is the truth, ye ſhall hear the very certainty thereof truly compiled in a Letter ſent the ſame time to Dr. Buts and Sir Anthony Deny, to be ſhewed unto the King, and ſo it was, written by the foreſaid Mr. Morice, Secretary then to the Archbiſhop, Farmour of the ſame Benefice of Chartham, and Patron to Mr. Turner, there Miniſter and Preacher aforeſaid.

Rich. Turner a faithful Preacher in Kent.

Papiſts ſet againſt the Archbiſhop by occaſion of Turners preaching.

A Letter or Apology of Mr. Morice, ſent to Sir William Buts, and Sir Anthony Deny, defending the Cauſe of Mr. Richard Turner Preacher, againſt the Papiſts.

THe Letter firſt beginning in theſe words; I am certain (Right worſhipful) that it is not unknown to your diſcreet wiſdom, &c. And after a few lines, coming to the matter, thus the ſaid Letter proceedeth.

The troubles of Rich. Turner Miniſter at Chartham.

As your Worſhips well know, it was my chance to be brought up under my Lord of Canterbury, my Maſter, in writing of the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of this Realm, as well touching reformation of corrupt Religion, as concerning the advancement of that pure and ſincere Religion received by the Doctrine of the Goſpel; which I take to be ſo ſubſtantially handled and builded upon the Doctrine of the Prophets and Apoſtles, That Hell-gates ſhall never prevail againſt it. The conſideration whereof compelled me, being a Farmer of the Parſonage of Chartham in Kent, to retain with me one named Mr. Richard Turner, a man not only learned in the Scriptures of God, but alſo in Converſation of life towards the world, irreprehenſible, whom for diſcharging of my Conſcience I placed at Chartham aforeſaid, to be Curate there. This man, becauſe he was a ſtranger in the Country there, and ſo thereby void of grudge or diſpleaſure of any old rancor in the Country, I thought it had been a mean to have gotten him the better credit in his Doctrine; but where malice once taketh fire againſt truth, no policy I ſee is able to quench it. Well, this man as he knew what appertained to his Office, ſo he ſpared not weekly both Sundays and Holidays to open the Goſpel and Epiſtle unto his audience after ſuch a ſort, (when occaſion ſerved) that as well by his vehement inveighing againſt the Biſhop of Romes uſurped Power and Authority, as in the earneſt ſetting forth and advancing of the Kings Majeſties Supremacy, innumerable of the People of the Country reſorting unto his Sermons, changed their opinions, and favoured effectually the Religion received. The confluence of the People ſo daily increaſed, that the Church being a fair, ample, and large Church, was not now and then able to receive the number. The fame of this new inſtruction of the People was ſo blazed abroad, that the popiſh Prieſts were wonderfully amazed and diſpleaſed, to ſee their Pope ſo to be defaced, and their Prince ſo highly advanced.

Mr. Ralph Morice Patron of Rich. Turner Preacher.

The great concourſe of people to Mr. Turners preaching.

Now thought they it is high time for us to work, or elſe all will here be utterly loſt by this mans preaching: ſome of them went with Capons, ſome with Hens, ſome with Chickens, ſome with one thing, ſome with another, unto the Juſtices, ſuch as then favoured their Cauſe and Faction, and ſuch as are no ſmall fools, as Sir John Baker, Sir Chriſtopher Hales, Sir Thomas Moile, Knights; with other Juſtices. The Prebendaries of Chriſts Church in Canterbury were made privy hereof, giving their ſuccour and aid thereunto. So that in concluſion poor Turner, and other Preachers, were grievouſly complained of unto the Kings Majeſty. Whereupon my Lord of Canterbury, and certain other Commiſſioners, were appointed at Lambeth to ſit upon the Examination of theſe Seditious Preachers. Howbeit, before Turner went up to his Examination, I obtained of Sir Thomas Moile, that he in Eaſter week was content to hear Turner preach a rehearſal Sermon in his Pariſh Church at Weſtwell, of all the Doctrine of his Sermons preached at his Cure in Chartham; which he moſt gently granting, heard Turner both before noon and after noon on the Wedneſday in Eaſter week laſt paſt, and (as it ſeemed) took all things in good part, remitting Turner home to his ſaid Cure with gentle and favourable words. I ſuppoſed by this means to have ſtayed Mr. Turner at home from further Examination, hoping that Sir Thomas Moile would have anſwered for him at Lambeth before the Commiſſioners. Notwithſtanding, after Mr. Moiles coming to London, ſuch Information was laid in againſt Turner, that he was ſent for to make anſwer himſelf before the ſaid Commiſſioners; and there appearing before them, he made ſuch an honeſt, perfect, and learned anſwer unto the Articles objected, that he was with a good Exhortation, diſcharged home again, without any manner of Recantation or other Injunction.

Sir Jo. Baker, Sir Chriſtoph. Hales, Sir Tho. Moile, Juſtices, with the Prebendaries of Canterbury, Perſecutors of Gods people

Sir Th. Moil hearing Turner, could find no fault with his doctrine.

Mr. Turner appearing before the Commiſſioners at Lambeth, was diſcharged and ſent home.

Now when the Pope-Catholick Clergy of Kent underſtood of his coming home without controlment, ſo that he preached as freely as he did before, againſt their blind and dumb Ceremonies, ſtreightway by the help of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Stephen Gardiner, they found a new means to put him to utter confuſion, deviſing that he came home from Examination in ſuch glorious pomp by the High-ways ſide in the Woods adjoyning, that five hundred perſons met him then with banquetting diſhes to welcome him home, ſtirring the People rather to an Uproar and Commotion, than to keep them in any quiet Obedience: when in very deed, contrary to this ſurmiſe, (as God would) on this ſide Rocheſter a mile or two, for avoiding all ſuch light and glorious talk with any his Familiars or Acquaintance, he of purpoſe left the High-way, and came thorow the woods all alone above 18 miles together on foot, ſo wearied and megered for want of ſuſtenance, that when he came into my Houſe at Chartham, he was not well able to ſtand or ſpeak for faintneſs & thirſt.

New matter made againſt Rich. Turner.

The practice of Papiſts to hold up their Kingdom with lies.

This malicious tale being reported to the Kings Highneſs, his Majeſty was ſo ſore aggrieved therewith, that he ſent for the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, willing him to cauſe Turner to be whipt out of the Country. By means whereof, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſent again for Turner: I hearing thereof made incontinently report by my Letters, with ſuch vehemency proving it meer malice, that the Archbiſhop underſtanding the truth, pacified again the Kings Majeſties wrath. Home cometh Turner once again to his Cure without blot. Which ſo wrung the Papiſts, in that they could not prevail, that they thought it all in vain any further to attempt a gainſt him concerning any accuſation for matters in Kent, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury being his Ordinary. Well, yet would they not thus leave him undiſcredited. Then was there one new matter deviſed, how that he had Preached erroneous Doctrine in other Countries before he came into Kent, laying to his charge that he had both tranſlated the Maſs into Engliſh, and ſaid, or miniſtred the ſame, and that he had Preached againſt Purgatory, Pilgrimages, and praying for the dead, &c. By means whereof, he was now convented before the whole Council by the Biſhop of Winch. who ſent Syriake Petite Gentleman for him, who brought him up to London bound (as I heard ſay) and being examined before the ſaid Biſhop of Winchester and others, he was committed to ward for a ſeaſon.

The King deceived by ſiniſter information.

New matter made againſt Rich. Turner.

In the which mean time, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being in Kent about the trial of a conſpiracy purpoſed againſt himſelf by the Juſtices of the Shire, and the Prebendaries of Chriſts Church: Turner is now ſent down to the Archbiſhop, to the intent he ſhould recant that Doctrine which long ago he in other places out of Kent had Preached, to the utter ſubverſion and defacing of all that he had moſt Godly and earneſtly here in Kent taught both to the Glory of God, and the furtherance and ſetting forth of the Kings Highneſs proceedings. If his Majeſty will thus permit learned honeſt Men thus daily to be overcrowned and trodden under foot with a ſort of tyrannous, or rather traiterous Papiſts. (who cannot abide to hear his Majeſties Supremacy advanced, nor the ſincere Word of God Preached) it were better for Men to dwell amongſt the Infidels and miſcreants than in England.

Conſpiracy againſt the Archbiſhop Cranmer by the Juſtices of Kent.

What reaſon is this, that Turner ſhould recant here in Kent the Doctrine which in other Countries he hath taught, to the wounding and everthrowing moſt deſperately of five hundred Mens Conſciences and above, (I dare ſay) who lately by his ſincere Preaching have embraced a right good opinion both of the Kings Supremacy, and alſo of the reformed Religion received? All good Subjects may well lament the Kings Majeſties eſtate in this behalf, that no Man may dare to be ſo bold to advance his Highneſs Title; but that every ignorant and malicious Papiſt ſhall ſpurn againſt him, ſeeking his utter undoing, and that by the ayd of Papiſtical Juſtices ſet in Authority. I beſeech your Worſhips to pardon me of my rude and homely terms. They herein deſerve worſe, if worſe may be deviſed. For what honeſt Man can bear with this, that ſo Noble a Princes ears ſhall be thus impudently abuſed with manifeſt lies and fables, as this one is of Turners coming home in ſuch a Triumph as they craftily and falſly had deviſed? It is eaſily to be ſpied what they mean and go about, that, the Prince being alive, dare take in hand ſo uncourteouſly to abuſe both the gentle nature of the Prince, and his Godly Preacher, the advancer and extoller of his juſt Authority.

What think your Worſhips they would attempt if his Majeſty were at Gods mercy (as God forefend that ever any of us ſhould ſee that day, without better reformation) that can thus dally with his Highneſs, blinding his Eyes with miſts, whilſt he liveth and reigneth amongſt us in moſt proſperity? As for my L. of Cant. he dare nothing do for the poor Mans delivery, he hath done ſo much for him already. And his Grace hath told me plainly, that it is put into the Kings Head, that he is the maintainer and ſupporter of all the Hereticks within the Realm; nor will he permit me or my neighbors to reſort unto the Council for his purgation while he was at Chartham, ſaving only I have obtained this at his hand, that I may become a ſuter in writing to my friends and good Maſters in the Court for his delivery.

And therefore it is (Right Worſhipful) that I have now taken pen in hand, thus to diſcourſe and open our miſery unto you concerning the extream handling of this honeſt poor Man Maſter Turner, that, if it may poſſibly be brought to paſs by your Godly Wiſdom, the poor Man may be releaſed and diſcharged of his recantation; you cannot do to God and your Prince a more acceptable ſervice in my poor opinion. For otherwiſe if he ſhould be driven to recant (as I am ſure he will ſooner dye) both Gods cauſe and the Kings ſhall ſuffer no ſmall detriment amongſt his poor loving Subjects here. For if there be no better ſtay for the maintenance of theſe Godly Preachers, the Kings Authority concerning his Supremacy ſhall lye poſt alone hidden in the Act of Parliament, and not in the Hearts of his Subjects. Anno 1556.

If they can bring to paſs that Turner may recant, to the defacing of his good Doctrine Preached here, then have they that for which they have thus long travelled. And yet in effect ſhall not Turner recant, but King Henry the 8. in Turners perſon ſhall moſt odiouſly recant, to the wounding of all Mens Conſciences here. If the Kings Majeſty do not eſteem his Authority given to his Highneſs by Gods Word and his Parliament: it were well done, that the Preachers had good warning to talk no more to the people thereof, rather than thus to be toſſed and turmoiled for doing their duties, by the members of Antichriſt.

Sanders and Brown, two perſecuting Papiſts.

And now to the intent that they might effectually for ever ſlander Turners Doctrine here, they have indicted him for offending againſt the ſix Articles, this laſt Seſſions, by the witneſs of two Papiſts of the Pariſh of Chartham his utter enemies, Sanders and Brown by name, for a Sermon Preached at Chartham, on Paſſion Sunday, which chanced on S. Gregories even, they both being abſent that day at Wye Fair, as it is well proved, namely, for that he Preached againſt the Maſs: ſaying, that our Saviour Chriſt was the only ſole Prieſt, which ſung Maſs on the Altar of the Croſs, there ſacrificing for the Sins of the World once for ever, and that all other Maſſes were but remembrances and thankſgiving for that one Sacrifice, or ſuch words in effect.

Wherefore, to conclude (Right Worſhipful) knowing your Godly zeals, as well towards the preferment of ſincere Religion, as your no leſs affection towards the King his Majeſties perſon and his Godly proceedings, I moſt humbly beſeech you, in the Bowels of our Saviour Chriſt, ſo to ponder the weighty conſideration of the premiſſes, as by your travels unto the Kings Majeſty or to the Honourable Council, we here in Kent that have now of late our hearts bent towards the obſervation of the Law of God and the Prince through Turners Godly perſwaſions, may receive from your Worſhips ſome comfortable words of his deliverance, or elſe certainly many an honeſt and ſimple Man, lately imbracing the truth, may perhaps fall away deſperately from the ſame, not without danger of their Souls. In accompliſhing whereof your Worſhips ſhall not only do unto Almighty God and the Prince moſt true and acceptable ſervice, but alſo bind the ſaid M. Turner, with all other to whom this cauſe doth appertain, both daily to pray for your proſperities, and alſo to be at your commandments during their lives. From Canterbury the ſecond day of November.

Your worſhips evermore at commandment, R. M.

And thus much containeth the Letter ſent (as is ſaid) by Maſter Morrice to Doctor Buts and Sir Anthony Denny. Now, what ſucceſs and ſpeed this Letter had, it followeth to be declared. For Doctor Buts the Kings Phyſician aforeſaid, after the receipt of theſe Letters, conſidering the weighty contents of the ſame, as he was ever a forward friend in the Goſpels cauſe, ſo he thought not to foreſlack this matter to the uttermoſt of his diligence, and ſo ſpying his time, when the King was in trimming and in waſhing (as his manner was at certain times to call for his Barbar) Doctor Buts (whoſe manner was at ſuch times ever to be preſent, and with ſome pleaſant conceits to refreſh and ſolace the Kings mind) brought with him in his hand this Letter. The King asking what news, Doctor Buts pleaſantly and merrily beginneth to inſinuate unto the King the effect of the matter, and ſo at the Kings Commandment read out the Letter; which when the King had heard, and pauſed a little with himſelf upon the ſame, commanded again the Letter to be read unto him. The hearing and conſideration whereof ſo altered the Kings mind, that where as before he commanded the ſaid Turner to be whipped out of the Country, he now commanded him to be retained as a faithfull Subject. And here of that matter an end. Let us now return to the Archbiſhop again.

The Kings favour conceived again to Mr. Turner.

Who

Anno 1556.

This Archb. married his ſecond wife at Noremberge.

Who although he was compaſſed about (as is ſaid) with mighty enemies, and by many crafty trains impugned, yet through Gods more mighty Providence, working in the Kings heart ſo to favour him, he rubbed out all K. Henries time without blemiſh or foil, by means of the Kings ſupportation, who not only defended the ſaid Archbiſhop againſt all his conſpired Adverſaries, but alſo extended ſuch ſpecial favour unto him in ſuch ſort, that he being not ignorant of his wife, whom he had married before at Noremberge, (being Niece to the wife of Oſiander) keeping her alſo their ſix Articles time contrary to the Law, notwithſtanding he both permitted the ſame, and kept his counſel.

Then after the death of K. Henry, immediately ſucceeded his Son K. Edward, under whoſe government and protection the ſtate of this Archbiſhop being his Godfather, was nothing impaired, but rather more advanced.

During all this mean time of K. Henry aforeſaid, until the entring of K. Edward, it ſeemed that Cranmer was ſcarcely yet throughly perſwaded in the right knowledge of the Sacrament, or at leaſt, was not yet fully ripened in the ſame: wherein ſhortly after he being more groundedly confirmed by conference with Biſhop Ridley, in proceſs of time did ſo profit in more ripe knowledge, that at laſt he took upon him the defence of that whole Doctrine, that is, to refute and throw down firſt the Corporal Preſence; ſecondly, the fantaſtical Tranſubſtantiation; thirdly, the idolatrous adoration; fourthly, the falſe error of the Papiſts, that wicked men do eat the natural Body of Chriſt; and laſtly, the blaſphemous Sacrifice of the Maſs. Whereupon in concluſion he wrote five Books for the publick inſtruction of the Church of England, which inſtruction yet to this day ſtandeth, and is received in this Church of England.

The true and godly doctrine of the Sacrament in five Books, ſet forth by the Archb. of Canterbury.

Againſt theſe five Books of the Archbiſhop, Stephen Gardiner, the Arch-enemy to Chriſt and his Goſpel, being then in the Tower, ſlubbereth up a certain Anſwer, ſuch as it was, which he in open Court exhibited up at Lambeth, being there examined by the Archbiſhop aforeſaid, and other the Kings Commiſſioners in King Edwards days, which Book was intituled, An explication and aſſertion of the true Catholick Faith, touching the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, with a Confutation of a Book written againſt the ſame.

An Explication of Stephen Gardiner againſt Cranmer Archb. of Canterbury.

Againſt this Explication, or rather a cavilling Sophiſtication of Stephen Gardiner Dr. of Law, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury learnedly and copiouſly replying again, maketh anſwer, which alſo he publiſhed abroad to the eyes and judgments of all men in print. All which Writings and Books, as well of the one part as of the other, our preſent ſtory would require here to be inſerted, but becauſe to proſecute the whole matter at length will not be comprehended in a ſmall room, and may make too long tarriance in our ſtory, it ſhall therefore be beſt to put off the ſame unto the place of the Appendix following, wherein (the Lord willing) we intend to cloſe up both theſe, and divers other Treatiſes of theſe learned Martyrs, as to this our ſtory ſhall appertain.

The anſwer of Dr. Cranmer Archb. of Canterbury againſt Step. Gardiner.

Marcus Antonius written by Step. Gardiner.

The unquiet ſpirit of Stephen Gardiner being not yet contented, after all this thruſteth out another Book in Latin of the like Popiſh Argument, but after another Title, named Marcus Antonius Conſtantinus. Whereunto firſt the Archbiſhop again intending a full Confutation, had already abſolved three parts of his Anſwer lying in Priſon. Of the which parts two periſhed in Oxford; the other yet remaineth in my hands ready to be ſeen and ſet forth, as the Lord ſhall ſee good. Alſo Biſhop Ridley lying likewiſe the ſame time in Priſon, having there the ſaid Book of Marcus Antonius, for lack of Pen and Paper, with a Lead of a Window, in the Margent of the Book wrote Annotations, as ſtreightneſs of time would ſerve him, in refutation of the ſame Book. And finally, becauſe theſe worthy Martyrs had neither liberty nor leiſure to go through with that travel, that which lacked in them, for accompliſhment of that behalf, was ſupplied ſhortly after by Peter Martyr, who abundantly and ſubſtantially hath overthrown that Book in his learned Defenſion of the Truth, againſt the falſe Sophiſtication of Marcus Antonius aforeſaid.

Notes of Dr. Ridley againſt Marcus Antonius.

Peter Martyrs Book of defence againſt Marcus Antonius.

Beſides theſe Books above cited of this Archbiſhop, divers other things there were alſo of his doing, as the Book of the Reformation, the Catechiſm, with the Book of Homilies, whereof part was by him contrived, part by his procurement approved and publiſhed. Whereunto alſo may be adjoyned another Writing or Confutation of his againſt 88. Articles by the Convocation deviſed and propounded, but yet not ratified nor received in the reign and time of King Henry the Eighth.

And thus much hitherto concerning the doings and travels of this Archbiſhop of Canterbury, during the lives both of K. Henry, and of K. Edward his Son. Which two Kings ſo long as they continued, this Archbiſhop lacked no ſtay of maintenance againſt all his maligners.

Afterward, this King Edward, a Prince of moſt worthy towardneſs, falling ſick, when he perceived that his death was at hand, and the force of his painful Diſeaſe would not ſuffer him to live longer, and knowing that his Siſter Mary was wholly wedded to Popiſh Religion, bequeathed the Succeſſion of this Realm to the Lady Jane (a Lady of great Birth, but of greater Learning, being Niece to King Henry the Eighth by his Siſter) by conſent of the Council and Lawyers of this Realm. To this Teſtament of the Kings, when all the Nobles of the Realm, States and Judges had ſubſcribed; they ſent for the Archbiſhop, and required him that he alſo would ſubſcribe. But he excuſing himſelf on this manner, ſaid, That it was otherwiſe in the Teſtament of King Henry his Father, and that he had ſworn to the Succeſſion of Mary, as then the next Heir, by which Oath he was ſo bound, that without manifeſt Perjury he could not go from it. The Council anſwered, that they were not ignorant of that, and that they had Conſcience as well as he, and moreover, that they were ſworn to that Teſtament, and therefore he ſhould not think there was any danger therein, or that he ſhould be in more peril of Perjury than the reſt.

Lady Jane.

Cranmer refuſeth to ſwear to Lady Jane.

To this the Archbiſhop anſwered, that he was judge of no mans Conſcience but his own: and therefore as he would not be prejudicial to others, ſo he would not commit his Conſcience unto other mens facts, or caſt himſelf into danger, ſeeing that every man ſhould give account of his own Conſcience, and not of other mens. And as concerning Subſcription, before he had ſpoken with the King himſelf, he utterly refuſed to do it.

The King therefore being demanded of the Archbiſhop concerning this matter, ſaid, That the Nobles and Lawyers of the Realm counſelled him unto it, and perſwaded him that the Bond of the firſt Teſtament could nothing let, but that this Lady Jane might ſucceed him as Heir, and the People without danger acknowledge her as their Queen. Who then demanding leave of the King, that he might firſt talk with certain Lawyers that were in the Court; when they all agreed that by Law of the Realm it might be ſo, returning to the King, with much ado he ſubſcribed.

Cranmer through the perſwaſion of the Counſel, the King and Lawyers, ſubſcribed to King Edwards Teſtament.

Well, not long after this King Edward died, being almoſt ſixteen years old, to the great ſorrow, but greater calamity of the whole Realm. After whoſe deceaſe immediately it was commanded that the Lady Jane (which was unwilling thereunto) ſhould be proclaimed Queen. Which thing much miſliked the Common People, not that they did ſo much favour Mary, before whom they ſaw the Lady Jane preferred, as for the hatred conceived againſt ſome, whom they could not favour.

Beſides this, other Cauſes there happened alſo of Diſcord between the Nobles and the Commons the ſame time: for what injuries of Commons and Encloſures wrongfully holden, with other inordinate pollings and uncharitable dealing between the Landlords and Tenants, I cannot tell. But in fine, thus the matter fell out, that Mary hearing of the death of her Brother, and ſhifting for her ſelf, was ſo aſſiſted by the Commons, that eftſoons ſhe prevailed. Who, being eſtabliſhed in the poſſeſſion of the Realm, not long after came to London, and after ſhe had cauſed firſt the two Fathers, the Duke of Northumberland, and the Duke of Suffolk, to be executed, (as is above remembred) likewiſe ſhe cauſed the Lady Jane, being both in Age tender, and innocent from this Crime, after ſhe could by no means be turned from the conſtancy of her Faith, together with her Husband, to be beheaded.

The reſt of the Nobles, paying fines, were forgiven, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury only excepted. Who though he deſired pardon (by means of his friends) could obtain none; inſomuch that the Queen would not once vouchſafe to ſee him. For as yet the old grudge againſt the Archbiſhop for the divorcement of her Mother, remained hid in the bottom of her heart. Beſides this Divorce, ſhe remembred the ſtate of Religion changed; all which was imputed to the Archbiſhop as the cauſe thereof.

Manet alta mente repoſtum Judicium Paridis, ſpretæq; injuria formæ. Virg. Eneid. 1.

While theſe things were in doing, a rumor was in all mens mouths, That the Archbiſhop, to curry favour with the Queen, had promiſed to ſay a Dirge Maſs after the old cuſtom, for the Funeral of King Edward her brother. Neither wanted there ſome which reported that he had already ſaid Maſs at Canterbury; which Maſs indeed was ſaid by Dr. Thornton. This rumor Cranmer thinking ſpeedily to ſtay, gave forth a writing of his Purgation: the tenor whereof being before expreſſed, I need not here again to recite.

This Doctor Thornton was after the B. of Dover, a cruel and wicked perſecutor.

This Bill being thus written, and lying openly in a Window in his Chamber, cometh in by chance Mr. Story, Biſhop then of Rocheſter, who after he had read and peruſed the ſame, required of the Archbiſhop to have a Copy of the Bill. The Archbiſhop when he had granted and permitted the ſame to Mr. Story, by the occaſion thereof Mr. Story lending it to ſome friend of his, there were divers Copies taken out thereof, and the thing publiſhed abroad among the common people; inſomuch that every Scriveners Shop almoſt, was occupied in writing and copying out the ſame: and ſo at length ſome of theſe copies coming to the Biſhops hands, and ſo brought to the Council, and they ſending it to the Commiſſioners, the matter was known, and ſo he commanded to appear.

The Biſhop was D. Heath Biſhop after of York.

Whereupon D. Cranmer at his day prefixed, appeared before the ſaid Commiſſioners, bringing a true Inventory, as he was commanded, of all his goods. That done, a Biſhop of the Queens Privy Council, being one of the ſaid Commiſſioners, after the inventory was received, bringing in mention of the Bill; My Lord (ſaid he) there is a Bill put forth in your name, wherein you ſeem to be agrieved with ſetting up the Maſs again; we doubt not but you are ſorry that it is gone abroad.

To whom the Archbiſhop anſwered again, ſaying, as I do not deny my ſelf to be the very Author of that Bill or Letter, ſo muſt I confeſs here unto you, concerning the ſame Bill, that I am ſorry that the ſaid Bill went from me in ſuch ſort as it did. For when I had written it, Mr. Story got the copy of me, and it is now come abroad, and as I underſtand, the City is full of it. For which I am ſorry, that it ſo paſſed my hands: for I had intended otherwiſe to have made it in a more large and ample manner, and minded to have ſet it on Pauls Church door, and on the doors of all the Churches in London, with mine own Seal joyned thereto.

At which words, when they ſaw the conſtantneſs of the Man, they diſmiſſed him, affirming they had no more at that preſent to ſay unto him, but that ſhortly he ſhould hear further. The ſaid Biſhop declared afterward to one of Doctor Cranmers friends, that notwithſtanding his attainder of Treaſon, the Queens determination at that time was, that Cranmer ſhould only have been deprived of his Archbiſhoprick, and have had a ſufficient living aſſigned him, upon his exhibiting of a true inventory, with commandment to keep his houſe without medling in matters of Religion. But how true that was, I have not to ſay. This is certain, that not long after this, he was ſent to the Tower, and ſoon after Condemned of Treaſon. Notwithſtanding the Queen, when ſhe could not honeſtly deny him his pardon, ſeeing all the reſt were diſcharged, and ſpecially, ſeeing he laſt (of all other) ſubſcribed to King Edwards requeſt, and that againſt his own will, releaſed to him his action of Treaſon, and accuſed him only of Hereſie; which liked the Archbiſhop right well, and came to paſs as he wiſhed, becauſe the cauſe was not his own, but Chriſts; not the Queens, but the Churches. Thus ſtood the cauſe of Cranmer, till at length it was determined by the Queen and the Council, that he ſhould be removed from the Tower where he was priſoner, to Oxford, there to diſpute with the Doctors and Divines. And privily word was ſent before to them of Oxford to prepare themſelves, and make them ready to diſpute. And although the Queen and the Biſhops had concluded before what ſhould become of him, yet it pleaſed them that the matter ſhould be debated with Arguments, that under ſome honeſt ſhew of diſputation the murther of the Man might be covered. Neither could their haſty ſpeed of revengement abide any long delay; and therefore in all haſt he was carried to Oxford.

Cranmer Condemned of Treaſon.

Cranmer releaſed of Treaſon, and accuſed of Hereſie.

Anno 1556. Cranmer had to Oxford.

What this diſputation was, and how it was handled, what were the queſtions and reaſons on both ſides, and alſo touching his Condemnation by the Univerſity and the Prolocutor, becauſe ſufficiently it hath been declared, we mind to now therefore proceed to his final Judgment and order of Condemnation, which was the 12. day of September, Anno 1555. and ſeven days before the Condemnation of Biſhop Ridley and Maſter Latimer, as is above foretouched. The Story whereof here followeth, faithfully corrected by the report and narration (coming by chance to our hands) of one who being both preſent thereat, and alſo a devout favourer of the See and Faction of Rome, can lack no credit (I trow) with ſuch which ſeek what they can to diſcredit whatſoever maketh not with their phantaſied Religion of Rome.

After the Diſputations done and finiſhed in Oxford between the Doctors of both Univerſities, and the three Worthy Biſhops, Doctor Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, ye heard then how ſentence condemnatory immediate upon the ſame was miniſtred againſt them by Doctor Weſton and other of the Univerſity; whereby they were judged to be Hereticks and ſo committed to the Major and Sheriffs of Oxford. But foraſmuch as the Sentence given againſt them was void in Law (for at that time the Authority of the Pope was not yet received into the Land) therefore was a new Commiſſion ſent from Rome, and a new Proceſs framed for the conviction of theſe reverend and Godly learned Men aforeſaid. In which Commiſſion, firſt was Doctor James Brooks Biſhop of Gloceſter the Popes Subdelegate, with Doctor Martin, and Doctor Story, Commiſſioners in the King and Queens behalf, for the Execution of the ſame. Of the which three Commiſſioners above named, as touching Doctor Martin, this by the way is to be underſtood, that although he was uſed for an inſtrument of the Popes ſide, to ſerve a turn (whoſe Book alſo is extant againſt the lawful Marriage of Prieſts) yet notwithſtanding neither was he ſo bitter an enemy in this perſecution, as other Commiſſioners were; and alſo in this time of Queen Elizabeth, where divers other Doctors of the Arches refuſed to be ſworn againſt the Pope, he denied not the Oath; and yet notwithſtanding not altogether here to be excuſed. But to the purpoſe of this Story. Whereof firſt it ſhall be requiſite to declare the circumſtance, and the whole ſtate of the matter, as in a general deſcription, before we come to their Orations, according as in a parcel of a certain Letter touching the ſame, it came to our hands.

D. Brooks, D. Martin, D. Story, Commiſſioners againſt the Archbiſhop.

D. Martin not ſo bitter in this Perſecution, as other Commiſſioners were.

Imprimis, here is to be underſtood, that at the coming down of the foreſaid Commiſſioners, which was upon Thurſday, the 12. of September, Anno 1555. in the Church of S. Mary, and in the Eaſt end of the ſaid Church at the High Altar, was erected a ſolemn Scaffold for Biſhop Brooks aforeſaid, repreſenting the Popes perſon, ten foot high. The ſeat was made that he might ſit under the Sacrament of the Altar. And on the right hand of the Popes Delegate beneath him ſate Doctor Martin, and on the left hand ſate Doctor Story the King and Queens Commiſſioners, which were both Doctors of the Civil Law, and underneath them other Doctors, Scribes, and Phariſees alſo, with the Popes Collector, and a rabblement of ſuch other like.

The order of ſetting and placing the Commiſſioners.

And thus theſe Biſhops being placed in their Pontificalibus, the Biſhop of Canterbury was ſent for to come before them. He having intelligence of them that were there, thus ordered himſelf. He came forth of the priſon to the Church of S. Mary, ſet forth with Bills and gleves for fear he ſhould ſtart away, being clothed in a fair black gown, with his hood on both ſhoulders, ſuch as Doctors of Divinity in the Univerſity uſe to wear. Who, after he was come into the Church, and did ſee them ſit in their Pontificalibus, he did not put off his cap to any of them, but ſtood ſtill till that he was called. And anon one of the Proctors for the Pope, or elſe his Doctor, called Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, appear here and make anſwer to that ſhall be laid to thy charge; that is to say, for Blasphemy, Incontinency, and Heresie; and make answer here to the Bishop of Gloceſter, representing the Popes person.

Upon this he being brought more near unto the Scaffold, where the foresaid Bishop sate, he first well viewed the place of Judgment, and spying where the King and Queens Majesties Proctors were, putting off his Cap, he first humbly bowing his knee to the ground, made reverence to the one, and after to the other.

The Archb. giveth reverence to the Queens Commissioners.

That done, beholding the Bishop in the face, he put on his Bonet again, making no manner of token of obedience towards him at all. Whereat the Bishop being offended, said unto him, that it might beseem him right well, weighing the authority he did represent, to do his duty unto him. Whereunto Dr. Cranmer answered and said, That he had once taken a solemn Oath, never to consent to the admitting of the Bishop of Romes Authority into this Realm of England again; and that he had done it advisedly, and meant by Gods grace to keep it; and therefore would commit nothing either by sign or token, which might argue his consent to the receiving of the same, and so he desired the said Bishop to judge of him, and that he did it not for any contempt to his person, which he could have been content to have honoured as well as any of the other, if his Commission had come from as good an Authority as theirs. This answered he both modestly, wisely, and patiently, with his Cap on his head, not once bowing or making any reverence to him that represented the Popes person, which was wonderously of the people marked that was there present and saw it, and marked it as nigh as could be possible.

Dr Cranmer sheweth no reverence to the Popes Delegate.

The Oration of Dr. Brooks Bishop of Gloceſter, unto Dr. Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, in the Church of S. Mary at Oxford, Anno 1556. March 12.

The Oration of Bp. Brooke.

WHen after many means used, they perceived that the Archbishop would not move his Bonet, the Bishop proceeded in these words following.

My Lord, at this present we are come to you as Commissioners, and for you, not intruding our selves by our own Authority, but sent by Commission, partly from the Popes holiness, partly from the King and Queens most excellent Majesties, not to your utter discomfort, but to your comfort if you will your self. We come not to judge you, but to put you in remembrance of that you have been, and shall be. Neither come we to dispute with you, but to examine you in certain matters; which being done, to make relation thereof to him that hath power to judge you. The first being well taken, shall make the second to be well taken. For if you, of your part be moved to come to a conformity, then shall not only we of our side take joy of our Examination, but also they that have sent us.

And first, as Charity doth move us, I would think good somewhat to exhort you, and that by the second Chapter of S. John in the Apoc. Memor esto unde exideris, & age pœnitentiam, & prima opera fac. Sin minus; i. Remember from whence thou art faln, and do the first works, or if not, and so as ye know what followeth. Remember your self from whence you have faln. You have faln from the Universal and Catholick Church of Christ, from the very true and received Faith of all Christendom, and that by open Heresie. You have faln from your promise to God, from your fidelity and allegiance, and that by open preaching, marriage, and adultery. You have faln from your Sovereign Prince and Queen by open Treason. Remember therefore from whence you are faln. Your fall is great, the danger cannot be seen. Wherefore when I say, remember from whence you are faln, I put you in mind, not only of your fall, but also of the state you were in before your fall. You were sometime, as I and other poor men, in a meán estate, God I take to witness, I speak it to no reproach or abasement of you, but to put you in memory, how God hath called you from a low to an high degree, from one degree to another, from better to better, and never gave you over, till he had appointed you Legatum natum, Metropolitanum Angliæ, Pastorem gregis sui. Such great trust did he put you in, in his Church; What could he do more? for even as he ordained Moses to be a Ruler over his Church of Israel, and gave him full authority upon the same: so did he make you over his Church of England. And when did he this for you? forsooth when you gave no occasion or cause of mistrust either to him, or to his Magistrates. For although it be conjectured, that in all your time ye were not upright in the honour and faith of Christ, but rather set up of purpose as a fit Instrument, whereby the Church might be spoiled and brought into ruin; yet may it appear by many your doings otherwise, and I for my part, as it behoveth each one of us, shall think the best. For who was thought as then more devout? who was more religious in the face of the world? Who was thought to have more conscience of a Vow making, and observing the order of the Church, more earnest in the defence of the Real Presence of Christs Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar then ye were? and then all things prospered with you; your Prince favoured you; yea, God himself favoured you; your Candlestick was set up in the highest place of the Church, and the light of your Candle was over all the Church; I would God it had so continued still.

Apoc. 2.

Heresie, Adultery, and Treason laid to Dr. Cranmer.

The high estate of Dr. Cranmer, sometime Archb. of Canterbury.

But after ye began to fall by Schism, and would not acknowledge the Popes Holiness as Supream Head, but would stoutly uphold the unlawful Requests of K. Henry the Eighth, and would bear with that should not be born withal, then began you to fansie unlawful liberty; and when you had exiled a good Conscience, then ensued great shipwrack in the Sea, which was out of the true and Catholick Church cast into the Sea of Desperation; for as he saith, Extra Ecclesiam non est salus; i. Without the Church there is no Salvation. When ye had forsaken God, God forsook you, and gave you over to your own will, and suffered you to fall from Schism to Apostasie, from Apostasie to Heresie, and from Heresie to Perjury, from Perjury to Treason, and so in conclusion, into the full indignation of our Sovereign Prince, which you may think a just punishment of God, for your other abominable Opinions.

After that, ye fell lower and lower, and now to the lowest degree of all, to the end of honour and life. For if the light of your Candle be as it hath been hitherto duskey, your Candlestick is like to be removed, and have a great fall, so low, and so far out of knowledge, that it be quite out of Gods favour, and past all hope of recovery: Quia in inferno nulla est redemptio; i. For in Hell there is no redemption. The danger whereof being so great, very pity causeth me to say, Memor esto unde exideris; i. Remember from whence thou hast faln. I add also, and whither you fall.

But here peradventure you will say to me, What Sir? my fall is not so great as you make it. I have not yet faln from the Catholick Church. For that is not the Catholick Church that the Pope is Head of. There is another Church. But as touching that, I answer, You are sure of that as the Donatists were, for they said they had the true Church, and that the name of true Christians remained only in Africk, where only their seditious Sect was preached: and as you think, so thought Novatus, That all they that did acknowledge their Supream Head at the See of Rome, were out of the Church of Christ. But here S. Cyprian defending Cornelius against Novatus, Libro secundo, Epistola sexta, saith on this wise, Ecclesia una est, quæ cum sit una, intus & foris esse non potest. So that if Novatus were in the Church, then was not Cornelius, who indeed by lawful Succession succeeded Pope Fabian. Here Saint Cyprian intendeth by the whole Process to prove, and concludeth thereupon, that the true Church was only Rome. Gather you then what will follow of your fall. But you will say peradventure, that you fell not by Heresie, and so said the Arrians, alledging for themselves that they had Scripture, and going about to perswade their Schism by Scripture; for indeed they had more places by two and forty, which by their torture seemed to depend upon Scripture, than the Catholicks had.

Cypr. lib. 2. Epist. 6.

So did the Martians provoke their Heresie to Scripture. But those are no Scriptures; for they are not truly alledged, nor truly interpreted, but untruly wrested and wrong, according to their own fantasies. And therefore were they all justly condemned for their wrong taking of the Scriptures, and the Church replieth against them, saying, Qui est iste vos? quando? quid agi-

Provoking to the Scripture.

tis in meo, non mei? The Church ſaith, What make you here in my Heritage? from whence came you? The Scripture is mine Inheritance? I am right Heir thereof: I hold it by true Succeſſion of the Apoſtles; for as the Apoſtles required me to hold, ſo do I hold it. The Apoſtles have received me, and put me in my Right, and have rejected you as Baſtards, having no Title thereunto.

Breaking of Vows.

Alſo ye will deny that ye have fallen by Apoſtaſie, by breaking your Vow; and ſo Vigilantius ſaid, inſomuch that he would admit none to his Miniſtery, but thoſe that had their Wives bagged with Children. What now? Shall we ſay that Vigilantius did not fall therefore? Did not Donatus and Novatus fall, becauſe they ſaid ſo, and brought Scripture for their defence? Then let us believe as we liſt, pretending well, and ſay ſo; nay, there is no man ſo blind that will ſay ſo: For except the Church, which condemneth them for their ſay ſo, do approve us for to do ſo, then will ſhe condemn you alſo. So that your denial will not ſtand. And therefore I tell you, remember from whence ye are fallen, and how long ye ſhall fall, if you hold on as you do begin. But I truſt you will not continue, but revoke your ſelf in time, and the remedy followeth.

* That is, repent, and do thy firſt works.

* Age pœnitentiam, & prima opera fac, for by ſuch means as ye have fallen, ye muſt riſe again. Firſt, your heart hath fallen, then your tongue and your pen, and beſides your own damage, hath cauſed many more to fall. Therefore, firſt your heart muſt turn, and then ſhall the tongue and the pen be quickly turned; Sin minus, veniam tibi cito, & moveho Candelabrum tuum de loco ſuo.

I need not to teach you a method to turn; you know the ready way your ſelf. But I would God I could but exhort you to the right and truth, then the way ſhould ſoon be found out. For if ye remember how many ye have brought by abominable Hereſie into the way of Perdition, I doubt not but very Conſcience would move you, as much for them as for your ſelf, to come again. And ſo would you ſpare neither tongue nor pen, if heart were once reformed; for as touching that point, the Holy Ghoſt toucheth their hearts very near by the mouth of his holy Prophet Ezekiel, when he requireth the blood of his flock at the Prieſts hands, for lack of good and wholſom food. How much more ſhould this touch your guilty heart, having over much diligence to teach them the way of Perdition, and feeding them with baggage and corrupt food, which is Hereſie. Qui convertere fecerit peccatorem ab errore vitæ ſuæ, ſalvam faciet animam ſuam à morte, & operiet multitudinem peccatorum ſuorum; i. He that ſhall convert a ſinner from his wicked life, ſhall ſave his ſoul from death, and ſhall cover the multitude of ſins. So that if it be true that he, who converteth a ſinner, ſaveth a ſoul; then the contrary muſt needs be true, that he that perverteth a ſoul, and teacheth him the way of Perdition, muſt needs be damned.

Ezech. 33.

Origenes ſuper Paulum ad Romanos; The damnation of thoſe that preach Hereſie doth increaſe to the day of Judgment. The more that periſh by heretical doctrine, the more grievous ſhall their torment be, that miniſter ſuch doctrine. Berengarius, who ſeemed to fear that danger, provided for it in his life time, but not without a troubled and diſquiet Conſcience. He did not only repent, but recant, and not ſo much for himſelf, as for them whom he had with moſt peſtilent Hereſies infected. For as he lay in his Death-bed upon Epiphany-day, he demanded of them that were preſent, Is this (quoth he) the day of Epiphany, and appearing of the Lord? They anſwered him, Yea. Then (quoth he) this day ſhall the Lord appear to me, either to my comfort, or to my diſcomfort. This remorſe argueth, that he feared the danger of them whom he had taught, and led out of the Faith of Chriſt. Origenes upon him ſaith in this wiſe; Although his own blood was not upon his head, for that he did repent, and was ſorry for his former errors, yet being converted, he feared the blood of them whom he had infected, and who received his doctrine.

Orig. In Ep. Paul. ad Rom.

Berengarius.

Let this move you even at the laſt point. Inſomuch as your caſe is not unlike to Berengarius, let your repentance be like alſo. And what ſhould ſtay you (tell me) from this godly return? Fear that ye have gone ſo far, ye may not return? nay, then I may ſay as David ſaid, Illic trepidaverunt ubi non erat timor, Ye fear where ye have no cauſe to fear. For if ye repent and be heartily ſorry for your former Hereſie and Apoſtaſie, ye need not to fear. For as God of his part is merciful and gracious to the repentant ſinner, ſo is the King, ſo is the Queen merciful, which ye may well perceive by your own caſe, ſince ye might have ſuffered a great while ago for Treaſon committed againſt her Highneſs, but that ye have been ſpared and reſerved upon hope of amendment, which ſhe conceived very good of you, but now (as it ſeemeth) is but a very deſperate hope. And what do you thereby? Secundum duritiam cordis theſaurizas tibi iram in die iræ; i. According to the hardneſs of your heart ye treaſure up to your ſelf anger in the day of wrath.

Anno 1556.

Well, what is it then, if fear do not hinder you? Shame, to unſay that that you have ſaid? Nay, it is no ſhame, unleſs you think it ſhame to agree with the true and the Catholick Church of Chriſt. And if that be ſhame, then blame S. Paul, who perſecuted the Diſciples of Chriſt with the Sword; then blame S. Peter, who denied his Maſter Chriſt with an Oath, that he never knew him. S. Cyprian before his return being a Witch; S. Auſtin being nine years out of the Church: They thought it no ſhame after their return of that they had returned. Shall it then be ſhame for you to convert and conſent with the Church of Chriſt? No, no.

What is it then that doth let you? Glory of the world? nay, as for the vanity of the world, I for my part judge not in you, being a man of learning, and knowing your eſtate.

And as for the loſs of your eſtimation, it is ten to one that where you were Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Metropolitan of England, it is ten to one (I ſay) that ye ſhall be as well ſtill, yea, and rather better.

And as for the winning of good men, there is no doubt but all that be here preſent, and the whole Congregation of Chriſts Church alſo will more rejoyce of your return, than they were ſorry for your fall. And as for the other, ye need not to doubt, for they ſhall all come after; and to ſay the truth, if you ſhould loſe them for ever it were no force, ye ſhould have no leſs thereby at all. I do not here touch them which ſhould confirm your eſtimation. For as S. Paul, after his Converſion, was received into the Church of Chriſt, with wonderful joy to the whole Congregation, even ſo ſhall you be. The fame of your return ſhall be ſpread abroad throughout all Chriſtendom, where your face was never known.

But you will ſay perhaps, your Conſcience will not ſuffer you. My Lord, there is a good Conſcience; and there is a bad Conſcience. The good Conſcience have not they, as S. Paul declareth to Timothy concerning Hymeneus and Alexander. The evil and bad Conſcience is (ſaith S. Cyprian) well to be known by his mark. What mark? This Conſcience is marked with the print of Hereſie. This Conſcience is a naughty, filthy, and a brand-ed Conſcience, which I truſt is not in you. I have conceived a better hope of you then ſo, or elſe would I never go about to perſwade or exhort you. But what Conſcience ſhould ſtay you to return to the Catholick Faith and univerſal Church of Chriſt? What Conſcience doth ſeparate you to that deviliſh and ſeveral Church? to a liberty which never had ground in the holy Scriptures? If you judge your liberty to be good, then judge you all Chriſtendom to do evil beſides you.

A good Conſcience.

Mark of an evil Conſcience.

O what a preſumptuous perſwaſion is this, upon this utterly to forſake the Church of Chriſt? Under what colour or pretence do you this? for the abuſes? as though in your Church were no abuſes: Yes that there were. And if you forſake the Univerſal Church for the abuſes, why do you not then forſake your particular Church, and ſo be flitting from one to another? That is not the next way, to ſlip from the Church for the abuſes; for if you had ſeen abuſes, you ſhould rather have endeavoured for a reformation than for a defection. He is a good Chirurgion, who for a little pain in the toe will cut off the whole leg. He helpeth well the tooth-ach, which cutteth away the head by the ſhoulders. It is meer folly to amend abuſes by abuſes. Ye are like Diogenes; for Diogenes on a time envying the cleanlineſs of Plato, ſaid on this wiſe, Ecce calce faſtum Platonis. Plato anſwered, Sed alio faſtu. So that Diogenes ſeemed more faulty of the two.

Abuſes in the Church require a reformation, and not a defection.

But

Anno 1556.

But when we have ſaid all that we can, peradventure you will ſay, I will not return. And to that I ſay, I will not anſwer. Nevertheleſs, hear what Chriſt ſaith to ſuch obſtinate and ſtiffnecked people in the Parable of the Supper. When he had ſent out his Men to call them in that were appointed, and they would not come, he bade his Servants go into the ways and ſtreets, to compel Men to to come in Cogite intrare. If then the Church will not leeſe any member that may be compelled to come in, ye muſt think it good to take the compulſion, leſt you loſe your part of the Supper which the Lord hath prepared for you; and this compulſion ſtandeth well with Charity.

Cogite intrare clearly expounded

But it may be perhaps, that ſome hath animated you to ſtick to your tackle, and not to give over, bearing you in hand that your opinion is good, and that ye ſhall die in a good quarrel, and God ſhall accept your oblation. But hear what Chriſt ſaith of a meaner gift; If thou come to the Altar to offer thy oblation, and knoweſt that thy Brother hath ſomewhat to ſay againſt thee, leave there thy gift, and go and be reconciled to thy Brother, and then come and offer up thy gift, or elſe thy Brother will make thy offering unſavoury before God. This he ſaid unto all the World, to the end they ſhould know how their offerings ſhould be received, if they were not according.

Matth. 5.

Remember you therefore before you offer up your offering, whether your gift be qualified or no. Remember the Church of Rome, and alſo of England, where not one only Brother, but a number have matter againſt you, ſo juſt that they will make your burnt offering to ſtink before God, except you be reconciled. If you muſt needs appoint upon a Sacrifice, make yet a mean firſt to them that have to lay againſt you. I ſay no more then the Church hath allowed me to ſay. For the Sacrifice that is offered without the Church is not profitable. The premiſſes therefore conſidered, for Gods ſake, I ſay, Memor eſto unde excideris, & age pœnitentiam, & prima opera fac. Sin minus, &c. Caſt not your ſelf away, ſpare your Body, ſpare your Soul, ſpare them alſo whom you have ſeduced, ſpare the ſhedding of Chriſts Blood for you in vain. Harden not your heart, acknowledge the truth, yield to the preſcript Word of God, to the Catholick Church of Rome, to the received verity of all Chriſtendom. Wed not your ſelf to your own ſelf-will. Stand not too much in your own conceit, think not your ſelf wiſer then all Chriſtendom is beſides you. Leave off this unjuſt cavil. How? leave what? leave reaſon, leave wonder, and believe as the Catholick Church doth believe and teach you. Perſwade with your ſelf, that Extra Eccleſiam non eſt ſalus, i. Without the Church there is no ſalvation. And thus much have I ſaid of Charity. If this poor ſimple exhortation of mine may ſink into your head, and take effect with you, then have I ſaid as I would have ſaid, otherwiſe not as I would but as I could for this preſent.

Mellelita pernicies.

And thus Biſhop Brooks finiſhing his Oration, ſate down. After whom, Doctor Martin, taking the matter in hand, beginneth thus.

The Oration of Doctor Martin.

Oration of D. Martin.

ALbeit there be two Governments, the one, ſpiritual, and the other temporal, the one having the Keys, the other the Sword, yet in all ages we read that for the Honour and Glory of God both theſe powers have been adjoyned together. For if we read the Old Teſtament, we ſhall find that ſo did Joſias and Ezekias. So did the K. of the Ninivites compel a general faſt through all the whole City. So did Darius in breaking the great Idol, Bell, and delivered Godly Daniel out of the Den of Lions. So did Nebuchodonoſor make and inſtitute Laws againſt the Blaſphemers of God. But to let paſs theſe examples, with a great number more, and to come to Chriſts time, it is not unknown what a great travel they took to ſet forth Gods Honour: and although the rule and Government of the Church did only appertain to the ſpiritualty, yet for the ſuppreſſion of Hereſies and Schiſms, Kings were admitted as aiders thereunto. Firſt, Conſtantine the great called a Council at Nice for the ſuppreſſion of the Arrians Sect, where the ſame time was raiſed a great contention among them. And after long diſputation had, when the Fathers could not agree upon the putting down the Arrians, they referred their judgment to Conſtantine. God forbid, quoth Conſtantine; You ought to rule me, and not I you. And as Conſtantine did, ſo did Theodoſius againſt the Neſtorians, ſo did Marcianus againſt Manicheus. Jovinian made a Law, that no Man ſhould marry with a Nun, that had wedded her ſelf to the Church.

Temporal government ruling in ſpiritual matters.

Temporal magiſtrates aiders not rulers in ſpiritual cauſes.

So had King Henry the eighth the Title of Defender of the Faith, becauſe he wrote againſt Luther, and his complices. So theſe 900. years the King of Spain had that Title of Catholick, for the expulſion of the Arrians, and to ſay the truth, the King and Queens Majeſties do nothing degenerate from their anceſtors, taking upon them to reſtore again the Title to be Defender of the Faith, to the right heir hereof, the Popes Holineſs.

Therefore theſe two Princes, perceiving this noble Realm, how it hath been brought from the unity of the true and Catholick Church, the which you and your confederates do, and have renounced; perceiving alſo that you do perſiſt in your deteſtable errors, and will by no means be revoked from the ſame, have made their humble Requeſt and Petition to the Popes Holineſs, Paulus the fourth, as ſupream head of the Church of Chriſt, declaring to him, that where you were Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Metropolitane of England and at your Conſecration took two ſolemn Oaths, for your due obedience to be given to the See of Rome, to become a true Preacher or Paſtor of his Flock, yet contrary to your Oath and allegiance, for unity have ſowed diſcord; for chaſtity, Marriage and Adultery; for obedience, contention; and for Faith, ye have been the Author of all Miſchief. The Popes Holineſs conſidering their Requeſt and Petition, hath granted them, that according to the cenſure of this Realm proceſs ſhould be made againſt you.

The Popes charity and juſtice to the Archbiſhop.

And whereas in this late time, you both excluded Charity and juſtice, yet hath his Holineſs decreed, that you ſhall have both Charity and Juſtice ſhewed unto you. He willeth you ſhould have the Laws in moſt ample manner to anſwer in your behalf, and that you ſhall here come before my Lord of Gloceſter, as High Commiſſioner from his Holineſs, to the Examination of ſuch Articles as ſhall be propoſed againſt you, and that we ſhould require the Examination of you, in the Kings and Queens Majeſties behalf. The King and Queen as touching themſelves, becauſe by the Law they cannot appear perſonally, Quia ſunt illuſtriſ. perſonæ, have appointed as their Atturneys, Doctor Story and me. Wherefore here I offer to your good Lordſhip our Proxy, Sealed with the Broad Seal of England, and offer my ſelf to be Proctor in the King Majeſties behalf. I exhibit here alſo certain Articles, containing the manifeſt adultery and perjury: Alſo Books of Hereſie made partly by him, partly ſet forth by his authority. And here I produce him as party principal, to anſwer to your good Lordſhip.

Thus when Doctor Martin had ended his Oration, the Archbiſhop beginneth, as here followeth.

Cranmer. Shall I then make my anſwer?

Martin. As you think good, no Man ſhall let you.

And here the Archbiſhop kneeling down on both knees towards the Weſt, ſaid firſt the Lords Prayer. Then riſing up he reciteth the Articles of the Creed. Which done, he entreth with his proteſtation in form as followeth.

The Faith and profeſſion of Doctor Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, before the Commiſſioners.

The profeſſion or proteſtation of D. Cranmer before the Commiſſioners.

THis I do profeſs as touching my Faith, and make my proteſtation, which I deſire you to note. I will never conſent that the Biſhop of Rome ſhall have any juriſdiction within this Realm.

Story. Take a note thereof.

Martin. Mark, Mr. Cranmer, how you anſwer for your ſelf. You refuſe and deny him, by whoſe Laws ye do remain in Life, being otherwiſe attainted of High Treaſon, and but a dead Man by the Laws of the Realm.

Cran. I proteſt before God I was no Traitor but indeed I confeſſed more at my arraignment then was true.

Martin. That it is not to be reaſoned at this preſent. Ye know ye were Condemned for a Traitor, and Res judicata judicata pro veritate accipitur. But proceed to your matter.

Cranmer. I will never conſent to the Biſhop of Rome, for then ſhould I give my ſelf to the Devil; for I have made an Oath to the King, and I muſt obey the King by Gods Laws. By the Scripture the King is chief, and no foraign perſon in his own Realm above him. There is no Subject but to a King. I am a Subject, I owe my fidelity to the Crown. The Pope is contrary to the Crown. I cannot obey both; for no Man can ſerve two maſters at once, as you in the beginning of your Oration declared by the Sword and Keyes, attributing the Keyes to the Pope, and the Sword to the King. But I ſay the King hath both. Therefore he that is ſubject to Rome, and the Laws of Rome, he is perjured; for the Popes and the Judges Laws are contrary, they are uncertain and confounded.

Cauſes alledged why Dr. Cranmer cannot receive the Pope.

The Lawsof this Realm, and the Popes, contrary.

A Prieſt indebted by the Laws of the Realm, ſhall be ſued before a temporal Judge; by the Popes Laws contrary.

The Pope doth the King injury in that he hath his power from the Pope. The King is head in his own Realm: But the Pope claimeth all Biſhops, Prieſts, Curates, &c. So the Pope in every Realm hath a Realm.

Again, by the Laws of Rome the Benefice muſt be given by the Biſhop, by the Laws of the Realm, the Patron giveth the Benefice. Herein the Laws be as contrary as Fire and Water.

No Man can by the Laws of Rome proceed in a præmunire, and ſo is the Law of the Realm expelled, and the King ſtandeth accurſed in maintaining his own Lands. Therefore in conſideration that the King and the Queen take their power of him, as though God ſhould give it to them, there is no true ſubject, unleſs he be abrogate, ſeeing the Crown is holden of him being out of the Realm.

The Popes proceedings contrary to God.

The Biſhop of Rome is contrary to God, and injurious to his Laws; for God commanded all Men to be diligent in the knowledge of his Law; and therefore hath appointed one Holy Day in the week at the leaſt, for the people to come to the Church and hear the Word of God expounded unto them, and that they might the better underſtand it, to hear it in their Mother Tongue which they know. The Pope doth contrary; for he willeth the Service to be had in the Latin Tongue, which they do not underſtand. God would have it to be perceived; the Pope will not. When the Prieſt giveth thanks, God would that the people ſhould do ſo too, and God will them to confeſs altogether; the Pope will not.

The Real Preſence is not to be proved by any Doctor above a thouſand years after Chriſt.

Now as concerning the Sacrament, I have taught no falſe Doctrine of the Sacrament of the Altar: For if it can be proved by any Doctor above a thouſand years after Chriſt, that Chriſts Body is there really, I will give over. My Book was made ſeven years ago, and no Man hath brought any Authors againſt it. I believe that whoſo eateth and drinketh that Sacrament, Chriſt is within them, whole Chriſt, his Nativity, Paſſion, Reſurrection and Aſcenſion; but not that corporally that ſitteth in Heaven.

Now Chriſt commanded all to drink of the Cup; The Pope taketh it away from the Lay Men, and yet one ſaith, that if Chriſt had died for the Devil, that he ſhould drink thereof. Chriſt biddeth us to obey the King, etiam diſcolo. The Biſhop of Rome biddeth us to obey him; therefore unleſs he be Antichriſt, I cannot tell what to make of him. Wherefore if I ſhould obey him, I cannot obey Chriſt.

The Pope likened to the Devil, and wherein.

He is like the Devil in his doings; for the Devil ſaid to Chriſt; If thou wilt fall down and worſhip me, I will give thee all the kingdoms of the World. Thus he took upon him to give that which was not his own. Even ſo the Biſhop of Rome giveth Princes their Crowns, being none of his own; for where Princes either by election, either by ſucceſſion, either by inheritance obtain their Crown, he ſaith that they ſhould have it from him.

The Pope proved Antichriſt.

Chriſt ſaith, that Antichriſt ſhall be. And who ſhall he be? Forſooth he that advanceth himſelf above all other Creatures. Now if there be none already that hath advanced himſelf after ſuch ſort beſides the Pope, then in the mean time let him be Antichriſt.

Story. Pleaſeth it you to make an end?

Cran. For he will be the Vicar of Chriſt, he will diſpenſe with the Old and New Teſtament alſo, yea and with Apoſtaſie.

Now I have declared why I cannot with my conſcience obey the Pope. I ſpeak not this for hatred I bear to him that now ſupplieth the room, for I know him not. I pray God give him Grace not to follow his Anceſtors. Neither ſay I this for my defence, but to declare my Conſcience for the zeal that I bear to Gods Word troden under foot by the Biſhop of Rome. I caſt fear apart, for Chriſt ſaid to his Apoſtles, that in the latter days they ſhould ſuffer much ſorrow, and be put to death for his names ſake: fear them not (ſaith he) but fear him which when he hath killed the Body, hath power to caſt the Soul into fire everlaſting. Alſo Chriſt ſaith, that he that will live ſhall die, and he that loſeth his life for my Names ſake, he ſhall find it again. Moreover he ſaid, confeſs me before Men, and be not afraid; for if you do ſo, I will ſtand with you; if you ſhrink from me I will ſhrink from you. This is a comfortable and terrible ſaying, this maketh me to ſet all fear apart. I ſay therefore, the Biſhop of Rome treadeth under foot Gods Laws and the Kings. Anno 1556.

Matth. 16.

Matth. 8.

The Pope would give Biſhopricks; ſo would the King. But at the laſt the King got the upper hand, and ſo are all Biſhops perjured, firſt to the Pope, and then to the King.

The Crown hath nothing to do with the Clergy. For If a Clerk come before a judge, the judge ſhall make proceſs againſt him, but not to execute any Laws. For if the judge ſhould put him to Execution, then is the King accurſed in maintaining his own Laws. And therefore ſay I, that he is neither true to God, neither to the King, that firſt received the Pope. But I ſhall heartily pray for ſuch Counſellours, as may inform her the truth; for the King and Queen, if they be well informed, will do well.

The Popes Laws againſt the Laws of this Realm.

Martin. As you underſtand, then if they maintain the Supremacy of Rome, they cannot maintain England too.

Cran. I require you to declare to the King and Queen what I have ſaid, and how their Oaths do ſtand with the Realm and the Pope: S. Gregory ſaith, he that taketh up- on him to be head of the Univerſal Church, is worſe then the Antichriſt. If any Man can ſhew me, that it is not againſt Gods Word to hold his ſtirrop when he taketh his horſe, and kiſs his feet (as Kings do) then will I kiſs his feet alſo.

To be called Univerſal Head is a mark of Antichriſt. Gregor.

The Biſhop of Gloceſter charged with perjury.

And you for your part, my Lord, are perjured; for now ye ſit Judge for the Pope, and yet you did receive your Biſhoprick of the King. You have taken an Oath to be adverſary to the Realm; for the Popes Laws are contrary to the Laws of the Realm.

Gloceſter. You were the cauſe that I did forſake the Pope, and did ſwear that he ought not to be Supream Head, and gave it to King Henry the eighth, that he ought to be it, and this you made me to do.

Cranmer. To this I anſwer, ſaid he; You report me ill, and ſay not the truth, and I will prove it here before you all. The truth is, that my Predeceſſor, Biſhop Warham, gave the Supremacy to King Henry the eighth, and ſaid that he ought to have it before the Biſhop of Rome, and that Gods Word would bear him. And upon the ſame was there ſent to both the Univerſities Oxford and Cambridge, to know what the Word of God would do touching the Supremacy, and it was reaſoned upon, and argued at length. So at the laſt both the Univerſities agreed, and ſet to their Seals, and ſent it to King Henry the eighth to the Court, that he ought to be Supream Head, and not the Pope. Whereupon you were then Doctor of Divinity at that time, and your conſent was thereunto, as by your hand doth appear. Therefore you miſreport me, that I was the cauſe of your falling away from the Pope, but it was your ſelf. All this was in Biſhop Warhams time, and whilſt he was alive, ſo that it was three quarters of a year after ere ever I had the Biſhoprick of Canterbury in my hands, and before I might do any thing. So that here ye have reported of me that which ye cannot prove, which is evil done. All this while his cap was on his head.

Warham Archbiſhop gave up firſt the Supremacy to the King.

Both the Univerſities ſubſcribed to the Kings Supremacy, before Cranmer was Archbiſhop.

Gloceſt. We come to examine you, and you, me think, examine us.

Doctor

Anno 1556.

Doctor Stories Oration.

D. Stories Oration against the Archbishop.

STory. Pleaseth it your good Lordship, because it hath pleased the King and Queens Majesties to appoint my companion and me to hear the Examination of this Man before your good Lordship, to give me leave somewhat to talk in that behalf. Although I know that in talk with Hereticks there cometh hurt to all Men; for it wearieth the stedfast, troubleth the doubtful, and taketh in snare the weak and simple: yet because he saith, he is not bound to answer your Lordship sitting for the Popes Holiness, because of a Premunire, and the Word of God as he termeth it; I think good somewhat to say, that all Men may see how he runneth out of his Race of Reason into the rage of common talk, such as here I trust hath done much good. And as the King and Queens Majesties will be glad to hear of your most charitable dealing with him; so will they be weary to hear the blundering of this stubborn Heretick. And where he alledgeth Divinity, mingling fas nefasque together, he should not have been heard. For shall it be sufficient to him to alledge, the Judge is not competent? Do we not see that in the Common Law it is not lawful for a Man in Westminster-Hall to refuse his Judge? And shall we dispute contra eum qui negat principia? Although there be here a great company of learned Men, that know it unmeet so to do, yet have I here a plain Canon, wherein he declareth himself convicted ipso facto. The Canon is this; Sit ergo ruinæ suo dolore prostratus quisquis Apostolicis volverit contraire decretis, nec locum deinceps inter Sacerdotes habeat, sed exors à sancto fiat ministerio, nec de eo ejus judicio quisquam posthac curam habeat, quin jam damnatus à sancta & Apostolica Ecclesia sua inobedientia ac præsumptione à quoquam esse non dubitetur. Quin majoris excommunicationis dejectione est abjiciendus, cui sanctæ Ecclesiæ commissa fuerit disciplina, qui non solum jussionibus prælatæ sanctæ Ecclesiæ parere debuit, sed etiam aliis ne præterirent insinuare. Sitque alienus à divinis & pontificalibus officiis, qui noluerit præceptis Apostolicis obtemperare.

Words of the Popes Canon.

He hath alledged many matters against the Supremacy, but maliciously. Ye say that the King in his Realm is supream head of the Church. Well Sir, you will grant me that there was a perfect Catholick Church before any King was christened. Then if it were a perfect Church, it must needs have a head, which must needs be before any King was member thereof; for you know Constantinus the Emperour was the first christened King that ever was. And although you are bound (as Saint Paul saith) to obey your Rulers, and Kings have rule of the people, yet doth it not follow that they have cure of Souls: for à fortiori, the head may do that the Minister cannot do; but the Priest may consecrate, and the King cannot, therefore the King is not head.

Note the worshipful reasons of D. Story, wherewith he proveth the Popes Supremacy.

It was licensed by Christ to every Man to bring into the sheepfold, and to augment the flock, but not to rule, for that was only given to Peter.

D Story reasoneth as though to feed with the word, and to govern with the Sword were all one.

And where the Apostles do call upon Men to obey their Princes, cui tributum, tributum; cui vectigal, vectigal; they perceiving that Men were bent to a kind of liberty and disobedience, were enforced to exhort them to obedience and payment of their tribute, which exhortation extendeth only to temporal matters.

A maxim in the Law.

And again, where you say that the Bishop of Rome maketh Laws contrary to the Laws of the Realm, that is not true; for this is a maxim in the Law; Quod in particulari excipitur, non facit universale falsum.

Now as touching that monstrous talk of your Conscience, that is no Conscience that ye profess; it is but privata scientia, electio and secta. And as yet for all your glorious babble, you have not proved by Gods Laws that ye ought not to answer the Popes Holiness.

A Rule of Law.

The Canons which be received of all Christendom compel you to answer, therefore you are bound so to do. And although this Realm of late time, through such Schismaticks as you were, hath exiled and banished the Canons, yet that cannot make for you. For you know your self, that Par in parem, nec pars in totum aliquid statuere potest. Wherefore this Ile, being indeed but a member of the whole, could not determine against the whole. That notwithstanding the same Laws, being put away by Parliament, are now received again by a Parliament, and have as full authority now as they had then, and they will now that ye answer to the Popes Holiness; therefore by the Laws of this Realm ye are bound to answer him. Wherefore, my good Lord, all that this Thomas Cranmer (I cannot otherwise term him, considering his disobedience) hath brought for his defence, shall nothing prevail with you, nor take any effect. Require him therefore to answer directly to your good Lordship; command him to set aside his trifles, and to be obedient to the Laws and Ordinances of this Realm. Take witness here of his stubborn contempt against the King and Queens Majesties, and compel him to answer directly to such Articles as we shall here lay against him, and in refusal, your good Lordship is to excommunicate him.

D. Story chargeth the Archbishop with stubbornness.

As soon as Doctor Story had thus ended his tale, beginneth Doctor Martin again to enter speech with the Archbishop; which talk I thought here likewise not to let pass, although the report of the same be such, as the Author thereof seemeth in his writings very partial; for as he expresseth the speech of Dr. Martin at full, and to the uttermost of his diligence, leaving out nothing in that part, that either was or could be said more; so again on the other part, how raw and weak he leaveth the matter, it is easie to perceive, who neither comprehendeth all that Doctor Cranmer again answered for his defence; nor yet in those short speeches which he expresseth, seemeth to discharge the part of a sincere and faithful reporter. Notwithstanding such as it is, I thought good to let the Reader understand, who in perusing the same, may use therein his own judgment and consideration.

Partiality in the reporter.

Talk between Doctor Martin and the Archbishop.

Talk between D. Martin and the Archbishop.

MAster Cranmer, ye have told here a long glorious tale, pretending some matter of Conscience in appearance, but in verity you have no Conscience at all. You say that you have sworn once to King Henry the eighth against the Popes jurisdiction, and therefore you may never forswear the same; and so ye make a great matter of Conscience in the breach of the said Oath. Here will I ask you a question or two. What if ye made an Oath to an Harlot, to live with her in continual adultery, ought you to keep it?

Cran. I think no.

Unadvised Oaths are not to be kept.

Mart. What if you did swear never to lend a poor Man one penny, ought you to keep it?

Cran. I think not.

Martin. Herod did swear whatsoever his Harlot asked of him he would give her, and he gave her John Baptists head; Did he well in keeping his Oath?

Cran. I think not.

Jephthe's Oath.

Mart. Jephthe one of the Judges of Israel did swear unto God, that if he would give him victory over his enemies, he would offer unto God the first Soul that came forth of his house; it hapned that his own daughter came first, and he slue her to save his Oath. Did he well?

Cran. I think not.

Martin. So saith Saint Ambrose de officiis, Miserabilis necessitas, quæ solvitur parricidio, id est, It is a miserable necessity, which is paid with parricide. Then Master Cranmer you can no less confess by the premisses but that you ought not to have Conscience of every Oath, but if it be just, lawful, and advisedly taken.

Cran. So was that Oath.

Mart. That is not so, for first it was unjust, for it tended to the taking away of another mans right. It was not lawful, for the Laws of God and the Church were against it. Besides, it was not voluntary; for every Man and Woman were compelled to take it.

Cran. It pleaseth you to say so.

The Archb. being sworn to the King, ought not to swear to the Pope.

Mart. Let all the World be Judge. But Sir, you that pretend to have such a Conscience to break an Oath, I pray you did you never swear and break the same?

Cran. I remember not.

Mart. I will help your Memory. Did you never swear Obedience to the See of Rome?

Cranmer. Indeed I did once swear unto the same.

Mart.

Anno 1556.

Mart. Yea, that you did twice, as appeareth by records and writings here ready to be ſhewed.

The Archb. ſworn firſt to the Pope by proteſtation.

Cran. But I remember I ſaved all by proteſtation that I made by the Counſel of the beſt learned Men I could get at that time, Mart. Hearken good people what this Man ſaith. He made a proteſtation one day, to keep never a whit of that which he would ſwear the next day; was this the part of a Chriſtian Man? If a Chriſtian Man would bargain with a Turk, and before he maketh his bargain ſolemnly, before witneſs readeth in his paper that he holdeth ſecretly in his hand, or peradventure proteſteth before one or two, that he mindeth not to perform whatſoever he ſhall promiſe to the Turk; I ſay, if a Chriſtian Man ſhould ſerve a Turk in this manner, that the Chriſtian Man were worſe then the Turk. What would you then ſay to this Man that made a Solemn Oath and promiſe unto God and his Church, and made a proteſtation before quite contrary?

Cran. That which I did, I did by the beſt learned Mens advice I could get at that time.

D. Martin would prove the Archbiſh. perjured in forſwearing his Oath made to the Pope.

Mart. I proteſt before all the learned Men here, that there is no learning will ſave your perjury herein; for there be two Rules of the Civil Law clean contrary againſt you, and ſo brought forth his Rules, which being done he proceeded further. But will you have the truth of the matter. King Henry the eighth even then meant the lamentable change which after you ſee came to paſs; and to further his pittiful proceedings from the divorcement of his moſt lawful wife, to the deteſtable departing from the Bleſſed Unity of Chriſts Church, this Man made the foreſaid proteſtation; and on the other ſide, he letted not to make two Solemn Oaths quite contrary, and why? for otherwiſe by the Laws and Canons of this Realm, he could not aſpire to the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury.

Dr. Cranmer unwilling to be made Archbiſh.

Cran. I proteſt before you all, there was never Man came more unwillingly to a Biſhoprick, then I did to that. Inſomuch that when King Henry did ſend for me in poſt, that I ſhould come over, I prolonged my journey by ſeven weeks at the leaſt, thinking that he would be forgetful of me in the mean time.

Mart. You declare well by the way that the King took you to be a Man of good Conſcience, who could not find within all his Realm any Man that would ſet forth his ſtrange attempts, but was inforced to ſend you in poſt to come out of Germany. What may we conjecture hereby, but that there was a compact between you being then Queen Annes Chaplain, and the King; Give me the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury, and I will give you licence to live in adultery.

Falſe ſlander of Dr. Martin.

Cran. You ſay not true.

Martin. Let your proteſtation joyned with the reſt of your talk, give judgment. Hinc prima mali labes. Of that your execrable perjury, and his coloured and too ſhamefully ſuffered adultery, came Hereſie and all miſchief to this Realm.

And thus have I ſpoken as touching the Conſcience you make for breaking your Heretical Oath made to the King. But to break your former Oath made at two ſundry times both to God and his Church, you have no Conſcience at all. And now to anſwer another part of your Oration, wherein you bring in Gods Word, that you have it on your ſide and no Man elſe, and that the Pope hath deviſed a New Scripture contrary to the Scripture of God; ye play herein as the Phariſees did, which cried always, * Verbum Domini, Verbum Domini, The Word of the Lord, the Word of the Lord, when they meant nothing ſo. This bettereth not your cauſe, becauſe you have Gods Word for you; for Baſilides and Phontinns the Hereticks ſaid, that they had Gods Word to maintain their Hereſie. So Neſtorius, ſo Macedonius, ſo Pelagius, and briefly, all the Hereticks that ever were, pretended that they had Gods Word for them; yea, and ſo the Devil being the Father of Hereſies, alledged Gods Word for him, ſaying, Scriptum eſt, It is written: So ſaid he to Chriſt, Mitte te deorſum, Caſt thy ſelf downward, which you applyed moſt falſly againſt the Pope. But if you mark the Devils Language well, it agreed with your proceedings moſt truly. For, Mitte te deorſum, Caſt thy ſelf downward, ſaid he, and ſo taught you to caſt all things downward. Down with the Sacrament, down with the Maſs, down with the Altars, down with the Arms of Chriſt, and up with a Lion and a Dog, down with the Abbeys, down with Chauntries, down with Hoſpitals and Colledges, down with † Faſting and Prayer, yea down with all that Good and Godly is. All your proceedings and preachings tended no other, but to fulfill the Devils requeſt, Mitte te deorſum. And therefore tell not us that you have Gods Word. For God hath given us by his Word a mark to know that your teaching proceeded not of God, but of the Devil, and that your Doctrine came not of Chriſt but of Antichriſt. For Chriſt foreſaid, there ſhould come againſt his Church, Lupi rapaces, id eſt, Ravening Wolves, and Pſeudoapoſtoli, id eſt, Falſe Apoſtles. But how ſhould we know them? Chriſt teacheth us, ſaying, Ex fructibus eorum cognoſcetis eos, id eſt, By their fruits ye ſhall know them. Why, what be their fruits? Saint Paul declareth; Poſt carnem in concupiſcentia, & immunditia ambulant: poteſtates contemnunt, &c. i. After the Fleſh they walk in concupiſcence and uncleanneſs; they contemn Poteſtates. Again, In diebus noviſſimis erunt periculoſa tempora, erunt ſeipſos amantes, cupidi, elati, immorigeri parentibus, proditorcs, &c. i. In the latter days there ſhall be perilous times. Then ſhall there be Men loving themſelves, covetous, proud, diſobedient to parents, Treaſon-workers. Whether theſe be not the fruits of your Goſpel, I refer me to this Worſhipful Audience; whether the ſaid Goſpel began not with perjury, proceeded with Adultery, was maintained with Hereſie, and ended in Conſpiracy.

* Nay, the Phariſees cried not Verbum Domini, but Templum Domini, as the Papiſts do now againſt the Proteſtants.

† So did King Ezechias and Joſias down with munuments of Idolatry, and are commended.

Whether theſe be the fruits of the Papiſts more, let the converſation of them both give judgment.

Now Sir, two points more I marked in your raging diſcourſe that you made here: the one againſt the Holy Sacrament; the other againſt the Popes juriſdiction, and the Authority of the See Apoſtolick.

Doctrine of the Sacrament.

Touching the firſt, ye ſay you have Gods Word with you, yea and all the Doctors. I would here ask but one queſtion of you; whether Gods Word be contrary to it ſelf, and whether the Doctors teach Doctrine contrary to themſelves, or no? For you Maſter Cranmer have taught in this High Sacrament of the Altar three contrary doctrines, and yet you pretended in every one; Verbum Domini.

Cran. Nay, I taught but two contrary Doctrines in the ſame.

Mart. What Doctrine taught you when you Condemned Lambert the Sacramentary in the Kings preſence in Whitehall.

So was S. Auguſtine firſt a Pagan, then a Manichee, and then a Catholick.

* Cranmer. I maintained then the Papiſts Doctrine.

Mart. That is to ſay, the Catholick and Univerſal Doctrine of Chriſts Church. And how when King Henry died? did you not tranſlate Juſtus Jonas Book?

Cran. I did ſo.

Mart. Then there you defended another Doctrine touching the Sacrament, by the ſame token, that you ſent to Lynn your Printer, that whereas in the firſt print there was an affirmative, that is to ſay Chriſts Body really in the Sacrament, you ſent then to your Printer to put in a not, whereby it came miraculouſly to paſs, that Chriſts Body was clean conveighed out of the Sacrament.

Cran. I remember there were two Printers of my ſaid Book, but where the ſame not was put in, I cannot tell.

Martin. Then from a Lutheran ye became a Swinglian, which is the vileſt Hereſie of all in the High Myſtery of the Sacrament, and for the ſame Hereſie you did help to burn Lambert the Sacramentary, which you now call the Catholick Faith, and Gods Word.

Dr. Cranmer firſt won to the knowledge of the Sacrament by Biſhop Ridley.

Cranmer. I grant that then I believed otherwiſe then I do now, and ſo I did, until my Lord of London, Doctor Ridley, did confer with me, and by ſundry perſwaſions and authorities of Doctors drew me quite from my opinion.

Supremacy of the Pope.

Martin. Now Sir, as touching the laſt part of your Oration, you denied that the Popes Holineſs was Supream Head of the Church of Chriſt.

Cran. I did ſo.

Mart. Who ſay you then is Supream Head?

Cran. Chriſt.

Mart.

Anno 1556.

Mart. But whom hath Chriſt left here in Earth his Vicar and head of his Church?

Cran. No body.

Mart. Ah, why told you not King Henry this when you made him Supream Head? and now no body is. This is Treaſon againſt his own perſon as you then made him.

King Henry was not ſupream head but only of his own Realm. The Pope will be univerſal head over all.

Cran. I mean not but every King in his own Realm and Dominion is Supream Head, and ſo was he Supream Head of the Church of Chriſt in England.

Mart. Is this always true? and was it ever ſo in Chriſts Church?

Cran. It was ſo.

Mart. Then what ſay you by Nero? He was the mightieſt Prince of the Earth after Chriſt was aſcended: Was he Head of Chriſts Church?

Cran. Nero was Peters Head:

Mar. I ask whether Nero was Head of the Church or no? if he were not, it is falſe that you ſaid before, that all Princes be, and ever were Heads of the Church within their Realms.

Cran. Nay, it is true, for Nero was Head of the Church: that is, in worldly reſpect of the temporal Bodies of Men, of whom the Church conſiſteth; for ſo he beheaded Peter and the Apoſtles. And the Turk too is Head of the Church in Turky.

Mart. Then he that beheaded the Heads of the Church, and Crucified the Apoſtles, was Head of Chriſts Church; and he that was never member of the Church, is Head of the Church, by your new found underſtanding of Gods Word.

¶ It is not to be ſuppoſed contrary, but much other matter paſſed in this Communication between them, eſpecially on the Archbiſhops behalf. Whoſe anſwers I do not think to be ſo ſlender, nor altogether in the ſame form of words framed, if the truth, as it was, might be known: but ſo it pleaſed the Notary thereof, being too much partially addicted to his Mother See of Rome in favour of his faction, to diminiſh and drive down the other ſide, either in not ſhewing all, or in reporting the thing otherwiſe than it was; as the common guiſe is of moſt Writers, to what ſide their affection moſt weigheth, their Oration commonly inclineth. But let us proceed further in the Story of this matter.

The anſwer of the Archbiſhop not ſincerely reported.

It followed then (ſaith this reporter) when the Archbiſhop thus had anſwered, and the ſtanders by began to murmure againſt him; the Judges not content with his Anſwers, willed him to anſwer directly to the Interrogatories; which Interrogatories articulated againſt him in form of Law, were theſe under following.

Interrogatories objected to the Archbiſhop, with his Anſwers annexed to the ſame.

Interrogatories laid againſt the Archbiſhop.

1. Interrog. Firſt was objected, that he the foreſaid Thomas Cranmer, being yet free, and before he entred into Holy Orders, married one Joan, ſurnamed black or brown, dwelling at the ſign of the Dolphin in Cambridge.

The firſt marriage of the Archbiſhop.

Anſwer. Whereunto he anſwered, that whether ſhe was called black or brown, he knew not, but that he married there one Joan, that he granted.

2. Interrog. That after the death of the foreſaid wife, he entred into holy Orders, and after that was made Archbiſhop by the Pope.

Anſw. He received (he ſaid) a certain Bull of the Pope, which he delivered unto the King, and was Archbiſhop by him.

The ſecond marriage of the Archbiſhop.

3. Inter. Item, that he being in Holy Orders, married another Woman as his ſecond Wife, named Anne, and ſo was twice married.

Anſw. To this he granted.

4. Interrog. Item, in the time of King Henry the eighth, he kept the ſaid wife ſecretly, and had Children by her.

Anſw. Hereunto he alſo granted; affirming that it was better for him to have his own, than to do like other Prieſts, holding and keeping other Mens Wives.

5. Inter. Item, in the time of King Edward, he brought out the ſaid Wife openly, affirming and profeſſing publickly the ſame to be his Wife.

Anſw. He denied not but he ſo did, and lawfully might do the ſame; foraſmuch as the Laws of the Realm did ſo permit him.

6. Interrog. Item, that he ſhamed not openly to glory himſelf to have had his Wife in ſecret many years.

Anſw. And though he ſo did (he ſaid) there was no cauſe why he ſhould be aſhamed thereof.

7. Inter. Item, that the ſaid Thomas Cranmer falling afterward into the deep bottom of errors, did flie and refuſe the Authority of the Church, did hold and follow the hereſie concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, and alſo did compile, and cauſed to be ſet abroad divers Books.

The Archbiſhop charged with his Doctrine and Books.

Anſw. Whereunto when the names of the Books were recited to him, he denied not ſuch Books which he was the Author of. As touching the treatiſe of Peter Martyr upon the Sacrament, he denied that he ever ſaw it before it was abroad, yet did approve and well like of the ſame. As for the Catechiſm, the Book of Articles, with the other Book againſt Wincheſter, he granted the ſame to be his doings.

8. Inter. Item, that he compelled many againſt their wills to ſubſcribe to the ſame Articles.

Anſw. He exhorted (he ſaid) ſuch as were willing to ſubſcribe; but againſt their wills he compelled none.

9. Inter. Item, forſomuch as he ſurceaſed not to perpetrate enorm and inordinate crimes, he was therefore caſt into the Tower, and from thence was brought to Oxford, at what time it was commonly thought that the Parliament there ſhould be holden.

Anſw. To this he ſaid, that he knew no ſuch enorm and inordinate crimes that ever he committed.

10. Inter. Item, that in the ſaid City of Oxford he did openly maintain his hereſie, and there was convict upon the ſame.

Anſw. He defended (he ſaid) there the cauſe of the Sacrament, but that he was convicted in the ſame, that he denied.

11. Inter. Item, when he perſevered ſtill in the ſame, he was by the publick cenſure of the Univerſity pronounced an Heretick, and his Books to be Heretical.

Anſw. That he was ſo denounced, he denied not; but that he was an Heretick, or his Books Heretical, that he denied.

12. Inter. Item, that he was and is notoriouſly infamed with the note of Schiſm, as who not only himſelf receded from the Catholick Church and See of Rome, but alſo moved the King and Subjects of this Realm to the ſame.

Anſw. As touching the receding, that he well granted; but that receding or departing (ſaid he) was only from the See of Rome, and had in it no matter of any Schiſm.

The Archb. ſworn to the Pope by proteſtation.

13. Inter. Item, that he had been twice ſworn to the Pope; and withal Doctor Martin brought out the inſtrument of the publick Notary, wherein was containad his proteſtation made when he ſhould be conſecrated, asking if he had any thing elſe proteſted.

Anſw. Whereunto he anſwered, that he did nothing but by the Laws of the Realm.

14. Inter. Item, that he the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury did not only offend in the premiſſes, but alſo in taking upon him the Authority of the See of Rome, in that without leave or licence from the ſaid See, he conſecrated Biſhops and Prieſts.

Anſw. He granted, that he did execute ſuch things as were wont to be referred to the Pope, at what time it was permitted to him by the Publick Laws and determination of the Realm.

15. Inter. Item, that when the whole Realm had ſubſcribed to the Authority of the Pope, he only ſtill perſiſted in his errour.

Anſw. That he did not admit the Popes Authority, he confeſſed to be true. But that he erred in the ſame, that he denied.

16. Inter. Item, that all and ſingular the premiſſes be true.

Anſw. That likewiſe he granted, excepting thoſe things whereunto he had now anſwered.

After he had thus anſwered to the objections aforeſaid, and the publick Notary had entred the ſame, the Judges and Commiſſioners, as having now accompliſhed that wherefore they came, were about to riſe up and depart. But the Biſhop of Gloceſter thinking it not the beſt ſo to diſmiſs the people, being ſomewhat ſtirred with the words words of the Archbiſhop, began in his Oration in the hearing of the People, thus to declaim.

The Oration of Biſhop Brooks, in cloſing up his Examination againſt Dr. Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Another Oration of Bp. Brooke, to Archbiſhop Cranmer.

MAſter Cranmer (I cannot otherwiſe tearm you, conſidering your obſtinacy) I am right ſorry, I am right heartily ſorry to hear ſuch words eſcape your mouth ſo unadviſedly. I had conceived a right good hope of your amendment. I ſuppoſe that this obſtinacy of yours came not of a vain-glory, but rather of a corrupt Conſcience, which was the occaſion that I hoped ſo well of your return. But now I perceive by your fooliſh babble, that it is far otherwiſe. Ye are ſo puffed up with vain-glory, there is ſuch a cauteria of Hereſie crept into your Conſcience, that I am clean void of hope, and my hope is turned into Perdition. Who can ſave that will be loſt? God would have you to be ſaved; and you refuſe it. Perditio tua ſuper te Iſrael; tantummodo in me ſalvatio tua, ait Dominus per Prophetam: i. Thy Perdition is only upon thy ſelf, O Iſrael; only in me is thy ſalvation, ſaith the Lord by his Prophet. You have uttered ſo erroneous talk, with ſuch open malice againſt the Popes Holineſs, with ſuch open lying againſt the Church of Rome, with ſuch open Blaſphemy againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, that no mouth could have expreſſed more maliciouſly, more lyingly, more blaſphemouſly.

Mr. Cranmer not to be reaſoned withal.

To reaſon with you, although I would of my ſelf to ſatisfie this Audience, yet may I not by our Commiſſion, neither can I find how I may do it with the Scriptures: For the Apoſtle doth command that ſuch a one ſhould not only not be talked withal, but alſo ſhunned and avoided, ſaying, Hæreticum hominem poſt unum aut alterum conventum, devita, ſciens quòd hujuſmodi perverſus eſt & delinquet, quum ſit proprio judicio condemnatus; i. An heretical perſon after once or twice conferring, ſhun, knowing that he is perverſe and ſinneth, being of his own judgment condemned. Ye have been conferred withal not once or twice, but oftentimes, ye have oft been lovingly admoniſhed, ye have been oft ſecretly diſputed with. And the laſt year in the open School, in open Diſputations, ye have been openly convict, ye have been openly driven out of the School with hiſſes: your Book which ye brag you made ſeven years ago, and no man anſwered it, Marcus Antonius hath ſufficiently detected and confuted, and yet ye perſiſt ſtill in your wonted hereſie.

Wherefore being ſo oft admoniſhed, conferred withal, and convicted, if ye deny you to be the man whom the Apoſtle noteth, hear then what Origen ſaith, who wrote above 1300 years ago, and interpreteth the ſaying of the Apoſtle in this wiſe, in Apologia Pamphili: Hæreticus eſt omnis ille habendus, qui Chriſto ſe credere profitetur, & aliter de Chriſti veritate ſentit quam ſe habet Eccleſiaſtica traditio. Even now ye profeſſed a kind of Chriſtianity and Holineſs unto us, for at your beginning you fell down upon your knees, and ſaid the Lords Prayer (God wot like an Hypocrite) and then ſtanding upon your feet, you rehearſed the Articles of your Faith, but to what end I pray you elſe, but to cloak that inward Hereſie rooted in you, that you might blind the poor, ſimple, and unlearned peoples eyes? For what will they ſay or think, if they do not thus ſay? Good Lord, what mean theſe men to ſay that he is an Heretick, they are deceived, this is a good Chriſtian, he believeth as we believe.

Orig. in Apol. Pamph.

But is this ſufficient to eſcape the name of an Heretick? To the ſimple and unlearned it is ſufficient, but for you that have profeſſed a greater knowledge and higher doctrine, it is not enough to recite your belief. For unleſs (as Origen ſaith) ye believe all things that the Church hath decreed beſides, you are no Chriſtian man. In the which becauſe you do halt, and will come to no conformity; from henceforth ye are to be taken for an Heretick, with whom we ought neither to diſpute, neither to reaſon, whom we ought rather to eſchew and avoid.

What an Heretick is, after the Popes making.

Nevertheleſs, although I do not intend to reaſon with you, but to give you up as an Abject and Out-caſt from Gods favour, yet becauſe ye have uttered, to the annoying of the People, ſuch peſtilent Hereſies as may do harm among ſome rude and unlearned, I think meet, and not *abſ*re, ſomewhat to ſay herein; not becauſe I hope to have any good at your hands, which I would willingly wiſh, but that I may eſtabliſh the ſimple People which be here preſent, leſt they being ſeduced by your Diabolical Doctrine, may periſh thereby. Anno 1556.

And firſt (as it behooveth every man to purge himſelf firſt before he enter with any other) where you accuſe me of an Oath made againſt the Biſhop of Rome, I confeſs it, and deny it not, and therefore do ſay with the reſt of this Realm, good and catholick men, the ſaying of the Prophet; Peccavimus cum patribus noſtris, injuſtè egimus, iniquitatem fecimus; i. We have ſinned with our Fathers, we have done unjuſtly and wickedly. Delicta juventutis meæ, & ignorantias meas ne memineris Domine; i. The ſins of my youth, and my ignorances, O Lord, do not remember. I was then a young man, and as young a Scholar here in the Univerſity.

Bp. Brooke recanteth his Oath made to the King againſt the Pope.

I knew not then what an Oath did mean, and yet to ſay the truth, I did it compulſed, compulſed I ſay by you Mr. Cranmer, and here were you the Author and Cauſe of my Perjury, you are to be blamed herein, and not I. Now where you ſay I made two Oaths, the one contrary to the other, it is not ſo, for the Oath I made to the Popes Holineſs appertaineth only to Spiritual things: The other Oath that I made to the King, pertaineth only to Temporal things; that is to ſay, that I do acknowledge all my Temporal Livings to proceed only from the King, and from none elſe. But all men may ſee, as you agree in this, ſo ye agree in the reſt of your Opinions.

Supremacy.

Now Sir, as concerning the Supremacy which is only due to the See of Rome, a word or two. Although there be a number of places which do confirm that Chriſt appointed Peter Head of the Church, yet this is a moſt evident place. When Chriſt demanded of his Apoſtles whom men called him; they anſwered, Some Elias, ſome a Prophet, &c. But Chriſt replyed unto Peter, and ſaid, Whom ſayeſt thou Peter that I am? Peter anſwered, Tu es Chriſtus, Filius Dei: and Chriſt replyed, Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc Petram ædificabo Eccleſiam meam. The Doctors interpreting this place, Super hanc Petram, expounded it, id eſt; non ſolum ſuper fidem Petri, ſed ſuper te Petre. And why did Chriſt change his name from Simon to Peter, which in Latin is a Stone, but only to declare that he was only the Foundation and Head of the Church?

The Church builded upon Peter.

Again, where Chriſt demanded of Peter, being amongſt the reſt of his Apoſtles, three times a-row, Petre, amas me? he gave him charge over his Sheep, Paſce oves meas, paſce agnos meos. Which place Chryſoſtom interpreting, ſaith, Paſce, hoc eſt, loco mei eſto præpoſitus & caput fratrum tuorum. To conclude, when they came that required Didrachma of Chriſt, he commanded Peter to caſt his Net into the Sea, and to take out of the Fiſhes mouth that he took, ſtateram, hoc eſt, duplex Didrachma, & da, inquit, pro te & me Petre. Which words do ſignifie, that when he had paid for them two, he had paid for all the reſt. For as in the old Law there were appointed two Heads over the People of Iſrael, Moſes and Aaron; Moſes as Chief, and Aaron next Head under him; ſo in the new Law there were two Heads of the Church, which were Chriſt and Peter. Chriſt is Head of all, and Peter next under him. S. Auſtin in 75 queſt. Veteris & Novi Teſtamenti, Salvator (inquit) quum proſe & Petro dari jubebat Didrachma, pro omnibus ipſum dari cenſuit, ipſum enim conſtituit caput eorum; i. Our Saviour Chriſt (ſaith S. Auſtin) commanding the Tribute to be given for him and for Peter, meant thereby the ſame to be given for all other, for he appointed him to be Head of them. What can be more plain then this? But I will not tarry upon this matter.

Paſce expounded by Chryſoſtom.

Aug. queſt. 75.

Now as touching the Popes Laws, where you ſay they be contrary, becauſe the Service which ſhould be (as you ſay) in Engliſh, is in Latin; I anſwer, Whoſoever will take the pains to peruſe the Chapter, which is in 1 Cor. 14. ſhall find, that his meaning is concerning preaching, and obiter only of praying.

Service in Latin.

Again, where you ſay, that the Popes Holineſs doth take away one part of the Sacrament from the Lay-men, and Chriſt would have it under both, ye can ſay no more but this, Bibite ex eo omnes; i. Drink ye all of this. And what followeth, Et biberunt ex eo omnes; i. And all drank thereof. Now if a man would be ſo proterve with you, he might ſay that Chriſt gave it only to his Apoſtles, Sacrament in one kind.

in

Anno 1556. in whoſe places ſucceeded Prieſts, and not Lay-men.

Authority of the Church in changing Rites.

And admit that Chriſt commanded it to be received under both kinds, yet the Church hath authority to change that, as well as other. Ye read, that Chriſt calling his Apoſtles together, ſaid unto them, Ite, prædicate Evangelium omni Nationi, baptizantes in nomine Patris, & Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, i. Go and preach the Goſpel to every Nation, baptizing them in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. But the Apoſtles, being deſirous to publiſh Chriſts Name every where, did baptize only in Chriſts name. Again, Chriſt before his laſt Supper waſhed his Apoſtles feet, ſaying, Si ego lavi pedes veſtros Dominus & Magiſter, & vos debetis alter alterius lavare pedes, i. If I have waſhed your feet, being your Lord and Maſter, alſo you ought to waſh the feet one of another.

Rites and Ceremonies ſubject to the diſpoſition of the Church.

Exemplum dedi vobis, i. I have given you example. This was a Precept, yet hath the Church altered it, leſt the ſimple people ſhould not think a rebaptization in it. So becauſe, ſaith the Apoſtle, Accepi à Domino quod & tradidi vobis. Dominus noſter qua nocte tradebatur, &c. i. I have received of the Lord the ſame which I have delivered to you, that our Lord the ſame night in which he was betrayed, &c. Notwithſtanding that this was a precept that the Sacrament ſhould be miniſtred after Supper, the Church hath altered it, and commanded it to be received faſting. And where Chriſt did break the Bread, we receive the whole Hoſt. Chriſt miniſtred ſitting at the Table, we ſtanding at the Altar.

It was alſo commanded in Acts 25. that Chriſtian men ſhould abſtain à ſuffocato & ſanguine, i. From ſtrangled and blood. But the Church perceiving it to be a precept but for a time, hath altered it. Chriſt commanded to keep holy, diem Sabbati, The Sabbath-day, and the Church hath altered it to Sunday. If then the Church may change things that be ſo expreſſed in the Scriptures, ſhe may alſo change the form of receiving of Lay-men under both kinds, for divers occaſions.

Reaſons why Lay-men receive not under both kinds.

Firſt, that in carrying it to the ſicks, the blood may not be ſhed, loſt, or miſuſed.

And next, that no occaſion might be given to Hereticks to think that there is not ſo much under one kind, as under both.

But why would you have it under both kinds, I pray you elſe, but only to pervert and contrary the commandment of the Church? For when you had it under both kinds, you believed in neither. And we having but one, believe both kinds. Now Sir, as concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, where you ſay, you have a number of Doctors of your ſide, and we none of our ſide, that is to ſay, to confirm the real preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar, indeed one to ſtop your mouth, I think it not poſſible to find. Nevertheleſs, where your requeſt is to have one ſhewed unto you, and then you will recant, I will ſhew you two.

Real preſence proved by B. Brooks, Aug. Pſal. 33.

St. Auſtin, ſuper Pſal. 33. Ferebatur manibus ſuis, I find not how this is true in David (ſaith he) literally, that he was born in his own hands; but in Chriſt I find it literally, when he gave his Body to his Apoſtles at his laſt Supper.

Cyprian de Cœna Domini.

Again, St. Cyprian, de Cœna Domini, ſaith, Panis quem Dominus noſter Diſcipulis ſuis porrigebat, non effigie, ſed natura mutatus, omnipotentia verbi factus eſt caro. What can be more plain than this? yet to your expoſition it is not plain enough. But give me your figurative, ſignificative, and other ſuch like terms, and I will defend that Chriſt hath not yet aſcended; no nor yet that he was incarnate, &c. Wherefore I can do no other but put you in the number of them, whom Chryſoſtom ſpake of in this wiſe, ſaying, Audi, homo fidelis, qui contra hæreticum contendis, ſi Phariſæi convicti, & non placati & hæretici, &c. Hear, O thou Chriſtian man, wilt thou do more than Chriſt could do? Chriſt confuted the Phariſees, yet could he not put them to ſilence; Et fortior es tu Chriſto? And art thou ſtronger than Chriſt? Wilt thou go about to bring them to ſilence that will receive no anſwer? as who ſhould ſay, thou canſt not. Thus much I have ſaid, not for you Mr. Cranmer, for my hope that I conceived of you is now gone and paſt; but ſomewhat to ſatisfie the rude and unlearned People, that they perceiving your arrogant lying and lying arrogancy, may the better eſchew your deteſtable and abominable Schiſm.

And thus ended the Prelate his worſhipful Tale. After whom D. Story taketh the matter, and thus inferred in words, as followeth.

Dr Storie talk to the Archbiſhop.

Mr. Cranmer, you have made a goodly proceſs concerning your heretical Oath made to the King, but you forget your Oath made to the See Apoſtolick. As concerning your Oath made to the King, if you made it to him only, it took an end by his death, and ſo it is releaſed; if you made it to his Succeſſors, well Sir, the true Succeſſors have the Empire, and they will you to diſſolve the ſame, and become a Member of Chriſts Church again, and it ſtandeth well with charity.

To this the Archbiſhop anſwered again, ſaith the Reporter: but what his anſwer was, that he ſuppreſſeth and returneth to the words of Dr. Story, who imperiouſly turning his ſpeech again to the Archbiſhop, ſaid as followeth:

Three things required in an Oath.

Hold your peace Sir, and ſo ſhall it right well become you, conſidering that I gave you licence before to ſay your phanſie. Your Oath was no Oath: for it lacked the three points of an Oath, that is to ſay, Judicium, Juſtitiam, & Veritatem.

Theſe, with the like words to the ſame effect, being uttered by Dr. Story, ſeeking to break up and make an end of that Seſſion, he eſtſoons called for witneſſes to be produced, who ſhould be ſworn upon the Book, to utter and declare the next day whatſoever they knew, or could remember to be inferred againſt Dr. Cranmers Hereſie. The names of the Witneſſes are theſe:

D. Story calleth for witneſſes.

Dr. Marſhall, Commiſſary, and	Dr. Crooke.
*Dean of Chriſts-Church.	M. London.
Dr. Smith, under Commiſſary.	M. Curteys.
	M. Warde.
Doctor Treſham.	M. Serles.

Witneſſes ſworn againſt the Archbiſhop.

After the depoſitions of which Witneſſes being taken, Dr. Story admoniſhed the Archbiſhop, permitting him to make his exceptions, if he thought any of the ſaid Witneſſes were to be refuſed. Who then would admit none of them all, being men perjured, and not in Chriſtian Religion. For if to ſwear, ſaid he, againſt the Pope were unlawful, they ſhould rather have given their lives, than their Oath. But if it were lawful, then they are perjured, to defend him whom they forſwear before. Nevertheleſs, this anſwer of the Archbiſhop being lightly regarded, as little to the purpoſe appertaining, he was commanded again to the place from whence he came. Who at his departing out, like as at his firſt coming in, ſhewed low obedience to Dr. Martin, and to Dr. Story, the Queens Commiſſioners. Then Dr. Story pointing him to the Biſhop of Glouceſter, ſaid, that he ought rather to give reverence unto him. So the reverend Archbiſhop departing without any obeyſance exhibited to the Biſhop, all the other roſe up, and departed every one to his own. And thus brake up the Seſſion for that day, about two of the Clock at Afternoon.

The Archbiſhop refuſeth thoſe perjured.

The Archbiſhop ſent again to Bocardo.

The Archbiſhop again giveth no reverence to the Popes Delegate.

And thus much hitherto concerning the ſummary effect of this Action or Seſſion, with the Orations, Diſcourſes and Articles commenced againſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, alſo with the reaſons and anſwers of the ſaid Archbiſhop to their Objections and Interrogatories. Touching which his Anſwers, forſomuch as they being recited by report of a Papiſt, (as is aforeſaid) ſeem to be not indifferently handled, it ſhall therefore not greatly be out of our matter, as ye have heard the Orations of Biſhop Brooks, with the reaſons and talk of the other Commiſſioners, amplified and ſet forth at large on the one ſide, ſo now in repeating the words and anſwers of the other part, to declare and ſet forth ſomewhat more amply and effectually, what ſpeech the ſaid Archbiſhop uſed for himſelf in the ſame action, by the faithful relation and teſtimony of certain other, who were likewiſe there preſent, and do thus report the effect of the Archbiſhops words, anſwering to the firſt Oration of Biſhop Brooks in manner as followeth.

The anſwer of the Archbiſhop not indifferently reported.

A more ful anſwer of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to the firſt Oration of Biſhop Brooks.

A more full anſwer of the Archb. to B. Brooks Oration.

My Lord, you have very learnedly and eloquently in your Oration put me in remembrance of many things touching my ſelf, wherein I do not mean to ſpend the time in anſwering of them. I acknowledge Gods goodneſs to me in all his gifts, and thank him as heartily for this ſtate wherein I find my ſelf now, as ever I did for the time of my proſperity; and it is not the loſs of my promotions that grieveth me. The greateſt grief I have at this time is, and one of the greateſt that ever I had in all my life, to ſee the King and Queens Majeſties by their Proctors here to become my accuſers; and that in their own Realm and Countrey, before a forain power. If I have tranſgreſſed the Laws of the Land, their Majeſties have ſufficient Anthority and power both from God, and by the ordinance of the Realm, to puniſh me, whereunto I both have, and at all times ſhall be content to ſubmit my ſelf.

Q. Mary accuſeth the Archb. for taking her own part againſt a forain Power.

Alas! What hath the Pope to do in England? whoſe juriſdiction is ſo far different from the juriſdiction of this Realm, that it is impoſſible to be true to the one, and true to the other. The Laws alſo are ſo divers, that whoſoever ſweareth to both, muſt needs incur perjury to the one. Which as oft as I remember, even for the love that I bear to her Grace, I cannot but be heartily ſory to think upon it, how that her Higlineſs the day of her Coronation, at which time ſhe took a Solemn Oath to obſerve all the Laws and Liberties of this Realm of. England, at the ſame time alſo took an Oath to the Biſhop of Rome, and promiſed to maintain that See. The State of England being ſo repugnant to the Supremacy of the Pope, it was impoſſible but ſhe muſt needs be forſworn in the one. Wherein if her grace had been faithfully advertiſed by her Councel, then ſurely ſhe would never have done it.

The laws of the Realm and of the Pope are contrary.

No man can be true both to the Realm and to the Pope together.

The Laws of this Realm are, that the King of England is the ſupream and ſole Governor of all his Countrys and Dominions: and that he holdeth his Crown and Scepter of himſelf, by the ancient laws, cuſtoms, and deſcents of the Kings of the Realm, and of none other. The Pope ſaith, that all Emperors and Kings hold their Crowns and Regalites of him, and that he may depoſe them when he liſt; which is high Treaſon for any man to affirm and think, being born within the Kings Dominions.

The contrarity between the laws of this Realm, and of the Pope deſcribed.

The Laws of England are, that all Biſhops and Prieſts offending in caſes of felony or treaſon, are to be judged and tried by the laws and cuſtoms of the Realm. The Popes Laws are, that the ſecular power cannot judge the ſpiritual power, and that they are not under their juriſdiction; which robbeth the King of the one part of his People.

Kings and Princes cannot uſe their own laws in their dominions. for the Pope.

The laws alſo of England are, that whoſoever hindereth the execution or proceeding of the Laws of England for any other forain Laws Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal, incurreth the danger of a Præmunire. The Popes Laws are, that whoſoever hindereth the proceedings or executions of his laws, for any others laws, of any other King or Country, both the Prince himſelf, his Council, all his Officers, Scribes, Clerks, and whoſoever give conſent or aid to the making or executing of any ſuch laws, ſtand accurſed. A heavy caſe (if his curſe were any thing worth) that the King and Queen cannot uſe their own laws, but they and all theirs muſt ſtand accurſed. Theſe things and many more examples he alledged, which (he ſaid) ſtirred him that he could not give his conſent to the receiving of ſuch an enemy into the Realm, ſo ſubverting the dignity and ancient liberties of the ſame.

Cauſe why the Archb. would not admit the Pope.

And as for the matter of Hereſy and Schiſm, wherewith he was charged, he proteſted and called God to witneſs, that he knew none that he maintained. But if that were an Hereſy to deny the Popes Authority, and the Religion which the See of Rome hath publiſhed to the World theſe later Years, then all the Ancient Fathers of the Primitive Church, the Apoſtles and Chriſt himſelf taught Hereſy; and he deſired all then preſent to bear him witneſs, that he took the Traditions and Religion of that Uſurping Prelate to be moſt erroneous, falſe, and againſt the Doctrine of the whole Scripture; which he had oftentimes well proved by writing, and the Author of the ſame to be very Antichriſt, ſo often preached of by the Apoſtles and Prophets, in whom did moſt evidently concur all ſigns and tokens whereby he was painted out to the World to be known.

The Popes Religion moſt erroneous.

Anno 1556.

All marks of Antichriſt muſt concur in the Pope.

For it was moſt evident that he had advanced himſelf above all Emperours and Kings of the World, whom he affirmeth to hold their Eſtates and Empires of him, as of their chief, and to be at his commandment to depoſe and erect at his good will and pleaſure, and that ſtories make mention of his intolerable and inſolent pride, and tyranny, uſed over them in ſuch ſort, as no King would have uſed to his Chriſtian ſubjects, nor yet a good maſter to his ſervants, ſetting his feet on the Emperours neck, affirming that to be verified in him, which was ſpoken onely of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, in theſe words, Super Aſpidem & Baſiliſcum ambulabis, & conculcabis Leonem & Draconem. Other ſome had he made to hold his ſtirrop, others he had diſplaced and removed from their Empires and ſeats royal: and not content herewithal, more inſolent then Lucifer, he hath occupied not onely the higheſt place in this World, above Kings and Princes, but hath further perſumed to ſit in the ſeat of Almighty God, which onely he reſerved to himſelf, which is the Conſcience of man; and to keep the poſſeſſion thereof, he hath promiſed forgiveneſs of ſins toties quoties.

The Popes pride and tyranny.

Marks of Antichriſt.

He hath brought in gods of his own framing, and invented a new Religion, ful of gain and lucre, quite contrary to the Doctrine of the Holy Scripture, onely for the maintaining of his Kingdom, diſplacing Chriſt from his glory, and holding his People in a miſerable ſervitude of blindneſs to the loſs of a great number of Souls, which God at the latter day ſhall exact at his hand; boaſting many times in his Canons and Decrees, that he can diſpenſe Contra Petrum, contra Paulum, contra vetus & novum Teſtamentum and that he Plenitudine poteſtatis, tantum poteſt quantum Deus: That is, Againſt Peter, againſt Paul, againſt the old and new Teſtament: and of the fulneſs of power may do as much as God. O Lord, who ever heard ſuch Blaſphemy? If there be any man that can advance himſelf above him, let him be judged Antichriſt.

The Pope diſpenſeth againſt the new and old Teſtament.

This enemy of God and of our redemption, is ſo evidently painted out in the Scriptures by ſuch manifeſt ſigns and tokens, which all ſo clearly appear in him, that except a man will ſhut up his eyes and heart againſt the light, he cannot but know him: and therefore for my part I will never give my conſent to the receiving of him into this Church of England. And you my Lord, and the reſt that ſit here in Commiſſion, conſider well and examine your own Conſciences; you have ſworn againſt him, you are learned, and can judge of the truth. I pray God you be not wifully blind. As for me, I have herein diſcharged mine own Conſcience toward the World, and I will write alſo my mind to her Grace, touching this matter. The copy of which letter ſent to the Queen, ye ſhall find after in the end of his ſtory.

While he in this ſort made his anſwer, ye hear before how Dr. Story and Martin divers times interrupted him with Blaſphemous talk, and would fain have had the Bp. of Gloceſter to put him to ſilence: who notwithſtanding did not, but ſuffered him to end his tale at full. After this he heard alſo how they proceeded to examine him of divers Articles, whereof the chief was, That at the time of his creating Archbiſhop of Canterbury, he was ſworn to the Pope, and had his inſtitution and induction from him, and promiſed to maintain then the Authority of that See, and therfore was perjured: wherefore he ſhould rather ſtick to his firſt Oath and return to his old fold again, then to continue obſtinately in an Oath forced in the time of Schiſm.

His anſwer to their Articles. How Cranmer was made Archb. againſt his will.

To that he anſwered, ſaving his proteſtation (which term he uſed before all his anſwers) that at ſuch time Archbiſhop Warham died, he was Ambaſſador in Germany for the King, who ſent for him thereupon home, and having intelligence by ſome of his friends (who were near about the King) how he meant to beſtow the ſame Biſhoprick upon him, and therefore counſelled him in that caſe to make haſt home, he feeling in himſelf a great inability to ſuch a promotion, and very ſory to leave his ſtudy, and eſpecially conſidering by what means he

he must have it, which was clean against his Conscience, which he could not utter without great peril and danger, devised an excuse to the King of matter of great importance, for the which his longer abode there should be most necessary, thinking by that means in his absence, that the King would have bestowed it upon some other, and so remained there by that device, one half year after the King had written for him to come home. But after that no such matter fell out, as he seemed to make suspicion of, the King sent for him again. Who after his return, understanding still the Archbishoprick to be reserved for him, made means by divers of his best friends to shift it off, desiring rather some smaller Living, that he might more quietly follow his Book.

To be brief, when the King himself spake with him, declaring that his full intention, for his service sake, and for the good opinion he conceived of him, was to bestow that dignity upon him, after long disabling of himself, perceiving he could by no persuasions alter the Kings determination, he brake frankly his Conscience with him, most humbly craving first his Graces pardon, for that he should declare unto his Highness. Which obtained, he declared, that if he accepted the Office, then he must receive it at the Popes hand, which he neither would nor could do, for that his Highness was only the supream Governour of this Church of England, as well in causes Ecclesiastical as Temporal, and that the full right and donation of all manner of Bishopricks and Benefices, as well as of any other Temporal dignities and promotions, appertained to his Grace, and not to any other forreign Authority, whatsoever it was, and therefore if he might in that vocation serve God, him, and his Countrey, seeing it was his pleasure so to have it, he would accept it, and receive it of his Majesty, and of none other stranger, who had no Authority within this Realm, neither in any such gift, nor in any other thing. Whereat the King, said he, staying a while and musing, asked me how I was able to prove it. At which time I alledged many Texts out of the Scriptures, and the Fathers also, approving the supream and highest Authority of Kings in their Realms and Dominions, disclosing therewithal the intolerable usurpation of the Pope of Rome.

Dr. Cranmer denied that he took the Archbishoprick at the Popes hands.

Cranmers answer to King Henry, refusing to be Archbishop.

First breaking of the matter of the Popes Supremacy to K. Henry.

Afterwards it pleased his Highness (quoth the Archbishop) many and sundry times to talk with me of it, and perceiving that I could not be brought to acknowledge the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, the King himself called Doctor Oliver, and other civil Lawyers, and devised with him how he might bestow it upon me, inforcing me nothing against my Conscience. Who thereupon informed him, that I might do it by the way of protestation, and so one to be sent to Rome, who might take the Oath, and do every thing in my name. Which when I understood, I said, he should do it Super animam suam: and I indeed Bona fide made my protestation, that I did not acknowledge his Authority any further, than as it agreed with the expres Word of God, and that it might be lawful for me at all times to speak against him, and so to impugn his Errours, when time and occasion should serve me. And this my protestation did I cause to be inrolled, and there I think it remaineth.

Cranmer sworn to the Pope under protestation.

Cranmer in swearing to the Pope, did nothing without advice of the best learned in this Realm.

They objected to him also that he was married, which he confessed. Whereupon Dr. Martin said, that his Children were Bondmen to the See of Canterbury. At which saying the Archbishop smiled, and asked him if a Priest at his Benefice kept a Concubine, and had by her Bastards, whether they were Bondmen to the Benefice or no, saying, I trust you will make my Childrens causes no worse.

The Archb. answereth for his Wife and Children.

After this Dr. Martin demanded of him, who was supream Head of the Church of England? Marry, quoth my Lord of Canterbury, Christ is Head of this Member, as he is of the whole Body of the Universal Church. Why, quoth Dr. Martin, you made King Henry the 8*th*. supream Head of the Church. Yea, said the Archbishop, of all the People of England, as well Ecclesiastical as Temporal. And not of the Church, said Martin? No, said he, for Christ is only the Head of his Church, and of the Faith and Religion of the same. the King is Head and Governour of his People, which are the visible Church. What (quoth Martin) you never durst tell the King so. Yes, that I durst, quoth he, and did in the publication of his stile, wherein he was named supream Head of the Church, there was never other thing meant. A number of other fond and foolish Objections were made, with repetition whereof I thought not to trouble the Reader.

Because there was offence taken at this word Supream Head, it was declared in the Queens stile to be supream Governour.

Thus after they had received his Answers to all their Objections, they cited him (as is aforesaid) to appear at Rome within fourscore days, to make there his personal Answers: which he said, if the King and Queen would send him, he would be content to do, and so thence was carried to Prison again, where he continually remained, notwithstanding that he was commanded to appear at Rome.

The Archb. cited to appear at Rome.

Wherein all men that have eyes to see, may easily perceive the crafty practice of these Prelates, and the vizored face of their Justice, as though the Court of Rome would condemn no man before he answered for himself, as all Law and equity required. But the very same instant time, the holiness of that unholy Father, contrary to all reason and justice, sent his Letter executory unto the King and Queen to degrade and deprive him of his dignity: which thing he did not only before the 80. days were ended, but before there were 20. days spent. Furthermore, whereas the said Archbishop was first detained in strait Prison, so that he could not appear (as was notorious both in England and also in the Romish Court) and therefore had a lawful and most just excuse of his absence by all Laws, both Popish and other: yet in the end of the said fourscore days, was that worthy Martyr decreed Contumax, that is, sturdily, frowardly, and wilfully absent, and in pain of the same his absence condemned and put to death.

A point to be noted in the crafty practice of Romish hypocrites.

As touching the said Executory Letters of the Pope sent to the King and Queen, beginning thus, Paulus Episcopus servus servorum Dei, charissimo in Christo filio Philippo Regi, & charissimæ in Christo filiæ Mariæ Reginæ, &c. Because the full tenour thereof is expressed in our first impression of Acts, it shall not therefore be needful to cumber this Volume in repeating the same again.

Dr. Thurly, and Dr. Boner, coming with a new Commission to sit upon the Archbishop the 14 day of February.

THis Letter or Sentence definitive of the Pope, was dated about the first day of January, and was delivered here in England about the midst of February. Upon the receit of which Letters another Session was appointed for the Archbishop to appear the 14. day of February, before certain Commissioners directed down by the Queen, the chief whereof was the Bishop of Ely, Dr. Thurlby. Concerning the which Dr. Thurlby by the way here is to be noted, that albeit he was not the said Archbishops houshold Chaplain, yet he was so familiarly acquainted with him, so dearly beloved, so inwardly accepted and advanced of him (not like a Chaplain, but rather like a natural Brother) that there was never any thing in the Archbishops house so dear, were it Plate, Jewel, Horse, Maps, Books, or any thing else, but if Thurlby did never so little commend it (a subtle kind of begging) the Archbishop by and by, either gave it to him, or else sent it after him to his house. So greatly was the Archbishop enamored with him, that whosoever would obtain any thing of him, most commonly would make their way before by D. Thurlby. Which by matter of the said D. Thurlby, I thought here to recite; not so much to upbraid the man with the vice of unthankfulness, as chiefly and only for this, to admonish him of old benefits received, whereby he may the better remember his old Benefactor, and so to favour the cause and quarrel of him whom he was so singularly bounden unto.

A new Commission sent down from Rome against the Archbishop.

D. Thurlby, D. Boner, Commissioners.

The old benefits and familiarity between the Archb. and D. Thurlby.

With the said Dr. Thurlby Bishop of Ely, was also assigned in the same Commission Dr. Boner Bishop of London, which two coming to Oxford upon St. Valentines day, as the Popes Delegates, with a new Commission from Rome, by the vertue thereof commanded the Archbishop aforesaid to come before them, in the Quire of Christs-Church, before the high Altar, where they sitting (according to their manner) in their Pontificalibus, first began as the fashion is, to read their Commission: wherein was contained, how that in the Court of Rome

A new setting of the Pope's delegates in Christs-Church, against the Archb. of Canterbury.

all things being indifferently examined, both the Articles laid to his charge, with the anſwers made unto them, and Witneſſes examined on both parts, and Council heard as well on the King and Queens behalf, his Accuſers, as on the behalf of Thomas Cranmer, the party guilty, ſo that he wanted nothing appertaining to his neceſſary defence, &c. Which foreſaid Commiſſion, as it was in reading: Oh Lord, ſaid the Archbiſhop, what Lies be theſe, that I being continually in Priſon, and never could be ſuffered to have counſel or advocate at home, ſhould produce witneſs and appoint my counſel at Rome? God muſt needs puniſh this open and ſhameleſs lying. They read on the Commiſſion which came from the Pope, Plenitudine poteſtatis, ſupplying all manner of defects in Law or Proceſs, committed in dealing with the Archbiſhop, and giving them full authority to proceed to deprivation and degradation of them, and ſo upon Excommunication to deliver him up to the ſecular Power, Omni appellatione remota.

The Popes Commiſſion grounded upon Lies.

When the Commiſſion was read thus, they proceeding thereupon to his degradation, firſt cloathed and diſguiſed him, putting on him a Surpleſs, and then an Albe; after that the veſtment of a Subdeacon, and every other furniture, as a Prieſt ready to Maſs.

The order of the Archbiſhops degradation.

When they had apparelled him ſo far; What, ſaid he, I think I ſhall ſay Maſs: Yea, ſaid Coſins one of Boners Chaplains, my Lord, I truſt to ſee you ſay Maſs for all this. Do you ſo, quoth he? that ſhall you never ſee, nor will I ever do it.

Then they inveſted him in all manner of robes of a Biſhop and Archbiſhop, as he is at his Inſtalling, ſaving that as every thing then is moſt rich and coſtly, ſo every thing in this of Canvas and old Clouts, with a Mitre and a Pall of the ſame ſute done upon him in mockery, and then the Croſier-ſtaff was put in his hand.

This done after the Popes Pontifical form and manner, Boner, who by the ſpace of many years had born, as it ſeemed, no great good will towards him, and now rejoyced to ſee this day wherein he might triumph over him, and take his pleaſure at full, began to ſtretch out his eloquence, making his Oration to the Aſſembly after this manner of ſort.

B. Boners eloquent Oration againſt the Archbiſhop Cranmer.

This is the Man that hath ever deſpiſed the Popes Holineſs, and now is to be judged by him. This is the Man that hath pulled down ſo many Churches, and now is come to be judged in a Church. This is the Man that contemned the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, and now is come to be condemned before that bleſſed Sacrament hanging over the Altar. This is the Man that like Lucifer ſate in the place of Chriſt upon an Altar to judge other, and now is come before an Altar to be judged himſelf.

Boner taken with an untruth.

Whereunto the Archbiſhop interrupting him ſaid, that in that he belied him, as he did in many other things: For that which he would now ſeem to charge him withal, was his own fault, if it was any, and none of his. For the thing you mean, was in Pauls-Church (ſaid he) where I came to ſit in Commiſſion; and there was a Scaffold prepared for me and others, by you and your Officers, and whether there were any Altar under it or not, I could not perceive it, nor once ſuſpected it, wherefore you do wittingly evil to charge me with it.

Unmannerlineſs of B. Boner to his Brother in time of adverſity.

But Boner went on ſtill in his Rhetorical repetition, lying and railing againſt the Archbiſhop, beginning every ſentence with, This is the Man, this is the Man, till at length there was never a man but was weary of his unmannerly uſage of him in that time and place: Inſomuch that the Biſhop of Ely aforeſaid divers times pulled him by the ſleeve to make an end; and ſaid to him afterward when they went to Dinner, that he had broken promiſe with him: for he had intreated him earneſtly to uſe him with reverence.

After all this done and finiſhed, they began then to buſtle toward his degrading, and firſt to take from him his Croſier-ſtaff out of his hands, which he held faſt and refuſed to deliver, and withal, imitating the example of Martin Luther, pulled an Appeal out of his left Sleeve under the wriſt, which he there and then delivered unto them, ſaying, I appeal to the next General Council; and herein I have comprehended my cauſe and form of it, which I deſire may be admitted; and prayed divers of the ſtanders by, by name to be witneſſes, and eſpecially Mr. Curtop, to whom he ſpake twice, &c.

Archb. Cranmer appealeth from the Pope to a General Council.

The Copy of which his appellation, becauſe it was not printed before, I thought here to exhibit, ad rei memoriam, as in form here followeth.

Anno 1556.

The tenor of the Appeal of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury from the Pope, to the next General Council.

IN the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt.

Challenge or appeal of the Archb. from the Pope to a General Council.

Firſt, my plain Proteſtation made, that I intend to ſpeak nothing againſt one holy Catholick and Apoſtolical Church, or the Authority thereof (the which Authority I have in great reverence, and to whom my mind is in all things to obey) and if any thing peradventure, either by ſlipperneſs of Tongue, or by indignation of abuſes, or elſe by the provocation of mine Adverſaries be ſpoken or done otherwiſe than well, or not with ſuch reverence as becometh me, I am moſt ready to amend it.

The Pope not unſinnable.

Although the Biſhop of Rome (whom they call Pope) beareth the room of Chriſt in Earth, and hath authority of God, yet by that power or authority he is not become unſinnable, neither hath he received that power to deſtroy, but to edifie the Congregation. Therefore if he ſhall command any thing that is not right to be done, he ought to take it patiently and in good part, in caſe he be not therein obeyed. And he muſt not be obeyed, if he command any thing againſt the Precepts of God: no, rather he may lawfully be reſiſted, even as Paul withſtood Peter. And if he being aided by help of Princes, deceived perchance by falſe ſuggeſtion, or with evil counſel, cannot be reſiſted, but the remedies of withſtanding him be taken away, there is nevertheleſs one remedy of appealing (which no Prince can take away) uttered by the very Law of Nature: forſomuch as it is a certain defence, which is meet for every body by the Law of God, of Nature, and of Man.

The Pope hath no power to deſtruction, but to edifie.

Remedy of appealing ſtandeth with the Law of God and Nature.

And whereas the Laws do permit a man to appeal, not only from the griefs and injuries done, but alſo from ſuch as ſhall be done hereafter, or threatned to be done; inſomuch that the inferiour cannot make Laws of not appealing to a ſuperiour Power; and ſince it is openly enough confeſſed, that a holy General Council, lawfully gathered together in the Holy Ghoſt, and repreſenting the holy Catholick Church, is above the Pope, eſpecially in matters concerning Faith; that he cannot make Decrees that men ſhall not appeal from him to a General Council: therefore I Thomas Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, or in time paſt Ruler of the Metropolitical Church of Canterbury, Doctor in Divinity, do ſay and publiſh before you the publick Notary, and witneſſes here preſent, with mind and intent to challenge and appeal from the perſons and griefs underneath written, and to proffer my ſelf in place and time convenient and meet, to prove the Articles that follow. And I openly confeſs, that I would lawfully have publiſhed them before this day, if I might have had either liberty to come abroad my ſelf, or licence of a Notary and Witneſſes. But further than I am able to do, I know well is not required of the Laws.

The Inferior cannot forbid to appeal to all the Superiour. A General Council is ſuperiour to the Pope.

The 1. cauſe why he doth appeal.

1. Firſt, I ſay and publiſh, that James by the mercy of God, Prieſt, called Cardinal of the Pit, and of the title of our Lady in the way of the Church of Rome, Judge and Commiſſary ſpecially deputed of our moſt holy Lord the Pope (as he affirmed) cauſed me to be cited to Rome, there to appear fourſcore days after the Citation ſerved on me, to make anſwer to certain Articles touching the peril of my ſtate and life: And whereas I was kept in Priſon with moſt ſtrait Ward, ſo that I could in no wiſe be ſuffered to go to Rome, nor to come out of Priſon, (and in ſo grievous cauſes concerning ſtate and life, no man is bound to ſend a Proctor,) and though I would never ſo fain ſend my Proctor, yet by reaſon of poverty I am not able (for all that ever I had, wherewith I ſhould bear my Proctors coſts and charges, is quite taken from me) nevertheleſs the moſt reverend Cardinal aforeſaid doth ſore threaten me, that whether I ſhall appear or not, he will nevertheleſs yet proceed in judgment againſt me. Wherein I feel my ſelf ſo grieved, that nothing can be imagined more miſchievous or further from reaſon.

The Archb. cited to appear at Rome, where he was faſt in Priſon that he could not come.

Note with what juſtice and ſincerity this Catholick Church doth proceed.

2. Se-

Anno 1556.

The 2. cause. The Archb. denied to have Counsel of the Law.

2 Secondly, the reverend Father James Brooks, by the mercy of God Bishop of Gloucester, Judge and under-deputy (as he affirmeth) of the most reverend Cardinal, caused me to be cited at Oxford (where I was then kept in prison) to answer to certain Articles, concerning the danger of my state and life. And when I being unlearned and ignorant in the Laws, desired Counsel of the learned in the Law, that thing was most unrighteously denied me, contrary to the equity of all Laws both of God and Man. Wherein again I feel me most wrongfully grieved.

The 3. cause.

3 And when I refused the said Bishop of Gloucester to be my Judge, for most just causes, which I then declared, he nevertheless went on still, and made process against me, contrary to the rule of the laws of appealing, which say; A Judge that is refused ought not to proceed in the cause, but to leave off. And when he had required of me answers to certain Articles, I refused to make him any answer: I said I would yet gladly make answer to the most renowned Kings and Queens deputys or attorneys then present, with this condition notwithstanding, that mine answer should be extrajudicial, and that was permitted me. And with this my protestation made and admitted, I made answer; but mine answer was sudden and unprovided for: and therefore I desired to have a copy of mine answers, that I might put to, take away, change and amend them; and this was also permitted me. Nevertheless, contrary to his promise made unto me, no respect had to my protestation, nor licence given to amend mine answer, the said reverend Father Bishop of Gloucester (as I hear) commanded mine answers to be inacted contrary to the equity of the Law. In which thing again I feel me much grieved.

The Papists proceed contrary to Law.

The Papists contrary to their promise.

The cause

Causes moving the Archb. why he could not admit the Popes Authority.

The Popes Authority cannot be admitted in this Realm without perjury.

4 Furthermore, I could not for many causes admit the Bishop of Romes usurped Authority in this Realm; nor consent to it: For my Solemn Oath letting me, which I made in the time of King Henry the eighth, of most famous memory, according to the Laws of England: Secondly, because I knew the Authority of the Bishop of Rome which he Usurpeth, to be against the Crown, Customs, and Laws of this Realm of England, in somuch, that neither the King can be Crowned in this Realm, without the most grievous crime of perjury, nor may Bishops enjoy their Bishopricks, nor judgments to be used according to the laws and customs of this Realm, except by the Bp. of Romes Authority, be accursed both the King and Queen; the Judges, Writers, and Executors of the Laws and Customs, with all that consent to them. Finally, the whole Realm shall be accursed.

The 5. cause, Inconvenience to this Realm in receiving the Popes Authority.

5 Moreover, that hainous and usurped Authority of the Bishop of Rome, through reservations of the Bishopricks, Provisions, Annuates, Dispensations, Pardons, Appellations, Buls, and other cursed merchandise of Rome, was wont exceedingly to spoil and consume the riches and substance of this Realm, all which things should follow again by recognising and receiving of that usurped Authority unto the unmeasurable loss of this Realm.

The 6. cause.

6 Finally, it is most evident by that usurped Authority, not onely the Crown of England to be under yoke, the Laws and Customs of this Realm to be thrown down and troden under foot, but also the most Holy Decrees of Councils, together with the precepts both of the Gospel and of God.

When in times past the Sun of righteousnes being risen in the World, Christian Religion by the preaching of the Apostles began to be spread very farr abroad and to flourish, insomuch that their sound went out into all the World; innumerable People, which walked in darkness, saw a great light, Gods glory every where published did flourish, the onely care and care of the Ministers of the Church was purely and sincerely to preach Christ; the People to imbrace and follow Christs Doctrine. Then the Church of Rome, as it were Lady of the World, both was, and also was counted worthily the mother of other Churches, for as much as then she first begat to Christ, nourished with the food of pure Doctrine, did help them with their riches, succoured the oppressed, and was a sanctuary for the miserable, she rejoyced with them that rejoyced, and wept with them that wept. Then by the examples of the Bishops of Rome, riches were despised, worldly glory and pomp was troden under foot, pleasures and riot nothing regarded. Then this frail and uncertain life, being full all miseries, was laughed to scorn, whiles through the example of Romish Martyrs, men did every where press forward to the life to come. But afterward when the ungraciousnes of damnable ambition, never satisfied avarice, and the horrible enormity of vices had corrupted and taken the See of Rome; there followed every where almost the deformities of all Churches, growing out of kind into the manners of the Church their Mother, leaving their former innocency and purity, and slipping into foul and hainous usages.

The Church of Rome how and where it began to alter.

Deformities of the Church of Rome, infecting all other Churches.

For the aforesaid and many other griefs and abuses (which I intend to prove, and do proffer my self in time convenient to prove hereafter) since reformation of the above mentioned abuses is not to be looked for of the Bishop of Rome, neither can I hope by reason of his wicked abuses and Usurped Authority, to have him an equal judge in his own cause: therefore I do challenge and appeal in these writings from the Pope, having no good Counsel, and from the above named pretenses, commissions, and judges, from their citations, processes, and from all other things that have or shall follow thereupon, and from every one of them, and from all their sentences, censures, pains, and punishments of cursing, suspension, and interdicting, and from all others whatsoever their denouncings and declarations (as they pretend) of Schism, of Heresie, Adultery, deprivation, degrading by them or by any of them, in any manner wise attempted, done and set forward to be attempted, to be done, and to be set forward hereafter (saving always their honours and reverences) as unequal and unrighteous, most tyrannical and violent, and from every grief to come, which shall happen to me, as well for my self as for all and every one that cleaveth to me, or will hereafter be on my side, unto a free general Council, that shall hereafter lawfully be, and in a sure place, to the which place I or a Proctor deputed by me, may freely and with safety come, and to him or them, to whom a man may by the Law, priviledge, custom, or otherwise challenge and appeal,

The Bishop of Rome no equal judge in his own cause.

Appellation from the Pope to a general Council.

And I desire the first, the second, and third time, instantly, more instantly, and most instantly, that I may have * messengers, if there be any man that will and can give me them. And I make open promise of prosecuting this mine appellation, by the way of disannulling, abuse, inequality, and unrighteousnes, or otherwise as I shall be better able: choice and liberty reserved to me, to put to, diminish, change, correct, and interpret my sayings, and to reform all things after a better fashion, saving always to me every other benefit of the law, and to them that either be, or will be on my part.

* Letters of protection and defence.

And touching my Doctrine of the Sacrament, and other my Doctrine, of what kind soever it be, I protest that it was never my mind to write, speak, or understand any thing contrary to the most Holy Word of God, or else against the Holy Catholick Church of Christ, but purely and simply to imitate and teach those things onely, which I had learned of the sacred Scripture, and of the Holy Catholick Church of Christ from the beginning, and also according to the exposition of the most holy and learned Fathers and Martyrs of the Church.

Defence of his Doctrine.

And if any thing hath peradventure chanced otherwise then I thought; I may erre, but Heretick I cannot be, for as much as I am ready in all things to follow the judgment of the most sacred Word of God, and of the Holy Catholick Church, desiring none other thing, then meekly and gently to be taught, if any where (which God forbid) I have swerved from the truth.

The Archb. no Heretick, and why.

He protesteth himself to be Catholick.

And I protest and openly confess, that in all my Doctrine and preaching, both of the Sacrament, and of other my Doctrine whatsoever it be, not onely I mean and judge those things, as the Catholick Church, and the most holy Fathers of old with one accord have meant and judged, but also I would gladly use the same words that they used, and not use any other words, but to set my hand to all and singular their speeches, phrases, ways and forms of speech, which they do use in their Treatises upon the Sacrament, and to keep still their interpretation. But in this thing I only am accused for an Heretick, because I allow not the Doctrine lately brought in of the Sacrament, and because I consent not to words not accustomed in Scripture, and unknown to the ancient Fathers,

New terms of the Sacrament brought in by the Pope unknown to the Scripture and old Doctors.

but newly invented and brought in by men, and belonging to the deſtruction of Souls, and overthrowing of the pure and old Religion. Yeven,&c.

This Appeal being put up to the Biſhop of Ely, he ſaid, My Lord, our Commiſſion is to proceed againſt you, Omni appellatione remota, and therefore we cannot admit it.

Talk between D. Tow-ly and the Archb. about the Appeal.

Why (quoth he) then you do me the more wrong: for my caſe is not as every private mans caſe. The matter is between the Pope and me immediate, and none otherwiſe: and I think no man ought to be a Judge in his own cauſe.

Well, quoth Ely, if it may be admitted it ſhall, and ſo received it of him. And then began he to perſwade earneſtly with the Archbiſhop to conſider his ſtate, and to weigh it well, while there was time to do him good, promiſing to become a ſuter to the King and Queen for him; and ſo proteſted his great love and friendſhip that had been between them, heartily weeping, ſo that for a time he could not go on with his tale. After going forward, he earneſtly affirmed, that if it had not been the King and Queens commandment, whom he could not deny, elſe no worldly commodity ſhould have made him to have done it, concluding that to be one of the ſorrowfulleſt things that ever happened unto him. The Archbiſhop gently ſeeming to comfort him, ſaid, he was very well content withal: and ſo proceeded they to his degradation: the perfect form whereof, with all the rites and ceremonies thereto appertaining, taken out of the Popes Pontifical, becauſe it is already deſcribed at full in our firſt Book of Monuments, I ſhall refer the Reader to the ſame.

Thirlby weepeth for the Archbiſhop.

Here then to be ſhort, when they came to take off his Pall (which is a ſolemn veſture of an Archbiſhop) then ſaid he, Which of you hath a Pall, to take of my Pall? Which imported as much as they being his Inferiours, could not degrade him. Whereunto one of them ſaid, in that they were but Biſhops, they were his Inferiours, and not competent Judges: but being the Popes Delegates, they might take his Pall, and ſo they did, and ſo proceeding took every thing in order from him, as it was put on. Then a Barber clipped his Hair round about, and the Biſhop ſcraped the tops of his Fingers where he had been anointed, wherein Biſhop Boner behaved himſelf, as roughly and unmannerly, as the other Biſhop was to him ſoft and gentle. Whilſt they were thus doing, All this (quoth the Archbiſhop) needed not: I had my ſelf done with this gear long ago. Laſt of all they ſtripped him out of his Gown into his Jacket, and put upon him a poor Yeoman Beadles Gown, full bare and nearly worn, and as evil favouredly made, as one might lightly ſee, and a Towns-mans Cap on his head, and ſo delivered him to the ſecular Power.

Lord Boner unlordeth the Archb. It is happy this Biſhop had ſo much manners yet to call him Gentleman.

After this pageant of Degradation, and all was finiſhed, then ſpake Lord Boner, ſaying to him, Now are you no Lord any more: and ſo whenſoever he ſpake to the People of him (as he was continually barking againſt him) ever he uſed this term, This Gentleman here,&c.

And thus with great compaſſion and pity of every man in this evil favoured Gown was he carried to Priſon. Whom there followed a Gentleman of Glouceſterſhire with the Archbiſhops own Gown, who ſtanding by, and being thought to be toward one of the Biſhops, had it delivered unto him; who by the way talking with him, ſaid, the Biſhop of Ely proteſted his friendſhip with tears. Yet (ſaid he) he might have uſed a great deal more friendſhip towards me, and never have been the worſe thought on, for I have well deſerved it: and going into the Priſon up with him, asked him if he would drink. Who anſwered him, ſaying, if he had a piece of ſalt Fiſh, that he had better will to eat: for he had been that day ſomewhat troubled with this matter, and had eaten little, but now that it is paſt, my heart (ſaid he) is well quieted. Whereupon the Gentleman ſaid, he would give him Mony with all his heart, for he was able to do it. But he being one toward the Law, and fearing Mr. Farmers caſe, durſt therefore give him nothing, but gave Mony to the Bayliffs that ſtood by, and ſaid, that if they were good men, they would beſtow it on him (for my Lord of Canterbury had not one peny in his Purſe to help him) and ſo left him, my Lord bidding him earneſtly farewel, commending himſelf to his Prayers and all his Friends. That night this Gentleman was ſtaid by Boner and Ely, for giving him this Mony: and but for the help of Friends, he had been ſent up to the Council. Such was the cruelty and iniquity of the time, that men could not do good without puniſhment.

Curteſie ſhewed to the Archb. by a Gentleman. This Farmer had loſt all his Lands for receiving a Prieſt in the Tower in K. Henries time.

Anno 1556.

The Gentleman in danger for relieving the Archbiſhop.

Here followeth the Recantation of the Archbiſhop, with his repentance of the ſame.

IN this mean time, while the Archbiſhop was thus remaining in durance (whom they had kept now in Priſon almoſt the ſpace of three years) the Doctors and Divines of Oxford buſied themſelves all that ever they could about M. Cranmer, to have him recant, aſſaying by all crafty practices and allurements they might deviſe how to bring their purpoſe to paſs. And to the intent they might win him eaſily, they had him to the Deans houſe of Chriſts-Church in the ſaid Univerſity, where he lacked no delicate fare, played at the Bowls, had his pleaſure for walking, and all other things that might bring him from Chriſt. Over and beſides all this, ſecretly and ſlightly they ſubborned certain men, which when they could not expugn him by Arguments and Diſputation, ſhould by intreaty and fair promiſes, or any other means allure him to recantation; perceiving otherwiſe what a great wound they ſhould receive, if the Archbiſhop had ſtood ſtedfaſt in his ſentence: and again on the other ſide, how great profit they ſhould get, if he as the principal Standard-bearer, ſhould be overthrown. By reaſon whereof the wily Papiſts flocked about him, with threatning, flattering, intreating and promiſing, and all other means; ſpecially Henry Sydall, and Frier John a Spaniard, de Villa Garcina, to the end to drive him, to the uttermoſt of their poſſibility, from his former ſentence to recantation.

Perſwaſions of the Papiſts to the Archbiſhop to recant.

Firſt, they ſet forth how acceptable it would be both to the King and Queen, and eſpecially how gainful to him, and for his Souls health the ſame ſhould be. They added moreover, how the Council and the Noble men bare him good will. They put him in hope, that he ſhould not only have his life, but alſo be reſtored to his ancient Dignity, ſaying, it was but a ſmall matter, and ſo eaſie that they required him to do, only that he would ſubſcribe to a few words with his own hand; which if he did, there ſhould be nothing in the Realm that the Queen would not eaſily grant him, whether he would have riches or dignity, or elſe if he had rather live a private life in quiet reſt, in whatſoever place he liſted, without all publick Miniſtry, only that he would ſet his name in two words to a little leaf of paper; but if he refuſed, there was no hope of health and pardon: for the Queen was ſo purpoſed, that ſhe would have Cranmer a Catholick, or elſe no Cranmer at all. Therefore he ſhould chuſe whether he thought it better to end his life ſhortly in the flames and fire-brands now ready to be kindled, than with much honour to prolong his life, until the courſe of nature did call him: for there was no middle way.

Moreover, they exhorted him that he would look to his wealth, his eſtimation and quietneſs, ſaying, that he was not ſo old, but that many years yet remained in this his ſo luſty Age; and if he would not do it in reſpect of the Queen, yet he ſhould do it for reſpect of his life, and not ſuffer that other men ſhould be more careful for his health, than he was himſelf: ſaying, that this was agreeable to his notable learning and vertues; which being adjoyned with his life would be profitable both to himſelf and to many other; but being extinct by death, ſhould be fruitful to no man: that he ſhould take good heed that he went not too far; yet there was time enough to reſtore all things ſafe, and nothing wanted, if he wanted not to himſelf. Therefore they would him to lay hold upon the occaſion of his health while it was offered, leſt if he would now refuſe it while it was offered, he might hereafter ſeek it when he could not have it.

Finally, If the deſire of life did nothing move him, yet he ſhould remember that to die is grievous in all Ages, and eſpecially in theſe his years and flower of dignity it were more grievous: but to die in the fire and ſuch torments, is moſt grievous of all. With theſe and like provocations theſe fair flatterers ceaſed not to ſollicit and urge him, uſing all means they could to draw him to their ſide; whoſe force his Manly conſtancy did a great while reſiſt. But at laſt when they made no end of calling and crying upon him, the Archbiſhop being overcome, whether through their importunity, or by his own imbecillity, or of what mind I cannot tell, at length gave his hand.

Cauſes moving the Archbiſhop to give with time.

It might be ſuppoſed that it was done for the hope of life, and better days to come. But as we may ſince perceive by a Letter of his ſent to a Lawyer, the moſt cauſe why he deſired his time to be delayed, was that he would make an end of Marcus Antonius, which he had already begun: but howſoever it was, plain it was, to be againſt his Conſcience. The form of which recantation made by the Friers and Doctors, whereto he ſubſcribed, was this.

The Copy and words of Cranmers Recantation.

The Copy of Cranmers recantation ſparſed abroad by the Papiſts.

I Thomas Cranmer, late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, do renounce, abhor, and deteſt all manner of Hereſies and Errors of Luther and Zuinglius, and all other teachings which be contrary to ſound and true Doctrine. And I believe moſt conſtantly in my heart, and with my mouth I confeſs one holy and Catholick Church viſible, without the which there is no ſalvation; and thereof I acknowledge the Biſhop of Rome to be ſupream Head in Earth, whom I acknowledge to be the higheſt Biſhop and Pope, and Chriſts Vicar, unto whom all Chriſtian People ought to be ſubject.

And as concerning the Sacraments, I believe and worſhip in the Sacrament of the Altar the very Body and Blood of Chriſt, being contained moſt truly under the forms of Bread and Wine; the Bread through the mighty power of God being turned into the Body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and the Wine into his Blood.

And in the other ſix Sacraments alſo (like as in this) I believe and hold as the Univerſal Church holdeth, and the Church of Rome judgeth and determineth.

Furthermore, I believe that there is a place of Purgatory, where Souls departed be puniſhed for a time, for whom the Church doth godly and wholſomly pray, like as it doth honour Saints and make prayers to them.

Finally, in all things I profeſs, that I do not otherwiſe believe, than the Catholick Church and Church of Rome holdeth and teacheth. I am ſorry that ever I held or thought otherwiſe. And I beſeech Almighty God, that of his mercy he will vouchſafe to forgive me, whatſoever I have offended againſt God or his Church, and alſo I deſire and beſeech all Chriſtian People to pray for me.

And all ſuch as have been deceived either by mine Example or Doctrine, I require them by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, that they will return to the unity of the Church, that we may be all of one mind, without ſchiſm or diviſion.

And to conclude, as I ſubmit my ſelf to the Catholick Church of Chriſt, and to the ſupream Head thereof, ſo I ſubmit my ſelf unto the moſt excellent Majeſties of Philip and Mary, King and Queen of this Realm of England, &c. and to all other their Laws and Ordinances, being ready always as a faithful Subject ever to obey them. And God is my witneſs, that I have not done this for favour or fear of any perſon, but willingly and of mine own mind, as well to the diſcharge of mine own Conſcience, as to the inſtruction of other.

This recantation of the Archbiſhop was not ſo ſoon conceived, but the Doctors and Prelates without delay cauſed the ſame to be imprinted, and ſet abroad in all mens hands. Whereunto for better credit, firſt was added the name of Thomas Cranmer, with a ſolemn ſubſcription, then followed the witneſſes of this recantation, Henry Sydal, and Frier John de villa Garcina. All this while Cranmer was in certain aſſurance of his life, although the ſame was faithfully promiſed to him by the Doctors? but after that they had their purpoſe, the reſt they committed to all adventure, as became men of that Religion to do. The Queen, having now gotten a time to revenge her old grief, received his recantation very gladly: but of her purpoſe to put him to death ſhe would nothing relent.

The Queens heart ſet againſt Cranmer.

Now was Cranmers cauſe in a miſerable taking, who neither inwardly had any quietneſs in his own conſcience, nor yet outwardly any help in his Adverſaries.

Cranmer in a miſerable caſe.

Beſides this, on the one ſide was praiſe, on the other ſide ſcorn, on both ſides danger, ſo that neither he could die honeſtly, nor yet unhoneſtly live. And whereas he ſought profit, he fell into double diſprofit, that neither with good men he could avoid ſecret ſhame, nor yet with evil men the note of diſſimulation.

The Queen conferreth with Dr. Cole about Cranmers burning.

In the mean time, while theſe things were adoing (as I ſaid) in the Priſon amongſt the Doctors, the Queen taking ſecret councel, how to diſpatch Cranmer out of the way (who as yet knew nothing of her ſecret hate, and looked for nothing leſs then death) appointed Dr. Cole, and ſecretly gave him in commandment, that againſt the 21. of March, he ſhould prepare a Funeral Sermon for Cranmers burning, and ſo inſtructing him orderly and diligently of her will and pleaſure in that behalf, ſendeth him away.

L. Williams of Tame, L. Shandoyt, Sir Thomas Bridger, Sir John Browne, appointed to be at Cranmers Execution.

Soon after, the Lord Williams of Tame, and the Lord Shandoys, Sir Thomas Bridges, and Sir John Brown were ſent for, with other worſhipful men and Juſtices, commanded in the Queens name to be at Oxford at the ſame day, with their Servants and Retinue, leſt Cranmers death ſhould raiſe there any tumult.

Cole the Doctor having this Leſſon given him before, and charged by her commandment, returned to Oxford, ready to play his part; who as the day of execution drew near, even the day before, came into the Priſon to Cranmer; to try whether he abode in the Catholick Faith wherein before he had left him. To whom, when Cranmer had anſwered, that by Gods grace he would daily be more confirmed in the Catholick Faith; Cole departing for that time, the next day following repaired to the Arch-Biſhop again, giving no ſignification as yet of his death that was prepared: And therefore in the morning, which was the 21. day of March appointed for Cranmers execution, the ſaid Cole, coming to him, asked if he had any mony. To whom when he anſwered that he had none, he delivered him fifteen Crowns to give to the poor to whom he would: and ſo exhorting him ſo much as he could to conſtancy in Faith, departed thence about his buſineſs, as to his Sermon appertained.

Cranmer writeth, and ſubſcribeth the Articles with his own hand.

By this partly, and other like arguments, the Archbiſhop began more and more to ſurmiſe what they went about. Then becauſe the day was not farr paſt, and the Lords and Knights that were looked for were not yet come, there came to him the Spaniſh Frier, witneſs of his recantation, bringing a Paper with Articles, which Cranmer ſhould openly profeſs in his recantation before the People, earneſtly deſiring him that he would write the ſaid inſtrument with the Articles with his own hand, and ſign it with his name: which when he had done, the ſaid Frier deſired that he would write another Copy thereof which ſhould remain with him, and that he did alſo. But yet the Archbiſhop being not ignorant whereunto their ſecret devices tended, and thinking that the time was at hand in which he could no longer diſſemble the profeſſion of his Faith with Chriſts People, he put ſecretly in his boſom his Prayer with his Exhortation written in another Paper, which he minded to recite to the People, before he ſhould make the laſt profeſſion of his Faith, fearing leſt if they had heard the Confeſſion of his Faith firſt, they would not afterward have ſuffered him to exhort the People.

Soon after about nine of the Clock, the Lord Williams, Sir Tho. Bridges, Sir John Browne, and the other Juſtices, with certain other Noblemen, that were ſent of the Queens Council, came to Oxford with a great train of waiting men. Alſo of the other multitude on every ſide (as is wont in ſuch a matter) was made a great concourſe, and greater expectation, For firſt of all, they that were of the Popes ſide were in great hope that day to hear ſomething of Cranmer that ſhould ſtabliſh the vanity of their Opinion: the other part, which were endued with a better mind, could not yet doubt, that he which by continual ſtudy and labour for ſo many years, had ſet forth the Doctrine of the Goſpel, either would or could now in the laſt Act of his life forſake his part. Briefly, as every mans will inclined, either to this this part or to that, ſo according to the diverſity of their deſires, every man wiſhed and hoped for. And yet becauſe in an uncertain thing the certainty could be known of none what would be the end; all their minds were hanging between hope and doubt. So that the greater the expectation was in ſo doubtful a matter, the more was the multitude, that was gathered thither to hear and behold.

Dr Cranmer brought to D. Coles Sermon.

In this ſo great frequency and expectation, Cranmer at the length cometh from Bocardo Priſon unto St. Maries Church, becauſe it was a foul and rainy day, the chief Church in the Univerſity, in this order. The Mayor went before, next him the Aldermen in their place and degree; after them was Cranmer brought between two Friers, which mumbling to and fro certain Pſalms in the ſtreets, anſwered one another untill they came to the Church door, and there they began the Song of Simeon, Nunc dimittis, and entring into the Church, the Pſalm-ſaying Friers brought him to his ſtanding, and there left him. There was a ſtage ſet over againſt the Pulpit, of a mean height from the ground, where Cranmer had his ſtanding, waiting until Cole made him ready to his Sermon.

Cranmer ſet up upon a Stage.

The lamentable caſe and ſight of that man gave a ſorrowful Spectacle to all Chriſtian eyes that beheld him. He that late was Archbiſhop, Metropolitan, and Primate of England, and the Kings privy Councellor, being now in a bare and ragged gown, and ill favouredly cloathed, with an old ſquare Cap, expoſed to the contempt of all men, did admoniſh men not only of his own calamity, but alſo of their ſtate and fortune. For who would not pity his caſe, and bewail his fortune, and might not fear his own chance, to ſee ſuch a Prelate, ſo grave a Councellor, and of ſo long continued honour after ſo many dignities, in his old years to be deprived of his eſtate, adjudged to die, and in ſo painful a death to end his life, and now preſently from ſuch freſh Ornaments, to deſcend to ſuch vile and ragged apparel?

In this habit, when he had ſtood a good ſpace upon the Stage, turning to a pillar neer adjoyning thereunto, he lifted up his hands to Heaven, and prayed unto God once or twice, till at the length Dr. Cole coming into the Pulpit, and beginning his Sermon, entered firſt into mention of Tobias and Zachary. Whom after he had praiſed in the beginning of his Sermon for their perſeverance in the true worſhiping of God, he then divided his whole Sermon into three parts (according to the ſolemn cuſtom of the Schools) intending to ſpeak firſt of the mercy of God: ſecondly, of his juſtice to be ſhewed: and laſt of all, how the Princes ſecrets are not to be opened. And proceeding a little from the beginning, he took occaſion by and by to turn his tale to Cranmer, and with many hot words reproved him, that once he being indued with the ſavour and feeling of wholeſom and Catholick Doctrine, fell into the contrary Opinion of pernicious Error; which he had not only defended by writings, and all his Power, but alſo allured other men to do the like, with great liberality of gifts, as it were appointing rewards for Error; and after he had allured them, by all means did cheriſh them.

Dr. Coles Sermon divided into three parts

The ſum and effect of D. Coles Sermon at Oxford.

It were too long to repeat all things, that in long order were pronounced. The ſum of his tripartite declamation was that he ſaid Gods mercy was ſo tempered with his juſtice, that he did not altogether require puniſhment according to the merits of offenders, nor, yet ſometimes ſuffered the ſame altogether to go unpuniſhed yea though they had repented. As in David, who when he was bidden chooſe of three kinds of puniſhment which he would, and he had choſen peſtilence for three days; the Lord forgave him half the time, but did not releaſe all: And that the ſame thing came to paſs in him alſo, to whom although pardon and reconciliation was due according to the Canons, ſeeing he repented him of his Errors, yet there were cauſes why the Queen and the Council at this time judged him to death: of which, leſt he ſhould marvel too much, he ſhould hear ſome.

If Cole gave this judgment upon Cranmer when he had repented, what judgment is then to be given of Cole, which always perdured in Error, and never yet repented.

Firſt, that being a Traitor, he had diſſolved the lawful matrimony between the King her Father and Mother; beſides the driving out of the Popes Authority, while he was Metropolitan.

Secondly, that he had been an Heretick, from whom as from an Author and only fountain all heretical Doctrine and ſchiſmatical Opinions, that ſo many years have prevailed in England, did firſt riſe and ſpring; of which he had not been a ſecret favourer only, but alſo a moſt earneſt defender even to the end of his life, ſowing them abroad by writings and arguments, privately and openly, not without great ruine and decay of the Catholick Church.

Anno 1556.

If all Heretiks in England ſhould be burned, where ſhould Dr. Cole have been ere now?

And further, it ſeemed meet, according to the Law of equality, that as the death of the Duke of Northumberland of late, made even with Tho. Moor Chancellor that died for the Church, ſo there ſhould be one that ſhould make even with Fiſher of Rocheſter; and becauſe that Ridley, Hooper, Ferrar, were not able to make even with that man, it ſeemed that Cranmer ſhould be joyned to them to fill up their part of equality.

Lex non æqualitatis ſed iniquitatis.

Beſides theſe there were other juſt and weighty cauſes, which ſeemed to the Queen and Council, which was not meet at that time to be opened to the Common People.

After this, turning his Tale to the hearers, he bade all men beware by this mans example, that among men nothing is ſo high, that can promiſe it ſelf ſafety on the Earth, and that Gods vengeance is equally ſtretched againſt all men and ſpareth none: therefore they ſhould beware and learn to fear their Prince. And ſeeing the Queens Majeſty would not ſpare ſo notable a man as this, much leſs in the like cauſe ſhee would ſpare other men, that no man ſhould think to make thereby any defence of his Error, either in riches or any kind of Authority. They had now an example to teach them all, by whoſe calamity every man might conſider his own fortune; who from the top of dignity, none being more honourable than he in the whole Realm, and next the King, was fallen into ſo great miſery, as they might now ſee, being a man of ſo high degree, ſometime one of the chiefeſt Prelates in the Church, and an Archbiſhop, the chief of the Council, the ſecond perſon in the Realm of long time, a man thought in greateſt aſſurance, having a King on his ſide; notwithſtanding all his Authority and defence, to be debaſed from high eſtate to a low degree, of a Councellor to become a Caitiff, and to be ſet in ſo wretched a ſtate, that the pooreſt wretch would not change condition with him; briefly ſo heaped with miſery on all ſides, that neither was leſt in him any hope of better fortune, nor place for worſe.

No ſtate in this earth ſo high nor ſo ſure, but it may fall.

Dr. Cole encourageth the Archbiſhop to take his death patiently.

The latter part of his Sermon he converted to the Archbiſhop, whom he comforted and encouraged to take his death well, by many places of Scripture, as with theſe and ſuch like; bidding him not to miſtruſt, but he ſhould incontinently receive that the Thief did, to whom Chriſt ſaid, Hodie mecum eris in Paradiſo, That is, This day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe: And out of St. Paul he armed him againſt the terror of the fire, by this, Dominus fidelis eſt, non ſinet vos tentari ultra quam ferre poteſtis, That is, The Lord is faithful, which will not ſuffer you to be tempted above your ſtrength: by the example of the three Children, to whom God made the flame to ſeem like a pleaſant dew, adding alſo the rejoycing of St. Andrew in his Croſs, the patience of St. Laurence on the fire, aſſuring him, that God, if he called on him, and to ſuch as die in his Faith, either would abate the fury of the flame, or give him ſtrength to abide it.

1 Cor. 10.

Dr. Cole rejoyceth in the Archbiſhops converſion, but that rejoycing lafted not long.

He glorified God much in his converſion, becauſe it appeared to be only his work, declaring what travel and conference had been with him to convert him, and all prevailed not, till that it pleaſed God of his mercy to reclaim him, and call him home. In diſcourſing of which place, he much commended Cranmer, and qualified his former doings, thus tempering his judgment and talk of him, that all the time (ſaid he) he flowed in riches and honour, he was unworthy of his life: and now that he might not live, he was unworthy of death. But leſt he ſhould carry with him no comfort, he would diligently labour (he ſaid) and alſo he did promiſe in the name of all the Prieſts that were preſent, that immediately after his death there ſhould be Dirges, Maſſes, and Funerals executed for him in all the Churches of Oxford for the ſuccour of his Soul.

Dirges and Maſſes promiſed for Cranmers Soul.

Cranmer

Anno 1556.

Cranmer in all this mean time, with what great grief of mind he ſtood hearing this Sermon, the outward ſhews of his Body and countenance did better expreſs, then any man can declare; one while lifting up his hands and eyes unto Heaven, and then again for ſhame letting them down to the Earth. A man might have ſeen the very image and ſhape of perfect ſorrow lively in him expreſſed. More then twenty ſeveral times the tears guſhed out abundantly, dropping down marvellouſly from his Fatherly Face. They which were preſent, do teſtifie that they never ſaw in any Child more tears, then braſt out from him at that time, all the Sermon while; but eſpecially when they recited his prayer before the People. It is marvellous what commiſeration and pity moved all mens hearts, that beheld ſo heavy a countenance, and ſuch abundance of tears in an old man of ſo Reverend Dignity.

The tears of the Archb.

Cole, after he had ended his Sermon, called back the People that were ready to depart, to prayers. Brethren (ſaid he) leſt any man ſhould doubt of this mans earneſt converſion and repentance, you ſhall hear him ſpeak before you, and therefore I pay your Maſter Cranmer, that you will now perform that you promiſed not long ago; namely, that you would openly expreſs the true and undoubted profeſſion of your faith, that you may take away all ſuſpicion from men, and that all men may underſtand that you are a Catholick indeed. I will do it (ſaid the Archbiſhop) and that with a good will; who by and by riſing up, and putting off his cap, began to ſpeak thus unto the People.

Cranmer required to declare his faith.

Cranmer willing to declare his faith.

The words of the Archb. to the People.

I deſire you, well beloved Brethren in the Lord, that you will pray to God for me, to forgive me my ſins, which above all men, both in number and greatneſs, I have committed. But among all the reſt, there is one offence which moſt of all at this time doth vex and trouble me, whereof in proceſs of my talk you ſhall hear more in his proper place, and then putting his hand into his Boſom, he drew forth his prayer, which he recited to the People in his ſenſe.

The prayer of Doctor Cranmer, Archbiſhop.

GOod Chriſtan People, my dearly beloved Brethren and Siſters in Chriſt, I beſeech you moſt heartily to pray for me to Almighty God, that he will forgive me all my ſins and offences, which be many without number, and great above meaſure. But yet one thing grieveth my Conſcience more then all the reſt, whereof, God willing, I intend to ſpeak more hereafter. But how great and how many ſoever my ſins be, I beſeech you to pray God of his mercy to pardon and forgive them all. And here kneeling down, he ſaid:

The prayer of the Archb. Cranmer.

O Father of Heaven, O Son of God Redeemer of the World, O Holy Ghoſt, three perſons and one God, have mercy upon me moſt wretched caitif and miſerable ſinner. I have offended both againſt Heaven and Earth, more then my tongue can expreſs. Whither then may I goe, or whither ſhall I flee? To Heaven I may be aſhamed to lift up mine eyes, and in Earth I find no place of refuge or ſuccour. To thee therefore, O Lord, do I run; to thee do I humble my ſelf, ſaying, O Lord my God, my ſins be great, but yet have mercy upon me for thy great mercy. The great myſtery that God became man, was not wrought for little or few offences. Thou didſt not give thy Son, O Heavenly Father, unto death for ſmall ſins onely, but for all the greateſt ſins of the World, ſo that the ſinner return to thee with his whole heart, as I do here at his preſent. Wherefore have mercy on me, O God, whoſe property is always to have mercy, have mercy upon me O Lord, for thy great mercy. I crave nothing for mine own merits, but for thy names ſake, that it may be hallowed thereby, and for thy dear Son Jeſus Chriſts ſake. And now therefore, Our Father of Heaven, hallowed be thy name, &c. And then he riſing, ſaid:

The laſt words of exhortation of the Archb. to the People.

Every man (good People) deſireth at the time of his death to give ſome good exhortation that others may remember the ſame before their death, and be the better thereby: ſo I Beſeech God grant me grace, that I may ſpeak ſomething at this my departing, whereby God may be glorified, and you edified.

Exhortation to contempt of the World.

Firſt, it is an heavy cauſe to ſee that ſo many folk ſo much dote upon the love of this falſe World, and be ſo careful for it, that of the love of God, or the World to come, they ſeem to care very little or nothing. Therefore this ſhall be my firſt exhortation: That you ſet not your minds overmuch upon this glozing World, but upon God, and upon the World to come, and to learn to know what this leſſon meaneth, which St. John teacheth, That the love of this World is hatred againſt God.

Exhortation to obedience

The ſecond exhortation is, That next under God you obey your King and Queen willingly and gladly, without murmuring or grudging; not for fear of them onely, but much more for the fear of God; knowing that they be Gods Miniſters, appointed by God to rule and govern you: and therefore whoſoever reſiſteth them, reſiſteth the ordinance of God.

Exhortation to brotherly love.

The third exhortation is, That you love altogether like Brethren and Siſters. For alas, pity it is to ſee what contention and hatred one Chriſtian man beareth to another, not taking each other as Brother and Siſter, but rather as ſtrangers and mortal enemies. But I pray you learn and bear well away this one leſſon, To do good unto all men, as much as in you lieth, and to hurt no man, no more then you would hurt your own natural loving Brother or Siſter. For this you may be ſure of, that whoſoever hateth any perſon, and goeth about maliciouſly to hinder or hurt him, ſurely, and without all doubt God is not with that man, although he think himſelf never ſo much in Gods favour.

Exhortation to rich men of this world moving them to charitable alms.

The fourth exhortation, ſhall be to them that have great ſubſtance and riches of this World, That they will well conſider and weigh three ſayings of the Scripture. One is of our Saviour Chriſt himſelf, who ſaith, Luke 18. It is hard for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. A ſore ſaying, and yet ſpoken of him that knoweth the truth.

The ſecond is of St. John, I John 3. whoſe ſaying is this, He that hath the ſubſtance of this World, and ſeeth his Brother in neceſſity, and ſhutteth up his mercy from him, how can he ſay that he loveth God?

The third is of St. James, who ſpeaketh to the covetous rich man after this manner, Weep you and howl for the miſery that ſhall come upon you: your riches do rot, your cloaths be moth-eaten, your gold and Silver doth canker and ruſt, and their ruſt ſhall bear witneſs againſt you, and conſume you like fire: you gather a hoard or treaſure of Gods indignation againſt the laſt day. Let them that be rich ponder well theſe three ſentences: for if they ever had occaſion to ſhew their charity, they have it now at this preſent, the poor People being ſo many, and victuals ſo dear.

And now for as much as I am come to the laſt end of my life, whereupon hangeth all my life paſt, and all my life to come, either to live with my Maſter Chriſt for ever in joy, or elſe to be in pain for ever with wicked Devils in Hell, and I ſee before mine eyes preſently either Heaven ready to receive me, or elſe Hell ready to ſwallow me up: I ſhall therefore declare unto you my very faith how I believe, without any colour of diſſimulation: for now is no time to diſſemble, whatſoever I have ſaid or written in times paſt.

The Archb. declareth the true confeſſion of his faith without all colour or diſſembling.

Firſt, I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and Earth, &c. And I believe every Article of the Catholick faith, every word, and ſentence taught by our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, his Apoſtles and Prophets, in the new and old Teſtament.

The Archb. revoketh his former recantation, and repenteth the ſame

And now I come to the great thing, which ſo much troubleth my conſcience, more then any thing that ever I did or ſaid in my whole life, and that is the ſetting abroad of a writing contrary to the truth; which now here I renounce and refuſe, as things written with my hand, contrary to the truth which I thought in my heart, and written for fear of death, and to ſave my life if it might be, and that is, all ſuch bils and papers which I have written or ſigned with my hand ſince my degradation; wherein I have written many things untrue. And foraſmuch as my hand offended, writing contrary to my heart, my hand ſhall firſt be puniſhed therefore: for may I come to the fire it ſhall be firſt burned.

And

Anno 1556.

The Archb. refuſeth the Pope as Chriſts enemy and Antichriſt.

And as for the Pope, I refuſe him, as Chriſts enemy and Antichriſt, with all his falſe Doctrine.

The Archb. ſtandeth to his book written againſt Wincheſter.

And as for the Sacrament, I believe as I have taught in my book againſt the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the which my book teacheth ſo true a Doctrine of the Sacrament, that it ſhall ſtand at the laſt day before the Judgment of God, where the Papiſtical Doctrine contrary thereto ſhall be aſhamed to ſhew her face.

Here the ſtanders by were all aſtonied, marvelled, were amazed, did look one upon another, whoſe expectation he had ſo notably deceived. Some began to admoniſh him of his recantation, and to accuſe him of falſhood.

The expectation of the Papiſts deceived.

Briefly, it was a World to ſee the Doctors beguiled of ſo great an hope. I think there was never cruelty more notably or better in time deluded and deceived. For it is not to be doubted but they looked for a Glorious Victory, and a perpetual Triumph by this mans retractation.

The Papiſts in great chafe againſt the Archbiſhop.

Who aſſoon as they heard theſe things, began to let down their ears, to rage, fret, and fume; and ſo much the more, becauſe they could not revenge their grief: for they could now no longer threaten or hurt him. For the moſt miſerable man in the World can die but once: and whereas of neceſſity he muſt needs die that day, though the Papiſts had been never ſo well pleaſed: now being never ſo much offended with him, yet could he not be twice killed of them. And ſo when they could do nothing elſe unto him, yet leſt they ſhould ſay nothing, they ceaſed not to object unto him his falſhood and diſſimulation.

Cranmers anſwer to the Papiſts.

Unto which accuſation he anſwered, Ah my Maſters (quoth he) do not you take it ſo. Always ſince I lived hitherto, I have been a hater of falſhood, and a lover of ſimplicity, and never before this time have I diſſembled; and in ſaying this, all the tears that remained in his Body appeared in his eyes. And when he began to ſpeak more of the Sacrament and of the Papacy, ſome of them began to cry out, yelp, and baul, and ſpecially Cole cried out upon him; Stop the Hereticks mouth, and take him away.

The deſcription of D. Cranmer, how he was plucked down from the ſtage, by Friars and Papiſts, for the true Confeſſion of his faith.

The burning of D. Thomas Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the Town ditch at Oxford, with his hand firſt thruſt in the fire where he ſubſcribed before.

Cranmer pulled down from the ſtage.

Cranmer led to the fire.

And then Cranmer being pulled down from the ſtage was led to the fire, accompanied with thoſe Friers, vexing, troubling, and threatning him moſt cruelly. What madneſs (ſay they) hath brought thee again into this error, by which thou wilt draw innumerable Souls with thee into hell? To whom he anſwered nothing, but directed all his talk to the People, ſaving that to one troubling him in the way he ſpake, and exhorted him to get him home to his ſtudy, and apply his book diligently, ſaying, if he did diligently call upon God, by reading more he ſhould get knowledge.

But the other Spaniſh barker, raging and foming, was almoſt out of his wits, always having this in his mouth, Non feciſti? didſt thou it not?

The Archb. brought to the place of execution.

But when he came to the place where the Holy Biſhops and Martyrs of God, Hugh Latimer and Ridley were burnt before him for the confeſſion of the truth, kneeling down he prayed to God, and not long tarrying in his prayers, putting off his garments to his ſhirt, he prepared himſelf to Death. His ſhirt was made long down to his feet. His feet were bare. Likewiſe his head, when both his caps were off, was ſo bare, that one hair could not be ſeen upon it. His Beard was long and thick, covering his face with marvellous gravity. Such a countenance of gravity moved the hearts both of his friends, and of his enemies.

The deſcription of his perſon.

Then the Spaniſh Friers John and Richard, of whom mention was made before, began to exhort him and play their parts with him afreſh, but with vain and loſt labour. Cranmer with ſtedfaſt purpoſe abiding in the profeſſion of his Doctrine, gave his hand to certain old men, and other that ſtood by, bidding them farewell.

Mr. Ely refuſeth to give his hand to the Archbiſhop.

And when he had thought to have done ſo likewiſe to Ely, the ſaid Ely drew back his hand and refuſed, ſaying, it was not lawful to ſalute Hereticks, and ſpecially ſuch a one as falſely returned unto the opinions that he had forſworn. And if he had known before that he would have done ſo, he would never have uſed his company ſo familiarly, and chid thoſe Sergeants and Citizens, which had not refuſed to give him their hands. This Ely was a Prieſt lately made, and ſtudent in Divinity, being then one of the fellows of Braſen-noſe.

The Archb. tyed to the ſtake.

Then was an iron chain tyed about Cranmer, whom when they perceived to be more ſtedfaſt then that he could be moved from his ſentence, they commanded the fire to be ſet unto him.

Cranmer putteth his right hand which ſubſcribed, firſt into the fire.

And when the wood was kindled, and the fire began to burn near him, ſtretching out his Arm, he put his right hand into the flame, which he held ſo ſtedfaſt and immovable (ſaving that once with the ſame hand he wiped his face) that all men might ſee his hand burned before his Body was touched. His Body did ſo abide the burning of the flame with ſuch conſtancy and ſtedfaſtneſs, that ſtanding always in one place whithout moving his Body, he ſeemed to

to move no more than the Stake to which he was bound; his eyes were lifted up into heaven, and oftentimes he repeated his unworthy right hand, ſo long as his voice would ſuffer him; and uſing often the words of Stephen, Lord Jeſus receive my Spirit, in the greateſt of the flame he gave up the ghoſt.

The laſt words of Cranmer at his death.

This fortitude of mind, which perchance is rare and not found among the Spaniards, when Frier John ſaw, thinking it came not of fortitude, but of deſperation, although ſuch manner of examples which are of like conſtancy, have been common here in England, ran to the Lord Williams of Tame, crying that the Archbiſhop was vexed in mind, and died in great deſperation. But he which was not ignorant of the Archbiſhops conſtancy, being unknown to the Spaniards, ſmiled only, and (as it were) by ſilence rebuked the Friers folly. And this was the end of this learned Archbiſhop, whom, leſt by evil ſubſcribing he ſhould have periſhed, by well recanting God preſerved; and leſt he ſhould have lived longer with ſhame and reproof, it pleaſed God rather to take him away, to the glory of his name and profit of his Church. So good was the Lord both to his Church, in fortifying the ſame with the teſtimony and blood of ſuch a Martyr; and ſo good alſo to the man with this Croſs of Tribulation, to purge his offences in this world, not only of his recantation, but alſo of his ſtanding againſt John Lambert and Mr. Allen, or if there were any other, with whoſe burning and blood his hands had been before any thing polluted. But eſpecially he had to rejoyce, that dying in ſuch a cauſe, he was numbred amongſt Chriſts Martyrs, much more worthy the name of St. Thomas of Canterbury, than he whom the Pope falſly before did Canonize.

The Friers lying report of Cranmer.

Archbiſhop Cranmer the middle Martyr of all the Martyrs burnt in Queen Maries time.

And thus have you the full ſtory concerning the life and death of this Reverend Archbiſhop and Martyr of God, Thomas Cranmer, and alſo of divers other the learned ſort of Chriſts Martyrs burned in Queen Maries time, of whom this Archbiſhop was the laſt, being burnt about the very middle time of the reign of that Queen, and almoſt the very middle man of all the Martyrs which were burned in all her Reign beſides.

Now after the life and ſtory of this foreſaid Archbiſhop diſcourſed, let us adjoyn withal his Letters, beginning firſt with his famous Letter to Queen Mary, which he wrote unto her incontinent after he was cited up to Rome by Biſhop Brooks and his fellows, the tenor whereof here followeth.

Letters of Doctor Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

The Archbiſhop of Canterburies Letter to the Queens Highneſs.

A writing or Letter of the Archb. ſent to Qu. Mary.

IT may pleaſe your Majeſty to pardon my preſumption, that I dare be ſo bold to write to your Highneſs. But very neceſſity conſtraineth mè, that your Majeſty may know my mind, rather by mine own writing, than by other mens reports. So it is that upon Wedneſday, being the 12. day of this Month, I was cited to appear at Rome the 80. day after, there to make anſwer to ſuch matters as ſhould be objected againſt me upon the behalf of the King and your moſt Excellent Majeſty, which matters the Thurſday following were objected againſt me by Dr. Martin and Dr. Story, your Majeſties Proctors before the Biſhop of Glouceſter, ſitting in Judgment by Commiſſion from Rome. But (alas) it cannot but grieve the heart of a natural Subject, to be accuſed of the King and Queen of his own Realm; and ſpecially before an outward Judge, or by Authority coming from any perſon out of this Realm: where the King and Queen, as if they were Subjects within their own Realm, ſhall complain and require Juſtice at a ſtrangers hands againſt their own Subject, being already condemned to death by their own Laws. As though the King and Queen could not do or have juſtice within their own Realms againſt their own Subjects, but they muſt ſeek it at ſtrangers hands in a ſtrange Land; the like whereof (I think) was never ſeen. I would have wiſhed to have had ſome meaner Adverſaries: and, I think, that death ſhall not grieve me much more, than to have my moſt dread and moſt gracious Sovereign Lord and Lady, to whom under God I do own all obedience, to be mine Accuſers in Judgment within their own Realm, before any ſtranger and outward power. But foraſmuch as in the time of the Prince of moſt famous memory, King Henry the Eighth your Graces Father, I was ſworn never to conſent, that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould have or exerciſe any Authority or Juriſdiction in this Realm of England, therefore leſt I ſhould allow his Authority contrary to mine own Oath, I refuſed to make anſwer to the Biſhop of Glouceſter ſitting here in Judgment by the Popes Authority, leſt I ſhould run into Perjury.

The King and Queen make themſelves no better than Subjects complaining of their own Subject unto the Pope.

The firſt cauſe why the Archb. would not make anſwer to the Popes Delegate is to avoid Perjury.

Another cauſe why I refuſed the Popes Authority, is this, that his Authority, as he claimeth it, repugneth to the Crown Imperial of this Realm, and to the Laws of the ſame; which every true Subject is bound to defend. Firſt, for that the Pope ſaith, that all manner of Power, as well Temporal as Spiritual, is given firſt to him of God; and that the Temporal Power he giveth unto Emperour and Kings, to uſe it under him, but ſo as it be always at his commandment and beck.

The ſecond cauſe is, that the Popes Laws are contrary to the Crown and Laws of England.

But contrary to this claim, the Imperial Crown and Juriſdiction Temporal of this Realm is taken immediately from God, to be uſed under him only, and is ſubject unto none, but to God alone.

Moreover, to the Imperial Laws and Cuſtoms of this Realm the King in his Coronation, and all Juſtices when they receive their Offices, be ſworn, and all the whole Realm is bound to defend and maintain. But contrary hereunto, the Pope by his Authority maketh void, and commandeth to blot out of our Books, all Laws and Cuſtoms being repugnant to his Laws, and declareth accurſed all Rulers and Governours, all the makers, writers, and executors of all ſuch Laws or Cuſtoms; as it appeareth by many of the Popes Laws, whereof one or two I ſhall rehearſe. In the Decrees, Diſt. 10. is written thus, Conſtitutiones contra Canones & Decreta Præſulum Romanorum vel bonos mores, nullius ſunt momenti. That is, The Conſtitutions or Statutes enacted againſt the Canons and Decrees of the Biſhops of Rome or their good Cuſtoms, are of none effect. Alſo, Extra. de ſententia Excommunicationis, noverit, Excommunicamus omnes Hæreticos utriuſque ſexus, quocunque nomine cenſeantur, & fautores, & receptores, & defenſores eorum; nec non & qui de cætero ſervari fecerint ſtatuta edita & conſuetudines contra Eccleſiæ libertatem, niſi ea de capitularibus ſuis intra duos menſes poſt hujuſmodi publicationem ſententiæ fecerint amoveri. Item, Excommunicamus ſtatutarios, & ſcriptores ſtatutorum ipſorum, nec non poteſtates, conſules, rectores, & conſiliarios locorum, ubi de cætero hujuſmodi ſtatuta & conſuetudines editæ fuerint vel ſervatæ; nec non & illos qui ſecundum ea præſumpſerint judicare, vel in publicam formam ſcribere judicata. That is to ſay, We Excommunicate all Hereticks of both Sexes, what name ſoever they be called by, and their fautors, and receptors, and defendors; and alſo them that ſhall hereafter cauſe to be obſerved the Statutes and Cuſtoms made againſt the liberty of the Church, except they cauſe the ſame to be put out of their Records and Chapters within two months after the publication thereof. Alſo we Excommunicate the Statute-makers and writers of thoſe Statutes, and all the Poteſtates, Conſuls, Governours and Counſellors of places, where ſuch Statutes and Cuſtoms ſhall be made or kept; and alſo thoſe that ſhall preſume to give judgment according to them, or ſhall notifie in publick form the matter ſo adjudged.

The Oath of the King and Juſtices, and the duty of Subjects.

Diſt. 10. Conſtitutiones.

Extrav. de Sentent. & re judic. Noverit.

Now by theſe Laws, if the Biſhop of Romes Authority which he claimeth by God, be lawful, all your Graces Laws and Cuſtoms of your Realm, being contrary to the Popes Laws, be naught, and as well your Majeſty, as your Judges, Juſtices, and all other Executors of the ſame, ſtand accurſed amongſt Hereticks, which God forbid. And yet this Curſe can never be avoided (if the Pope have ſuch power as he claimeth) until ſuch times as the Laws and Cuſtoms of this Realm (being contrary to his Laws) be taken away and blotted out of the Law Books. And although there be many Laws

The Popes Laws and the Laws of England do vary, how, and wherein.

of this Realm contrary to the Laws of Rome, yet I named but a few; as to convict a Clerk before any temporal Judge of this Realm for debt, felony, murther, or for any other crime; which Clerks by the Popes Laws be ſo exempt from the Kings Laws, that they can be no where ſued, but before their Ordinary.

Caſes wherein the Popes Laws repugn againſt our laws.

Alſo the Pope by his Laws may give all Biſhopricks and benefices ſpiritual; which by the Laws of this Realm can be given but onely by the King and other Patrons of the ſame, except they fall into the lapſe.

By the Popes Laws, Jus patronatus ſhall be ſued onely before the Eccleſiaſtical Judge; but by the Laws of the Realm it ſhall be ſued before the temporal Judge.

Proviſion againſt the Popes Laws by Præmunire.

And to be ſhort, the Laws of this Realm do agree with the Popes Laws like fire and water. And yet the Kings of this Realm have provided for their laws by the præmunire; ſo that if any man have let the execution of the Laws of this Realm by any Authority from the See of Rome, he falleth into the præmunire.

The proviſion of the Pope againſt our præmunire.

But to meet with this, the Popes have provided for their laws by curſing. For whoſoever letteth the Popes laws to have full courſe within this Realm, by the Popes power ſtandeth accurſed. So that the Popes power treadeth all the laws and cuſtoms of this Realm under his feet, curſing all that execute them, until ſuch time as they do give place unto his Laws.

Mark this well.

But it may be ſaid, that notwithſtanding all the Popes decrees, yet we do execute ſtill the laws and cuſtoms of this Realm. Nay, not all quietly without interruption of the Pope. And where we do execute them, yet we do it unjuſtly, if the Popes power be of force, and for the ſame we ſtand Excommunicate, and ſhall do, until we leave the execution of our own Laws and cuſtoms. Thus we be well reconciled to Rome allowing ſuch Authority, whereby the Realm ſtandeth accurſed before God, if the Pope have any ſuch Authority.

Theſe things (as I ſuppoſe) were not fully opened in the Parliament houſe, when the Popes Authority was received again within this Realm; for if they had, I do not believe that either the King or Queens Majeſty, or the Nobles of this Realm, or the Commons of the ſame would ever have conſented to receive again ſuch a forrein Authority, ſo injurious, hurtful, and prejudicial as well to the Crown as to the Laws and Cuſtoms and ſtate of this Realm, as whereby they muſt needs acknowledge themſelves to be accurſed. * But none could open this matter well but the Clergy, and ſuch of them as had read the Popes Laws, whereby the Pope had made himſelf as it were a God. Theſe ſeek to maintain the Pope whom they deſired to have their chief head, to the intent they might have as it were a Kingdom and Laws within themſelves, diſtinct from the Laws of the Crown, and wherewith the Crown may not meddle; and ſo being exempted from the Laws of the Realm, might live in this Realm like Lords and Kings, without damage or fear of any man, ſo that they pleaſe their high and ſupreme Head at Rome. For this conſideration (I ween) ſome that knew the truth, held their peace in the Parliament, whereas if they had done their duties to the Crown and whole Realm, they ſhould have opened their mouths, declared the truth, and ſhewed the perils and dangers that might enſue to the Crown and Realm.

* The Clergies duty in the Parliament.

The Clergy of England more addicted to the Pope then to their country.

And if I ſhould agree to allow ſuch Authority within this Realm, whereby I muſt needs confeſs, that your moſt gracious Highneſs, and alſo your Realm ſhould ever continue accurſed, until ye ſhall ceaſe from the execution of your own Laws and cuſtoms of your Realm; I could not think my ſelf true either to your Highneſs, or to this my natural countrey, knowing that I do know. Ignorance, I know, may excuſe other men; but he that knoweth how prejudicial and injurious the power and Authority, which he challengeth every where, is to the Crown-Laws, and cuſtoms of this Realm, and yet will allow the ſame, I cannot ſee in any wiſe how he can keep his due allegiance, fidelity, and truth to the Crown and ſtate of this Realm.

The third cauſe why he could not allow the Pope.

Another cauſe I alledged, why I could not allow the Authority of the Pope, which is this; That by his Authority he ſubverteth not onely the Laws of this Realm, but alſo the Laws of God: ſo that whoſoever be under his Authority, he ſuffereth them not to be under Chriſts Religion purely, as Chriſt did command. And for one example I brought forth, that whereas by God Laws all Chriſtian People be bounden diligently to learn his Word that they may know how to believe and live accordingly, for that purpoſe he ordained Holydays, when they ought, leaving apart all other buſineſs, to give themſelves wholly to know and ſerve God. Therefore Gods will and Commandment is, that when the People be gathered together, Miniſters ſhould uſe ſuch language as the People may underſtand and take profit thereby, or elſe hold their peace. For as an Harp or Lute, if it give no certain ſound that men may know what is ſtricken, who can dance after it? for all the ſound is in vain; ſo is it in vain, and profiteth nothing, ſaith Almighty God by the mouth of Saint Paul, if the Prieſt ſpeak to the People in a language which they know not; For elſe he may profit himſelf: but profiteth not the People, ſaith Saint Paul. But herein I was anſwered thus; that Saint Paul ſpake onely of preaching, that the Preacher ſhould preach in a tongue which the People did know, or elſe his Preaching availeth nothing: but if the Preaching availeth nothing, being ſpoken in a language which the People underſtand not, how ſhould any other ſervice avail them, being ſpoken in the ſame language? And yet that S. Paul meant not onely of Preaching, it appeareth plainly by his own words. For he ſpeaketh by name expreſly of praying, ſinging, and thanking of God, and of all other things which the Prieſts ſay in the Churches, whereunto the People ſay Amen; which they uſe not in Preaching, but in other divine ſervice; that whether the Prieſts rehearſe the wonderful works of God, or the great benefits of God unto mankind above all other creatures, or give thanks unto God, or make open profeſſion of their faith, or humble confeſſion of their ſins, with earneſt requeſt of mercy and forgiveneſs, or make ſute or requeſt unto God for any thing; then all the People underſtanding what the Prieſts ſay, might give their minds and voices with them, and ſay Amen, that is to ſay, allow what the Prieſts ſay; that the rehearſal of Gods Univerſal works and benefits, the giving of thanks, the profeſſion of faith, the confeſſion of ſins, and the requeſts and petitions of the Prieſts and of the People might aſcend up into the Ears of God altogether, and be as a ſweet ſavour, odour, and incenſe in his noſe; and thus was it uſed many hundred years after Chriſts Aſcenſion. But the foreſaid things cannot be done when the Prieſts ſpeak to the People in a language not known, and ſo they (or their Clerk in their name) ſay Amen, but they cannot tell whereunto. Whereas Saint Paul ſaith; How can the People ſay Amen to thy well ſaying, when they underſtand not what thou ſayeſt? And thus was Saint Paul underſtood of all Interpreters, both the Greeks and Latines, old and new, ſchool Authors and other that I have read, until above thirty years paſt. At which time one Eckius with other of his ſort began to deviſe a new expoſition, underſtanding St. Paul of preaching onely.

Anno 1556.

Why Latine ſervice ſeems to be reſtored in England.

But when a good number of the beſt learned men reputed within this Realm, ſome favouring the old, ſome the new learning, as they term it, (where indeed that which they call the old, is the new, and that which they call the new, is indeed the old) but when a great number of ſuch learned men of both ſorts, were gathered together at Windſor, for the reformation of the ſervice of the Church, it was agreed by both, without Controverſie (not one ſaying contrary) that the ſervice of the Church ought to be in the mother Tongue, and that S. Paul in the fourteenth Chapter to the Corinthians was ſo to be underſtood. And ſo is S. Paul to be underſtood in the Civil Law, more then a thouſand years paſt, where Juſtinianus, a moſt godly Emperour in a Synod writeth on this manner: Jubemus ut omnes Epiſcopi pariter & presbyteri non tacito modo, ſed clara voce, quæ à fideli populo exaudiatur, ſacram oblationem & preces in ſacro Baptiſmate adhibitas celebrent, quo majori exinde devotione in depromendis Domini Dei laudibus audientium animi afficiantur, Ita enim & Divus Paulus docet in Epiſtola ad Cornith. Si ſolummodo benedicat ſpiritus, quomodo is qui privati locum tenet, dicet ad gratiarum actionem tuam, Amen? quandoquidem quid dicas non videt. Tu quidem pulchrè gratias agis, alter autem non ædificatur. That is to ſay, We command that all Biſhops and Prieſts celebrate the holy

The Papiſts and Proteſtants both agreed in Windſor, the ſervice of the Church to be in the mother tongue. Anno 1549.

holy oblation and prayer uſed in holy Baptiſm, not after a ſtill and cloſe manner, but with a clear loud voice, that they may be plainly heard of the faithful People, ſo as the hearers minds may be lifted up thereby with the greater devotion, in uttering the praiſes of the Lord God. For ſo Paul teacheth alſo in the Epiſtle to the Corinthians; If the Spirit do only bleſs (or ſay well) how ſhall he that occupieth the place of a private perſon ſay, Amen, to thy thankſgiving? for he perceiveth not what thou ſayeſt: Thou doſt give thanks well, but the other is not edified. And not only the Civil Law, and all other Writers a thouſand and five hundred years continually together have expounded St. Paul not of preaching only, but of other ſervice ſaid in the Church; but alſo reaſon giveth the ſame, that if men be commanded to hear any thing, it muſt be ſpoken in a language which the hearers underſtand, or elſe (as St. Paul ſaith) what availeth it to hear? So that the Pope giving a contrary commandment, that the People coming to the Church ſhall hear they wot not what, and ſhall anſwer they know not whereto, taketh upon him to command, not only againſt reaſon, but alſo directly againſt God.

The Pope commandeth both againſt God and natural reaſon.

The Sacrament ought to be received in both kinds of all Chriſtians.

And again I ſaid, whereas our Saviour Chriſt ordained the Sacrament of his moſt precious Body and Blood to be received of all Chriſtian People under the forms of Bread and Wine, and ſaid of the Cup, Drink ye all of this: the Pope giveth a clean contrary commandment, that no Lay-man ſhall drink of the Cup of their ſalvation; as though the Cup of ſalvation by the Blood of Chriſt pertained not to Lay-men. And whereas Theophilus Alexandrinus (whoſe works St. Hierom did tranſlate about eleven hundred years paſt) ſaith, That if Chriſt had been crucified for the Devils, his Cup ſhould not be denied them; yet the Pope denieth the Cup of Chriſt to Chriſtian People, for whom Chriſt was crucified. So that if I ſhould obey the Pope in theſe things, I muſt needs diſobey my Saviour Chriſt.

Ex Theophilo Alexandrino.

But I was anſwered hereunto (as commonly the Papiſts do anſwer) that under the form of Bread is whole Chriſts fleſh and blood: ſo that whoſoever receiveth the form of Bread, receiveth as well Chriſts blood as his fleſh. Let it be ſo, yet in the form of Bread only, Chriſts blood is not drunk, but eaten; nor is it received in the Cup in the form of Wine, as Chriſt commanded, but eaten with the fleſh under the form of Bread. And moreover, the Bread is not the Sacrament of his blood, but of his fleſh only; nor is the Cup the Sacrament of his fleſh, but of his blood only. And ſo the Pope keepeth from all Layperſons, the Sacrament of their redemption by Chriſts Blood, which Chriſt commandeth to be given unto them.

The excuſe of the Papiſts, why they take away the Cup.

And furthermore, Chriſt ordained the Sacrament in two kinds, the one ſeparated from the other, to be a repreſentation of his death, where his Blood was ſeparated from his Fleſh, which is not repreſented in one kind alone: So that the Lay-people receive not the whole Sacrament whereby Chriſts death is repreſented as he commanded.

Moreover, as the Pope taketh upon him to give the temporal Sword, by royal and imperial Power, to Kings and Princes: ſo doth he likewiſe take upon him to depoſe them from their imperial ſtates, if they be diſobedient to him, and commandeth the Subjects to diſobey their Princes, aſſoyling the Subjects as well of their obedience, as of their lawful Oaths made unto their true Kings and Princes, directly contrary to Gods commandment, who commandeth all Subjects to obey their Kings, or their Rulers under them.

Miſorder in the Pope in aſſoyling the diſobedience of Subjects towards their Princes.

One John, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, in the time of St. Gregory claimed ſuperiority above all other Biſhops. To whom St. Gregory writeth, that therein he did injury to his three Brethren, which were equal with him, that is to ſay, the Biſhop of Rome, the Biſhop of Alexandria, and of Antiochia: which three were Patriarchal Sees, as well as Conſtantinople, and were Brethren one to another. But (ſaith St. Gregory) if any one ſhall exalt himſelf above all the reſt, to be the univerſal Biſhop, the ſame paſſeth in pride. But now the Biſhop of Rome exalteth himſelf not only above all Kings and Emperours, and above all the whole world, but takes upon him to give and take away, to ſet up and pull down as he ſhall think good. And as the Devil having no ſuch Authority, yet took upon him to give unto Chriſt all the Kingdoms of the World, if he would fall down and worſhip him: in like manner the Pope taketh upon him to give Empires and Kingdoms being none of his, to ſuch as will fall down and worſhip him, and kiſs his feet.

Note the ſaying of Gregory.

The Devil and the Pope are like.

And moreover, his Lawyers and Gloſſers ſo flatter him, that they fain he may command Emperours and Kings to hold his Stirrop when he lighteth from his Horſe, and to be his Foot-men: and that, if any Emperour and King give him any thing, they give him nothing but that is his own, and that he may diſpence againſt Gods Word, againſt both the old and new Teſtament, againſt St. Pauls Epiſtles, and againſt the Goſpel. And furthermore whatſoever he doth, although he draw innumerable People by heaps with himſelf into Hell, yet may not mortal man reprove him, becauſe he being judge of all men, may be judged of no man. And thus he ſitteth in the Temple of God, as if he were a God, and nameth himſelf Gods Vicar, and yet he diſpenſeth againſt God. If this be not to play Antichriſts part, I cannot tell what is Antichriſt, which is no more to ſay, but Chriſts enemy and adverſary? who ſhall ſit in the Temple of God, advancing himſelf above all other, yet by hypocriſie and fained Religion, ſhall ſubvert the true Religion of Chriſt, and under pretence and colour of Chriſts Religion, ſhall work againſt Chriſt, and therefore hath the name of Antichriſt. Now if any man lift himſelf higher then the Pope hath done, who lifteth himſelf above all the world; or can be more adverſary to Chriſt, then to diſpence againſt Gods Laws; and where Chriſt hath given any commandment, to command directly the contrary, that man muſt needs be taken for Antichriſt. But until the time that ſuch a perſon may be found, men may eaſily conjecture where to find Antichriſt.

Emperours and Kings made the Popes foot-men.

The Pope is Antichriſt, that is, chriſts enemy.

The true marks, proving that the Pope is Antichriſt.

Wherefore, ſeeing the Pope thus to overthrow both Gods Laws and mans Laws, taketh upon him to make Emperours and Kings to be vaſſals and ſubjects unto him, eſpecially the Crown of this Realm, with the Laws and Cuſtoms of the ſame; I ſee no mean how I may conſent to admit his uſurped power within this Realm, contrary to mine Oath, mine obedience to Gods Laws, mine allegiance and duty to your Majeſty, and my love and affection to this Realm.

Note this concluſion.

This that I have ſpoken againſt the power and Authority of the Pope, I have not ſpoken (I take God to record and Judge) for any malice I owe to the Popes perſon, whom I know not, but I ſhall pray to God to give him grace, that he may ſeek above all things to promote Gods honour and glory, and not to follow the trade of his predeceſſors in theſe latter days.

The cauſe why the Archbiſhop ſpake and wrote thus.

Nor have I ſpoken it for fear of puniſhment, and to avoid the ſame, thinking it rather an occaſion to aggravate then to diminiſh my trouble; but I have ſpoken it for my moſt bounden duty to the Crown, Liberties, Laws, and cuſtoms of this Realm of England, but moſt ſpecially to diſcharge my Conſcience in uttering the Truth to Gods glory, caſting away all fear by the comfort which I have in Chriſt, who ſaith, Fear not them that kill the Body, and cannot kill the Soul, but fear him that can caſt both Body and Soul into Hell fire. He that for fear to loſe this life will forſake the Truth, ſhall loſe the everlaſting life: And he that for the truths ſake will ſpend his life, ſhall find everlaſting life. And Chriſt promiſeth to ſtand faſt with them before his Father, which will ſtand faſt with him here. Which comfort is ſo great, that whoſoever hath his eyes fixed upon Chriſt, cannot greatly paſs on this life, knowing that he may be ſure to have Chriſt ſtand by him in the preſence of his Father in Heaven. Matth. 10.

And as touching the Sacrament, I ſaid; Foraſmuch as the whole matter ſtandeth in the underſtanding of theſe words of Chriſt: This is my Body, This is my Blood; I ſaid that Chriſt in theſe words made demonſtration of the Bread and Wine, and ſpake figuratively, calling Bread his Body, and Wine his Blood, becauſe he ordained them to be Sacraments of his Body and Blood. And where the Papiſts ſay in thoſe two points contrary unto me, that Chriſt called not Bread his Body, but a ſubſtance uncertain, nor ſpake figuratively: Herein I ſaid I would be judged by the old Church, and which Doctrine could be proved the elder, that I would ſtand unto. And foraſmuch

The Sacrament.

A double error of the Papiſts in the words of the Sacrament.

Cranmer ſtandeth to be judged by the old Church.

foraſmuch as I have alledged in my Book many old Authors, both Greeks and Latins, which above a thouſand years after Chriſt continually taught as I do: if they could bring forth but one old Author, that ſaith in theſe two points as they ſay, I offered ſix or ſeven years ago, and do offer yet ſtill, that I will give place unto them.

The Papiſts not able to bring forth one old Author above a thouſand years, to make with the Sacrament.

But when I bring forth any Author that ſaith in moſt plain terms as I do, yet ſaith the other part, that the Authors meant not ſo; as who ſhould ſay, that the Authors ſpake one thing, and meant clean contrary. And upon the other part, when they cannot find any one Author, that ſaith in words as they ſay; yet ſay they, that the Authors meant as they ſay. Now, whether I or they ſpeak more to the purpoſe herein, I refer me to the judgment of all indifferent hearers; yea the old Church of Rome, above a thouſand years together, neither believed nor uſed the Sacrament, as the Church of Rome hath done of late years:

With the ſubſtance the uſe alſo changed of the Sacrament.

For in the beginning, the Church of Rome taught a pure and a ſound Doctrine of the Sacrament. But after that the Church of Rome fell into a new doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation; with the Doctrine they changed the uſe of the Sacrament contrary to that Chriſt commanded, and the old Church of Rome uſed above a thouſand years. And yet to deface the old, they ſay that the new is the old: wherein for my part I am content to ſtand to the trial. But their Doctrine is ſo fond and uncomfortable, that I marvel that any man would allow it, if he knew what it is. But howſoever they bear the People in hand, that which they write in their Books hath neither Truth nor comfort.

The Papiſts make chriſt two Bodies. Mark the Errours of the Papiſts in their Doctrine of the Sacrament.

For by their Doctrine, of one Body of Chriſt is made two bodies: one natural, having diſtance of members, with form and proportion of mans perfect Body, and this Body is in Heaven: but the Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, by their own Doctrine, muſt needs be a monſtrous Body, having neither diſtance of members, nor form, faſhion or proportion of a mans natural Body. And ſuch a Body is in the Sacrament (teach they) and goeth into the mouth with the form of Bread, and entreth no further then the form of Bread goeth, nor tarrieth no longer then the form of Bread is by natural heat in digeſting. So that when the form of Bread is digeſted, that Body of Chriſt is gone. And foraſmuch as evil men be as long in digeſting as good men, the Body of Chriſt (by their Doctrine) entreth as far, and tarrieth as long in wicked men as in godly men. And what comfort can be herein to any Chriſtian man, to receive Chriſts unſhapen Body, and it to enter no further then the ſtomach, and to depart by and by as ſoon as the Bread is conſumed?

Neither Truth nor comfort in the Popes Doctrine of the Sacrament.

The Proteſtants Doctrine of the Sacrament more comfortable, then the Doctrine of the Papiſts.

It ſeemeth to me a more ſound and comfortable Doctrine, that Chriſt hath but one Body, and that hath form and faſhion of a mans true Body; which Body ſpiritually entreth into the whole man, Body and Soul: and though the Sacrament be conſumed, yet whole Chriſt remaineth, and feedeth the receiver unto eternal life, if he continue in godlineſs, and never departeth until the receiver forſake him. And as for the wicked, they have not Chriſt within them at all, who cannot be where Belial is. And this is my Faith, and (as me ſeemeth) a ſound Doctrine, according to Gods Word, and ſufficient for a Chriſtian to believe in that matter. And if it can be ſhewed unto me, that the Popes Authority is not prejudicial to the things before mentioned, or that my Doctrine in the Sacrament is erroneous (which I think cannot be ſhewed) then I never was nor will be ſo perverſe to ſtand willfully in mine own Opinion, but I ſhall with all humility ſubmit my ſelf unto the Pope, not only to kiſs his feet, but another part alſo.

Another reſpect why the Archbiſhop refuſeth B. Brookes to be his judge.

Another cauſe why I refuſed to take the Biſhop of Glouceſter for my Judge, was the reſpect of his own perſon, being more then once perjured. Firſt, for that he being divers times ſworn never to conſent that the Biſhop of Rome, ſhould have any juriſdiction within this Realm, but to take the King and his Succeſſors for ſupream heads of this Realm, as by Gods Laws they be contrary to that lawful Oath the ſaid Biſhop ſate then in judgment by Authority from Rome, wherein he was perjured, and not worthy to ſit as a Judge

The ſecond perjury was, that he took his Biſhoprick both of the Queens Majeſty and of the Pope, making to each of them a ſolemn Oath which oaths be ſo contrary that the one muſt needs be perjured. And furthermore in ſwearing to the Pope to maintain his Laws, Decrees, Conſtitutions, Ordinances, Reſervations, and Proviſions, he declareth himſelf an enemy to the Imperial Crown, and to the Laws and ſtate of this Realm, whereby he declareth himſelf not worthy to ſit as a Judge within this Realm. And for theſe conſiderations I refuſed to take him for my Judge.

Anno 1556.

Double perjury in B. Brookes.

This was written in another Letter to the Queen.

A Piece of another Letter to the Queen. Contradiction in the Queens Oaths, ſworn both to the Realm, and to the Pope in one day.

*I Learned by Dr.*Martin, that at the day of your Majeſties Coronation, you took an Oath of obedience to the Pope of Rome, and the ſame time you took another Oath to this Realm, to maintain the Laws, Liberties, and Cuſtoms of the ſame. And if your Majeſty did make an Oath to the Pope, I think it was according to the other Oaths which he uſeth to miniſter to Princes; which is, to be obedient to him, to defend his perſon, to maintain his authority, honour, laws, lands and priviledges. And if it be ſo, (which I know not but by report) then I beſeech your Majeſty to look upon your Oath made to the Crown and Realm, and to expend and weigh the two Oaths together, to ſee how they do agree, and then do as your Graces Conſcience ſhall give you: For I am ſurely perſwaded, that willingly your Majeſty will not offend, nor do againſt your Conſcience for any thing.

But I fear me that there be contradictions in your Oaths, and that thoſe which ſhould have informed your Grace thorowly, did not their duties therein. And if your Majeſty ponder the two Oaths diligently, I think you ſhall perceive you were deceived; and then your Highneſs may uſe the matter as God ſhall put in your heart. Furthermore, I am kept here from company of learned Men, from Books, from Counſel, from Pen and Ink, ſaving at this time to write unto your Majeſty, which all were neceſſary for a man being in my caſe. Wherefore I beſeech your Majeſty, that I may have ſuch of theſe as may ſtand with your Majeſties pleaſure. And as for my appearance at Rome, if your Majeſty will give me leave, I will appear there. And I truſt that God ſhall put in my mouth to defend his Truth there, as well as here. But I refer it wholly to his Majeſties pleaſure.

His Letter to D. Martin and D. Story.

I Have me commended unto you. And as I promiſed, I have ſent my Letters unto the Queens Majeſty unſigned, praying you to ſign them, and deliver them with all ſpeed. I might have ſent them by the Carrier ſooner, but not ſurer. But hearing Mr. Bayliff ſay, that he would go to the Court on Friday, I thought him a meet meſſenger to ſend my Letters by. For better is later and ſurer, than ſooner and never to be delivered. Yet one thing I have written to the Queens Majeſty incloſed and ſealed; which I require you may be ſo delivered without delay, and not be opened until it be delivered unto her Graces own hands. I have written all that I remember I ſaid, except that which I ſpake againſt the Biſhop of Glouceſters own perſon, which I thought not meet to write. And in ſome places I have written more, then I ſaid, which I would have anſwered to the Biſhop, if you would have ſuffered me.

You promiſed I ſhould ſee mine Anſwers to the ſixteen Articles, that I might correct, amend, and change them where I thought good, which your promiſe you kept not. And mine anſwer was not made upon my Oath, nor repeated, nor made in Judicio, but extra Judicium, as I proteſted; nor to the Biſhop of Glouceſter as Judge, but to you the King and Queens Proctors. I truſt you deal ſincerely with me without fraud or craft, and uſe me as you would wiſh to be in like caſe your ſelves. Remember, that Qua menſura menſi fueritis, eadem remetietur vobis, i. What meaſure you mete, the ſame ſhall be meaſured to you again. Thus fare you well, and God ſend you his Spirit to induce you into Truth.

Cranmers anſwers before Biſhop Brooks extra judicium.

Anno 1556.

Ye heard before how the Archbiſhop Dr. Cranmer in the month of February was cited up to Rome, and in the month of March next following was degraded by the Biſhop of Ely and Biſhop Boner. In time of which his degradation he put up his Appellation.

In this his Appellation, becauſe he needed the help of ſome good and godly Lawyer, he writeth to a certain Friend of his about the ſame: the Copy of which Letter in Latine is before expreſſed in the old Book of Acts, there to be read. The Engliſh of the ſame I thought good here to inſert, as under enſueth.

A Letter of Doctor Cranmer Archbiſhop, to a Lawyer for the drawing out of his Appeal

Another Letter of the Archb. to a certain learned Lawyer, his Friend about his Appeal.

THe Law of nature requireth of all men, that ſo far forth as it may be done without offence to God, every one ſhould ſeek to defend and preſerve his own life. Which thing, when I about three days ago bethought my ſelf of, and therewithal remembred how that Martin Luther appealed in his time from Pope Leo the Tenth, to a general Council (leſt I ſhould ſeem raſhly and unadviſedly to caſt away my ſelf) I determined to appeal in like ſort to ſome lawful and free general Council. But ſeeing the order and form of an Appeal pertaineth to the Lawyers, whereof I my ſelf am ignorant, and ſeeing that Luthers Appeal cometh not to my hand, I purpoſed to break my mind in this matter to ſome faithful Friend and skilful in the Law, whoſe help I might uſe in this behalf, and you only among other came to my remembrance as a man moſt meet in this Univerſity for my purpoſe. But this is a matter that requireth grat ſilence, ſo that no man know of it before it be done. It is ſo that I am ſummoned to make mine anſwer at Rome, the 16. day of this month; before the which day I think it good after ſentence pronounced, to make mine Appeal. But whether I ſhould firſt appeal from the Judge Delegate to the Pope, and ſo afterward to the general Council, or elſe leaving the Pope, I ſhould appeal immediately to the Council, herein I ſtand in need of your counſel.

Many cauſes there be for the which I think good to appeal. Firſt, becauſe I am by an Oath bound never to conſent to the receiving of the Biſhop of Romes Authority into this Realm. Beſides this, whereas I utterly refuſed to make anſwer to the Articles objected unto me by the Biſhop of Glouceſter, appointed by the Pope to be my Judge, yet I was content to anſwer Martin and Story, with this Proteſtation, that mine anſwer ſhould not be taken as made before a Judge, nor yet in place of judgment, but as pertaining nothing to judgment at all; moreover, after I had made mine anſwer, I required to have a Copy of the ſame, that I might either by adding thereunto, or by altering or taking from it, correct and amend it as I thought good. The which though both the Biſhop of Glouceſter, and alſo the King and the Queens Proctors promiſed me, yet have they altogether broken promiſe with me, and have not permitted me to correct my ſaid anſwers according to my requeſt, and yet notwithſtanding have (as I underſtand) regiſtred the ſame as Acts formally done in place of judgment.

Finally, foraſmuch as all this my trouble cometh upon my departing from the Biſhop of Rome, and from the Popiſh Religion, ſo that now the quarrel is betwixt the Pope himſelf and me, and no man can be a lawful and indifferent Judge in his own cauſe; it ſeemeth (me thinks) good reaſon, that I ſhould be ſuffered to appear to ſome general Council in this matter; ſpecially ſeeing the Law of nature (as they ſay) denieth no man the remedy of appeal in ſuch caſes.

Now, ſince it is very requiſite that this matter ſhould be kept as cloſe as may be, if perhaps for lack of perfect Skill herein you ſhall have need of further advice; then I beſeech you even for the fidelity and love you bear to me in Chriſt, that you will open to no Creature alive whoſe the caſe is. And foraſmuch as the time is now at hand, and the matter requireth great expedition, let me obtain thus much of you, I beſeech you, that laying aſide all other your ſtudies and buſineſs for the time, you will apply this my matter only, till you have brought it to paſs. The chiefeſt cauſe in very deed (to tell you the Truth) of this mine Appeal is, that I might gain time (if it ſhall ſo pleaſe God) to live until I have finiſhed mine anſwer againſt Marcus Antonius Conſtantius, which I have now in hand. But if the Adverſaries of the Truth will not admit mine Appeal (as I fear they will not) Gods will be done; I paſs not upon it, ſo that God may therein be glorified, be it by my life, or by my death. For it is much better for me to die in Chriſts quarrel and to reign with him, then here to be ſhut up, and kept in the Priſon of this Body, unleſs it were to continue yet ſtill a while in this warfare, for the commodity and profit of my Brethren, and to the further advancing of Gods glory: To whom be all glory for evermore, Amen.

This Conſtantius was Ste. Gardiner, as conſtant indeed as a Weather-Cock: who thus named himſelf, writing againſt this good Archbiſhop.

There is alſo yet another cauſe why I think good to Appeal, that whereas I am cited to go to Rome to anſwer there for my ſelf, I am notwithſtanding kept here faſt in Priſon, that I cannot there appear at the time appointed: And moreover, foraſmuch as the ſtate I ſtand in, is a matter of life and death, ſo that I have great need of learned counſel for my defence in this behalf; yet when I made my earneſt requeſt for the ſame, all maner of Counſel and help of Proctors, Advocates, and Lawyers was utterly denied me.

Your loving Friend, Tho. Cranmer.

Another Letter of Dr. Cranmer Archbiſhop, to Mrs. Wilkinſon, exhorting her to fly in the time of Perſecution.

Another Letter of the Archb. to Mrs. Wilkinſon.

THe true comforter in all diſtreſs is only God, through his Son Jeſus Chriſt; and whoſoever hath him, hath company enough if he were in a wilderneſs all alone: and he that hath twenty thouſand in his Company, if God be abſent, is in a miſerable wilderneſs and deſolation. In him is all comfort, and without him is none. Wherefore I beſeech you ſeek your dwelling there whereas you may truly and rightly ſerve God, and dwell in him, and have him ever dwelling in you. What can be ſo heavy a burden as an unquiet Conſcience, to be in ſuch a place as a man cannot be ſuffered to ſerve God in Chriſts Religion? If you be loath to depart from your kin and Friends, remember that Chriſt calleth them his Mother, Siſters, and Brothers, that do his Fathers will. Where we find therefore God truly honoured according to his will, there we can lack neither Friend nor Kin. Matth. 3.

If you be loath to depart for the ſlander of Gods Word, remember that Chriſt, when his hour was not yet come departed out of his Country into Samaria, to avoid the malice of the Scribes and Phariſees; and commanded his Apoſtles that if they were purſued in one place, they ſhould fly to another. And was not Paul let down by a basket out at a window, to avoid the perſecution of Aretas? And what wiſdom and policy he uſed from time to time to eſcape the malice of his enemies, the Acts of the Apoſtles do declare. And after the ſame ſort did the other Apoſtles, alheit, when it came to ſuch a point, that their could no longer eſcape danger of the perſecutors of Gods true Religion, then they ſhewed themſelves, that they flying before came not of fear, but of godly wiſedom to do more good; and that they would not raſhly without urgent neceſſity offer themſelves to death, which had been but a temptation of God. Yea, when they were apprehended, and could no longer avoid, then they ſtood boldly to the profeſſion of Chriſt; then they ſhewed how little they paſſed of death; how much they feared God more then men; how much they loved and preferred the eternal life to come above this ſhort and miſerable life. John 4. Matth. 5. 2 Cor. 11.

Wherefore I exhort you as well by Chriſts commandment, as by the example of him and his Apoſtles, to withdraw your ſelf from the malice of yours and Gods Enemies, into ſome place where God is moſt purely ſerved; which is no ſlandering of the Truth, but a preſerving of your ſelf to God, and the Truth, and to the ſociety and comfort of Chriſts little flock. And that you will do, do it with ſpeed, leſt by your own folly you fall into the perſecutors hands. And the Lord ſend his holy Spirit to lead and guide you whereſoever you go, and all that be godly will ſay, Amen.

Unto theſe former Letters of Dr. Cranmer Archbiſhop, written by him unto others, it ſeemeth to me not much out of place to annex withal a certain Letter alſo of Dr. Taylor, written to him and his fellow-priſoners: the tenor of which Letter here followeth.

To my dear Fathers and Brethren, Doctor Cranmer, Doctor Ridley, and Doctor Latimer, Priſoners in Oxford, for the faithful teſtimony of Gods holy Word.

A Letter written to D. Cranmer and his fellows by D. Taylor.

RIght Reverend Fathers in the Lord, I wiſh you to enjoy continually Gods grace and peace through Jeſus Chriſt; and God be praiſed again for this your moſt excellent promotion which ye are called unto at this preſent, that is, that ye are counted worthy to be allowed amongſt the number of Chriſts records and witneſſes. England hath had but a few learned Biſhops, that would ſtick to Chriſt ad ignem incluſivè. Once again I thank God heartily in Chriſt for your moſt happy on-ſet, moſt valiant proceeding, moſt conſtant ſuffering of all ſuch infamies, hiſſings, clappings, taunts, open rebukes, loſs of living and liberty, for the defence of Gods cauſe, truth, and glory. I cannot utter with pen how I rejoyce in my heart for you three ſuch Captains in the foreward under Chriſts Croſs, Banner, or Standard in ſuch a cauſe and skirmiſh, when not only one or two of our dear Redeemers ſtrong holds are beſieged, but all his chief Caſtles ordained for our ſafeguard, are traiterouſly impugned. This your enterprize in the ſight of all that be in Heaven, and of all Gods people in earth, is moſt pleaſant to behold. This is another manner of Nobility, then to be in the fore-front in worldly warfares. For Gods ſake pray for us, for we fail not daily to pray for you. We are ſtronger and ſtronger in the Lord, his Name be praiſed, and we doubt not but ye be ſo in Chriſts own ſweet School. Heaven is all and wholly of our ſide; therefore Gaudete in Domino ſemper, & iterum gaudete & exultate, i. Rejoyce always in the Lord: and again, rejoyce and be glad.

Many proteſt God ad ignem excluſivè, that is, in words and outward Profeſſion: but few ſtick to him ad ignem incluſivè, that is, in deed, and in ſuffering for his ſake.

Your aſſured in Chriſt,

Rowland Taylor.

Perſecution in Suffolk, Agnes Potten, and Joan Trunchfield, Martyrs.

IN the ſtory of Robert Samuel, mention was made before of two godly Women of the ſame Town of Ipſwich, which ſhortly after him ſuffered likewiſe, and obtained the Crown of Martyrdom, the names of whom was Agnes, the wife of Robert Potten; and another, wife of Michael Trunchfield, a Shoomaker, both dwelling in one Town: who, about the ſame time that the Archbiſhop aforeſaid was burned at Oxford, ſuffered likewiſe in the foreſaid Town of Ipſwich, either in the ſame month of March, or (as ſome ſay) in the end of February, the next month before.

Agnes Potten and Joan Trunchfield, Martyrs.

The Martyrdom of Agnes Potten and Joan Trunchfield at Ipſwich, Anno 1556. March

The Opinions of theſe two Matrons and Martyrs.

Their Opinion or Perſwaſion was this, that in the Sacrament was the memorial only of Chriſts death and paſſion: for (ſaid they) Jeſus Chriſt is aſcended up into Heaven, and is on the right hand of God the Father, according to the Scriptures, and not in the Sacrament, as he was born of the Virgin Mary.

For this they were burned. In whoſe ſuffering their conſtancy worthily was to be wondered at, who being ſo ſimple Women, ſo manfully ſtood to the confeſſion and teſtimony of Gods Word and Verity: Inſomuch, that when they had prepared and undreſſed themſelves ready to the fire, with comfortable words of the Scripture they earneſtly required the People to credit and to lay hold on the Word of God, and not upon mans devices and inventions, deſpiſing the Ordinances and Inſtitutions of the Romiſh Antichriſt, with all his Superſtitions and rotten Religion; and ſo continuing in the torment of fire, they held up their hands, and called unto God conſtantly ſo long as life did endure. This

The ſtrength of God in weak veſſels.

Anno 1556.

The burning of Agnes Potten revealed to her before in her sleep.

This Pottens Wife in a night a little before her death, being asleep in her bed, saw a bright burning fire, right up as a Pole, and one the side of the fire she thought there stood a number of Queen Marys friends looking on. Then being asleep, she seemed to muse with her self whether her fire should burn so bright or no; and indeed her suffering was not far unlike to her dream.

God giveth strength many times, where now weakness is.

This also I thought further to note, how these two being always together in prison, the one which was Michaels Wife, seemed to be nothing so ardent and zealous as Pottens Wife was, although (God be thanked) they did stoutly stand to the confession of the truth both; but when the said Michaels Wife came to the stake, and saw nothing but present death before her she much exceeded the other in joy and comfort; albeit both of them did so joyfully suffer, as it was marvelled at of those that knew them, and did behold their end. And thus these two Martyrs ended their lives with great Triumph: the Lord grant we may do the like, Amen.

March 14. Other three Martyrs. suffering at Salisbury.

After these two Women of Ipswich, succeeded three men, which were burnt the same Month at one fire in Salisbury, who in the like quarrel with the other that went before them and led the dance, spared not their Bodys, to bring their Souls to the celestial felicity, whereof they were thoughly assured in Christ Jesus by his promises, as soon as the furious flames of fire had put their Body and Souls asunder.

The Story of John Maundrel, William Coberley, and John Spicer, Martyrs.

The story of Jo. Maundrel.

First John Maundrel, which was the Son of Robert Maundrel of Rowd in the County of Wiltshire Farmer, was from his Childhood brought up in Husbandry, and after he came to mans state, did abide and dwell in a Village called Buchampten, in the Parish of Kevel within the Country of Wiltshire, aforesaid, where he had Wife and Children, being of good name and fame. Which John Maundrel, after that the Scripture was translated into English by the faithful Apostle of England, Willam Tindal, became a diligent hearer, and a fervent embracer of Gods True Religion, so that he delighted in nothing so much, as to hear and speak of Gods Word, never being without the New Testament about him, although he could not read himself. But when he came into any company that could read, his book was always ready, having a very good Memory; so that he could recite by heart most places of the New Testament, his Conversation and living being very honest and charitable, as his Neighbours are able to testifie.

Maundrel converted first by Tindals Testament.

Maundrel an earnest lover and hearer of Gods Word.

So it was, that in the days of King Henry the eighth, at what time Doctor Trigonion, and Doctor Lee did visit Abbeys, the said John Maundrel was brought before Doctor Trigonion at an Abbey called Edyngton, within the County of Wiltshire aforesaid; where he was accused that he had spoken against the Holy Water and Holy Bread, and such like Ceremonies, and for the same did wear a white sheet, bearing a candle in his hand about the Market, in the Town of the Devises, which is in the said County. Nevertheless, his fervency did not abate, but by Gods merciful assistance he took better hold, as the sequel thereof did declare.

Maundrel accused for speaking against Holy Bread and Holy Water.

Maundrel put to open penance in King Henry days.

For in the days of Queen Mary, when Popery was restored again, and Gods True Religion put to silence, the said John Maundrel left his own House, and departed into the County of Gloucestershire, and into the North part of Wiltshire, wandring from one to another to such men as he knew feared God, with whom as a servant to keep their Cattel, he there did remain with John Bridges or some other at Kingswood; but after a time he returned to his Countrey, and there coming to the Vyes to a friend of his named Anthony Clee, had talk and Conference with him in a Garden, of returning home to his house.

Anthony Clee of the Vyes.

And when the other exhorted him by the words of Scripture, to fly from one City to another, he replied again by the words of the Apocalyps 21. of them that be fearful, &c. said, that he needs must go home, and so did. Where he with Spicer and Coberley used at times to resort and confer together.

At length upon the Sunday following they agreed together to go to the Parish Church called Kevel, where the said Maundrel and the other two, seeing the Parishioners in the procession to follow and worship the Idol there carried, advertised them to leave the same, and to return to the living God, namely speaking to one Robert Parksdale head man of the Parish, but he took no regard to their words.

Maundrel, Spicer, and Coberley, speaking against the Procession.

After this, the Vicar came into the Pulpit, who there being about to read his Bederol, and to pray for the Souls in Purgatory; the said John Maundrel speaking with an audible voyce, said, that was the Popes pinfold, the other two affirming the same. After which words, by Commandment of the Priest they were had to the stocks, where they remained till their service was done, and then were brought before a Justice of Peace, and so the next day carried to Salisbury all three, and presented before Bishop Capon, and W. Geffrey being Chancellor of the Diocess. By whom they were imprisoned, and oftentimes examined of their faith in their Houses, but seldom openly. And at the last examination these were the Articles which the Chancellor alledged against them, being accompanied with the Sheriff of the shire, on Master S. Johns, and other Popish Priests in the Parish Church of Fisherton Anger, demanding how they did believe.

Maundrel calleth Purgatory the Popes pinfold.

Maundrel, Spicer, and Coberley, sent to Salisbury. Doct. Capon Bp. of Salisbury.

They answered, as Christian men should and ought to believe: and first they said, they believed in God the Father, and in the Son, and in the Holy Ghost, the 12. Articles of the Creed, the Holy Scripture from the first of Genesis to the last of the Apocalyps.

Confession of their belief.

But that faith the Chancellor would not allow. Wherefore he apposed them in particular Articles: First, whether that they did not believe that in the Sacrament of the Altar (as he termed it) after the words of Consecration spoken by the Priest at Mass, there remained no substance of Bread nor Wine, but Christs Body, Flesh and Blood, as he was born of the Virgin Mary. Whereunto they answered negatively, saying, that the Popish Mass was abominable Idolatry, and injurious to the Blood of Christ; but confessing that in a faithful Congregation, receiving the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, being duly ministred according to Christs institution, Christs Body and Blood is spiritually received of the faithful believer.

Sacrament of the Altar.

Also, being asked whether the Pope was supream head of the Church, and Christs Vicar on earth; they answered negatively, saying, that the Bishop of Rome doth Usurp over Emperors and Kings, being Antichrist, and Gods enemy.

Against the Popes supremacy.

The Chancellor said, Will you have the Church without Head?

They answered, Christ was head of his Church, and under Christ the Queens Majesty. What, said the Chancellor? a Woman head of the Church? Yea, said they, within her Graces Dominions.

Christ onely supreme head of his Church: under him every Prince in his own dominions.

Also, whether the Souls in Purgatory were delivered by the Popes pardons, and the suffrages of the Church.

They said, they believed faithfully that the Blood of Christ had purged their sins, and the sins of them that were saved, unto the end of the World, so that they feared nothing the Popes Purgatory, or esteemed his pardons.

Purgatory.

Also, whether Images were necessary to be in the Churches, as Lay-mens books, and Saints to be prayed unto and worshipped.

Images.

They answered negatively; John Maundrel adding that wooden Images were good to rost a shoulder of Mutton, but evil in the Church; whereby Idolatry was committed.

Those Articles thus answered (for their Articles were one, and their answers in manner like) the Chancellor read their condemnation, and so delivered them to the Sheriff. Then spake John Spicer, saying;

Sentence read against these three Martyrs.

Oh Maſter Sheriff, now muſt you be their Butcher, that you may be guilty alſo with them of innocent Blood before the Lord. This was the 23. day of March, Anno 1556. and the 24. day of the ſame month they were carried out of the Common Gaol to a place betwixt Salisbury and Wilton, where were two Poſts ſet for them to be burnt at. Which Men coming to the place, kneeled down, and made their prayers ſecretly together, and then being diſcloathed to their Shirts, John Maundrel ſpake with a loud voice, Not for all Salisbury. Which words men judged to be an anſwer to the Sheriff, which offered him the Queens Pardon if he would recant. And after that in like manner ſpake John Spicer, ſaying, this is the joyfulleſt day that ever I ſaw. Thus were they three burnt at two Stakes: where moſt conſtantly they gave their Bodies to the fire, and their Souls to the Lord for teſtimony of his Truth.

March 23.

Maundrel, Spicer, and Coberley brought to the place of martyrdom.

The words of Maundrel.

As touching William Coberley, this moreover is to be noted, that his Wife alſo, called Alice, being apprehended, was in the Keepers houſe the ſame time detained while her huſband was in Priſon. Where the Keepers Wife named Agnes Penicote, had ſecretly heated a Key fire hot, and laid it in the graſs in the backſide. So ſpeaking to Alice Coberly to fetch her the Key in all haſt, the ſaid Alice went with ſpeed to bring the Key, and ſo taking up the Key in haſt did pitteouſly burn her hand. Whereupon ſhe crying out at the ſudden burning of her hand; Ah thou drab, quoth the other, thou that canſt not abide the burning of the Key, how wilt thou be able to abide burning thy whole Body, and ſo ſhe afterward revoked. But to return again to the ſtory of Coberly, who being ſomewhat learned, and being at the Stake was ſomewhat long a burning as the wind ſtood: after his Body was ſcorched with the fire, and his left arm drawn and taken from him by the violence of the fire, that the fleſh being burnt to the white bone, at length he ſtooped over the Chain, and with the right hand, being ſomewhat ſtarkned, knocked upon his breaſt ſoftly, the Blood and matter iſſuing out of his mouth. Afterward when they all thought he had been dead, ſuddenly he roſe right up with his Body again. And thus much concerning theſe three Salisbury Martyrs.

Alice Coberley being in durance, how ſhe was brought by the Keepers Wife to revoke.

Theſe Martyrs were ſent up by the Lord Rich, by Mr. Tyrel, and others.

They were all of Eſſex, and ſo of the Dioceſs of London, and were ſent up, ſome by the Lord Rich, and ſome by others at ſundry times, unto Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, then Lord Chancellor of England, about the 22. day of March, Anno 1555. Who after ſmall examination, ſent them, ſome unto the Kings-Bench, and others unto the Marſhalſea, where they remained almoſt all the whole year, until the death of the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter, and had during that time nothing ſaid unto them. Whereupon, after that Dr. Heath, Archbiſhop of York was choſen to the office of Lord Chancellorſhip, four of theſe perſecuted Brethren, being now weary of this their long impriſonment, made their ſupplication unto the ſaid Dr. Heath, requiring his favour and aid for their deliverance: the Copy whereof enſueth.

To the right reverend Father, Thomas Archbiſhop of York, Lord Chancellor of England.

A Supplication to the Lord Chancellor.

MAy it pleaſe your honourable good Lordſhip, for the love of God to tender the humble ſuit of your Lordſhips poor Orators, whoſe names are ſubſcribed, which have lain in great miſery in the Marſhalſea, by the ſpace of ten months and more, at the commandment of the late Lord Chancellor, to their utter undoing, with their Wives and Children. In conſideration whereof, your Lordſhips ſaid Orators do moſt humbly pray and beſeech your good Lordſhip to ſuffer them to be brought before your Honour; and there, if any man of good Conſcience can lay any thing to our charge, we truſt either to declare our innocency againſt their accuſations, or if otherwiſe their accuſations can be proved true and we faulty, we are ready (God helping us) with our condign puniſhments to ſatisfie the Law according to your wiſe judgment, as we hope, full of fatherly mercy toward us and all men, according to your godly Office, in the which we pray for your godly ſucceſs to the good pleaſure of God, Amen.

This Supplication was ſent (as is ſaid) and ſubſcribed with the names of theſe four under following?

Names ſubſcribed to the ſupplication.

Richard Spurge.

UPon the receipt and ſight hereof, it was not long after, but Sir Richard Read Knight, then one of the Officers of the Court of the Chancery, the 16. day of January, was ſent unto the Marſhalſea to examine the ſaid four Priſoners; and therefore beginning firſt with Richard Spurge upon certain demands, received his Anſwers thereunto: the effect whereof was, that he with others were complained upon by the Parſon of Bocking unto the Lord Rich, for that they came not unto their Pariſh Church of Bocking, where they had inhabited; and thereupon was by the ſaid Lord Rich ſent unto the late Lord Chancellor, about the 22. day of March laſt paſt Viz. Anno 1555.

Ric. Spurge examined.

The Parſon of Bocking accuſer.

And farther, he ſaid, that he came not to the Church ſince the firſt alteration of the Engliſh ſervice into Latin (Chriſtmas day then a twelvemonth only excepted) and that, becauſe he miſliked both the ſame and the Maſs alſo, as not conſonant and agreeing with Gods holy Word.

For not coming to the Popiſh Church.

Moreover, he required that he might not be any more examined upon the matter, unleſs it pleaſed the Lord Chancellor that then was, to know his fault therein, which to him he would willingly utter.

Thomas Spurge.

THomas Spurge being then next examined, made the ſame anſwer in effect that the other had done; confeſſing, that he abſented himſelf from the Church, becauſe the Word of God was not there truly taught, nor the Sacraments of Chriſt duly miniſtred in ſuch ſort as was preſcribed by the ſame Word. And being farther examined of his belief concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, he ſaid; That if any could accuſe him thereof, he would then make anſwer as God had given him knowledge therein.

Tho. Spurge examined.

George Ambroſe.

THe like anſwer made George Ambroſe, adding moreover, that after he had read the late Biſhop of Wincheſters Book, intituled, De vera obedientia, with Boners Preface thereunto annexed, inveighing (both) againſt the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome, he did much leſs ſet by their doings then before.

George Ambroſe examined.

John Cavel.

John Cavel agreeing in other matters with them, anſwered, that the cauſe why he did forbear the coming to the Church, was, that the Parſon there had preached two contrary Doctrines. For firſt, in a Sermon that he made at the Queens firſt entry to the Crown, he did exhort the People to believe the Goſpel; for it was the Truth, and if they did not believe it, they ſhould be damned. But in a ſecond Sermon, he preached that the

Rob. Drakes Parſon of Thunderſley examined.

ABout the fourth day of March next after; Robert Drakes alſo was examined, who was Parſon of Thunderſley in Eſſex, and had there remained the ſpace of three years. He was firſt made Deacon by Dr. Taylor of Hadley, at the commandment of Dr. Cranmer, late Archbiſhop of Canterbury. And within one year after (which was the third year after King Edward) he was by the ſaid Archbiſhop and Dr. Ridley Biſhop of London, admitted Miniſter of Gods holy Word and Sacraments, not after the order then in force, but after ſuch order as was after eſtabliſhed; and was preſented unto the ſaid Benefice of Thunderſley by the Lord Rich; at the ſuit of Mr. Cauſton and Mr. Treheron; and now notwithſtanding was ſent up by the ſaid Lord Rich, with the others before-mentioned: and at his coming to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, was by him demanded whether he would conform himſelf like a Subject to the Laws of this Realm then in force. To the which he ſaid he would abide all Laws that ſtood with the Laws of God; and thereupon was committed to Priſon, where he and the reſt above-named did remain ever ſince.

Drakes placed in the Benefice of Thunderſley by the L. Rich.

William Tyms.

NOw remaineth likewiſe to declare the examination of William Tyms, Deacon and Curate of Hockley in Eſſex. But before I come to his Examination, firſt here is to be opened and ſet forth the order and manner of his trouble, how and by whom he was firſt apprehended in Eſſex, and from thence ſent up to London: the ſtory whereof followeth in this manner.

The ſtory of William Tyms Deacon and Curate of Hockley, with the manner of his taking.

The firſt occaſion of taking Wil. Tyms.

THere was at Hockley in Queen Maries days two Sermons preached in the Woods, the which Woods were appertaining to Mr. Tyrel; and the name of the one Wood was called Plumborough-Wood, and the other Beches-Wood, and there was at the ſame Sermons an honeſt man and his wife with him, whoſe name was John Gye, the which Gye was Mr. Tyrels Servant, and did dwell under him, being his Herd at a Farm of his called Plumborow. Shortly after it was known to Mr. Tyrel, how that his Woods were polluted with Sermons, the which he did take very evil, and much matter did ariſe about it, as an unlawful Aſſembly; the which was laid to John Gyes charge, becauſe he did not diſcloſe that unlawful act to his Maſter, being then in the Commiſſion of Peace, appointed at that time to keep down the Goſpel, the which he did to the uttermoſt, as it may appear in many of his acts. Good God give him repentance if it be thy will.

Mr. Tyrell offended with Sermons preached in his Woods.

Shortly after it pleaſed Mr. Tyrel to come to Hockley to ſift out this matter, and to know who was at theſe Preachings. Well, there were found many faulty; for it is ſuppoſed there were an hundred perſons at the leaſt. So it pleaſed Mr. Tyrel to begin firſt with John Gye, and asked him where that naughty fellow was that ſerved their Pariſh, one Tyms; for it is told me (ſaid he) that he is the cauſe to bring theſe naughty Fellows into the Country. Therefore I charge thee Gye to fetch me this naughty Fellow Tyms, for thou knoweſt where he is. No, ſaid Gye, I do not know. So in no wiſe could he make him fetch him.

John Gye, M. Tyrels Servant, an honeſt man.

Then ſtepped forth another of Maſter Tyrels men, willing to ſhew his Maſter pleaſure, whoſe name was Richard Sheriff, and ſaid to his Maſter; Sir, I know where he is. Well, ſaid Maſter Tyrel, go to the Conſtables, and charge them to bring him to me.

Rich. Sheriff, M. Tyrels man, Perſecutor. Edw. Hedge, John James, Conſtables.

So this Sheriff being diligent, made ſure work, and had him brought before his Maſter with the Conſtables, whoſe names be theſe Edward Hedge, and John James.

So when he came before the ſaid Mr. Tyrel, then Mr. Tyrel commanded all men to depart; and it was wiſely done, for he was not able to open his mouth againſt Tyms without reproach, and there he kept him about three hours. But there were ſome that liſtened at the walls, and heard Mr. Tyrel ſay thus to Tyms.

Talk between Mr Tyrel, and W. Tyms.

Me thinketh (ſaid he) that when I ſee the bleſſed Rood, it maketh me think of God.

Why Sir, ſaid Tyms, if an Idol that is made with mans hands doth make you remember God; how much more ought the Creatures of God, as man being his workmanſhip, or the graſs, or the Trees that bring forth fruit, make you remember God?

So Mr. Tyrel ended his talk with Tyms it ſhould ſeem in an heat, for he braſt out and called him traitorly Knave.

Why Sir, ſaid Tyms, in King Edwards days you did affirm the Truth that I do now.

Affirm, quoth Tyrel? nay by Gods Body, I never thought it with my heart.

Well, ſaid Tyms, then I pray you Maſter Tyrel bear with me, for I have been a Traitor but a while, but you have been a Traitor ſix years.

Tyms ſent up to London.

After this Tyms was ſent to London to the Biſhop, and from him to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and ſo from him to the Kings Bench, and then was Mr. Tyrels rage ceaſed with them that were in the Woods at the Sermons. So Mr. Tyrel took away Gyes Coat, and gave it to John Traiford, and ſent him to St. Toſies to ſee good rule kept there.

Wil Tyms brought and examined before B. Boner, and the Biſhop of Bathe.

When Tyms came before the Biſhop of London, there was at that time the Biſhop of Bathe, and there was William Tyms examined of his Faith before them both. So mightily God wrought with this true hearted man, that he had wherewith to anſwer them both; for the Conſtables did ſay that brought him before the Biſhop, that they never heard the like. Then the Biſhop (as though he would have had Tyms to turn from the Truth) ſaid to the Conſtables, I pray you (ſaid he) give him good counſel, that he may turn from his error. My Lord, ſaid the Conſtables, he is at a point, for he will not turn.

Then both the Biſhops waxed weary of him, for he had troubled them about ſix or ſeven hours. Then the Biſhops began to pity Tyms caſe, and to flatter him, ſaying, Ah good Fellow (ſaid they) thou art bold, and thou haſt a good freſh ſpirit, we would thou hadſt learning to thy ſpirit. I thank you (my Lords) ſaid Tyms, and both you be learned, and I would you had a good ſpirit to your learning. So thus they broke up, and ſent Tyms to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and there were Edward Hedge and John James the Conſtables aforenamed diſcharged, and Tyms was commanded to the Kings Bench, where he was mightily ſtrengthned with the good men that he found there.

Wil. Tyms ſent from B. Boner to the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

And thus hitherto ye have heard, firſt upon what occaſion this William Tyms was apprehended, how he was intreated of Mr. Tyrel the Juſtice, and by him ſent up to the Ordinary of the Dioceſs, which was Biſhop Boner; who after certain talk and debating he had with the ſaid Tyms, at length directed him to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, being then Lord Chancellor, and yet living, and ſo was commanded by him upon the ſame to the Kings Bench.

Here by the way is to be underſtood, that Tyms as he was but a Deacon, ſo he was but ſimply, or at leaſt not Prieſtly apparelled, foraſmuch as he went not in a Gown, but in a Coat; and his Hoſen were of two colours, the upper part white, and the neather ſtocks of Sheeps ruſſet. Whereupon the proud Prelate ſending for him to come before him, and ſeeing his ſimple attire, began to mock him, ſaying, Ah Sirra, are you a Deacon? Yes, my Lord, that I am, quoth Tyms. So methinketh, ſaid the Biſhop, ye are decked like a Deacon. My Lord, ſaid Tyms, my veſture doth not ſo much vary from a Deacon; but methinketh your apparel doth as much vary from an Apoſtle.

Talk between the Biſhop of Wincheſter and Wil. Tyms.

So then there ſpake one of the Biſhops Gentlemen, My Lord (ſaid he in mockage) give him a Chair, a Toſt and Drink, and he will be luſty. But the Biſhop bade, have him away, and commanded him to come before him again the next day at an hour appointed.

But

Anno 1556.

But Winchester, for lack of leiſure, or becauſe of ſickneſs growing upon him, or for what cauſe elſe I know not, either would not, or could not attend unto him, but returned him again to his ordinary Biſhop from whence he came. So William Tyms being put off again to Biſhop Boner, was placed together and coupled with the other five Martyrs above named, and with them brought together to publick examination before the Biſhop the 21. day of March, firſt in the Biſhops Palace of London, where the ſaid Biſhop after his accuſtomed manner proceeding againſt them, enquired of them their faith upon the Sacrament of the Altar. To whom they anſwered, that the Body of Chriſt was not in the Sacrament of the Altar really and corporally, after the words of conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt: of the which opinion they had been of long time, ſome later, ſome ſooner, even as God of his mercy did call upon them unto the knowledge of his Goſpel.

These five Martyrs where R. Drake, Tho. Spurge, Rich. Spur., Cave, and Ambroſ. Their examinations before the Bp. of London. Sacrament of the Altar.

Then the Biſhops Chaplains began to reaſon with them, but with no great Authoritys either of the Scriptures, or of the ancient Fathers (ye may be ſure) as other their large conferences with the learned do already declare.

Another Examination of Tyms and Drakes, and the reſt before the Biſhop of London.

March 23. THe 23. day of the ſame month next after, the Bp. ſent again for Tyms and Drakes, and Ex officio, did object unto them certain Articles the ſum and manner whereof were the ſame which before were objected to Whittle, Greene, Tudſon, Went, Brown, Eliz. Foſter, Joan Laſhford, look before. And the 26. day of the ſame month, he ſent for the other four, miniſtring unto them alſo the ſame general Articles. Unto the which they all in effect anſwered in matters touching their faith, as did the ſaid Bartlet Greene and the reſt. Other appearings they had, as the Biſhops common manner of proceeding was more (as I have often ſaid) for order and form of Law, then for any zeal of juſtice.

Wil. Tyms with the reſt again examined.

March 28. But in concluſion, the 28. day of his month of March, William Tyms, and Robert Drakes, with the other four above named, were brought to the open Conſiſtory in Pauls before the ſaid Biſhop of London to be condemned for Hereſie.

B. Boners words to Wil. Tyms.

The Biſhop firſt began in this or like ſort; Tyms, quoth he, I will begin with thee firſt, for thou art and haſt been the ring-leader of theſe thy companions, thou haſt taught them Hereſies, and confirmed them in their erroneous opinions, and haſt endeavoured as much as in thee lyeth, to make them like unto thy ſelf. If thy fault had not tended to the hurt of other, I would then have uſed thee more charitably, and not have brought thee to this open rebuke. I would according to the rule of Chriſt in the 18. of Matthew, have told thee thy fault between me and thee; if thou wouldeſt not have heard me, I would not ſo have left thee, but I with two or three other would have exhorted thee; if that would not have ſerved, then would I have told the Church, &c. But for that thy fault is open and manifeſt to the World, and thou thy ſelf remainſt ſtout in thine errour, this charitable dealing is not to be extended towards thee: I have therefore thought good to proceed by another rule, whereof St. Paul ſpeaketh, 1 Timothy 5. Such as ſin, rebuke them openly, that other may fear. For this cauſe art thou brought before me in the face of this People, to receive judgment according to thy deſerts. Let me ſee what thou canſt ſay, why I ſhould not proceed againſt thee as thine Ordinary.

Matth. 18.

1 Tim. 5.

The anſwer of Wil. Tyms. to Biſh. Boner.

My Lord (quoth Tyms) will you now give me leave to ſpeak? Yea, quoth the Biſhop. Then ſaid Tyms; My Lord, I marvel that you will begin with a lie. You call me the ring-leader and teacher of this company, but how untruly you have ſaid, ſhall ſhortly appear: for there is none of all theſe my Brethren, which are brought hither as priſoners, but when they were at liberty and out of priſon, they diſſented from you and your doings, as much as they do at this preſent; and for that cauſe they are now priſoners.

So it is evident, that they learned not their Religion in priſon. And as for me, I never knew them, until ſuch time as I by your commandment was priſoner with them; how could I then be their ring-leader and teacher? So that all the World may ſee how untruly you have ſpoken. And as for my fault which you make ſo grievous, whatſoever you judge of me, I am well aſſured that I hold none other Religion then Chriſt preached, the Apoſtles witneſſed, the Primitive Church received, and now of late the Apoſtolical and Evangelical Preachers of this Realm have faithfully taught; for the which you have cruelly burned them, and now you ſeek our Blood alſo. Proceed on hardly by what rule you will; I force not, I do not refuſe you for my Ordinary.

Biſh. Boners words.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, I perceive thou wilt not be counted their ring-leader. How ſaiſt thou, wilt thou ſubmit thy ſelf to the Catholick Church as an Obedient Child? in ſo doing thou ſhalt be received and do well enough, otherwiſe thou ſhall have judgment as an Heretick.

One of the priſoners anſwereth Bp. Boner.

Then one of the priſoners (whoſe name is not certainly known) ſaid; My Lord, you are no upright Judge, for you judge after your own luſt. But if you will judge us according to the Holy Teſtament of Chriſt, which is the Word of Truth, we will accord to your judgment; for unto that Word we wholly ſubmit our ſelves. But as for your judgment without the Truth God ſhall condemn. And this priſoner was very earneſtly in hand with the Biſhop, that they might be judged by the Word of God.

With this the Biſhop was offended, calling him buſie knave, and commanded him to hold his tongue, or elſe he ſhould be had away to a place of ſmaller eaſe.

Wil. Tyms again anſwereth.

Then Tyms anſwered and ſaid; My Lord, I doubt not but I am of the Catholick Church whatſoever you judge of me. But as for your Church, you have before this day renounced it, and by Corporal Oath promiſed never to conſent to the ſame. Contrary to the which you have received into this Realm the Popes Authority, and therefore you are falſly perjured and forſworn all the ſort of you. Beſides this, you have both ſpoken and written very earneſtly againſt that Uſurped Power, and now you do burn men that will not acknowledge the Pope to be Supreme Head.

B. Boner charged with perjury and inconſtancy.

Have I, quoth the Biſhop? Where have I written any thing againſt the Church of Rome?

Boners Preface to Winch. book De vera obedientia.

My Lord, quoth Tyms, the Biſhop of Wincheſter wrote a very learned Oration, intituled, De vera obedientia, which containeth worthy matter againſt the Romiſh Authority. Unto the which book you made a Preface, inveighing againſt the Biſhop of Rome, reproving his Tyranny and falſhood, calling his power falſe and pretenſed. The book is extant, and you cannot deny it.

B. Boner excuſeth himſelf by fear.

Then was the Biſhop ſomewhat abaſhed, and looking upon ſuch as were preſent, ſpake very gently, ſaying; Lo, here is a goodly matter indeed. My Lord of Wincheſter being a great learned man, did writte a book againſt the ſupremacy of the Popes Holineſs, and I alſo did write a Preface before the ſame book, tending to the ſame effect. And thus did we becauſe of the perillous World that then was. For then was it made treaſon by the laws of this Realm to maintain the Popes Authority, and great danger it was to be ſuſpected a favourer of the See of Rome; and therefore fear compelled us to bear with the time, for otherwiſe there had been no way but one. You know when any uttered his Conſcience in maintaining the Popes Authority, he ſuffered death for it.

And then turning his tale unto Tyms, he ſaid; But ſince that time, even ſince the coming in of the Queens Majeſty, when we might be bold to ſpeak our Conſcience we have acknowledged our faults, and my Lord of Wincheſter himſelf ſhamed not to recant the ſame at Pauls Croſs. And alſo thou thy ſelf ſeeſt that I ſtand not in it, but willingly have ſubmitted my ſelf. Do thou alſo as we have done.

Tyms again replyed to the Biſhop.

My Lord, quoth Tyms, that which you have written againſt the ſupremacy of the Pope, may be well approved by the Scriptures. But that which you now do, is againſt the Word of God, as I can well prove.

Then

Anno 1556.

Then another, I ſuppoſe it was Dr. Cooke, ſaid; Tyms, I pray thee let me talk with thee a little, for I think we two are learned alike. Thou ſpeakeſt much of the Scripture, and yet underſtandeſt it not. I will tell thee to whom thou mayſt be compared. Thou art like to one which intending to go on hunting, riſeth up early in the morning, taketh his Hounds, and forth he goeth, up to the hills, and down into the vallies; he paſſeth over the fields, over hedge and ditch, he ſearcheth the woods and thickets; thus laboureth he all the whole day, without finding any game. At night home he cometh weary of his travel, not having caught any thing at all; and thus fareth it by thee. Thou laboureſt in reading of the Scriptures, thou takeſt the Letter, but the meaning thou knoweſt not, and thus thy reading is as unprofitable unto thee, as hunting was unto the man I ſpake of even now.

An Hunters parable againſt Wil. Tyms wiſely applied:

Sir, quoth Tyms, you have not well applied your ſimilitude; for I praiſe God, I have not read the Scriptures unprofitably: but God, I thank him, hath revealed unto me ſo much as I doubt not is ſufficient for my ſalvation.

The anſwer of Tyms to the Hunters ſimilitude.

Then ſaid the Biſhop; You brag much of knowledge, and yet you know nothing: you ſpeak much of Scripture, and you know not what Scripture is. I pray thee tell me; How, knoweſt thou that thing to be the Word of God, which thou calleſt Scripture?

B. Boners Reaſon:

To this anſwerd Robert Drakes, that he did know it to be the Word of God, for that it doth ſhew unto men their ſalvation in Chriſt, and doth revoke and call back all men from wicked life, unto a pure and undefiled converſation.

Robert Drake anſwereth.

The Biſhop replied, that the heathen Writers have taught precepts of good living, as well as the Scripture; and yet their writings are not eſteemed to be Gods Word.

Boner replieth.

To this anſwered Tyms, ſaying; The Old Teſtament beareth witneſs of thoſe things which are written in the New, for (quoth he) there is nothing taught in the New Teſtament, but it was fore-ſhewed in the Law and Prophets.

Tyms anſwereth to Boner.

I will deny all, quoth the Biſhop, I will deny all; what ſayſt thou then? Then Robert Drakes alledged a ſentence in Latine out of the Prophet Eſay, in the 59. Chapter of his Propheſie; Spiritus meus qui eſt in te, &c. My Spirit Which is in thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of the mouth of thy ſeed, nor out of the mouth of the ſeed of thy ſeed from henceforth even for ever; meaning thereby to prove, that he which had the Spirit of God, could thereby diſcern and judge truly which was Gods Word: But before he could explicate his mind, he was interrupted by the Biſhop, who ſpake unto Dr. Pendleton, ſaying.

Boner denying the principles of Divinity. Eſay 59.

Maſter Doctor, I pray you ſay ſomewhat unto theſe Folks that may do them ſome good. Then Dr. Pendleton, as he leaned near unto the Biſhop, covered his face with both his hands, to the end he might the more quietly deviſe what to ſay; but other talk was preſently miniſtred, ſo that for that time he ſaid nothing.

B. Boner calleth for more help. D. Pendleton ſtudieth for talk.

And thus much William Alsbury, witneſs hereof, being preſent thereat, ſo far as he heard, hath faithfully recorded and reported. What more was ſpoken and there ſaid (for they made not yet an end a good while after) becauſe he departed then out of the houſe, he doth not know, nor did hear.

Then the Biſhop, after this and ſuch like communication thus paſſed between them, proceeding at length in form of Law, cauſed both his Articles and Anſwers to the ſame, there and then to be openly read: the ſum of which his Confeſſion recorded and left by his own hand writing, tended to this effect as followeth.

The Articles for the which William Tyms of Hockley in Eſſex, was condemned in the Conſiſtory in Pauls, the 28. day of March, with his Anſwers and Confeſſion upon the ſame.

Articles anſwered by W. Tyms.

FIrſt, I did truly confeſs and believe, that I was baptized, in the true Catholick Church of Chriſt; for when I was baptized, there was the element and the Word of God, according to Chriſts inſtitution. And my Godfathers and Godmothers did promiſe for me, that I ſhould forſake the Devil, and all his works, and that I ſhould keep Gods Commandments, and believe all the Articles of the Chriſtian Faith; the which I do believe at this day, and with Gods help I truſt to do while I live; for it was not the wickedneſs of the Miniſter that made the Sacrament of none effect, &c.

His Baptiſm by his Gossfathers.

Item, I confeſſed two Sacraments, and but two in Chriſts true Church; that is, the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and that Chriſt is preſent with his Sacraments, as it pleaſeth him.

Only two Sacraments.

Item, I confeſſed that Chriſt hath a viſible Church, wherein the Word of God is truly preached, and the Sacraments truly miniſtred.

The true viſible Church.

Item, I confeſſed the See of Rome to be as the late Biſhop of Wincheſter hath written in his Book, De vera obedientia, to the which I ſaid unto the Biſhop of London, that he had made a godly Preface; and alſo John Bale hath plainly declared in his Book, called the Image of both Churches, even ſo much as I believe thereof.

Wincheſters Book, De vera obedientia.

Item, I confeſſed the Maſs to be blaſphemy to Chriſts death and paſſion.

The Maſs blaſphemous.

Item, I Confeſſed that in the Sacrament of the Altar Chriſt is not preſent either ſpiritually or Corporally; but as they uſe it, it is an abominable Idol.

Sacrament of the Altar an Idol.

Laſt of all, I confeſſed the Biſhop of London to be mine Ordinary.

After this the Biſhop falling to intreating and perſwaſions, earneſtly exhorted him to revoke his Hereſies (as he termed them) and to reform himſelf unto the Church of Rome, and not to ſtick ſo much to the literal ſenſe of the Scriptures, but to uſe the interpretation of the old Fathers.

To the which Tyms anſwered, I will not reform my ſelf thereunto. And I thank God, of this day; for I truſt he will turn your curſings into bleſſings.

And furthermore, asking this queſtion, he ſaid; And what have you to maintain the real preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, but only the bare Letter?

We have (quoth the Biſhop) the Catholick Church.

No, ſaid Tyms, you have the Popiſh Church of Rome for you, for which you be perjured and foreſworn. And the See of Rome is the See of Antichriſt; and therefore to that Church I will not conform my ſelf, nor once conſent unto it.

The Popes Church. The See of Rome, the See of Antichriſt.

Then the Biſhop ſeeing his conſtant boldneſs to be unmoveable, proceeding to his Condemnation, pronounced the ſentence definitive upon him, and gave him over to the ſecular Power.

Sentence read againſt Wil. Tyms.

The Condemnation of Robart Drakes

After, calling for Robert Drakes, he uſed towards him the like manner of exhortation that he did before. To whom Drakes ſaid; As for your Church of Rome, I utterly defie and deny it, with all the works thereof, even as I deny the Devil and all his works.

The anſwer of R. Drakes.

The Biſhop then uſing his accuſtomed order of Law, with his like exhortations, at laſt gave him the like bleſſing that Tyms had, and ſo charged the Sheriff with him.

Sentence given againſt Drakes.

The Condemnation of Thomas Spurge, and of the other three Martyrs

Thomas Spurge being next demanded if he would return to the Catholick Church, ſaid as followeth; As for your Church of Rome, I do utterly deny it: but to the true Catholick Church I am content to return, and continue in the ſame, whereof I believe the Church of Rome to be no part or member. Then in fine, calling the reſt in their courſes, and upon the like demands receiving the like anſwers, the ſaid Biſhop gave unto each of them their ſeveral judgments, and ſo ridding his bloudy hands, committed them unto the cuſtody of the Sheriffs of London, who ſent them unto Newgate, whither they went all moſt joyfully, abiding there the Lords good time, wherein they ſhould ſeal this their Faith with the ſhedding of their Blood; which they moſt ſtoutly and willingly performed, the fourteenth day of April, as before is mentioned.

The anſwer of Thomas Spurge.

Sentence given againſt Tho. Spurge, Rich. Spurge, Cavel and Ambroſe.

Letters

Letters of William Tyms.

To his faithful Sister in the Lord, Parishoner in the Town of Hockley, named Agnes Glascock.

A Letter of W. Tyms to Agnes Glascock.

THe grace, mercy, and peace of God our Father through Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour, with the sweet comfort of his holy and mighty Spirit, to the performance of his will, to your everlasting comfort, be with you my dear Sister Glascock, both now and evermore, Amen.

My most dear and entirely beloved Sister, yea Mother I might rightly well call you for the Motherly care which you have always had for me, I have me most heartily commended unto you, giving God most hearty thanks for you, that he hath given you so loving a heart to Christs poor Gospel, and his poor afflicted flock for the same: and as you have full godly begun, so I beseech God to give you power to go forward in the same, and never more to look back, fearing neither fire, neither sword; and then I warrant you, you have not far to run.

And now (my dear Heart) remember well what I have taught you when I was present with you, and also written being absent, and no doubt we shall shortly meet again with a most joyful meeting. I go upon Friday next to the Bishop of Londons Cole-house, which is the 20. day of March, where I think it will be hard for any of my Friends to speak with me. Howbeit I trust I shall not long tarry there, but shortly after be carried up after my dear Brethren and Sisters, which are gone before me into Heaven in a fiery Chariot: therefore now I take my leave of you, till we meet in Heaven; and hie you after. I have tarried a great while for you, and seeing you be so long a making ready, I will tarry no longer for you. You shall find me merrily singing, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Sabbath, at my Journeys end. Therefore now (my dear Heart) make good hast, and loyter not by the way, lest night take you, and so ye be shut out of the gate with the foolish Virgins. And now (my Sister) in witness that I have taught you nothing but the truth, here I write my name with my Blood for a testimonial unto you, that I will seal the simple Doctrine which I have taught you, with the rest. And thus fare you well: And God defend you from Antichrist, and all his Ministers, the false Priests, Amen.

These words following were written with his own Blood.

Another Letter of Wil. Tyms to Mr. Glascock.

GOd be merciful unto you, pardon and forgive all your sins, and send you Faith to believe the same, that you may be partaker of his heavenly Kingdom, Amen.

My dear Sister, I have most heartily commended unto you; and as I have lamented your falling from God, by being partaker with that Idolatrous Priest; so have I, since I heard of your earnest repentance, very much rejoyced, and also praised Almighty God for his mercy shewed unto you, in that he hath not left you to your self, but since your denial, he hath shewed his mercy on you, by looking back on you as he did on Peter, and so caused you to repent as Peter did, and bitterly to weep for your sins: whereas if God had left you to your self, you had run forward from one evil to another, till at length your heart should either have been hardened, or else you should have despaired of the mercy of God. And seeing that God hath been so merciful unto you as he hath been, be you not unthankful unto him for the same. For I certifie you that your sorrowful heart, that you have had, doth declare unto me that God hath pardoned and forgiven all your sins for the blood-shedding of that immaculate Lamb, Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour.

Therefore as Peter, after the time that Christ had forgiven him his sin, did boldly confess Christ before all his enemies; even so my dear heart in the Lord, seeing that God hath so mercifully pardoned and forgiven you your sins, now cleave unto him, and be at defiance with his enemies the Papists: and as they do bear witness with their Father the Devil, by going to the Church, and shedding the innocent blood of all those that will not go with them; even so do you bear witness with Christ, by not coming there: for all those that do go thither shall be partakers of their Brethrens blood, that is shed for the testimony of Christ, except they repent and amend; which grace that they may so do, I beseech the eternal God for his Christs sake, if it be his good will, to give them in his good time. And the same good God that hath been so merciful unto you to call you to repentance, him I beseech to keep you in his fear and love, that you may have always affiance in him, and evermore seek his honour and glory to your everlasting comfort in Christ, Amen. Thus fare you well, from the Kings-Bench this 28. of August.

Another Letter of W. Tyms to certain godly Women of his Parish.

GRace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ, be with you both now and evermore, Amen.

Dear Sisters, I have me most heartily commended unto you, thanking you for the great kindness shewed unto me in this time of mine imprisonment, and not only unto me, but also unto my poor Wife and Children; and also for the great kindness that you shew unto all the living Saints that be dispersed abroad, and are fain to hide their heads for fear of this cruel persecution.

Dear Sisters, when I do remember your constancy in Christ, I call to remembrance the constancy of divers godly Women, as Susannah, Judith, Hester, and the good wife of Nabal, that through her godly conditions saved both her husbands life, and all her household, when David had thought to have slain him for his churlish answer that he sent him. Also I do remember Rahab that lodged the Lords Spies, how God preserved her and her whole household for her faithfulness that she bare to Gods People. So I do believe that when the Lord shall send his Angel to destroy these Idolatrous Egyptians here in England, and shall find the blood of the Lamb sprinkled on the door-post of your hearts, he will go by and not hurt you, but spare your whole houshold for your sakes. Also I do remember Mary Magdalen, how faithful she was; for she was the first that preached the Resurrection of Christ. Remember the blessed Martyr Anne Askew in our time, and follow her example of constancy. And for the love of God take heed that in no case you do consent to Idolatry, but stand fast to the Lord, as the good Woman did that had her seven Sons put to death before her face, and she always comforting them, yea and last of all suffered death her self, for the testimony of her God, which is the living God. Thus I beseech God to send you grace and strength to stand fast to the Lord, as she did, and then you shall be sure of the same Kingdom that she is sure of; to the which Kingdom I pray God bring both you and me, Amen.

give you grace to love your own Souls, and then I truſt you will flee from all thoſe things that ſhould diſpleaſe our good and merciful God, and hate and abhor all the company of thoſe that would have you to worſhip God any otherwiſe than is contained in his holy Word. And beware of thoſe Maſters of Idolatry, that is, theſe Papiſtical Prieſts. My dear Brethren, for the tender mercy of God, remember well what I have ſaid unto you, and alſo written, the which I am now ready to ſeal with my Blood. I praiſe God that ever I lived to ſee the day, and bleſſed be my good and merciful God, that ever he gave me a Body to glorifie his Name. And (dear Hearts) I do now write unto you for none other cauſe, but to put you in remembrance, that I have not forgotten you, to the end that I would not have you forget me but to remember well what I have ſimply by word of mouth and writing taught you. The which although it were moſt ſimply done, yet truly, as your own Conſcience beareth me record: and therefore in any caſe take good heed that you do not that thing which your own Conſcience doth condemn. Therefore come out of Sodom, and go to Heaven-ward with the ſervants and martyrs of God, leſt you be partakers of the vengeance of God that is coming upon this wicked Nation; from the which the Lord God defend you, and ſend us a joyful meeting in the Kingdom of Heaven: unto the which God bring you all, Amen. Thus now I take my leave of you for ever in this world, except I be burned amongſt you, which thing is uncertain unto me, as yet.

THe everlaſting peace of our dear Lord and only Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, with the ſweet comfort of his holy and mighty Spirit, to the increaſe of your Faith, to the performance of his will, and to your eternal comfort in the everlaſting Kingdom of heaven, be with you my dear Brethren and Siſters both now and ever, Amen.

My moſt dear Brethren and Siſters in our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, I have me moſt heartily commended unto you, with hearty thanks for all the great liberality that you have ſhewed unto me, and eſpecially now in this time of my neceſſity, when that God hath ſent my poor Wife a Child in my Captivity; which is no little care to me, ſo to provide, that I might keep both the Child and my Wife from the Antichriſtian Church: the which thing I thank my God, through his moſt gracious providence, I have yet done, though it be (as ye know) great Charge, not to me, but to the Congregation of God; and it grieveth me that I have been ſo chargeable to them as I have been, and ſpecially you my dear Brethren, I being ſo unworthy a member as I have been, and alſo of ſo ſmall acquaintance; but ſuch is the merciful goodneſs of God, ſo to move your hearts with Charity towards me. And as he hath moved your hearts ſo to do, even ſo I beſeech God to give you power to forſake and refuſe all things which be diſpleaſant in his ſight, and to do all things which be requiſite to a Chriſtian; and ſend you grace to go forwards in the ſame as you have godly begun, neither fearing fire nor ſword. And, my moſt dear Hearts, remember well the ſimple plain Doctrine the which I have taught you, and alſo written unto you, which was the Truth, and for a teſtimony of the ſame, I truſt that you ſhall ſhortly hear, or elſe ſee that I will ſeal the ſame with my Blood. And in the mean time I deſire you all to remember me in your prayers, as I know you do, and as with Gods help I will do for you, that God, for his dear Son Chriſts ſake, will ſo finiſh the days of our pilgrimage, that we may reſt together with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, in the everlaſting kingdom of Heaven; to the which I beſeech the eternal God for his Chriſts ſake to bring both you and all yours, Amen.

GRace and peace from God the Father of all mercy, through the merits of our dear Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, be perceived and felt in the hearts of you, my dearly beloved Siſters in the Lord, by the mighty working of the Holy Ghoſt the Comforter, both now and evermore, Amen.

My moſt dear and entirely beloved Siſters in the Lord, after my moſt hearty Commendations, according to my moſt bounden duty, I do as I am accuſtomed, or at leaſt bound to do, that is, I give you warning of your Enemies, which be the Papiſts, and take good heed to them, for they ſerve a crafty Maſter; yea, and as St. Peter ſaith, he ſleepeth not, but goeth about like a roaring Lion, ſeeking whom he may devour. For your old familiar Friends, or worldly Campanions, when they ſee that you will not run to the Idols Temple with them, it will ſeem a ſtrange thing unto them, that ye run not to the ſame exceſs of riot, as St. Peter ſaith, and therefore they will ſpeak evil of you, rail on you, and perſecute you.

1 Pet. 5.

1 Pet. 4.

But, my dear Siſters, let it not trouble you, for it is but to try you, and let it not ſeem a ſtrange thing unto you. But when they do ſo, remember wherefore it is, and for whoſe ſake, even becauſe you will not forſake God as they do. For the hatred they bear you, is for the Word of God, and then it is Gods cauſe, and I tell you he will revenge it. And therefore if ye be railed on, and troubled for his ſake, think your ſelves moſt happy. For if you ſuffer with the Patriarchs, Prophets and Apoſtles, then ſhall ye be ſure to be partakers of the ſame joy that they are in. Yea, you have heard by the Word of God, how cruelly the Tyrants always have perſecuted the true Members of Chriſt, as he himſelf hath promiſed that they ſhall do unto the end of the world.

Rom. 12.

By the way I will bring to your remembrance the holy Martyr St. Stephen, who for favouring, maintaining and defending the ſame Doctrine that we now ſuffer for, was called a Blaſphemer, and ſtoned to death at Jeruſalem. And Chriſts Apoſtles were diverſly afflicted all the world over for the ſame by this viperous generation. Antipas the faithful witneſs of Chriſt was ſlain at Pergamus. Jaſon for receiving of Paul and Silas, with other Diſciples and teachers of the Goſpel, was brought before the Council at Theſſolanica, and accuſed for a ſeditious traytor againſt Cæſar. No marvel therefore though at this day we be vexed on the ſame ſort, maintaining the ſame cauſe, and favouring the teachers thereof. Is there any other reward following the true Servants of God now, than hath been afore-times? No ſurely, for ſo hath Chriſt promiſed. And if they have perſecuted him, needs muſt they perſecute his Members; if they have called the Maſter of the houſe Beelzebub, ſo will they do his houſhold; You ſhall be hated of all men (ſaith Chriſt) for my Names ſake.

Matth. 10.

It is no new thing, my dear Hearts, to ſee the true Members of Chriſt handled as in our days they be, as it is not unknown to you how they be cruelly entreated, and blaſphemed without any reaſonable cauſe. For Hereticks muſt they be taken, which follow not their traditions. And then they may as well call Chriſt an Heretick, for he never allowed their dirty Ceremonies. He never went a proceſſion with a Cope, Croſs, or Candleſtick. He never ſenſed Image, nor ſang Latin Service. He never ſate in Confeſſion. He never preached of Purgatory, nor of the Popes Pardons. He never honoured Saints, nor prayed for the Dead. He never ſaid Maſs, Mattins, nor Evenſong. He never commanded to faſt Friday nor Vigil, Lent nor Advent. He never hallowed Church nor Chalice, Aſhes nor Palms, Candles nor Bells. He never made holy Water nor holy Bread, with ſuch like. But ſuch dumb Ceremonies, not having the expreſs commandment of God, he calleth the leaven of the Phariſees, and damnable hypocriſie; admoniſhing his Diſciples to beware of them. He curſeth all thoſe that add to his Word ſuch beggarly ſhadows, wiping their names clean out of the Book of Life. St. Paul ſaith, they have no portion with Chriſt, which wrap themſelves again with ſuch yokes of bondage.

Chriſt may as well be called an Heretick as theſe men.

Matth. 16. Luke 12. Deut 4. Apoc. 22. Pſal. 68. Gal. 4.

There-

Therefore my dear hearts, ſeeing that our good God hath by the light of his Holy Word, delivered us from all ſuch dark, blind, dumb, beggarly traditions of men, Galath. 5. ſtand faſt in the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made you free, and wrap not your ſelves again in the yoke of bondage. But let us always be ready, looking for the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, which as Saint Peter ſaith, will come as a thief in the night. 2 Pet. 3. And our Captain Chriſt ſaith, If the good man of the Matth. 24. houſe knew what hour the thief would come, he would ſurely watch.

Therefore my dear hearts, be of good comfort, although the World rage never ſo ſore againſt you. And for your comfort mark well the great mercy of God, who according to his promiſe for the weakneſs of our nature hath ſo aſſwaged the heat of the fire, that our dear Brethren which are gone before us, to the ſight of all men, have found it rather to be joy then pain. And think you ſurely God will be as merciful unto you, as he hath been unto them; and ſay with S. Paul, Rom. 8. Who ſhall ſe- Rom. 8. parate us from the love of God? ſhall tribulation, or anguiſh, or perſecution, either hunger, either nakedneſs, either peril, either ſword? as it is written, for thy ſake are we killed all the day long, &c.

Therefore (my dear Siſters) if to ſave your lives, any diſſembling Goſpellers would have you to go to the Idols Temple with them, ſay unto them; No, for my Mr. Matth. 10. Chriſt ſaith, Matth. 10. He that would ſave his life, ſhall loſe it. And in another place to comfort us he ſaith, There ſhall not one hair fall from your head, without it be your Heavenly Fathers will. And therefore ſay you that you will not be of that ſort, that be neither hot nor cold, leſt God ſhould ſpue you out of his mouth. But make them 2 Cor. 6. this anſwer, ſaying; S. Paul ſaith, 2 Corinth. 6. Bear no ſtrange yoke with the unbelievers. For what fellowſhip hath righteouſneſs with unrighteouſneſs, what company hath light with darkneſs, what concord hath Chriſt with Belial, either what part hath he that believeth, with an infidel? How agreeth the Temple of God with images? And ye are the Temple of God, as God ſaith, I will dwell among them, walk among them, and will be their God, and they ſhall be my People. Wherefore come out from among them, and ſeparate your ſelves (ſaith the Lord) and touch no unclean thing: ſo will I receive you, and wil be a Father unto you, and ye ſhall be my Sons and Daughters, ſaith the Lord.

Thus mine own Bowels in the Lord, as I began, ſo make I an end, bidding you beware of your enemies, and take up your Croſs, and follow your Captain Chriſt in at the narrow gate here by perſecution, and then you ſhall be ſure to reign and rejoyce with him in his everlaſting Kingdom, which he himſelf hath purchaſed with his own moſt precious Blood: to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, be all honour both now and for ever, Amen.

Another Letter of William Tyms, with an Exhortation to all Gods faithful Servants, to eſchew the Society of Idolaters, and Gods enemies.

Another Letter of Wil. Tyms to Gods faithful Servants.

GRace be with you, and peace from the Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

I thank my God with all remembrance of you always in my prayers for you, and pray with gladneſs, becauſe of the fellowſhip which ye have in the Goſpel, from the firſt day that I knew you, untill this day; and I am ſurely certified of this, that he which hath begun a good work in you, ſhall go forth with it, until the day of Jeſus Chriſt, as it becometh me to judge of you; whom I have in my heart, and as companions of grace with me, even in my bonds. And thus I pray, that your love may increaſe more and more in knowledge. Good Brethren, I moſt heartily deſire God, that as you have a willing mind to comfort my vile Earthly Body in this time of perſecution, ſo he will ſtrengthen you with his Holy Spirit, that my impriſonment do not diſcomfort, but rather ſtrengthen and comfort you, to ſee the goodneſs of God ſhewed unto me, in that being a man without learning, and brought before three ſuch Biſhops concerning Worldly Wiſdom, he gave me both mouth and Wiſdom; inſomuch that the Bp. of London went away in a great haſt from me, and after that he ſent his man with a Bible, turning to the ninth chapter to the Hebrews, and the Biſhop of Bathe looking on it, ſaid; What meaneth my Lord? this maketh nothing for his purpoſe. Then I looked on it, and ſaid; my Lord ſeeth that I was weak, and therefore he hath holpen me; for here he hath condemned the ſacrifice of your Maſs: for you ſay that you offer a daily ſacrifice in your Maſs, both for the quick and the dead; and here 'S. Paul ſaith, Without Blood-ſhedding there is no forgiveneſs of ſins; Heb. 9. therefore that is here condemned. He anſwered, Yea, ſaith he ſo? So ſay all ſuch Hereticks, and ſo forth, with many like arguments, which my neighbors that heard them, can declare, therefore I leave them. This have I written, that you ſhould not be afraid, but call upon God, as he hath commanded us to ask, and we ſhall have; Seek and you ſhall find, knock and it ſhall be opened unto you. Alſo he hath commanded us to call on him in the day of trouble, and he hath promiſed to hear us. Therefore if we have not both mouth and Wiſdom at his hand, the fault is in us, that either we wil not repent us of our wickedneſs, and amend our lives, or elſe we be unfaithful, and believe not the promiſes of God; and ſo we our ſelves, are the cauſe that this Wiſdom is lacking in us. Therefore let us repent and amend our lives, and God is merciful. And in any caſe, as I have always ſaid unto you, ſince I firſt knew you, ſo ſay I now: Beware of Idolatry, and of your good intents; if not, mark what hath followed upon them that have left Gods commandments, and done their own good intents. Remember when the Children of Iſrael had made them a golden Calf, did not God ſay they had mard all, and would have deſtroyed them, had not Moſes earneſtly prayed for them? I let many others places alone that prove the Wrath of God to come upon the People for Idolatry; therefore as we will avoid the Wrath of God, let us keep us unſtained from it. You have example out of the Old Teſtament, how loth the Godly Fathers were to be partakers with the wicked: And yet to ſee how little we regarded it, it would make any Chriſtian mans heart to weep. God ſend us more grace. Firſt look in the 11. and 12. of Geneſis; Abraham, becauſe he would not be partaker of their Idolatry, fled from the People of Caldea, being his native countrey. And in the 19. of Geneſ. Lot at the commandment of the Angels departed from Sodom, leſt he tarrying with the Sodomites ſhould have been conſumed with them. In the 21. of Geneſis, Sarah would not ſuffer Iſmael, which was given to mocking, to keep company with her Son Iſaac, leſt he ſhould alſo become a mocker. Look in the 16. of Numbers, Moſes at Gods appointment commanded the People to depart from the dwelling places of Chore, Dathan, and Abiram, leſt they alſo ſhould be all wrapped in their ſins, and ſo periſh among them. So do I, even as Moſes Commanded them that they ſhould not keep company with thoſe wicked People, leſt the Vengeance of God ſhould light on them, ſo do I (I ſay) give you warning that you ſhould not keep company with the Idolaters, in their Idolatrous Temples, leſt the wrath of God come upon you to deſtroy you.

Anno 1556.

B. Tonar went away from W. Tyms, belike not able to make his part good.

God giveth mouth and utterance to his Saints.

Warning to come away from the wicked.

Look what S. Paul ſaith in the ſecond Epiſtle, and the ſixth chapter to the Corinthians; Set your ſelves (ſaith 2 Cor. 6. he) therefore at large, and bear no ſtrange yoak with the unbelievers: for what fellowſhip hath righteouſneſs with unrighteouſneſs? what company hath light with darkneſs? what concord hath Chriſt with Belial: either what part hath he that believeth, with an Infidel? How agreeth the Temple of God with Images? And ye are the Temple of God, as ſaith God; I will dwell among them, and walk among them, and will be their God, and they ſhall be my People. Wherefore come out from among them, and ſeparate your ſelves (ſaith the Lord) and touch no unclean thing.

Good Brethren mark what cometh of keeping company with the wicked. Syrach ſaith, He that toucheth pitch, Syrach 13. ſhall be defiled withal: and he that keepeth company with the proud, ſhall cloath himſelf with pride. Even ſo he that is familiar with Idolaters, cannot be unſtained from Idolatry, except he do it to win them to Chriſt, as there be but a few that do: Yea, it may not be where Idolatry is openly committed, as for an example; Peter, ſo long as he continued with Chriſt and Chriſts Diſciples, he continued continued in the truth, preached the truth, confeſſed openly Chriſt to be the Son of the living God; and promiſed that he would not only go to Priſon; but alſo to very death with him: but when he came once into the Court into the Biſhops Houſe, he ſtreightway was ſtricken with ſure fear, that a poor Maiden and ſimple Ruffian (ſuch a one as my Lord of London hath, that ſaid, By Gods blood, if I meet with any of theſe vile Hereticks, I will thruſt an Arrow in him) when Peter (I ſay) was amongſt them, he denied his Maſter, and ſwore that he never knew him, whom he, before he came there, boldly confeſſed before all men: and again, after that he had repented him of his wicked deed, he boldly preached to the believing Jews, commanding them among other his godly Exhortations, to ſave themſelves from that untoward Generation. How many of our Prieſts before this ſtorm of Perſecution, when the Goſpel was truly preached, were bold, and could ſay, They would dye rather than deny their Maſter? But when they come once into the Biſhops Houſes, they preach no more Chriſt, but utterly deny him: therefore I pray God keep them from thence, or elſe ſend them more grace and ſtrength. It is needful to pray; therefore watch in prayer.

What it is to be aſſociate in ill company.

A vile ſervant of Bp. Boner.

Acts 7.

Paul, all the while he was among the Biſhops, was a cruel Perſecutor, but after he was called of God from the Biſhops, he became a true Preacher: therefore God keep all Chriſtian men out of the hands of our Biſhops. S. Paul in the fifteenth to the Romans, ſaith, I dare not ſpeak any of thoſe things that Chriſt hath not wrought by me. He ſaith alſo, Rom. 16. I beſeech you brethren, mark them that make diviſion, and give occaſion of evil, contrary to the Doctrine that ye have learned, and them avoid: for they that are ſuch ſerve not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but their own bellies; and with ſweet and flattering words deceive the hearts of the ſimple. Our Maſter Chriſt himſelf hath given us warning which they be: for he hath ſet the plain mark on them, in the 24. of Matthew, If they ſay here is Chriſt, or there is Chriſt, believe them not, ſaith Chriſt. If they ſay, he is in the deſert, go not forth. If they ſay, he is in the ſecret place, believe them not. And I pray you, where can he be more ſecret, then in ſo ſmall a piece of bread? For my Lord of London, like a Liar, ſaid to me, that after the words be ſpoken, there remaineth neither Bread nor Wine. Then I asked him what he ſaid to David, where he ſaith, Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thy holy One to ſee corruption. How ſay you to that? Will not the Sacrament of the Altar putrifie or corrupt? He anſwered, Yes. I asked him, what it was that did corrupt, if there were neither Bread nor Wine. He anſwered, and ſaid the Accidents. I ſaid unto him, It was a mad Accident without Subſtance: for you ſay, there is neither Bread nor Wine, and then there is nothing to * corrupt: with many ſuch like Arguments.

Bp. Boner not able to anſwer to this place of David.

* How can corruption be referred to Accidents, when by all Philoſophy generation and corruption belong only to the Predicament of Subſtance?

Therefore beware of them, for they go about to deceive you with ſuch Arguments. Say not but ye be warned, and a great deal the more worthy of your damnation, if they deceive you, becauſe you have had ſo much warning. Repent you betimes of your ſinful lives, and amend, and then no doubt but God will either turn their hearts, or elſe take them away, or elſe he will give us that, that he promiſed to his Diſciples, if we be contented to take the ſame reward they had. And if we diſdain the one, let us not look for the other. For he that will be his Fathers heir, muſt be contented to receive his Fathers correction. For S. Paul ſaith in the twelfth to the Hebrews, If we be not under correction, whereof all are partakers, then are we baſtards and not ſons.

And you know what belongeth to a baſtard; he ſhall not be his Fathers heir. And if we remember our ſelves well, how negligent we have been to our Fathers commandment, we ſhall find our ſelves worthy to be corrected at his hand. If we refuſe his correction, he will refuſe us to be his ſons. I pray you look what he promiſed to his Diſciples, and I pray you alſo look how willingly they received it. And ſo, muſt we do, if we will be partakers with them. Firſt let us ſee what Chriſt promiſed to his Diſciples. Look in the tenth of S. Matthew, and there ſhall you ſee theſe words, Behold, I ſend you forth as ſheep among wolves. Be wiſe therefore as ſerpents, and innocent as doves. Beware of men, for they ſhall deliver you up to the Councils, and ſhall ſcourge you in their Synagogues: ye ſhall be brought before the Head-rulers and Kings for my Names ſake. But when they put you up, take ye no thought, how or what ye ſhall ſpeak; for it ſhall be given you in the ſame hour what ye ſhall ſpeak. For it is not you that ſpeak, but the Spirit of my Father which ſpeaketh in you, &c. Read the whole Chapter, for it is very comfortable to a Chriſtian man; and mark it well, and you ſhall find what we ought to do in the time of Perſecution. Alſo look in the ſecond Epiſtle of S. Paul to the Corinthians, and the fourth Chapter, he ſaith; For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jeſus ſake, that the life alſo of Jeſus might appear in our mortal fleſh. Thus have you heard that S. Paul doth boaſt of Perſecution; even ſo ſhould we, for it is the way to bring us to reſt.

Therefore let us ſtrive to enter in at the narrow gate, and let us remember the ſaying of S. Paul in the 21. Chapter of the Acts of the Apoſtles, when he was going to Jeruſalem. When he was in the Houſe of Philip the Evangeliſt, there came in a Prophet, and took off his girdle, and bound his hands and his feet, ſaying, Thus ſhall they do with the man that oweth this girdle when he cometh to Jeruſalem. When the Diſciples heard that, they would have perſwaded him that he ſhould not go thither. Here you ſhall ſee what anſwer this Paſtor made them; he was a faithful Shepherd; What do ye weeping and breaking of my heart? I am not ready to be bound only, but alſo to dye at Jeruſalem, for the Name of the Lord Jeſus.

Yet I think there be ſome that will ſay, that I needed not to have been taken, if I would have kept me out of the way. But I ſay unto them; that the ſhrinking away of ſo many of our Shepherds as be gone, maketh ſo many of the Flock to ſcatter; which will be required at their hands, of the Maſter of the Sheep. What will he ſay to them at the day of Accompt when they ſhall come to receive their wages? He ſhall ſay to them, Depart from me ye wicked Hirelings, for when ye ſaw the Wolf come, ye ran away, and left my Sheep in the Wilderneſs. If you had been good Shepherds, you would rather have loſt your lives than have loſt one Sheep committed to your charge, through your fault. And I pray you, what caſe be the Sheep in, when their Shepherd runneth away from them? I need not tell you, you know the danger that followeth ſo well.

A note for them which ſhrunk away having Cures.

Therefore let us pray to God to ſend us faithful Shepherds, and alſo obedient Sheep, that will not hear a ſtrangers voice. I would all men would mark well the ſaying of S. Paul in the eighth to the Romans, where he ſaith in theſe words, Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of God? ſhall tribulation, or anguiſh, or perſecution, either nakedneſs, either peril, either ſword? As it is written, For thy ſake are we killed all the day long, and are counted as ſheep appointed to be ſlain: nevertheleſs we overcome ſtrongly through his help that loved us. Yea, I am ſure that neither death, neither life, neither Angels, neither rule, neither power, neither things preſent, neither things to come, neither height, neither depth, neither any other creature ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God; and ſo forth. Alſo he ſaith in another place, All that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution, 2 Tim. 3. Thus I prove it to be our heavenly Fathers rod: therefore let us thankfully receive it; like obedient Children, and then our Father will love us.

Yet hear what S. Peter ſaith in his firſt Epiſtle, and the fourth Chapter, Dearly beloved (ſaith he) be not troubled in this heat which is now come among you to try you, as though ſome ſtrange thing had happened unto you: but rejoyce inaſmuch as ye are partakers of Chriſts Paſſions, that when his glory appeareth you may be merry and glad. If ye be railed on for the name of Chriſt, happy are ye, for the ſpirit of glory, and the ſpirit of God reſteth upon you. On their part he is evil ſpoken of, but on your part he is glorified. Here S. Peter ſaith, it is no ſtrange thing; and that I have partly proved before, becauſe we have nothing elſe promiſed us in this world.

Therefore let us call on God for grace. Be ye ſure that they can do nothing to us, till God permit it. As for enſample, Look in the firſt Book of Kings, Chap. 19. you ſhall ſee how Saul perſecuted David, purpoſing to kill him: but his labour was in vain.

Also in the third Book of Kings, the 19. Chapter, Jezabel threatned and sware to slay Elias, but the Lord preserved him. Also in the second chapter of Job, you see that Satan could do nothing to Job, till God suffered him, neither exercise his cruelness any further then God had appointed him. The Godly Woman Susanna, in the thirteenth of Daniel, through the false accusation of the wicked Judges, was even at a point to dye, yet God wonderfully delivered her. These have I written to put you in remembrance, that Man can do no more then is the will of God: therefore let us not resist his will, but refer all to him: and let us be doing that thing that God hath commanded us in his holy Word.

Exhortation not to refuse Christ Cross.

Dear Brethren, for the Blood of Christ refuse not the Cross of Christ, but remember the saying of the godly Man David in his 119. Psalm, where he saith, It is good for me that I have been in trouble, that I may learn thy Statutes. In the same place he saith, Before I was in trouble, I went wrong, but now I have kept thy word. Even so it is in trouble with us, for the Word of God was never so sweet and comfortable, as it is now that we be in trouble. Also Saint Paul saith in the fifth chapter to the Romans, We rejoyce in tribulation: For we know that tribulation bringeth patience, patience bringeth experience, experience bringeth hope, and hope maketh not ashamed.

God's Word never so sweet as in trouble.

Also I pray you remember the saying of Saint Paul in the second to Timothy, and the first chapter, where he saith, Be not ashamed to testifie the Lord: neither be ashamed of me. Even so I say unto you, dear brethren, Be not ashamed of my imprisonment, neither sorry, but rejoyce with me, that it hath pleased God of his goodness to call me to such a dignity as this shall be unto me, if I may have his Grace to lose my Life (which I regard as most vile) for his Names sake: for then I shall be sure to find it again with advantage. Therefore I desire you all that you will pray with me unto Almighty God, that he of his merciful goodness will send me his Grace and strength, that I may continue unto the end; as I will pray for you, that God will preserve you from all the wicked ways of Antichrist, and strengthen and comfort you, if it be his good pleasure that you shall suffer any thing for his names sake, as he he hath faithfully promised to do. And I certifie you, that if all Men knew the comfort they should receive at the hand of God, being in prison, I think there would come more to prison then there do. For surely we find such comfort at the hand of God since we have been in prison, that we had rather dye then be abroad to see the Idolatry that is committed among them that be abroad; beside the seeking one of anothers Blood, with other wickedness too much; God send me more Grace. But I trust, among you there be none such: and if there be, repent and amend, lest it be verified on you, that is spoken by the Prophet Jeremy, the second Chapter, where he saith, My people hath committed two great evils: They have forsaken me the Fountain of the living Waters, and digged them pits: pits (I say) that are broken, and can hold no Water. Also in the seventh Chapter, he saith, Hear not the words of the Prophets that preach their own dreams. Good Brethren beware of those false Prophets that I have given you warning of.

Experiment of Gods comfort in the prisonment of his servants.

Dearly beloved, here I make an end for this time, desiring the same health both of Body and Soul unto you all, that I would have my self; and I end with the same that Saint Peter saith in his first Epistle and the fifth Chapter, Submit your selves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you when the time is come. Cast all your care on him, for he careth for you. Be sober and watch, for your adversary the Devil like a roaring Lion walketh about, seeking whom he may devour, whom resist stedfast in faith: remembring that ye do but fulfil the same afflictions, that are appointed to your brethren that are in the World. The God of all Grace that called you unto his eternal Glory, by Christ Jesus, shall his own self, after you have suffered a little affliction, make you perfect, shall settle, strengthen and stablish you. To him be glory and dominion for ever, and while the World endureth, Amen.

Greet one another with an holy kiss of love. Peace be with you all which are in Christ Jesus. I pray you all say, Amen.

These be in the same prison where I am; the Bishop of S. Davids, Doctor Taylor of Hadley, Master Philpot, and my singular good Father Master Bradford, with five other of Sussex, Laymen. Anno 1556.

I desire some good Brother; to write this new, for I wrote it (as I do many times) with fear. For if the Keepers had found me, they would have taken it from me, and my Pen and Ink also.

Good Brethren, I am kept alone, and yet I thank God he comforteth me past all the comfort of any Man: for I thank him, I was never merrier in Christ.

About this time, or somewhat before, came down certain Commissioners assigned by the Queen and Council, to Norfolk and Suffolk (as to other Countries else besides) to enquire of matters of Religion: unto the which Commissioners there was a Supplication then exhibited by some good and well disposed Men (as by the same may appear) dwelling about those parts. ¶ A certain Godly Supplication exhibited by certain Inhabitants of the County of Norfolf, to the Commissioners come down to Norfolk and Suffolk, fruitful to be read and marked of all Men.

A Supplication exhibited to the Commissioners in Norfolk.

IN most humble and lowly wise, we beseech your Honors, Right Honourable Commissioners, to tender and pity the humble suit of us poor Men, and true, faithful, and obedient Subjects, who as we have ever heretofore, so intend we, with Gods Grace, to continue in Christian obedience unto the end, and (according to the Word of God) with all reverend fear of God, to do our bounden duty to all those Superiour Powers; whom God hath appointed over us, doing as St. Paul saith, Rom. 13. Let every Soul be Subject to the Superiour Powers. For there is no Power but of God: but those Powers that are, are ordained of God. Wherefore whosoever resisteth the Powers, the same resisteth God, and they that resist, get themselves judgment. These lessons (Right Honourable Commissioners) we have learned of the holy Word of God, in our Mother Tongue.

The Authority of Kings and Queens approved.

First, That the Authority of a King, Queen, Lord, and other their Officers under them, is no tyrannical usurpation, but a just, holy, lawful, and necessary estate for Man to be governed by, and that the same is of God, the Fountain and Author of Righteousness.

Secondly, That to obey the same in all things not against God, is to obey God, and to resist them, is to resist God. Therefore, as to obey God in his Ministers and Magistrates bringeth life; so to resist God in them, bringeth punishment and death. The same lesson have we learned of S. Peter, 1 Pet. 5. saying, Be ye subject to all humane ordinances for the Lords sake, whether it be to the King, as to the most highest, or to the Lieutenants sent from him, to the punishment of evil doers, but to the praise of such as do well. For so is the will of God, that with well doing, ye should stop the mouths of foolish and ignorant Men; as free, and not as having the liberty to be a cloak to malice, but as the servants of God.

Christian Men bound to obey God in his Magistrates.

Wherefore considering with our selves, both that the Magistrates power is of God, and that for the Lords sake we be bound to Christian obedience unto them, having now presently a Commandment, as though it were from the Queens Majesty; with all humble obedience due to the Regal Power and Authority ordained of God (which we acknowledge to stand wholly and perfectly in her Grace) and with due reverence unto you her Graces Commissioners, we humbly beseech you with patience and pity to receive this our answer unto this Commandment, given unto us.

The honour of God to be preferred before all regal honour and power.

First, Right Honourable Commissioners, we have considered our selves to be not only English Men, but also Christians, and therefore bound by the holy vow made to God in our Baptism, to prefer Gods Honour in all things, things, and that all obedience (not only of us mortal men, but even of the very Angels and heavenly Spirits) is due unto Gods Word; inſomuch that no obedience can be true and perfect, either before God or Man, that wholly and fully agreeth not with Gods Word.

Anno 1556.

Q. Maries Injunctions diſagreeing from Gods word, how and wherein Then have we weighed the Commandment concerning the reſtitution of the late aboliſhed Latin Service, given unto us to diſſent and diſagree from Gods Word, and to command manifeſt impiety, and the overthrow of godlineſs and true religion, and to import a ſubverſion of the Regal Power of this our Native Country and Realm of England, with the bringing in of the Romiſh Biſhops Supremacy, with all Errors, Superſtitions, and Idolatry, waſting of our Goods and Bodies, deſtroying of our Souls, bringing with it nothing but the ſevere wrath of God, which we already feel, and fear leſt the ſame ſhall be more fiercely kindled upon us. Wherefore we humbly proteſt, that we cannot be perſwaded, that the ſaid wicked Commandment ſhould come from the Queens Majeſty, but rather from ſome other, abuſing the Queens goodneſs and favour, and ſtudying to work ſome feat againſt the Queen, her Crown, and the Realm, to pleaſe with it the Roman Biſhop, at whoſe hands the ſame thinketh hereafter to be advanced.

Heſt. 3.

1 Eſd. 4.

As the Agagite Aman wrought maliciouſly againſt the noble King Aſſuerus, and as the Princes of Babel wrought againſt the good King Darius: ſo think we the Queens moſt gentle heart to be abuſed of ſome, who ſeeking themſelves and their own vain glory, procure ſuch Commandments as are againſt the glory of God. For we cannot have ſo evil an opinion in her Majeſty, that ſhe ſhould ſubvert the moſt godly and holy Religion (ſo accordingly to Gods Word ſet forth by the moſt noble, vertuous, and innocent King, a very Saint of God, our late moſt dear King Edward, her Graces Brother) except ſhe were wonderfully abuſed; who, as hating reformation, will rather the deſtruction of all others, then acknowledge their errors, and to be according to Gods Word, reformed. For truly, the Religion, lately ſet forth by King Edward, is ſuch in our Conſciences as every Chriſtian man is bound to confeſs to be the Truth of God, and every Member of Chriſts Church here in England muſt needs imbrace the ſame in heart, and confeſs it with mouth, and (if need require) loſe and forſake, not only houſe, land and poſſeſſions, riches, wife, children and friends; but alſo (if God will ſo call them) gladly to ſuffer all manner of perſecution, and to loſe their lives in the defence of Gods Word and Truth ſet out amongſt us. For our Saviour Chriſt requireth the ſame of us, ſaying, Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me and my word before this adulterous and ſinful generation, the Son of Man will alſo be aſhamed of him, when he ſhall come in the glory of his Father with the holy Angels. And again ſaith he, Whoſoever will confeſs me before men, I will confeſs him before my Father that is in Heaven. And whoſoever will deny me before men, I will alſo deny him before my Father that is in Heaven. And whoſoever ſhall ſpeak a word againſt the Son of Man, it ſhall be forgiven him, but whoſoever ſhall rail againſt the holy Ghoſt, it ſhall not be forgiven him.

Q. Mary evil incenſed.

Luke 9.

Matth. 10.

Matth. 12.

We humbly beſeech the Queens Majeſty, and you her honourable Commiſſioners, be not offended with us, for confeſſing this Truth of God, ſo ſtraitly given us in charge of Chriſt; neither bring upon us, that great ſin that never ſhall be forgiven, and ſhall cauſe our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt in the great day of Judgment, before his heavenly Father and all his Angels, to deny us, and to take from us the bleſſed price and ranſome of his bloodſhed, wherewith we are redeemed.

An honeſt Petition to Q. Mary.

For in that day, neither the Queens Highneſs, neither you, nor any man ſhall be able to excuſe us, nor to purchaſe a pardon of Chriſt for this horrible ſin and blaſphemy of caſting aſide and condemning his Word. We cannot agree nor conſent unto this ſo horrible a ſin; but we beſeech God for his mercy to give us and all men grace, moſt earneſtly to flee from it, and rather (if the will of God be ſo) to ſuffer all extremity and puniſhment in this world, then to incur ſuch damnation before God.

Example of K. Manaſſes.

Manaſſes, who reſtored again the wickedneſs of Idolatrous Religion before put down by Ezechias his Father, brought the wrath of God upon the People: ſo that the Scripture ſaith, Notwithſtanding the Reformation made by Joſias, the Lord turned not from the fierceneſs of his great wrath wherewith he was angry againſt Juda, becauſe of the provocation with the which Manaſſes provoked him. And the Lord ſaid, even Juda will I take away from my preſence, as I caſt away Iſrael: and I will caſt away this City of Jeruſalem, and the houſe whereof I ſaid, My name ſhall be there. 4 Reg. 23.

Example of Jeroboam.

Jeroboam, who at Bethel and Dan erected up a new found Service of God, and not only ſinned himſelf, but alſo made all Iſrael to ſin with him, ſo that not only he was damned for commanding, but the wrath of God came upon all Iſrael, for obeying that his ungodly Commandment: Yet was it not ſo heinous an offence to bring in an Idolatry never yet heard of, as after Reformation made by the godly Kings and Princes, by the vertuous and holy Biſhops, by the Prophets and Servants of God, to reject and caſt off the Word and true Religion of God, and to receive again a damned Impiety.

This moſt heinous offence is now offered unto us, although the ſame be painted and coloured with the name of Reformation, reſtoring of Religion, ancient Faith, with the name of the Catholick Church, of Unity, Catholick Truth, and with the Cloak of feigned Holineſs. Theſe are ſheepskins, under the which (as Chriſt ſaith) ravening Wolves cover themſelves. But Chriſt willeth us to look upon their fruits, whereby we may know them; and truly that is no good fruit, to caſt aſide Gods Word, and to baniſh the Engliſh Service out of the Churches, and in the place of it to bring in a Latin Tongue unknown unto the People. Which as it edifieth no man, ſo it hath been occaſion of all blindneſs and error among the People. For afore the bleſſed Reformation begun by the moſt noble Prince of godly memory, the Queens good Father; and by our late holy and innocent King, her good Brother, finiſhed; it is not unknown what blindneſs and error we were all in, when not one man in all this Realm unlearned in the Latin, could ſay in Engliſh the Lords Prayer, or knew any one Article of his Belief, or rehearſe any one of the Ten Commandments. And that ignorance, mother of miſchief, was the very root and well-ſpring of all Idolatry, Sodomitical Monkery, and whoriſh Chaſtity of unmarried Prieſts, of all whoredom, drunkenneſs, covetouſneſs, ſwearing and blaſphemy, with all other wicked ſinful living. Theſe brought in the ſevere wrath and vengance of God plaguing ſin with Famine and Peſtilence; and at laſt the Sword conſumed and avenged all their impiety and wicked living. As it is greatly to be feared the ſame or more grievous Plagues ſhall now again follow.

Foul idolatry let out with fair ſhews and pretenſes.

Ignorance wilfully maintained.

We cannot therefore conſent nor agree that the Word of God and Prayers in our Engliſh Tongue, which we underſtand, ſhould be taken away from us, and for it a Latin Service, we wot not what (for none of us underſtand it) to be again brought in amongſt us, ſpecially ſeeing that Chriſt hath ſaid, My ſheep hear my voice, and follow me, and I give to them everlaſting life. The Service in Engliſh teacheth us, that we are the Lords People, and the Sheep of his Paſture, and commandeth that we harden not our hearts, as when they provoked the Lords wrath in the wilderneſs, leſt he ſwear unto us, as he did ſwear unto them, that they ſhould not enter into his reſt.

Service in Latin not to be admitted. John 10.

Againſt Latin Mattins.

The Service in Latin is a confuſed noiſe; which if it be good, (as they ſay it is) yet unto us that lack underſtanding, what goodneſs can it bring? S. Paul commandeth, that in the Churches all things ſhould be done to edifying, which we are ſure is Gods Commandment. But in the Latin Service nothing is done to edifying, but contrarily all to deſtroy thoſe that are already edified, and to drive us from Gods Word and Truth, and from believing of the ſame, and ſo to bring us to believe lies and fables, that tempting and provoking God, we ſhould be brought into that judgment that bleſſed Paul ſpeaketh of, ſaying, Antichriſt ſhall come according to the working of Satan, with all manner of power and ſigns, and lying wonders in all deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs in thoſe that periſh: becauſe they have not received the love of the truth, that they might be ſaved. And therefore God will ſend them ſtrong deluſion, that they ſhould believe lies and be damned, as many as have not beleeved the truth, but have approved unrighteouſneſs.

In the Popes Service there is no edifying. what fables be in it the Lord knoweth. 2 Theſ. 2.

Thus, altogether drawn from God, we ſhall fall into his wrath through unbelief, till he ſwear unto us as he did unto the unfaithful Jews, that ſuch Infidels ſhall not enter into his reſt.

The true uſe of the Lords Supper extinct.

In the Adminiſtration of the Lords Supper, which we confeſs to be the holy Communion, and partaking with Chriſt and his holy Congregation, we have learned Gods holy Commandments, and at the rehearſal of every one of them to ask God mercy for our moſt grievous tranſgreſſions againſt them, and to ask grace of God, to keep them in time to come, that the ſame may not only outwardly ſound in our ears, but alſo inwardly by the Holy Ghoſt be written in our hearts.

We have learned alſo the holy Prayer made for the Queens Majeſty; wherein we learn that her Power and Authority is of God, therefore we pray to God for her, that ſhe and all Magiſtrates under her, may rule according to Gods Word, and we her Subjects obey according to the ſame.

Cauſes why the Commiſſioners commandment ought not to be received.

Truly (moſt honourable Commiſſioners) we cannot think theſe things evil, but think them moſt worthy to be retained in our Churches, and we would think our ſelves not to have true Subjects hearts, if we ſhould go about to put away ſuch godly Prayers, as put us perpetually in memory of our bounden obedience and duty to God and our Rulers. For, as we think, at this preſent the unquiet Multitude had more need to have theſe things more often and earneſtly beaten and driven into them (ſpecially given in many places to ſtir and trouble) then to take from them that bleſſed Doctrine, whereby only they may to their ſalvation be kept in quiet.

Receiving in both kinds.

Furthermore, we cannot forſake that bleſſed partaking of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſts Inſtitution, miniſtred with ſuch godly Prayers, Exhortations and Admonitions teaching us the knowledge of God, the exceeding love and charity of our loving Redeemer Chriſt, breaking his Body upon the Croſs for our ſins, and ſhedding his moſt precious Blood for our Redemption: which we in eating of that bleſſed Bread, and drinking of the bleſſed Cup, aſſuredly believe that we receive, and be perfectly joyned with Chriſt and his holy Catholick Church into one Body, and into one unity and brotherly love, whereby each Member faithfully embraceth other. We muſt needs confeſs this Inſtitution of Chriſt to be moſt holy and godly, whereof we have the only comfort in Conſcience againſt ſin and damnation, with the aſſurance of Salvation, and whereof hath enſued reformation of many heinous ſins, much lawing, ſtrife, and contention is ended; drunkenneſs, whoredom, and other vices, in ſome reformed, goodneſs and vertue increaſed and nouriſhed.

The Maſs hath nothing in it but an heap of Ceremonies.

In the Latin Maſs we never had no ſuch edifying, but only we ſaw a great many of Ceremonies and ſtrange Geſtures; as turning of the Prieſt, croſſings, bleſſings, breathings, waſhing of hands, and ſpreading abroad of his arms, with like Ceremonies that we underſtand not. And concerning the Latin Tongue, wherein the Prieſt prayeth, we wot not whether he bleſſeth or curſeth us. We are not partakers of the Sacrament, as Chriſts Inſtitution appointeth we ſhould be.

In the miniſtring of the Sacrament, the Prieſts alter the Inſtitution of Chriſt, committing theft and ſacriledge, robbing us of the Cup of Chriſts Blood, contrary to Chriſts Commandment, ſaying, Drink ye all of this.

The people robbed of Gods word.

They rob us alſo of Gods Word, ſpeaking all things in Latin, which nothing edifieth us either in Faith or Manners. Chriſt commandeth not that his Supper ſhould be miniſtred in an unknown Tongue: but foraſmuch as Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing cometh of Gods Word, how can we believe Chriſts word and promiſe made unto us in this holy Sacrament, ſaying, This is my Body broken for you, and this is my Blood of the New Teſtament, which is ſhed for you, for the remiſſion of ſins, if the ſame promiſes of Chriſt either be not at all recited, or elſe ſo recited in Latin, that the Congregation underſtandeth not, nor heareth not what is ſpoken? S. Paul ſaith thus, reciting the ſaying of Eſay, As truly as I live, ſaith the Lord, all knees ſhall bow unto me, all tongues ſhall give praiſe unto God. Alſo he ſaith, All tongues muſt confeſs, that Jeſus Chriſt is the Lord, unto the glory of God the Father. The holy Ghoſt came upon the Apoſtles in fiery Tongues, ſo that they ſpake the Tongues of all Nations under Heaven. S. Paul miniſtred to the Corinthians, and preached to them in their own Mother-tongue, and rebuked the bringing in of ſtrange Tongues into the Congregations. We cannot think it to be well, that ſo holy an Apoſtle rebuked. And whatſoever virtue the Latin Tongue hath, to ſuch as underſtand it, to us Engliſhmen not underſtanding it, it is altogether without virtue and edifying, and therefore unmeet for our Churches.

Phil. 2.

Anno 1556.

All things done in the Church ought to be in a known Tongue.

That Prieſts be not had in honour, it is their own fault.

The Prieſts complain that we Lay-men love them not, nor have them in honour, but it is their own fault: For how ſhould we love them, that only ſeek to keep us in blindneſs and ignorance, to damn our ſouls, to deſtroy our bodies, to rob and ſpoil our goods and ſubſtance under a colour of pretenſed holineſs? We know (right honourable Commiſſioners) what honour is due to ſuch Wolves, and how by the authority of Gods Word, ſuch are to be fled, as Peſtilences to the Lords Lambs, whom they miſerably daily murder.

Gods Word and true Religion caſt out of the Church in Q. Maries time.

But we have rather choſen by this our meek Supplication, humbly to deſire the Queens Majeſty, and you her honourable Commiſſioners, to render Gods Word again unto the Churches, and to permit us freely to enjoy the ſame. For we certainly know, that the whole Religion lately ſet out by the holy Saint of God, our late moſt dear King Edward, is Chriſts true Religion written in the holy Scripture of God, and by Chriſt and his Apoſtles taught unto his Church. Wherefore we cannot allow with ſafe Conſciences this refuſal of it, and caſting of it out of our Churches; foraſmuch as to refuſe, caſt off, and to reject it, is to caſt off Chriſt himſelf, and to refuſe our part in his bleſſed Body broken for our ſins, and his Blood ſhed for our Redemption. Which thing whoſo doth, the ſame without repentance can look for no Sacrifice for his ſins, but moſt fearfully wait for the Judgment, and for that vehement fire that ſhall deſtroy Chriſts Adverſaries. For if he that deſpiſeth the Law of Moſes, is without mercy put to death under two or three witneſſes, how much more grievous torments ſhall he ſuffer that treadeth under foot the Son of God, and eſteemeth the blood of the Teſtament (whereby he was ſanctified) as a profane thing, and contumelioufly uſeth the Spirit of Grace?

Wherefore, we moſt humbly pray and beſeech the Queens gracious Majeſty, to have mercy and pity upon us her poor and faithful Subjects, and not to compel us to do the thing that is againſt our Conſciences, and ſhall ſo incurably wound us in heart, by bringing into the Church the Latin Maſs and Service that nothing edifieth us, and caſting out of Chriſts holy Communion and Engliſh Service, ſo cauſing us to ſin againſt our Redemption. For ſuch as willingly and wittingly againſt their Conſciences ſhall ſo do (as it is to be feared many a one doth) they are in a miſerable ſtate, until the mercy of God turn them; which if he do not, we certainly believe, that they ſhall eternally be damned: and as in this world they deny Chriſts holy Word and Communion before men, ſo ſhall Chriſt deny them before his Heavenly Father and his Angels.

The Popiſh following of Chriſts Croſs in Proceſſion.

And whereas it is very earneſtly required, that we ſhould go in Proceſſion (as they call it) at which time the Prieſts ſay in Latin ſuch things as we are ignorant of, the ſame edifieth nothing at all unto godlineſs, and we have learned that to follow Chriſts Croſs, is another matter, namely, to take up our Croſs, and to follow Chriſt in patient ſuffering for his love, tribulations, ſickneſs, poverty, priſon, or any other adverſity, whenſoever Gods holy will and pleaſure is to lay the ſame upon us. The triumphant Paſſion and Death of Chriſt, whereby in his own perſon he conquered death, ſin, hell, and damnation hath moſt lively been preached unto us, and the glory of Chriſts Croſs declared by our Preachers; whereby we have learned the cauſes and effects of the ſame more lively in one Sermon, than in all the Proceſſions that ever we went in, or ever ſhall go in.

The true followers of Chriſts Croſs.

When we worſhipped the Divine Trinity kneeling, and in the Litany invocating the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, asking mercy for our ſins, and deſiring deſiring ſuch Petitions as the need of our frail eſtate and this mortal life requireth, we were edified, both to know unto whom all Chriſtian Prayers ſhould be directed, and alſo to know that of Gods hand we receive all things, as well to the ſalvation of our ſouls, as to the relief of our mortal neceſſities. And we humbly beſeech the Queens Majeſty, that the ſame moſt holy Prayers may be continued amongſt us; that our Miniſters praying in our Mother-tongue, and we underſtanding their Prayers and Petitions, may anſwer, Amen, unto them.

Anno 1556.

Prayers and Evening Service in Engliſh.

At Evening Service we underſtood our Miniſters Prayers, we were taught and admoniſhed by the Scriptures then read; which in the Latin Even-ſong is all gone.

Baptiſm in Engliſh.

At the Miniſtration of holy Baptiſm, we learned what League and Covenant God had made with us, and what Vows and Promiſes we upon our part had made, namely, to believe in him, to forſake Satan and his works, and to walk in the way of Gods holy Word and Commandments.

Catechiſm in Engliſh.

The Chriſtian Catechiſm continually taught and called to remembrance the ſame, whereas before no man knew any thing at all. And many good men of forty years, that had been Godfathers to thirty Children, knew no more of the Godfathers office, but to waſh their hands e're they departed the Church, or elſe to faſt five Fridays with bread and water.

The effects of Gods word deſcribed.

O merciful God, have pity upon us. Shall we be altogether caſt from thy Preſence? we may well lament our miſerable eſtate, to receive ſuch a Commandment, to reject and caſt out of our Churches all theſe moſt godly Prayers, Inſtructions, Admonitions and Doctrines, and thus to be compelled to deny God, and Chriſt our Saviour, his holy Word, and all his Doctrine of our Salvation, the Candle to our feet, and the Light to our ſteps, the Bread coming down from Heaven that giveth life, which whoſo eateth, it ſhall be in him a Well-ſpring ſtreaming unto eternal Life; whereby we have learned all Righteouſneſs, all true Religion, all true Obedience towards our Governours, all Charity one towards another, all good Works that God would us to walk in, what puniſhment abideth the wicked, and what heavenly Reward God will give to thoſe that reverently walk in his ways and commandments.

Wherefore right honourable Commiſſioners, we cannot without Impiety refuſe and caſt from us the holy Word of God which we have received, or condemn any thing ſet forth by our moſt godly late King Edward and his vertuous Proceedings, ſo agreeable to Gods Word. And our moſt humble ſute is, that the Commandment may be revoked, ſo that we be not conſtrained thereunto. For we proteſt before God, we think if the holy Word of God had not taken ſome root amongſt us, we could not in times paſt have done that poor duty of ours, which we did in aſſiſting the Queen, our moſt dear Sovereign, againſt her Graces mortal Foe, that then ſought her deſtruction. It was our bounden duty, and we thank God for the knowledge of his word and grace, that we then did ſome part of our bounden ſervice.

Suffolk and Norfolk men moved by Gods word did ſet up the Queen.

And we meekly pray and beſeech the Queens Majeſty for the dear Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt, that the ſame Word be not taken away out of her Churches, nor from us her loving, faithful and true Subjects; leſt if the like neceſſity ſhould hereafter chance (which God for his mercy ſake forbid, and ever ſave and defend her Grace, and us all) the want of Knowledge and due remembrance of Gods Word may be occaſion of great ruin to an infinite number of her Graces true Subjects. And truly we judge this to be one ſubtil part of the Devil, (Enemy to all godly peace and quietneſs) that by taking Gods Word from among us, and planting Ignorance, he may make a way to all miſchief and wickedneſs; and by baniſhing the holy Goſpel of Peace, he may bring upon us the heavy wrath of God, with all manner of Plagues; as death, ſtrange ſickneſs, peſtilence, murren, moſt terrible uproars, commotions and ſeditions. Theſe things did the Lord threaten unto the Jews for refuſing his Word, ſaying, Go, and thou ſhalt ſay unto this people: Ye ſhall hear indeed, but ye ſhall not underſtand, ye ſhall plainly ſee, and not perceive. Harden the heart of this people, ſtop their ears, and ſhut their eyes, that they ſee not with their eyes, hear not with their ears, and underſtand not with their hearts, and convert and be healed. And I ſaid, How long Lord? And he anſwered, Until the Cities be deſtroyed, utterly waſted without Inhabitants, and the houſes without men, till the Land alſo be deſolate and lye unbuilded. And the Prophet Micheas, conſidering the contempt of Gods Word among the Iſraelites, threatned them thus, When the day, that thy Preachers warned thee of, cometh, thou ſhalt be waſted away: And let no man believe his friend, or put confidence in his brother. Keep the door of thy mouth from her that lyeth in thy boſom: for the ſon ſhall put his father to diſhonour, and the daughter ſhall riſe againſt her mother, the daughter in law againſt the mother in Law; and a mans foes ſhall be even they of his own houſhold. The ſame Plague threatned Chriſt unto the Jews, for refuſing his Peace profered them in the Goſpel, and he wept on the City Jeruſalem, which murdered the Prophets, and ſtoned ſuch as were ſent unto her.

Iſay 6.

Mich. 6.

Luke 19.

The ſame Plagues, we are afraid, will alſo fall upon us. For whereas heretofore with the receiving of Chriſts Word and peaceable Goſpel, we had great Benedictions of God, eſpecially this Chriſtian concord and holy peace, ſo that all were at a full and perfect ſtay in Religion; no man offended with another, but as the Sons of Peace, each of us with Chriſtian Charity imbraced other: now alas for pity, the Devil (riding upon the red horſe, ſhewed unto S. John in the Revelation) is come forth, and power is given unto him to take peace from the Earth. For now a man can go to no place, but malicious buſiebodies curiouſly ſearch out his deeds, mark his words, and if he agree not with them in deſpiſing Gods Word, then will they ſpitefully and hatefully rail againſt him and it, calling it Error and Hereſie, and the Profeſſors thereof Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, with other odious and ſpiteful names, as Traitors and not the Queens Friends, not Favourers of the Queens Proceedings; as if to love Gods Word were Hereſie, and as though to talk of Chriſt, were to be Schiſmatick; as though none could be true to the Queen, that were not falſe to God; as though none were the Queens Friends, but ſuch as deſpitefully rail on her Graces Father and Brother, and on Gods Word that they ſet forth; as though none favoured the Queens Majeſty, but ſuch as hate all godly knowledge.

Apoc. 6.

Loving Gods word made hereſie.

And in very deed theſe things that all this turmoil is made for, are meer inventions of Popes, brought into the Church of their own imaginations, without commandment or enſample either of Chriſt, or of his Apoſtles; and there is not one word in the Bible, that being truly alledged, maintaineth them, nor any Doctor of Antiquity before S. Auſtins days, as it hath been divers times ſufficiently proved before all the whole Parliament and Convocation of this Realm. Yet theſe, being meer Traditions of Biſhops, are ſet out for Gods Commandments; and the Queens Authority (given to her of God to maintain his Word) muſt be abuſed to put down Gods Word. And you right honourable Juſtices, and Keepers of Laws and Righteouſneſs, are alſo abuſed and made the Biſhops Apparators, to ſet forth ſuch Romiſh Traſh as is to Chriſts diſhonour, and againſt the Supream Authority of the Regal Eſtate of this Realm. And we poor Subjects, for ſpeaking of that which is truth, and our bounden Allegiance, are daily puniſhed, railed upon, and noted for ſeditious, and not the Queens friends.

All that the Papiſts ſtrive for are but mans meer inventions beſides Gods word.

The Queen, her Commiſſioners, and Juſtices abuſed by the Biſhops.

Inconveniences that followed by taking away Gods word.

But God (who is bleſſed for ever) knoweth that they ſlander us, and pull the Thorn out of their own foot, and put it in ours: for the Searcher of hearts knoweth, that we bear a faithful and true heart unto her Grace, and unto all her Proceedings, that are not againſt God and his holy Word. And we daily pray unto the heavenly Father, to lighten her Graces Royal heart with the glorious Light of the Goſpel, that ſhe may eſtabliſh and confirm that Religion, that her Graces Brother, our moſt dear King, did ſet out amongſt us; and ſo governing and ruling this her Realm in the fear and true way of God, ſhe may long live, and with proſperity, peace, and honour reign over us.

True Subjects wrongfully ſlandered.

But we cannot think that thoſe men do ſeek either Gods honour, or her Graces proſperity, or wealth of the Realm, that take from her Graces faithful Subjects Gods

Word, which only is the root of all love and faithful obedience under her Grace, and of all honeſty, good life, and vertuous concord among her Commons. And this we fear, leſt the Root being taken away, the Branches will ſoon wither and be fruitleſs. And when the Philiſtines have ſtopped up the Well-ſpring, the fair Streams that ſhould flow ſhall ſoon be dried up. All our Watchmen, our true Preachers have taught us, that as long as we retained Gods Word, we ſhould have God our gracious merciful Father; but if we refuſed and caſt off the Lords yoke of his Doctrine, then ſhall we look for the Lords wrath and ſevere viſitation to plague us, as he did the Jews for the like offences. And Paul ſaith, Rom. 2. God gave to them the ſpirit of unquietneſs and uproar, eyes wherewith they ſhould not ſee, and ears wherewith they ſhould not hear, until this day: And as David ſaid; Pſal. 69. Let their table be made a ſnare to take themſelves withal, a trap to catch them, and a ſtumbling block to fall at. Let their eyes be blinded that they ſee not, and bow thou down their backs always.

What unquietneſs followeth the lack of Gods word.

O merciful God, all this is now come upon us, and daily more and more increaſed, and we fear at laſt it will ſo bow down our backs, that we ſhall utterly be deſtroyed; the troubleſome ſpirit of uproars and unquietneſs daily troubleth mens hearts, and worketh ſuch unquietneſs in all places, that no man that loveth quietneſs, can tell where to place himſelf. Men have eyes and ſee not, how grievous an offence it is to caſt off the yoke of Gods Doctrine; and to bear the heavy burden that unfaithful Hypocrites lay upon us. We have ears and hear not the warning of Gods Word, calling us to true Repentance, nor his threats againſt our Impiety. Our moſt ſweet table of Chriſts Word and moſt holy Communion is taken away, and turned to a moſt perillous ſnare, through the brawling Diſputations of men. And as the Idol of Abomination betokened final ſubverſion unto the Jewiſh Nation; ſo we fear, this ſetting aſide of the Goſpel and holy Communion of Chriſt, and the placing in of a Romiſh Religion, betokeneth deſolation of this noble Realm of England to be at hand.

For the Plagues of Hunger, Peſtilence and Sword, cannot long tarry; but except we repent, and turn again to the Lord, our backs ſhall be ſo bowed, that the like horrible Plagues were never ſeen. And no marvel: for the like offence was never committed, as to reject and caſt off Chriſt and his Word, and in plain Engliſh to ſay, We will not have him to reign over us. O Lord, how terrible is it that followeth in the Goſpel? Thoſe mine enemies that would not have me to reign over them, bring them hither, and ſlay them before me, Luke 19. God be merciful unto us, and move the Queens Majeſties heart, and the hearts of her honourable Council, and your hearts (right honourable Commiſſioners) to weigh theſe dangers in due time; and to call Gods Word into your Council, and then you ſhall ſee how it agreeth with this Biſhop-like Commandment; and to be as wary to avoid the contempt of the eternal God, and dangers of the ſame, as you are prudent and wiſe in matters of this World, leſt if the Almighty be contemned, he ſtretch forth his Arm which no man can turn, and kindle his Wrath, that no man can quench.

Warning to Q. Mary, to her Council, and Commiſſioners.

The duty of true Subjects declared, firſt to Chriſt, then to the Queen.

We have humbly opened unto your Conſciences, doubtleſs ſore wounded and grieved by this Commandment; and we meekly pray and beſeech the Queens Majeſty, for the precious death and bloodſhedding of Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, to have mercy and pity upon us her Graces poor Commons, faithful and true Subjects, Members of the ſame Body Politick, whereof her Grace is Supream Head. All our Bodies, Goods, Lands and Lives are ready to do her Grace faithful obedience, and true ſervice of all Commandments that are not againſt God, and his Word: but in things that import a denial of Chriſt, and refuſal of his Word and holy Communion, we cannot conſent nor agree unto it. For we have bound our ſelves in Baptiſm to be Chriſts Diſciples, and to keep his holy Word and Ordinances. And if we deny him before men, he will deny us before his heavenly Father and his holy Angels in the day of Judgment: which we truſt her benign Grace will not require of us.

How far a Prince ought to require obedience of his Subjects.

And we humbly beſeech her Majeſty, that we be not enforced unto it; but as we ſerve her Grace with Body and Goods, and due Obedience, according to Gods Commandment: ſo we may be permitted freely to ſerve God and Chriſt our Saviour, and keep unto him our Souls, which he hath with his precious blood redeemed, that ſo (as Chriſt teacheth) we may render to Cæſar that which is due to Cæſar, and to God that which is due to God. Anno 1556.

True obedience how far it ſtretcheth.

For we think it no true Obedience unto the Queens Highneſs, or to any other Magiſtrate ordained of God under her, to obey in the things contrary to Gods Word, although the ſame be never ſo ſtreightly charged in her Graces Name. The Biſhop of Wincheſter hath truly taught in the point, in his Book of true Obedience, that true Obedience is in the Lord, and not againſt the Lord: as the Apoſtle anſwered before the Council at Jeruſalem, commanding them no more to preach in the Name of the Lord Jeſus. Judge you (ſaid they) whether it be right in the ſight of God, to hear you rather then God. And again they ſaid, We muſt obey God rather than Man. Wherefore we learn, that true Obedience is to obey God, King of all Kings, and Lord of all Lords, and for him, him, and not againſt him and his Word, to obey the Princes and Magiſtrates of this World, who are not truly obeyed when God is diſobeyed, nor yet diſobeyed when God is faithfully obeyed. Acts 4.

True obedience.

Tobias diſobeyed not his King, although contrary to his Commandment, and contrary to the uſage of all other, when they went to Dan and Bethel, he went unto Jeruſalem, and worſhipped in the Temple of the Lord. The three young men in Babylon, refuſing Nebuchodonoſors Commandment, pleaſed God more than the whole Multitude that obeyed. And Daniel that prayed to the God of Heaven, contrary to King Darius's Commandment, bare a more true and faithful heart to the King, then thoſe wicked Counſellors, that procured that wicked Law, or thoſe that for fear or flattery obeyed it. Which two Peſtilences (fear and flattery) have ever deſtroyed true Obedience to God and Man; when wicked godleſs men (that care not if the Devil were worſhipped, ſo they might get and obtain riches, promotions, and dignity, and worldly glory) turn to and fro, as every wind bloweth; and weak and frail men fearing loſs of goods, puniſhment, or death, do outwardly in body that thing, that their hearts and conſciences inwardly abhorreth, and ſo outwardly diſobey God, and in heart diſſemble with man, which diſſimulation we think worthy hate of all men, and moſt uncomly for Chriſtian men.

Example of true obedience.

Fear and flattery, enemies to true obedience, to God and Man.

Wherefore, we humbly beſeech the Queens Majeſty, with pity and mercy to tender the lamentable ſute of us her poor Subjects, which be by this Commandment ſore hurt, and wounded in our Conſciences, and driven to many miſeries, and by the malicious attempts of wicked men ſuffer great wrongs and injuries, ſlanders, loſs of goods, and bodily vexations. We think not good, by any unlawfull ſtir or commotion to ſeek remedy; but intend, by Gods grace, to obey her Majeſty in all things, not againſt God, and his holy Word. But unto ſuch ungodly Biſhop-like Commandments, as are againſt God, we anſwer with the Apoſtles, God muſt be obeyed rather then Man. If Perſecution ſhall enſue (which ſome threaten us with) we deſire the heavenly Father, according to his promiſe, to look from Heaven, to hear our cry, to judge between us and our Adverſaries, and to give us faith, ſtrength and patience to continue faithful unto the end, and to ſhorten theſe evil days, for his choſens ſake; and ſo we faithfully believe he will.

False diſſemblers worthy to be hated of all men.

Notwithſtanding, we truſt the Queens gracious and merciful heart will not ſuffer ſuch tyranny to be done againſt her poor, innocent, faithful and obedient Subjects, that daily pray unto God for her; which have no remedy in this world, but to ſue unto her Highneſs, our moſt gracious and benign Sovereign; whom we pray and beſeech, for the dear blood of Chriſt, to pity our lamentable caſe and hurt of Conſcience, and to call back all ſuch Commandments as are againſt Gods honour, as the good King Darius, Aſſuerus, Trajanus, Theodoſius, and divers other have done, and permit the holy Word of God and true Religion (ſet forth by our moſt holy and innocent King Edward, a very Saint of God) to be reſtored again unto our Churches, to be frequented amongſt us. So ſhall we grow and increaſe in the knowledge of God and and of Christ, is true repentance and amendment of Life: so shall we exhibite true obedience to our lawful Magistrates and all superiours ordained of God: so shall love and charity (of late through this commandment so decayed) be again restored, the honour of her regal estate the more confirmed and established and godliness and vertuous life among her loving subjects increased & maintained.

And we most heartily pray you (Right Honorable Commissioners) to be means unto the Queens Highness, and to her Honorable Council, that this our humble sute may be favourably tendered, and graciously heard and granted. And we shall not cease day and night to pray unto the Heavenly Father long to preserve her Grace and all other Magistrates in his fear, and love, and in prosperous peace and wealth, with long life and honor, Amen.

The Story of John Harpole, of the Parish of S. Nicholas in Rochester, Joan Beach Widow, of Tunbridge, Martyrs.

In Harpole & Joan Beach, Martyrs.

TOuching the Examination of Joan Beach Widow, and of John Harpole within the Diocess of Rochester, by Maurice Bishop of the said Diocess, remembrance was made before in the Story of Nicholas Hall, wherein was declared the four Articles Consistorial of the Bishop, objected and laid, as unto the said Nicholas Hall and his company, so also to this Joan Beach Widow: whereof the first was this;

Ex Regist. Articles laid to Joan Beach.

1. That she was of the Parish of Tunbridge, in the Diocess of Rochester.

2. Item, that all persons which preach, teach, believe or say otherwise or contrary to that their Mother Holy Catholick Church of Christ, are Excommunicate Persons and Hereticks.

3. Item, that the said Joan Beach hath, and yet doth affirm, maintain, and believe contrary to the said Mother Church of Christ, videlicet, that in the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar, under form of Bread and Wine, there is not the very Body and Blood of our Saviour in substance, but only a token and memorial thereof; that the very Body and Blood of Christ is in Heaven, and not in the Sacrament.

4. Item, that she hath been, and yet is, amongst the Parishioners of Tunbridge, openly noted, and vehemently suspected to be a Sacramentary, and Heretick.

Her personal Answers to the said Articles.

Answers of Joan Beach to the Articles.

TO the which foresaid Articles, her answers were these. First, that she was and is of the said Parish of Tunbridge, in the Diocess of Rochester.

2. That all persons which do Preach and hold otherwise and contrary, to that which the Holy Catholick Church of Christ doth, are to be reputed for Excommunicate and Hereticks; adding withal, that nevertheless she believeth not the Holy Catholick Church to be her Mother, but believeth only the Father of Heaven to be her Father.

The Catholick Church is no Mother.

3. Thirdly, that she hath, and yet doth verily believe, hold, and affirm, in the Sacrament of the Altar under forms of Bread and Wine, not to be the very Body and Blood of our Saviour in substance, but only a token and remembrance of his death to the Faithful receiver, and this his Body and substance is only in Heaven, and not in the Sacrament.

Lastly, as touching how she hath been or is noted and reputed among the Parishioners of Tunbridge, she said, she could not tell; howbeit she believed, she was not so taken and reputed.

Examination and Condemnation of John Harple and Joan Beach.

The Martyrdom of John Harpole, and Joan Beach, at Rochester, Anno 1556. April. 1.

THe like matter, and the same four Articles were also the same present time and place ministred to John Harpole by the foresaid Bishop Maurice; who after the like answers received of him, as of the other before, adjudged and condemned them both together to death, by one form of Sentence, according to the tenour and course of their several sentence, which ye may read before in Master Rogers Story.

And thus these two Christian Martyrs coupled in one confession, being condemned by the Bishop, suffered together at one fire, in the Town of Rochester, where they together ended their lives about the first day of this present Month of April.

John Hullier, Minister and Martyr.

John Hullier Martyr.

NExt after these ensueth the Martyrdom of John Hullier, Minister, who first being brought up in the School of Eaton, was afterward Scholar, and then Conduct in the Kings Colledge at Cambridge suffered under Doctor Thurlby Bishop of Ely, and his Chancellour, for the sincere setting out of the light of Gods Gracious Gospel revealed in these our days. In whose behalf this is to be lamented, that among so many fresh wits and stirring pens in that University, so little matter is left unto us touching the process of his judgment, and order of his suffering, which so innocently gave his life in such a cause among the midst of them. By certain Letters which he himself left behind, it appeareth that he was zealous and earnest in that Doctrine of truth, which every true Christian Man ought to embrace. His Martyrdom was about the second day of this present Month of April.

Letters of Master John Hullier, Minister.

A Letter of John Hullier to the Christian Congregation, exhorting them faithfully to abide in the Doctrine of the Lord

A Letter exhortatory of John Hullier to the Flock of the Faithful Christians.

IT standeth now most in hand (O dear Christians) all them that look to be accounted of Christs flock at the great and terrible day, when a separation shall be made of the sort that shall be received from the other which shall be refused, faithfully in this time of great afflictions to hear our Master Christs voice, the only true Shepheard of our Souls, which saith, Whosoever shall endure to the end shall be safe. For even now is that great trouble in hand (as here in England we may well see) that our Saviour Christ spake of so long before, which should follow the true and sincere Preaching of his Gospel. Therefore in this time we must needs either shew that we be his Faithful Souldiers, and continue in his battel unto the end, putting on the armour of God, the buckler of faith, the brestplate of love, the helmet of hope and Salvation, and the Sword of his Holy Word (which we have heard plentifully) with all instance of Supplication and Prayer; or else if we do not work and labour with these, we are Apostates and false Souldiers, shrinking most unthankfully from our gracious and soveraign Lord and Captain Christ, and leaning to Belial. For as he saith plainly, Luke 14. Whosoever beareth not my Cross and followeth me, he cannot be my disciple. And Matth. 6. No Man can serve two Masters: for either he must hate the one, or love the other, or else he shall lean to the one, and despise the other. The which thing the Faithful Prophet Helias signified when he came to the people, and said, Why halt ye between two Opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him, or if Baal be he, then follow him, 3 Reg. 18.

Matth 24. Ephes. 6. 1 Thes. 5.

Now let us not think, but that the same was recorded in writing for our instruction, whom the ends of the World are come upon, as the Apostle S. Paul saith, Rom. 15. Whatsoever things are written aforehand, they are written for our learning. If Christ be that only good and true Shepheard that gave his life for us, then let us that bear his mark, and have our Consciences sprinkled with his Blood, follow altogether, for our Salvation, his Heavenly Voice and calling, according to our profession and first promise. But if we shall not so do, certainly (say what we can) although we bear the name of Christ, yet we be none of his Sheep indeed. For he saith very manifestly, John 10. My Sheep hear my voice, and follow me: a stranger they will not follow, but will flee from him, for they know not the voice of a stranger.

Therefore let every Man take good heed in these perillous days (whereof we have had so much warning aforehand) hand) that he be not beguiled by the goodly outward ſhew and appearance, as Eve was of our old ſubtil enemy, whoſe craft and willneſs is ſo manifold and divers, and ſo full of cloſe windings, that if he cannot bring him directly and the plain ſtraight way to conſent to his ſuggeſtions, then he will allure him and wind him in by ſome other falſe ways (as it were by a train) that he ſhall not perceive it, to deceive him withal, and to ſteal from him that goodly victory of the incorruptible and Eternal Crown of Glory, which no Man elſe can have, but he that fighteth lawfully: as at this preſent day, if he cannot induce him throughly, as other do, to favour his Deviliſh Religion, and of good will and free heart to help to uphold the ſame, yet he will inveigle him to reſort to his wicked and whoriſh School-Houſe, and at the leaſt wiſe to be coverſant and keep company with his congregation there, and to hold his peace and ſay nothing, whatſoever he think, ſo that he be not a Diligent Souldier and a good labourer on Chriſts ſide, to further his Kingdom; by that ſubtil means flattering him that he ſhall both ſave his life, and alſo his goods, and live in quiet. But if we look well on Chriſts Holy Will and Teſtament, we ſhall perceive that he came not to make any ſuch peace upon Earth, nor yet that he gave any ſuch peace to his Diſciples; I leave peace with you (ſaith he) my peace I give you, not as the World giveth it, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, nor fearful. Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, that in me ye ſhould have peace. In the World ye ſhall have affliction, but be of good chear, I have overcome the World. The Servant is not greater then his Lord and Maſter: If they have perſecuted me, they ſhall alſo perſecute you. If any Man come to me, and hateth not his own Father and Mother, Wife, Children, Siſters, yea, and moreover his own Life, it is not poſſible for him to be my Diſciple. Bleſſed be ye that now weep, for ye ſhall laugh: and wo be unto you that now laugh, for ye ſhall mourn and weep. He that will find his life, ſhall loſe it.

The wilineſs of the ſubtle Serpent.

2 Tim. 2.

Matth. 10. John 14, 15, 16.

The peace of Chriſt to them that ſuſtain the troubles of this World. Luke 14.

Therefore the God of that true peace and comfort, preſerve and keep us, that we never obey ſuch a falſe flattering, which at length will pay us home once for all, bringing for temporal peace and quietneſs, everlaſting trouble, vexation, and diſquietneſs; for theſe vain and tranſitory goods, extream loſs and utter damage of the eternal treaſure and inheritance; for this mortal life, deprivation of the moſt joyful life immortal; finally, the entrance into endleſs death moſt miſerable, unmeaſurable pain and torment both of Body and Soul.

Now conferring theſe two Schoolmaſters together, let us conſider the thing well, and determine with our ſelves which way we ought to take, and not to take the common broad way which ſeemeth here moſt pleaſant, and that the moſt part of the people take. Surely I judge it to be better, to go to School with our Maſter Chriſt, and to be under his Ferula and rod (although it ſeemeth ſharp and grievous for a time) that at the length we may be inheritors with him of everlaſting joy, rather then to keep company with the Devils Scholars, the adulterous generation, in his School that is all full of pleaſure for a while, and at the end to be paied with the wages of continual burning in the moſt horrible lake which burneth evermore with Fire and Brimſtone without any end. What ſhall then theſe vain goods and temporal pleaſures avail? Who ſhall then help when we cry inceſſantly, Wo, wo, alas, and weal away, for unreaſonable pain, grief, and ſorrow? O let us therefore take heed betime, and rather be content to take pains in this World for a time, that we may pleaſe God. Our Saviour Chriſt the true teacher ſaith; Every Branch that bringeth not forth fruit in me, my Father will take away, John 15.

The ſtraite way of Chriſt better then the broad way of this World.

It is alſo not written in vain, Eccleſ. 41. The Children of the Ungodly are abominable Children, and ſo are they that keep company with the Ungodly. What doth he elſe, I pray you, that reſorteth to the miniſtration and ſervice that is moſt repugnant and contrary to Chriſts Holy Teſtament, there keeping ſtill ſilence, and nothing reproving the ſame, but in the face of the World, by his very deed it ſelf, declare himſelf to be of a falſe, fearful, diſſembling, fained, and unfaithful heart, and to have laid away from him the armour of light, diſcouraging as much as lieth in him all the reſidue of Chriſts hoſt, and giving a manifeſt offence to the weak, and alſo confirming, encouraging, and rejoycing the hearts of the adverſaries in all their evil doing? By which example he doth ſhew himſelf neither to love God, whom he ſeeth to be diſhonoured and Blaſphemed of an Antichriſtian Miniſter, nor yet his neighbour before whom he ſhould rebuke the evil, as it is expreſly commanded in Gods Holy Law, where it is ſaid Thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy neighbour, that thou bear not ſin for his ſake, Levit. 18. Wherefore let ſuch a one never fantaſie to deceive himſelf, that his name is regiſtred in the Book of Life, to have the ſtipend of Chriſts Souldier, except he do the duty, and perform the part of a Faithful and right true Souldier, as other have done before. For ſuch fearfulneſs cometh not from God, as teſtifieth Saint Paul, 2 Tim. 1. ſaying, God hath not given us the ſpirit of fear, but of power and love. Be not aſhamed, ſaith he, to teſtifie our Lord, but ſuffer adverſity alſo with the Goſpel, through the power of God, which ſaved us and called us with an holy calling.

Anno 1556.

Gods ſtipend cometh not, but to ſuch as play his Souldiers

To be now fearful, when moſt need is that we ſhould be of ſtrong hearts, is utterly the rejecting of the fear of God, and plain unfaithfulneſs and diſobedience to the expreſs commandment of our Saviour Chriſt, which ſaith in his Holy Goſpel, Matth. 10. Fear not them that kill the Body, &c. For what faithfulneſs do we expreſs towards him, when he ſaith thus to us, and yet we declare in our doings the very contrary, being ever fearful, even as the unbelieving Iſraelites, which unfaithfully feared Gods Enemies the Heathen Cananites, whereas he had oftentimes given them commandment by his true Prophet Moſes, to do the contrary? For the which cauſe, all the whole number of that Sect were deſtroyed in proceſs of time in the Wilderneſs, and enjoyed not the pleaſant land of promiſe. Which was a Bodily figure ſhewed before, and now agreeing to the promiſe of the Heavenly Inheritance, which ſhall be given to none other, but only to all ſuch as with love unfained be wholly bent, without any fear of Man, to fulfill Gods Holy Will and pleaſure. But all they that pertain to the lively Faith, to the winning of the Soul, will faithfully ſtick to the commandment, truſting moſt firmly and faithfully that he that gave the ſame, will alſo give ſtrength plentifully to perform it, even in the weakeſt veſſels of all, even as we have heard and ſeen by many and divers examples; he only be praiſed therefore.

Fearfulneſs in Chriſts cauſe reproved.

Numb. 13, 14. Example by the fearful Iſraelites.

Saint Peter ſaith, 1 Pet. 3. Fear not though they ſeem terrible unto you, neither be troubled, but ſanctifie the Lord God in your hearts. Onely (ſaith Saint Paul, Philippi. 1. let your converſation be as it becometh the Goſpel of Chriſt. Continue in one ſpirit, and in one Soul, labouring as we do, to maintain the faith of the Goſpel, and in nothing fearing your adverſaries, which is to them a token of Damnation, and to you of Salvation, and that of God: for unto you it is given that not only ye ſhould believe in Chriſt, but alſo ſuffer for his ſake. Wherefore let us be right well aſſured, that we ſhall yield a moſt ſtraight reckoning and account, if we tranſgreſs the ſaid moſt wholſom precepts given us of our Maſter Chriſt, and of his Apoſtles, and now in this troubleſom time wherein the Goſpel is perſecuted, ſhew our ſelves fearful Souldiers; as it is manifeſtly declared in the Revelation of Saint John, Chapter, 21. where it is written, That the fearful ſhall have their part with the unbelieving and abominable, in the lake that burneth with fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death. Again, it is written in the ſame Book for our warning, Chapter the third, Becauſe thou art betwixt both, and neither cold nor hot, I will ſpew thee out of my Mouth.

Ungoldly company to be avoided.

Now therefore (good Chriſtians) theſe true teſtimonies of Gods lively word deeply conſidered and weighed, let us chiefly ſtand in aw of his moſt terrible judgments, and be not as they that preſumptuouſly tempt him. Let him always be our fear and dread. He now chaſteneth, he now nourtereth us for our profit, delighting in us even as a loving Father in his beloved Child, to make us perfect, and to have us to be partakers of his Holineſs. He now judgeth us (not utterly taking away his everlaſting love and mercy from us, as he doth from the malignant and wicked) that we ſhould not be condemned with the wicked World: but if we now refuſe his moſt loving chastising, and follow the World, we must needs have our portion with the World. Wide is the gate, and broad is the way which leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: But strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. O how much better is it to go this narrow way with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleasures of Sin for a time?

Matth. 7.

In consideration whereof, let us without any more slacking and further delays in this great warning by Gods loving visitation, submit our selves betime under his mighty hand, that he may exalt us when the time is come. And thus I wholly commit you to him, and to the Word of his grace, which is able to build further, beseeching you most heartily to pray for me, that I may be strong through the power of his might, and stand perfect in all things, being always prepared and ready, looking for the mercy of our Lord unto eternal rest, and I will pray for you as I am most bound. So I trust he will graciously hear us for his promise sake made unto all the faithful in his dearly beloved Son Christ our alone Saviour, whose Grace be with your Spirit, most dear Christians, for ever. So be it.

By your Christian Brother, John Hullier, a Prisoner of the Lord.

John Hullier being of long time prisoner, and now openly judged to dye for the Testimony of the Lord Jesus, wisheth heartily to the whole Congregation of God, the strength of his Holy Spirit, to their everlasting health both of Body and Soul.

Another Letter of Jo. Hullier to the Congregation of Christs Faithful followers.

I Now (most dear Christians) having the sweet comfort of Gods saving health, and being confirmed with his free Spirit (be he only praised therefore) am constrained in my Conscience, thinking it my very duty to admonish you, as ye tender the Salvation of your Souls, by all manner of means to separate your selves from the company of the Popes hirelings, considering what is said in the Revelation of Saint John, by the Angel of God, touching all Men. The words be these; If any Man worship the Beast and his Image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink the Wine of the Wrath of God, which is powred into the cup of his wrath, and he shall be punished with fire and brimstone before the holy Angels, and before the Lamb, and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up evermore. Mark well here (good Christians) who is this Beast and worshippers that shall be partakers of that unspeakable torment. The Beast is none other but the carnal and Fleshly Kingdom of Antichrist, the Pope with his rabble of false Prophets and Ministers, as it is most manifest: which to maintain their high Titles, Worldly promotions and dignities, do with much cruelty, daily more and more set forth and establish their own traditions, decrees, decretals, contrary to Gods Holy Ordinances, Statutes, Laws, and Commandments, and wholly repugnant to his sincere and pure Religion and true Worshipping.

Apoc. 14.

He exhorteth the faithful to separate themselves from the Popes marked Ministers.

2 Pet. 2.

Now what do they else but Worship this Beast and his Image, who after they had once already escaped from the filthiness of the World, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, are yet again tangled therein and overcome, using dissimulation unfaithfully for fear of their displeasure, doing one thing outwardly, and thinking inwardly another; so having them in reverence under a cloak and colour, to whom they ought not so much as to say, God speed; and adjoyning themselves to the malignant congregation, which they ought to abhor as a den of Thieves and Murtherers, and as the brothel house of most blasphemous fornicators: whose Voices being contrary to Christs Voice, if they were of his Flock, they would not know, but would flee from them; as he himself being the good Shepheard of our Souls doth full well in his Holy Gospel testifie. Again, what do they else I pray you, but receive the Beasts mark in their foreheads and in their hands, which do bear a fair Face and Countenance outwardly in supporting them as other do, being ashamed openly to confess Christ and his Holy Gospel? But this fainedness and dissimulation Christ and his Gospel will in no wise allow. Of whom it is said, Luke 9. Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this Adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he shall come in the Glory of his Father with his holy Angels. Therefore saith Almighty God by his Prophet Malachy; Malach. 1. Cursed be the dissemblers. Ye were once lightned, and tasted of the Heavenly gift, and were become partakers of the Holy Ghost, and tasted of the Word of God, and of the power of the World to come. And our Saviour Christ saith, Luke 6. No Man that putteth his hand to the plough and looketh back, is apt for the Kingdom of God. Therefore Saint John the Apostle useth this for a manifest token, that the backsliding of the true Preachers of Gods Word declare evidently, that they be not of the number of them. For, saith he 1 John 2. They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, no doubt they would have continued with us. Surely so long as we use dissimulation, and to play on both hands, we are not in the light. For whatsoever is manifest, the same is light, as the elect vessel of God S. Paul witnesseth in Ephes. 4.

Mark 8. Hebr 6.

John 2.

John 10. Ezech. 16.

John 10. Against dissembling hearers with the Papists.

Wherefore (good Christians) for Gods most dear love, deceive not your selves through your own wisdom, and through the Wisdom of the World, which is foolishness before God; but certifie and stay your own Conscience with the sure truth and faithful Word of God, and with the infallible testimonies of Holy Scripture. For although Gods mercy is over all his works; yet it doth not extend but only to them that hold fast the confidence and rejoycing of hope unto the end, not being weary in well doing, but rather waxing every day stronger and stronger in the inward Man. Therefore in the Revelation of S. John, where it is entreated of the Beast and his Image, it is also said, Here is the sufferance of Saints, and here are they that keep the Commandments, and the Faith of Jesus Christ, Revelat. 13. Whereby Almighty God doth shew plainly, that he doth use those wicked Men as Instruments for a time, to try the patience and faith of his peculiar people, without the performance whereof we can have no part among the living; but as it is said in the same Revelation, The fearful shall have their part in the Lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death.

1 Cor. 3. Psal. 145. Heb. 3.

Gods Mercy to whom it belongeth.

Objection answered.

But peradventure ye will object and say unto me; What shall we do? Shall we cast our selves headlong to death? I say not so. But this I say, that we are all bound (if ever we look to receive Salvation at Gods Hand) in this case wholly to be obedient to his determinate counsel and foreknowledge, expressed by the gift of the Spirit in Holy Scripture; and then to cast all our care upon him, who worketh all in all for the best, unto them that love him: and thus he giveth commandment, saying: Come away from her my people, that ye be not partakers of her Sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues, Apoc. 18. Now who hearing this terrible voice of God, which must needs be fulfilled, will not with all speed and diligence apply himself to do thereafter, except such as will presumptuously tempt him? And as touching such, the Wise Man saith, Eccles. 3. He that loveth peril and danger, shall perish therein. But they that be of the Faith of Abraham, even as he did, so will they in all assays and trials be obedient to the Heavenly Voice, howsoever it seemeth contrary to their own natural will and carnal reason, according to the sure word of Faith, which saith; Hope thou in the Lord, and keep his way: hold thee still in the Lord, and abide patiently upon him. Let not thy jealousie move thee also to do evil. Come out from among them, and joyn not your selves to their unlawful assemblies; yea, do not once shew your selves with the least part of your Body to favour their wicked doings, but glorifie God (as most right is) as well in your whole Body outwardly, as inwardly in your Spirit; or else you can do neither of both well; for your Body doth belong to God as well as your Spirit. At the dreadful day of Judgment we shall all receive the works of our Bodies, according to that we have done, whether it be good or bad.

1 Cor. 12. Rom. 12.

Psal. 36.

The Body must joyn with the Spirit in serving God.

Therefore whatsoever we do, we may not bring the Spirit in bondage to the Body, but contrariwise we must subdue the Body and the will of the Flesh to the Spirit, that the Spirit may freely accomplish the will of God all in all things; for otherwiſe we ſhall never be partakers of his promiſe, with the true Children of Abraham. For as S. Paul ſaith, They which are the children of the fleſh, are not the children of God. If we ſhall live according to the fleſh, we ſhall dye. For to be carnally minded, is death; but to be ſpiritually minded, is life and peace, becauſe that the fleſhly mind is enmity to God: for it is not obedient to the Law of God, neither can be. So then they that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God. Now chooſe you which way you will take; either the narrow way that leadeth unto life, which Chriſt himſelf, and his faithful followers, have gone through before; or elſe the broad path-way that leadeth to deſtruction, which the wicked worldlings take their pleaſure in for a while. I for my part have now written this ſhort Admonition unto you of good will (as God is my witneſs) to exhort you to that way, which at length you your ſelves ſhall prove and find to be beſt, yea and rejoyce thereof. And I do not only write this, but I will alſo (with the aſſiſtance of Gods grace) ratifie and confirm, and ſeal the ſame with the effuſion of my blood, when the full time ſhall be expired that he hath appointed; which (ſo far forth as I may judge) muſt needs be within theſe few days. Therefore I now bid you all moſt heartily farewel in the Lord, whoſe grace be with your ſpirit, Amen. Watch and pray, watch and pray, pray, pray. So be it.

Faithful admonitions.

Anno 1556.

John Hullier.

Beſides theſe Letters, the ſaid John Hullier left alſo a godly Prayer, which if any be diſpoſed to peruſe, it is extant in the old Book of Acts to be found, pag. 1515.

The death and martyrdom of ſix conſtant Profeſſors of Chriſt, burned at Colcheſter, for the teſtimony of the Goſpel, the 28. day of April.

NOt long after the death of Robert Drakes, William Tyms, and the other Eſſex Martyrs, executed in Smithfield, as is above ſpecified, followed in the ſame order likewiſe of Martyrdom, at one like fire in the Town of Colcheſter, (where the moſt part of them did inhabit) ſix other bleſſed Martyrs, whoſe names be theſe:

April 28. The martyrdom of ſix men at Colcheſter.

Chriſtopher Lyſter of Dagneham, Husbandman.
John Mace of Colcheſter, Apothecary.
John Spencer of Colcheſter, Weaver.
Symon Joyne, Sawyer.
Richard Nichols of Colcheſter, Weaver.
John Hamond of Colcheſter, Tanner.

The burning of the foreſaid ſix men at Colcheſter.

Roger Graſbroke.

With theſe ſix was alſo joyned another, whoſe name was Roger Grasbroke, but he afterward ſubmitted himſelf. Of theſe above named, the Biſhop, becauſe he (as it ſeemed by the ſhort Proceſs recorded by his Regiſter) waxed now weary, made a very quick diſpatch. For ſoon after that, they were delivered unto one John Kingſtone, Batchelor of Civil Law, and then Commiſſary to the Biſhop, by the Earl of Oxford and other Commiſſioners (as appeareth by a Bill indented, made between the Commiſſioners and the ſaid Commiſſary, for the receipt of the ſaid Priſoners, dated the 28. day of March, Anno Regni Regis & Reginæ Philippi & Mariæ ſecundo & tertio, which is the year of our Lord, 1556.) and by him ſent up unto his Lord and Maſter, the Biſhop cauſed them to be brought unto his Houſe of Fulham: Where in the open Church, judicially were miniſtred unto them the ſame Articles that were propounded unto Bartlet Green and others, mentioned before. To the which they made their ſeveral Anſwers, agreeing altogether in one Truth, as by the ſum and effect thereof here enſuing, more plainly appeareth.

Joh. Kingſtone Bp. Boners Commiſſary in Eſſex.

These Martyrs were delivered by the Earl of Oxford to the Commiſſary, and by the Commiſſary ſent to the Biſhop.

1. To the firſt Article they all conſented and agreed; John Spencer adding further thereto, that the Church malignant (which is the Church of Rome) is no part of Chriſts Catholick Church; and that he neither hath, nor doth believe the Doctrine and Religion taught and ſet forth in the ſaid Romiſh and malignant Church.

Their Anſwers to the Biſhops Articles. The Church of Rome no part of Chriſts Catholick Church.

2. To the ſecond they anſwered, That they believed, that in the true Catholick Church of Chriſt there be but two Sacraments; that is to ſay, the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt.

Two Sacraments.

3. To the third Article they all agreed, confeſſing that they were baptized in the Faith and Belief of the Catholick Church, and that their Godfathers and Godmothers had profeſſed and promiſed for them, as is contained in the ſame Article.

Profeſſion of Baptiſm.

4. To the fourth they anſwered, That they always were, and yet then did continue in the Faith and Profeſſion wherein they were baptized; Richard Nichols adding alſo, that he had more plainly learned the truth of his Profeſſion by the Doctrine ſet forth in K. Edward the ſixth his days, and thereupon he had builded his Faith, and would would continue in the ſame to his lives end, God aſſiſting him.

Anno 1556.

To deny the beggarly uſages of the Popes Church, is not to deny the Catholick Faith of Chriſt.

5. To the fifth they anſwered, That they neither ſwerved nor went away from the Catholick Faith of Chriſt. Howbeit they confeſſed, that within the time articulate (and before) they had miſliked, and earneſtly ſpoken againſt the Sacrifice of the Maſs, and againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, affirming that they would not come to hear or be partakers thereof, becauſe they had, and then did believe, that they were ſet forth and uſed contrary to Gods Word and Glory. And moreover they did grant, that they had ſpoken againſt the uſurped Authority of the Biſhop of Rome, as an oppreſſor of Chriſts Church and Goſpel, and that he ought not to have any Authority in England. For all which ſayings they were no whit ſorry, but rather rejoyced and were glad.

The Pope ought to have no Authority in England.

The Church of Rome to be abhorred.

6. To the ſixth they anſwered, That they never refuſed, nor yet then preſently did refuſe to be reconciled to the Unity of Chriſts Catholick Church: but they ſaid they had, and then did, and ſo ever would hereafter utterly refuſe to come to the Church of Rome, or to acknowledg the Authority of the ſeat thereof, but did utterly abhor the ſame, for putting down the Book of God, the Bible, and ſetting up the Babyloniſh Maſs, with all other of Antichriſts merchandize.

Againſt the Popes trumpery.

7. To the ſeventh Article, the effect thereof they all granted. And Symon Joyne declared further, that the cauſe of his refuſing to be partaker of their trumpery was, for that the Commandments of God were there broken, and Chriſts Ordinances changed and put out, and the Biſhop of Romes Ordinances in ſtead thereof put in. Moreover, as touching the Sacrament of Chriſts Body, Chriſtopher Lyſter affirmed, that in the ſaid Sacrament there is the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine, as well after the words of Conſecration as before, and that there is not in the ſame the very Body and Blood of Chriſt really, ſubſtantially, and truly, but only Sacramentally and Spiritually by Faith in the Faithful receivers, and that the Maſs is not propitiatory for the quick or for the dead, but meer Idolatry and Abomination.

Againſt tranſubſtantiation.

Againſt the Maſs.

8. To the eighth they ſaid, That they were ſent to Colcheſter Priſon by the King and Queens Commiſſioners, becauſe they would not come to their Pariſh Churches, and by them ſent unto the Biſhop of London, to be there of further examined.

9. To the ninth they all generally agreed, That that which they had ſaid in the premiſſes was true; and that they were of the Dioceſs of London.

These Anſwers thus made, the Biſhop did diſmiſs them for that preſent untill the afternoon. At which time having firſt their Articles and Anſwers read unto them again, and they ſtanding moſt firmly unto their Chriſtian profeſſion, they were by divers ways and means aſſayed and tried if they would revoke the ſame their profeſſed Faith, and return to the Unity of Antichriſts Church.

Sentence given againſt them by B. Boner.

Which thing when they refuſed, the Biſhop ſtoutly pronounced the Sentence of Condemnation againſt them, committing them unto the the Temporal Power. Who, upon the receipt of the King and Queens Writ, ſent them unto Colcheſter, where the 28. day of April, moſt cheerfully they ended their lives to the Glory of Gods holy Name, and the great incouragement of others.

Hugh Laverock an old Man, John Apprice a blind Man, Martyrs, burned at Stratford the Bow.

May 15. Two burned together at one ſtake, Hugh Laverock an old lame man, and John Apprice a blind Man.

IN the diſcourſe of this parcel or part of Hiſtory, I know not whether more to marvel at the great and unſearchable mercies of God (with whom there is no reſpect in degrees of perſons, but he choſeth as well the poor, lame, and blind, as the rich, mighty, and healthful, to ſet forth his glory) or elſe to note the unreaſonable, or rather unnatural doing of theſe unmercifull Catholicks (I mean Biſhop Boner and his Complices) in whom was ſo little favour or mercy to all ſorts and kinds of Men; that alſo they ſpared neither impotent Age, neither lame nor blind, as may well appear by theſe poor Creatures, whoſe names and ſtories here under follow.

John Apprice, a Blind Man.

The Martyrdome of a blind man, and a lame man, at Stratford the Bowe.

The Martyrdome of three Women

These two poor and ſimple Creatures being belike accuſed by ſome promoting neighbour of theirs, unto the Biſhop and other of the King and Queens Commiſſioners, were ſent for by their Officer; and ſo being brought and delivered into the hands of the ſaid Biſhop, were the firſt day of May examined before him in his Palace at London: where he firſt propounded and objected againſt them thoſe nine Articles, whereof mention is made before, miniſtred as well unto Bartlet Green, as alſo unto many others. To the which they anſwered in effect, as Chriſtopher Lyſter, John Mace, and other before mentioned had done.

Where.

Whereupon they were again ſent to priſon, and beſide other times, the ninth day of the ſame Month, in the Conſiſtory of Pauls were again openly produced, and there (after the old order) travelled withal to recant their opinions againſt the Sacrament of the Altar.

The words of Hugh Laverock to Boner.

Whereunto Hugh Laverock firſt ſaid; I will ſtand to mine anſwers, and to that I have confeſſed; and I cannot find in the Scriptures, that the Prieſts ſhould lift up over their head a Cake of Bread.

The Biſhop then turned him unto John Apprice, and asked what he would ſay.

The words of John Apprice to the Biſhop.

To whom he anſwered; Your Doctrine (ſaid he) that ye ſet forth and teach, is ſo agreeable with the World, and embraced of the ſame, that it cannot be agreeable with the Scripture of God. And ye are not of the Catholick Church; for ye make Laws to kill Men, and make the Queen your Hangman.

At which words the Biſhop, belike, ſomewhat tickled, and therefore very loth to delay their Condemnation any longer (ſuch was now his hot burning charity) commanded that they ſhould be brought after him unto Fulham, whither he before dinner did go, and there in the afternoon, after his ſolemn manner, in the open Church he pronounced the definitive Sentence of Condemnation againſt them, and ſo delivering them into the hands of the temporal Officer, thought to diſpatch his hands of them, but could not ſo diſpatch his Conſcience before the judgment of God, from the guiltineſs of innocent Blood.

Sentence of Condemnation given againſt Hugh Laverock and John Apprice.

The poor Men, being now in the temporal Officers hands, might not there be ſuffered long to remain, and therefore the fifteenth day of May, very early in the morning, they were carried from Newgate in a Cart to Stratford the Bowe, and moſt quietly in the fire praiſing God yielded up their Souls into his hands, through a lively faith in Jeſus Chriſt, whom unto the end they did moſt conſtantly confeſs.

At their death, Hugh Laverock, after he was chained, caſt away his Crutch, and comforting John Apprice his fellow-Martyr, ſaid unto him; Be of good comfort my Brother; for my Lord of London is our good Phyſitian. He will heal us both ſhortly; thee of thy blindneſs, and me of my lameneſs. And ſo patiently theſe two good Saints of God together ſuffered.

Three Women the ſame time burned in Smithfield, Katherine Hut, Elizabeth Thackvel, and Joan Horns.

May 16. THe next day after martyrdom of this Lame and Blind Man above ſpecified, in the ſaid Month of May, were brought to the Fire three Women, with whom alſo was adjoyned another, who being in the ſame conſtancy with them, was likewiſe partaker of the ſaid condemnation. The names of theſe were:

Katherine Hut, Elizab. Thackvel, Joan Horns, Martyrs.

Katherine Hut of Bocking, Widow.
Joan Horns of Billerica, Maid.
Elizabeth Tackvel of great Burſted, Maid.
Margaret Ellis of Billerica, Maid.

How theſe with divers other more were perſecuted and ſent up, eſpecially by Sir John Mordant, and Edmund Tyrel Eſquire, Juſtices of Peace, this their Letter following will declare.

A Letter ſent unto Boner Biſhop of London, from Sir John Mordant Knight, and Edmund Tyrel Eſquire, Juſtices of Peace for the County of Eſſex.

A Letter of certain perſecuting Juſtices to Boner.

OUr Humble Commendations to your Lordſhip: theſe ſhall be to advertiſe you, that we have ſent unto your good Lordſhip Joan Potter, the Wife of Hugh Potter, James Harris, ſervant of William Harris of Bromhill and Margaret Ellis, for that they be not conformable to the orders of the Church, nor to the Real Preſence of Chriſts Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, to uſe your Lordſhips pleaſure with them, as you think good; not doubting, with the puniſhment of theſe and other before ſent to your Lordſhip, but that the Pariſh of great Burſted and Billerica ſhall be brought to good conformity. Thus, committing your good Lordſhip to the tuition of the Almighty God, we take our leave. From great Burſted this preſent ſecond day of March, 1556. Anno 1556.

Your Lordſhips to command, John Mordant, Edmund Tyrel.

After the receipt of theſe Letters, Biſhop Boner entring to examination of theſe four Women above named, laid and objected the like Articles to them, as after his uſual form he uſed to miniſter, and are before expreſſed: Whereunto the ſaid Women likewiſe agreeing in the ſame Unity of Spirit and Doctrine, accorded in their Anſwers, much agreeing unto the other before them.

As firſt, to the Article in the firſt place objected, they conſented and granted, believing the ſaid Article to be true in every part thereof.

2. To the ſecond, partly they anſwered, they could not tell what a Sacrament is; Elizabeth Thackvel, and Katherine Hut adding moreover, that Matrimony, and Baptiſm, and the Lords Supper were Sacraments ordained in the Church: but whether the other ſpecified in this Article be Sacraments (as they heard them called) ordained by God or not, they could not tell. Margaret Ellis being examined ſeverally, as the other were, upon the ſame, how many Sacraments there were, anſwered (as a young maid unskilled, in her ſimple ignorance), that ſhe could not tell. Howbeit ſhe had heard (ſhe ſaid) that there was one Sacrament, but what it was ſhe could not tell, &c.

The ſimple ignorance of theſe Women and more needful to be inſtructed, then they to be burned.

3. To the third likewiſe they granted, that they were Baptized by their Godfathers and Godmothers, which Godfathers and Godmothers (ſaid Margaret Ellis) did not then know ſo much, as ſhe doth now know: Katherine Hut adding withal and ſaying, that ſhe was Baptized; but what her Godfather and Godmothers did then promiſe for her in her name, ſhe could not tell, &c.

4. To the fourth Article Margaret Ellis, and Elizabeth Thackvel did grant thereunto: Katherine Hut ſaid moreover, that ſhe, being of the Age of fourteen years, was of the faith wherein ſhe was chriſtned; and yet nevertheleſs the ſaid faith in that Age (ſhe ſaid) was but a dead faith, becauſe ſhe did not then underſtand what ſhe did believe. Joan Horns added, that ſhe, being eleven years of age, began to learn the faith ſet forth in King Edwards days, in the which Faith and Religion (ſhe ſaid) ſhe hath hitherto, and yet doth, and ſo will hereafter continue, God ſo aſſiſting her.

5. To the fifth Article they anſwered and confeſſed, according all in this effect, that as touching the Maſs, they knew no goodneſs in it; and as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, they believed that Chriſts Natural Body is in Heaven, and not in the Sacrament of the Altar: & as concerning the See of Rome, they acknowledged no ſuch ſupremacy in that See, neither have they any thing to do therewith.

Againſt the Maſs and Sacrament of the Altar.

6. In anſwering the ſixth Article, they did all generally refuſe to be reconciled or united to the Church of Rome, or any other Church, contrary to that wherein they now ſtood and did profeſs.

7. To the ſeventh Article they anſwered likewiſe, that they had ſo done and ſaid in all things, as it is in this Article contained: Katherine Hut adding moreover the reaſon why; for that (ſaid ſhe) neither the Service in Latin, Maſs, Mattens, and Evenſong; nor the Sacraments were uſed and miniſtred according to Gods Word: And furthermore, that the Maſs is an Idol, neither is the true Body and Blood of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar, as they make Men believe.

8. The Anſwer to the eighth Article, declared, that they were all and every one ſent up to Boner by Sir John Mordant Knight, and Juſtice of Peace in Eſſex (the Lord of his mercy ſend us better Juſtices I beſeech him) for that they could not affirm the preſence of Chriſts Body and Blood to be truly and really in the Sacrament, and for that they came not to their Popiſh Pariſh Church.

Sir Jo. Mordant Promoter.

9. To the ninth Article, they anſwered and confeſſed the premiſſes thereof to be true, and denied not the ſame; ſave that Katherine Hut ſaid, that ſhe was of Bocking in Eſſex of the peculiar juriſdiction of Canterbury, and not of the Dioceſs and juriſdiction of London.

Katherin Hut.

After

Anno 1556.

After these their Answers received; they were produced again about the thirteenth of April to further Examination, and so at length to their final Judgment; where Katherine Hut widow, standing before the Bishop, boldly and constantly stood to that which she had said before, neither yielding to his fair promises, nor overthrown with his terrour. Who being required of the Sacrament to say her mind, and to revoke her self unto the fellowship of the Catholick Faith, openly protested, saying, I deny it to be God, because it is a dumb God, and made with mens hands. Wherein the good and faithful Martyr of Christ firmly persisting, so received her Sentence, being condemned of Boner to the fire; which she with great constancy sustained by the grace and strength of the Lord, and did abide for the cause and love of Christ.

The words of Katherine Hut of the Sacrament.

Joan Horns Maid, producted likewise to her Judgment and Condemnation, with like firmness and Christian fortitude declared her self a true Martyr and follower of Christs Testament, giving no place to the Adversary; but being charged that she did not believe the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood to be Christ himself, of the which Sacrament (contrary to the nature of a Sacrament) the Adversaries are wont to make an Idol Service; to this she protesting openly her mind, said as followeth;

Joan Horns Maid.

The words and profession of Joan Horns touching the Sacrament.

If you can make your God to shed blood, or to shew any condition of a true lively Body, then will I believe you: but it is but Bread (as touching the Substance thereof) meaning the matter whereof the Sacrament consisteth; and that which you call Heresie, I trust to serve my Lord God in, &c.

And as concerning the Romish See, she said, My Lord (speaking to Boner) I forsake all his Abominations, and from them good Lord deliver us. From this her stable and constant assertion, when the Bishop was too weak to remove her, and too ignorant to convince her, he knockt her down with the butcherly Ax of his Sentence. And so the holy Virgin and Martyr committed to the Shambles of the Secular Sword, was offered up with her other fellows a burnt Sacrifice to the Lord, In odorem bonæ fragrantiæ, in the favour of a sweet and pleasant smell.

The butcherly Ax of Boner.

As touching Margaret Ellis, she likewise persevering in her foresaid Confession, and resisting the false Catholick errors and heresies of the Papists, was by the said Boner adjudged and condemned; but before the time of her burning came, prevented by death in Newgate Prison, departed and slept in the Lord.

Margaret Ellis died in Newgate.

No less strength in the grace of the Lord appeared in the other Maid Elizabeth Thackvell, whose heart and mind the Lord had so confirmed in his Truth, so armed with Patience, that as her Adversaries could by no sufficient knowledge of Scripture convince her affirmation, so by no forcible attempts they could remove her confession. Whereupon she standing to the death, being in like sort condemned, by the said unbishoplike * πλήκτης, gave her life willingly and mildly for the confirmation and sealing up of the sincere truth of Gods Word.

Elizabeth Thackvell, Maid and Martyr.

* i. A persecutor.

These three innocent and godly women, thus falsly and wrongfully by men condemned for the just quarrel and cause of Gods Gospel, were had to Smithfield, and there cruelly bound to the Stake, gave their Bodies to the Tormentors, their Spirits they commended to God. For whose glory they were willing and ready to suffer whatsoever the cruel hands of their enemies should work against them, dying more joyfully in the flaming fire, then some of them that burned them did peradventure in their beds. Such a Lord is God, glorious and wonderful in all his Saints. The martyrdom of these Saints of God was the 16. of May.

Thomas Drowry a blind Boy, and Thomas Croker Bricklayer, Martyrs.

May 5. Tho. Drowry a blind Boy, and Thomas Croker, Martyrs Persecution at Glocester.

YE heard a little before of two men, the one blind, the other lame, which suffered about the 15. of May. And here is not to be forgotten another as godly a couple, which suffered the like passion and martyrdom for the same cause of Religion at Glocester: of the which two, the one was a blind Boy, named Thomas Drowry, mentioned before in the History of Bishop Hooper, whom the said vertuous Bishop confirmed then in the Lord, and in the Doctrine of his Word.

* Of this blind Boy, read before.

With him also was burned another in the same place, and at the same fire in Glocester, about the fifth of May, whose name was Thomas Croker Bricklayer.

Concerning the which blind Boy, how long he was in Prison, and in what year he suffered, I am not certain. Of this credible Intelligence I have received by the Testimony of the Register then of Glocester, named John Taylor, alias Barker, that the said blind Boy at his last Examination and final Condemnation, was brought (by the Officers, under whose custody he had remained) before Dr. Williams then Chancellor of Glocester, sitting Judicially with the said Register in the Consistory, near unto the South-door, in the neither end of the Church of Glocester. Where the said Chancellor then ministred unto the Boy such usual Articles as are accustomed in such cases, and are sundry times mentioned in this Book. Amongst which, he chiefly urged the Article of Transubstantiation, saying in effect as followeth.

Chancellor. Dost thou not believe, that after the words of Consecration spoken by the Priest, there remaineth the very real Body of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar?

Thom. To whom the blind Boy answered; No, that I do not.

Chan. Then thou art an Heretick, and shalt be burned: But who hath taught thee this Heresie?

Thom. You Master Chancellor.

Chan. Where I pray thee?

Thom. Even in yonder place; pointing with his hand, and turning towards the Pulpit, standing upon the North-side of the Church.

Chan. When did I teach thee so?

Thom. When you preached there (naming the day) a Sermon to all men as well as to me; upon the Sacrament. You said, the Sacrament was to be received spiritually by Faith, and not carnally and really, as the Papists have heretofore taught.

Chan. Then do as I have done, and thou shalt live as I do, and escape burning.

Thom. Though you can so easily dispense with your self, and mock with God, the World, and your Conscience, yet will I not so do.

Chanc. Then God have mercy upon thee; for I will read the Condemnation Sentence against thee.

Thom. Gods will be fulfilled.

The Register being herewith somewhat moved, stood up, and said to the Chancellor;

Register. Fie for shame, Man, will you read the Sentence against him, and condemn your self? Away, away, and substitute some other to give Sentence and Judgment.

Chan. No, Register, I will obey the Law, and give Sentence my self according to mine Office.

And so he read the Sentence condemnatory against the Boy (with an unhappy tongue, and a more unhappy Conscience) delivering him over unto the Secular Power. Who the said fifth day of May, brought the said blind Boy to the place of Execution at Glocester; together with one Thomas Croker a Bricklayer, condemned also for the like testimony of the Truth. Where both together in one fire most constantly and joyfully yielded their Souls into the hands of the Lord Jesus, Extestimo Io. Lond.

Persecution in Suffolk.

Three burnt at Beckles, May 21.

AFter the death of these above rehearsed, were three men burnt at Beckles in Suffolk, in one fire about the 21. of May, Anno 1556. Whose names are here specified.

The martyrdom of three men burned at Beckles.

Thomas Spicer of Winston, Labourer;
John Denny and Edmund Poole.

This Thomas Spicer was a single man, of the age of Nineteen years, and by vocation a Labourer, dwelling in Winston in the County of Suffolk, and there taken in his Maſters Houſe in Summer, about or anon after the riſing of the Sun, (being in his Bed) by James Ling and John Keretch of the ſame Town, and William Davies of Debnam in the ſaid County.

James Ling, John Keretch, Wil. Davies, Perſecutors.

The occaſion of his taking was, for that he would not go to their Popiſh Church to hear Maſs, and receive their Idol at the Commandment of Sir John Tyrrel Knight, of Gipping-Hall in Suffolk, and certain other Juſtices there, who ſent both him and them to Eye Dungeon in Suffolk, till at length they were all three together brought before Dunning, then Chancellor of Norwich, and Mr. Mings the Regiſter ſitting at the Town of Beckles to be examined.

Dunning and Mings Perſecutors.

And there the ſaid Chancellor, perſwading what he could to turn them from the Truth, could by no means prevail of his purpoſe. Wherefore minding in the end to give Sentence on them, he burſt out in tears, intreating them to remember themſelves, and to turn again to the holy Mother Church, for that they were deceived and out of the Truth, and that they ſhould not wilfully caſt away themſelves, with ſuch like words.

Now as he was thus labouring them, and ſeemed very loath to read the Sentence (for they were the firſt that he condemned in that Dioceſs) the Regiſter there ſitting by, being weary belike of tarrying, or elſe perceiving the conſtant Martyrs to be at a point, called upon the Chancellor in haſte to rid them out of the way, and to make an end. At the which words the Chancellor read the Condemnation over them with tears, and delivered them to the Secular Power.

Their Articles.

The Articles whereupon they were condemned.

THe Articles objected to theſe, and commonly to all other condemned in that Dioceſs by Dr. Hopton Biſhop of Norwich, and by Dunning his Chancellor, were theſe:

1. Firſt, It was Articulate againſt them, that they believed not the Pope of Rome to be Supream Head immediately under Chriſt in Earth of the Univerſal Catholick Church.

2. Item, That they believed not holy Bread and holy Water, Aſhes, Palms, and all other like Ceremonies uſed in the Church, to be good and laudable for ſtirring up the People to Devotion.

Ceremonies.

3. Item, That they believed not, after the words of Conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt, the very natural Body of Chriſt, and no other Subſtance of Bread and Wine to be in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Sacrament of the Altar.

4. Item, That they believed it to be Idolatry to worſhip Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar.

5. Item, That they took Bread and Wine in remembrance of Chriſts Paſſion.

6. Item, That they would not follow the Croſs in Proceſſion, nor be confeſſed to a Prieſt.

7. Item, That they affirmed no mortal man to have in himſelf freewil to do good or evil.

For this Doctrine and Articles above prefixed, theſe three (as is aforeſaid) were condemned by Dr. Dunning, and committed to the Secular Power, Sir John Silliard being the ſame time high Sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk.

And the next day following upon the ſame, they were all burnt together in the ſaid Town of Beckles. Whereupon it is to be thought, that the Writ De Comburendo, was not yet come down, nor could be, the Lord Chancellor B. Heath being the ſame time at London. Which if it be true, then it is plain, that both they went beyond their Commiſſion, that were the Executioners, and alſo the Clergy, which were the Inſtigators thereof, cannot make good that they now pretend; ſaying, that they did nothing but by Law. But this let the Lord find out when he ſeeth his time.

Execution of burning in Suffolk done without a Writ.

In the mean time while theſe good men were at the Stake, and had prayed, they ſaid their Belief; and when they came to the reciting of the Catholick Church, Sir John Silliard ſpake to them; That is well ſaid, ſirs, quoth he, I am glad to hear you ſay, you do believe the Catholick Church. That is the beſt word I have heard of you yet.

Sir Joh. Silliards words.

To which his ſayings Edmund Poole anſwered, that though they believe the Catholick Church, yet do they not believe in their Popiſh Church, which is no part of Chriſts Catholick Church, and therefore no part of their Belief.

Anno 1556.

Edm. Poole refuſeth the Popiſh Church.

When they roſe from Prayer, they all went joyfully to the Stake, and being bound thereto, and the Fire burning about them, they praiſed God in ſuch an audible voice, that it was wonderful to all thoſe which ſtood by and heard them.

Then one Robert Bacon, dwelling in the ſaid Beckles, a very Enemy of Gods Truth, and a Perſecutor of his People, being there preſent within hearing thereof, willed the Tormentors to throw one Fagot to ſtop the Knaves breaths, as he termed them; ſo hot was his burning Charity. But theſe good men, not regarding their malice, confeſſed the Truth, and yielded their lives to the death for the teſtimony of the ſame, very gloriouſly and joyfully. The which their conſtancy in the like cauſe the Lord grant we may imitate and follow unto the end: Whether it be death or life, to glorifie the Name of Chriſt, Amen.

Robert Bacon an enemy.

And foraſmuch as we have here entred into the Perſecution of Norfolk and Suffolk, it cometh therefore to mind, by occaſion hereof, briefly to touch by the way, ſome part (for the whole matter cannot be ſo expreſt as it was done) touching the troubles of the Town of Winſon and Mendleſam in Suffolk, raiſed and ſtirred by the ſaid Sir John Tyrrel and other Juſtices there of the like affinity. The ſum and effect of which briefly is thus ſignified to me by writing.

The Perſecution in the Towns of Winſon and Mendleſam in Suffolk.

Sir Jo. Tyrrel Perſecutor. Perſecution at Winſon & Mendleſam in Suffolk.

BY the procurement of Sir John Tyrrel Kt. and other of his Colleagues, there were perſecuted out of the Town of Winſon in Suffolk, theſe perſons hereafter following, Anno 1556.

The names of good men perſecuted in Suffolk at Mendleſam.

Mrs. Alice Twaites Gentlewoman, of the age of threeſcore years and more, and two of her Servants.
Humfrey Smith and his wife.
William Catchpoole and his wife.
John Mauling and his wife.
Nicholas Burlingham and his wife.
And one Rought and his wife.

Such as were perſecuted and driven out of the Town of Mendleſam, in the County of Suffolk.

Gods people perſecuted.

Symon Harlſtone, and Katherine his wife, with his five children.
William Whitting, and Katherine his wife.
Thomas Dobſon and his wife.
Thomas Hubbard and his wife.
John Doncon and his wife and maid.
William Doncon.
Thomas Woodward the elder.
One Konnolds wife.
A Poor Widow.
One mother Semons Maid.

Beſides thoſe that were conſtrained to do againſt their Conſcience, by the help of the Pariſh Prieſt, whoſe name was Sir John Brodiſh.

Theſe be the chiefeſt Cauſes why thoſe above named were perſecuted.

The faith and doctrine of theſe men.

FIrſt, they did hold and believe the holy Word of God to be the ſufficient Doctrine unto their Salvation.

Secondly, They denied the Popes uſurped Authority, and did hold all that Church of Antichriſt to be Chriſts Adverſaries. And further, they refuſed the abuſed Sacraments, defied the Maſs and all Popiſh Service and Ceremonies, ſaying, they robbed God of his honour and Chriſt of his death and glory, and would not come at the Church, without it were to the defacing of that they did there.

Thirdly,

Anno 1556.

Thirdly, They did hold that the Miniſters of the Church by Gods Word might lawfully marry.

Fourthly, They held the Queen to be as chief Head, and wicked Rulers to be a great Plague ſent of God for ſin, &c.

Fifthly, They denied mans Free-will, and held that the Popes Church did err, and many other in that point with them, rebuking their falſe confidence in works, and their falſe truſt in mans righteouſneſs. Alſo when any rebuked thoſe perſecuted for going ſo openly, and talking ſo freely; their anſwer was, They knowledged, confeſſed, and believed, and therefore they muſt ſpeak: and that their Tribulation was Gods good will and providence, and that his Judgments were right, to puniſh them with other for their ſins; and that of very faithfulneſs and mercy God had cauſed them to be troubled, ſo that one hair of their Heads ſhould not periſh before the time, but all things ſhould work unto the beſt to them that love God, and that Chriſt Jeſus was their life and only righteouſneſs, and that only by faith in him, and for his ſake all good things were freely given them, alſo forgiveneſs of ſins and life everlaſting.

Witneſſed by the faithful report of Suffolk men.

Many of theſe perſecuted were of great Subſtance, and had Poſſeſſions of their own.

Give God the praiſe.

¶ Foraſmuch as we are now in the Month of May, before we overpaſs the ſame, and becauſe the Story is not long and not unworthy peradventure of noting, it ſhall not grieve the ſtudious Reader, a little to give the hearing thereof, whereby to learn to marvel and muſe at the great works of the Lord. They that go down (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) into the Sea, labouring upon the water, have ſeen the works of the Lord, and his mighty wonders upon the deep, Pſal. 106. &c. The truth whereof may well appear in this ſtory following; which ſtory, as it is ſignified and written to me by relation of the party himſelf, which was doer thereof, called Thomas Morſe, ſo I thought to purport the ſame as followeth.

A Story of one Gregory Crow, marvellouſly preſerved with his New Teſtament upon the Seas, May 26.

A ſtory of Gregory Crow marvellouſly preſerved upon the Sea with his New Teſtament.

UPon Tueſday after Whitſunday, which was the 26. day of May, in this preſent year 1556. (or elſe, as he rather thinketh, in the year next before, which was 1555.) a certain poor man, whoſe name was Gregory Crow, dwelling in Maulden, went to the Sea, minding to have gone into Kent for Fulling Earth, but by the way, being foul weather, was driven upon a Sand, where preſently the Boat ſunk, and was full of water, ſo that the men were forced to hold themſelves by the Maſt of the Boat, and all things that would ſwim did ſwim out of her. Amongſt which Crow ſaw his Teſtament in the water, and caught it and put it in his boſom. Now it was ebbing water, ſo that within one hour the Boat was dry, but broken ſo as they could not ſave her; but they went themſelves upon the Sand (being ten miles at the leaſt from the Land) and there made their Prayers together, that God would ſend ſome Ship that way to ſave them (being two men and one boy in all;) for they might not tarry upon the Sand but half an hour, but it would be floud. In the which time they found their Cheſt wherein was money to the ſum of five pound ſix ſhillings eight pence, the which money the man which was with the ſaid Crow (whoſe name I know not) took and gave it unto Crow who was owner thereof, and he caſt it into the Sea, ſaying, If the Lord will ſave our lives, he will provide us a Living, and ſo they went upon the Maſt there, hanging by the arms and legs for the ſpace of ten hours, in the which time the boy was ſo weary, and beaten with the Sea, that he fell off and was drowned.

Crow Boat broken up on the Sand.

Crow taketh his Teſtamear, and caſteth his mony away.

The boy beaten with the Sea, and drowned.

And when the Water was gone again, and the Sand dry, Crow ſaid to his man, It were beſt for us to take down our Maſts, and when the floud cometh we will ſit upon them, and ſo it may pleaſe God to bring us to ſome Ship that may take us up. Which thing they did, and ſo at ten of the Clock in the night of the ſame Tueſday, the floud did bear up the Maſt whereupon they ſate.

And upon the Wedneſday in the night the man died, being overcome with hunger and watching. So there was none left but this Crow, who, driving up and down in the Sea, called upon God as he could, and might not ſleep for fear that the Sea would have beaten him off.

Crow man dead upon the Maſt.

Gregory Crow driven upon the Seas, ſitting upon a Maſt. Gods providence to be noted.

So at length I my ſelf (ſaid Thomas Morſe) being laden to Antwerp with my Crayer, going from Lee upon Friday, having within my Crayer, of Mariners and Merchants, to the number of 46. perſons, and ſo coming to the Foreland, the wind was not very good, ſo that I was conſtrained to go ſomewhat out of my way, being in the Afternoon about ſix of the Clock, where at the laſt we ſaw a thing afar off, appearing unto us like a ſmall buoy, that Fiſhermen do uſe to lay with their hooks.

When we ſaw it, ſome ſaid, Let us have ſome fiſh. And I ſaid to him that was at the Helm; Keep your courſe away, for we ſhall but hinder the Fiſherman, and have no fiſh neither, and ſo at my commandment he did. But at length he at the Helm ſtanding higher then all we did, ſaid, Me think Maſter, it is a man. But yet they, being in doubt that it was but a Fiſhers Buoy, returned the Ship from him again to keep their courſe.

God a marvellous helper in time of need.

Crow beholding the Ship to turn from him, being then in utter deſpair, and ready now to periſh with watching, famine, and moreover miſerably beaten with the Seas, at laſt took his Mariners Cap from his head, and holding up the ſame with his arm, as high as he could, thought by ſhaking it as well as he might, to give them ſome token of better ſight.

Whereupon the Styremen more ſenſibly perceiving a thing to move, advertiſed us again, declaring how he did ſee plainly a mans arm; and with that we all beheld him well, and ſo came to him and took him up. And as ſoon as we had him in our Ship, he began to put his hand in his boſom; and one asked him if he had mony there. No, ſaid he, I have a Book here, I think it be wet; and ſo drew out his Teſtament, which we then dried. But the Sea had ſo beaten him, that his eyes, noſe, and mouth were almoſt cloſed with ſalt, that the heat of his face and the weather had made. So we made a fire and ſhifted him with dry clothes, and gave him Aqua compoſita to drink, and ſuch meat as was in the Ship, and then let him ſleep.

Crow with the Teſtament preſerved on the Sea.

The next day we awaked him about eight of the clock in the Morning, and his blood began ſomewhat to appear in his fleſh (for when we took him up, his fleſh was even as though it had been ſodden, or as a drowned mans is) and then we talked with him of all the matter before rehearſed. And ſo ſayling to Antwerp, the Merchants which ſaw the thing publiſhed the ſame in Antwerp; and becauſe it was wonderful, the people there, both men and women, came to the ſhip to ſee him many of them. Some gave him a Peticoat, and ſome a Shirt, ſome Hoſen, and ſome Money (always noting how he caſt away his Mony, and kept his Book.)

And many of the women wept when they heard and ſaw him. And Maſter Governour of the Engliſh Nation there had him before him, and talked with him of all the matter; and pitying his caſe, commanded the Officer of the Engliſh Houſe to go with him to the free Oſtehouſes amongſt the Engliſh Merchants, and I with them, and at three Houſes there was given him ſix pound ten ſhillings. And ſo from thence he went with me to Roan, where the people alſo came to him to ſee him, marvelling at the great works of God.

The ſum of his money: caſt into the Sea reſtored him again.

And thus much concering this poor man with his New Teſtament preſerved in the Sea (which Teſtament the Popes Clergy condemneth on the Land) ye have heard, as I received by the relation of the Party above named) who was the doer thereof, and yet alive dwelling in Lee, well known to all Merchants of London. In which ſtory this by the way underſtand, good Reader, (which rightly may be ſuppoſed) that if this poor man, thus found and preſerved in the Sea with a New Teſtament in his boſom, had had inſtead of that a Pix with a conſecrated Hoſt about him, no doubt it had been rung e're this time all Chriſtendom over for a Miracle, ſo far as the Pope hath any Land. But to let the Pope with his falſe Miracles go, let us return again to our matter begun, and adjoyn another Hiſtory of much like condition, teſtified likewiſe by the Information of the ſaid Thomas Morſe above mentioned, to the intent to make known the worthy acts of the Almighty; that he may be magnified in all his wondrous works. The Story is thus declared, which happened Anno 1556. about Michaelmas.

Another like ſtory of Gods Providence upon three men delivered upon the Sea.

Another like ſtory of three men that feared God, by Gods providence preſerved on the Seas. Three ſitting upon a piece of their Ship two days and two nights in the Sea.

THere was a Ship (ſaith the ſaid Thomas Morſe) whereof I had a part, going toward the Bay for Salt, with two Ships of Brickleſey, which were altogether going for Salt, as before is ſaid. At what time we were within ten miles of the North Foreland, otherwiſe called Tenet, the wind did come ſo contrary to our Ship, that we were forced to go clean out of the way, and the other two Ships kept their courſe ſtill, until our Ship was almoſt out of ſight of them. And then they ſaw a thing driving upon the Sea, and hoiſed up their Boat and went unto it; and it was three men ſitting upon a piece of their Ship, which had ſitten ſo two days and two nights.

There had been in their Ship eight men more, which were drowned, being all Frenchmen, dwelling in a place in France called Olloronne. They had been at Danſwick, and loſt their Ship about Oxford Nas, as might be learned by their words. They were men that feared God, the one of them was Owner of the Ship. Their exerciſe, while they were in our Ship, was, that after their coming in, they gave thanks for their Deliverance: both Morning and Evening they exerciſed Prayer, and alſo before and after Meat; and when they came into France, our Ships went to the ſame place where theſe men dwelled, and one of them did ſell unto our men their Ships lading of Salt, and did uſe them very courteouſly and friendly, and not at that time only, but always whenſoever that Ship cometh thither, (as ſhe hath been there twice ſince) he always doth for them, ſo that they can lack nothing. I ſhould have noted, that after our Ship had taken up thoſe three men out of the Sea, they had the wind fair preſently, and came and overtook the other two Ships again, and ſo they proceeded in their Voyage together.

For the more credit of this Story above recited, to ſatiſfie either the doubtful, or to prevent the quarreller, I have not only alledged the name of the party which was the doer thereof, but alſo expreſſed the matter in his own words, as I of him received it; the Party and Reporter himſelf being yet alive, and dwelling at Lee, a man ſo well known amongſt the Merchants of London, that whoſoever heareth the name of Thomas Morſe, will never doubt thereof. And again, the matter it ſelf being ſo notoriouſly known to Merchants as well here as at Antwerp, that though his name were not expreſſed, the Story can lack no Witneſſes.

The death of William Slech in the Kings Bench.

May 31. Will. Slech dead in the Kings Bench, and buried in the fields.

THe laſt day of the ſaid Month of May, in the year aforeſaid, William Slech being in Priſon for the ſaid Doctrine of the Lords Goſpel, and the Confeſſion of his Truth, died in the Kings Bench, and was buried on the backſide of the ſaid Priſon, for that the Romiſh Catholick Spiritualty thought him not worthy to come within their Pope holy Church-yards, neither in any other Chriſtian Burial, as they call it.

The Story of four men condemned at Lewis the 6. day of June.

June 6. Four Martyrs burnt at Lewis.

IN June next following, about the ſixth day of the ſame Month, four Martyrs ſuffered together at Lewis, whoſe names were theſe:

Thomas Harland of Woodmancote, Carpenter.
John Oſwald of Woodmancote, Husbandman.
Thomas Avington of Ardingly, Turner.
Thomas Read.

To Thomas Harland I find in the Biſhop of Londons Regiſters, to be objected for not coming to Church. Whereunto he anſwered, That after the Maſs was reſtored, he never had will to hear the ſame, becauſe (ſaid he) it was in Latin which he did not underſtand; and therefore as good, quoth he, never a whit as never the better.

Ex Regiſt. Anſwer of Th. Harland.

Anno 1556.

Anſwer of Joh. Oſwald.

John Oſwald denied to anſwer any thing, until his Accuſers ſhould be brought face to face before him; and nevertheleſs ſaid, That Fire and Fagots could not make him afraid: but as the good Preachers which were in King Edwards time have ſuffered and gone before, ſo was he ready to ſuffer and come after, and would be glad thereof.

Theſe four, after long Impriſonment in the Kings Bench, were burned together at Lewis in Suſſex, in one Fire, the day of the Month aforeſaid.

The Martyrdom of Thomas Whood, and Thomas Milles.

June 20. Two Martyrs burnt at Lewis.

IN the ſame Town of Lewis, and in the ſame Month likewiſe, were burned Thomas Whood Miniſter, and Thomas Milles, about the twentieth day of the ſame Month, for reſiſting the erroneous and heretical Doctrine of the pretenſed Catholick Church of Rome.

Two dead in the Kings Bench.

June 23. W. Adherall

IN the which Month likewiſe, William Adherall Miniſter, impriſoned in the Kings Bench, there died the 24. day of the ſame Month, and was buried in the backſide: Alſo John Clement Wheelright, who dying in the ſaid Priſon, in like ſort upon the Dunghil was buried in the backſide two days after, viz. the 25. day of June.

June 25. Joh. Clement.

A Merchants Servant burned at Leiceſter.

June 26. A Merchants Servant.

THe next day following of the ſaid Month of June, we read of a certain young man, a Merchants Servant, who for the like godlineſs ſuffered cruel Perſecution of the Papiſts, and was burnt at Leiceſter the 26. day of the Month of June above named.

Thirteen Martyrs burned at Stratford the Bow.

June 29. Thirteen Martyrs ſuffering at Stratford the Bow.

NOt long after the death of the Merchants Servant before mentioned, there followed in this happy and bleſſed order of Martyrs burned in one Fire at Stratford the Bow by London, eleven men and two women, whoſe dwellings were in ſundry places in Eſſex, and whoſe names hereafter follow.

Henry Adlington.	Lyon Cawch.
Laurence Parnam.	Ralph Jackſon.
Henry Wye.	John Deriſall.
William Hallywel.	John Routh.
Thomas Bowyer.	Elizabeth Pepper.
George Searles.	Agnes George.
Edmund Hurſt.

Unto whom the 6. of June, An. 1556. Dr. Darbyſhire, Boners Chancellor, in form of Law miniſtred the ſame Articles that were pronounced unto Thomas Whittle and his Company, mentioned before, to the which they made their ſeveral anſwers, in ſimplicity and in a good conſcience. The ſum and effect whereof enſueth.

Their Anſwers to the Articles.

To the firſt, they all anſwered affirmatively; but Lyon Cawch added further, that he believed that the true Faith and Religion of Chriſt is, whereſoever the Word of God is truly preached.

Anſwer to the ſecond Article.

To the ſecond Article they all anſwered in effect, denying that there be ſeven Sacraments; ſome affirming that in the Church of Chriſt there be but two Sacraments, that is to ſay, Baptiſm and the Lords Supper: Others referring themſelves to believe as the Scripture teacheth them: And other ſome refuſed to make anſwer becauſe of their ſimplicity.

Anſwer to the third Article.

To the third Article they all anſwered affirmatively.

Anſwer to the fourth Article.

To the fourth Article they all anſwered affirmatively, ſaving John Routh, who ſaid he would make no anſwer thereunto. But Lyon Cawch added, that he believed the Article to be true; but it was becauſe he had no better know-knowledge. And Agnes George added, that in K. Edward the ſixth his time ſhe went from her old Faith and Religion, and believed in the Faith and Religion that was then taught and ſet forth.

Anno 1556.

Anſwer to the fifth Article.

To the fifth, they all anſwered in effect affirmatively, ſaving John Routh, whoſe anſwer was, That the Maſs is ſuch a thing, which neither can nor will enter into his Conſcience. And Henry Adlington anſwered, That for nine or ten years before, he miſliked the Maſs, and alſo the Sacrament of the Altar, becauſe they cannot be proved by the Scriptures. And as touching the Authority of the See of Rome, he being but fourteen years of age, took an Oath againſt the ſame, which Oath (he ſaid) he intended to keep by the grace of God.

Anſwer to the ſixth Article.

To the ſixth they all anſwered affirmatively, ſaving John Routh, and William Halliwel, who both refuſed to anſwer, becauſe they knew not what they meant by this Article. But the two Women added, That they refuſed to be reconciled to the Faith and Religion that was then uſed in the Realm of England. And Laurence Pernam added, That he never refuſed to be reconciled and brought to the Unity of the Catholick Church of Chriſt.

Anſwer to the ſeventh Article.

To the ſeventh Article they all anſwered affirmatively; but William Halliwel denied that ever he called the Maſs Idolatry and Abomination. And Henry Wye affirming the Article to be true; yet he confeſſed his infirmity, that he went to his Pariſh Church and received, before he was put in Priſon.

Anſwer to the eighth Article.

To the eighth Article Edmund Hurſt, Ralph Jackſon, and George Searles anſwered affirmatively: Henry Wye ſaid he was brought before certain Juſtices of Peace in Eſſex, concerning one Higbed his late Maſter, and thereupon he was committed to Colcheſter Caſtle, and from thence ſent to London to the Biſhop to be further examined. William Halliwel affirmed the like confeſſion as Henry Wye did, only Higbed excepted. John Derifall ſaid he was called before the Lord Rich, and Mr. Mildmay of Chelmesford, and was by them ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be further by him examined. Thomas Bowyer ſaid he was brought before one Mr. Wiſeman of Felſed, and by him was ſent to Colcheſter Caſtle, and from thence was carried to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Lyon Cawch ſaid that he was ſent to come before the King and Queens Majeſties Commiſſioners, and there before them appearing three times, was ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Henry Adlington ſaid, That he coming to Newgate to ſpeak with one Gratwike there being Priſoner for the Teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt, was apprehended and brought before Dr. Story, and by him ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. John Routh ſaid, That he was convented before the Earl of Oxford, and by him ſent to the Caſtle of Colcheſter, and from thence conveighed to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Laurence Pernam ſaid, That he was committed to Hartford Priſon, becauſe he would not go to Church, and from thence ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Agnes George ſaid, That ſhe was committed to Priſon in Colcheſter, at the commandment of one Mr. Maynard an Alderman of the Town, becauſe ſhe would not go to Church, and from thence was ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Elizabeth Pepper ſaid ſhe was apprehended by two Conſtables and an Alderman, for that ſhe would not come to Church, and by them was ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined.

Anſwer to the ninth Article.

To the ninth Article, they all believed the Premiſſes to be true above by them confeſſed, and that they were of the Dioceſs and Juriſdiction of London. But Elizabeth Pepper added, That ſhe was of the Town of Colcheſter.

And Agnes George added, That ſhe was of the Pariſh of Barefold. And Lyon Cawch added, That he was then of the City of London, by reaſon that he was at that preſent a Merchant there.

Henry Wye.

Henry Wye, Brewer, was of the Pariſh of Stantford le Hore, and of 32. years of age.

W. Halliwel.

William Halliwel was a Smith, of the Pariſh of Waltham Holle-Croſs, and of the age of 24. years, or thereabouts.

Ralph Jackſon.

Ralph Jackſon was a Servingman, of Shepping Onger, and of the age of 24. years.

Laurence Pernam.

Laurence Pernam was a Smith of Hodſdon, within the Pariſh of Amwell, in the County of Hartford, and of the age of 22. years.

John Derifall.

John Derifall was a Labourer, of the Pariſh of Rettington in Eſſex, and of the age of 50. years.

Edmund Hurſt.

Edmund Hurſt was a Labourer, of the Pariſh of S. James's in Colcheſter, and of the age of 50. years and above.

Thomas Bowyer.

Thomas Bowyer was a Weaver of Much Dunmow, and of the age of 36. years.

George Searles.

George Searles was a Taylor, between 20. or 21. years of age, of the Pariſh of White Nottle, where he was taken and carried to the Lord Rich, who ſent him to Colcheſter Caſtle, with a Commandment that no Friend he had ſhould ſpeak with him. There he lay ſix weeks, and was ſent up to London, where he was ſometime in the Biſhops Coleh[ou]ſe, ſometime in Lollards Tower, and laſt of all in Newgate. He was apprehended in Lent, about a fortnight before Eaſter, in the place aforeſaid.

Lyon Cawch.

Lyon Cawch was a Broker, born in Flanders, and then reſident, at his taking, in the City of London, and of the age of 28. years or thereabouts.

Henry Adlington.

Henry Adlington was a Sawyer, and of Greenſted in the County of Suſſex, and of the age of 30. years.

John Routh.

John Routh was a Labourer, and of the Pariſh of Wiekes in Eſſex, and of the age of 26. years.

Elizabeth Pepper.

Elizabeth Pepper was the wife of Thomas Pepper, Weaver, of the Pariſh of S. James's in the Town of Colcheſter, and of the age of 30. years, or thereabouts, who when ſhe was burned at Stratford, was eleven weeks gone with child, as ſhe then teſtified to one Boſoms wife, who then unlooſed her Neckerchief, ſaying moreover, when ſhe was asked why ſhe did not tell them; and anſwering, Why, quoth ſhe, they knew it well enough. O! ſuch be the bloody hearts of this cruel Generation, that no occaſion can ſtay them from their miſchievous murthering of the Saints of the Lord, which truſty profeſs Chriſt crucified only and alone for the ſatisfaction of their ſins.

Agnes George. Ex. Regiſt.

Agnes George was the wife of Richard George Huſbandman, of Weſt Barefold in the County of Eſſex, and of the age of 26. years. This Richard George had another wife burned beſide her in the Poſtern at Colcheſter, and himſelf lay in Priſon until Queen Elizabeth came to the Crown, and then was delivered.

When theſe thirteen were condemned, and the day appointed they ſhould ſuffer, which was the 27. day of June, An. 1556. they were carried from Newgate in London the ſaid day to Stratford the Bow, (which was the place appointed for their Martyrdom) and there divided into two parts, in two ſeveral Chambers. Afterward the Sheriff, who there attended upon them, came to the one part, and told them that the other had recanted, and their lives therefore ſhould be ſaved, willing and exhorting them to do the like, and not to caſt away themſelves.

A practice of policy in the Sheriff of London.

Unto whom they anſwered, That their Faith was not builded on Man, but on Chriſt crucified. Then the Sheriff perceiving no good to be done with them, went to the other part, and ſaid (like a lyar) the like to them, that they whom he had been with before, had recanted, and ſhould therefore not ſuffer death, counſelling them to do the like, and not wilfully to kill themſelves, but to play the wiſe men, &c.

Unto whom they anſwered as their Brethren had done before, that their Faith was not builded on Man, but on Chriſt and his Word, &c.

Now when he ſaw it booted not to perſwade (for they were, God be praiſed, ſurely grounded on the Rock Jeſus Chriſt) he then led them to the place where they ſhould ſuffer, and being all there together, moſt earneſtly they prayed unto God, and joyfully went to the Stake, and kiſſed it, and embraced it very heartily.

Two women ſtanding at the Stake unbound.

The eleven men were tied to three Stakes, and the two women looſe in the midſt without any Stake, and ſo they were all burnt in one Fire, with ſuch love to each other, and conſtancy in our Saviour Chriſt, that it made all the lookers on to marvel. The Lord grant us the like grace in the like need, according to the good pleasure of his will, Amen.

In the company of these foresaid thirteen, were three more condemned to dye; whose Names are here-under specified:

These three were dispensed all by the Cardinal.

Thomas Freeman.
William Stannard.
William Adams.

Which three answered to those Articles that were propounded unto the said thirteen, in effect as they did. And being thus in the hands of the Secular Power, Cardinal Pool sent his Dispensation for their lives, by what occasion I cannot safely say, but by means thereof they then escaped. The Copy of which Dispensation, because it is exemplified in our first Impression, I shall desire the Reader to resort to the place of the page 1525. Anno 1556.

The Sunday after these aforesaid sixteen were condemned, Fecknam Dean of Pauls preached at Pauls Cross, where he declared, that they had as many sundry Opinions as they were sundry Persons. At the hearing The slanders of Fecknam reproved.

whereof they drew out their Faith, and set to their Hands as hereafter followeth, and directed the same to their Friends, and the faithful Congregation, as followeth.

Unto all our dearly beloved Friends, and the holy Congregation of Jesus Christ, even so many as love God, grace be with you, and peace from God our Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ. So be it.

A Letter or Apology of the Martyrs, purging themselves of the false slander of Mr. Fecknam.

BE it manifest to all unto whom this our Certificate shall be seen, that where upon Saturday, being the thirteenth day of June, at Fulham, before the Bishop of London, sixteen of us (whose names here-under are subscribed) were condemned to dye for the most pure and sincere truth of Christs verity; which most godly truth hath been from the beginning with the wicked adversaries thereof continually defaced, and is by the Devil and his Imps even at this present likewise daily slandered: Upon this occasion, dearly beloved Brethren, we are moved, yea constrained, in the ears of all men to manifest our belief, and also briefly the Articles whereof we are condemned, for the avoiding of false reports and slanderous tongues, which might happen by the most ungodly and uncharitable Sermon lately preached at Pauls Cross, the fourteenth of the said Month, being Sunday, by Mr. Fecknam, now Dean of the same Church; where he in that most worthy Audience defamed us to be in sixteen sundry Opinions, which were a thing prejudicial to all Christian verity; and for a testimonial thereof, this here-under written shall answer our Cause, and therefore we pray you that are of God to judge.

Uniform agreement in their Faith.

The first, we believe we were baptized in the Faith of Christs Church, and incorporate unto him, and made Members of his Church, in the which Faith we continue. And although we have erred for a certain time, yet the root of Faith was preserved in us by the Holy Ghost, which hath reduced us into a full certainty of the same, and we do perfist, and will by Gods assistance to the end. Now mark, that although the Minister were of the Church malignant, yet his wickedness did not hurt us, for that he baptized us in the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

The profession of their Baptism.

There was both the Word and the Element, and our Godfathers and Godmothers renouncing for us the Devil and all his Works, and confessing the Articles of the Christian Faith for us, and also witnesses that we are baptized, not in the Faith of the Church of Rome, but in the Faith of Christs Church.

Sacrament of the Church.

1. Item, There are but two Sacraments in Christs Church, that is, the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Lords Supper. For in these are contained the Faith of Christ his Church; that is, the two Testaments, the Law and the Gospel. The effect of the Law is repentance, and the effect of the Gospel remission of sins.

The visible Church.

2. Item, We believe that there is a visible Church, wherein the Word of God is preached, and the holy Sacraments truly ministred, visible to the wicked world, although it be not credited, and by the death of Saints confirmed, as it was in the time of Helias the Prophet as well as now.

The See of Rome.

3. The See of Rome is the See of Antichrist, the Congregation of the wicked, &c. whereof the Pope is Head under the Devil.

The Mass.

4. Item, The Mass is not only a prophanation of the Lords Supper, but also a blasphemous Idol.

Transubstantiation denied.

5. Item, God is neither spiritually nor corporally in the Sacrament of the Altar, and there remaineth no Substance in the same, but only the Substance of Bread and Wine.

For these the Articles of our Belief, we being condemned to dye, do willingly offer our corruptible Bodies to be dissolved in the fire, all with one voice assenting and con-conſenting thereunto, and in no point diſſenting or diſagreeing from any of our former Articles.

Apparent alſo let it be and known, that being of the former Articles before the bloody Biſhop examined, the ſaid day and time, we affirmed to believe all that he or the would approve by the Scriptures. But he ſaid that he would not ſtand to prove it with Heretick, but ſaid they themſelves were the holy Church, and that we ought to believe them, or elſe to be cut off like withered branches.

Trouble and buſineſs in the Dioceſs of Litchfield.

June 14. Ralph Bane Bp. of Coventry and Lichfield, a cruel Perſecutor.

IN the Dioceſs of Litchfield, about the fourteenth of June, in the ſame year, John Colſtock who was lately come from London before, and now dwelling at Welſington, though he ſuffered no Martyrdom, yet ſuſtained ſome trouble, being attached and examined by the Biſhop, named Ralph Bane, for his Religion, eſpecially for two points, in holding againſt the reality of Chriſt in the Sacrament, and againſt Auricular Confeſſion to be made to the Prieſt. For the which cauſe being compelled to recant, he was injoyned in the Church of St. Cedde to bear a Fagot before the Croſs, bare-headed, having in the one hand a Taper, and in the other a pair of Beads, &c.

Amongſt divers other which in the ſame Dioceſs, and the ſame time were ſuſpected and troubled for the like, was Thomas Flier of Uttoxater, Shoomaker, Nich. Ball of Uttoxater, Capper, Thomas Pyot of Chedull.

Marrying in Lent puniſhed. June 26. Tho. Johnſon for ſwearing by the holy Maſs, did penance.

Item, Henry Crimes for marrying his Wife on Palm-Sunday Even, &c. Some other alſo there were which had the like Penance injoyned them, as Thomas Johnſon about the 26. day of this Month of June, becauſe he ſware by the holy Maſs before the Biſhop ſitting in Judgment; who for the ſame was driven to go before the Croſs with his Taper and Beads, &c.

Concerning the which Thomas Flier above named, being a godly and a zealous man, this furthermore is to be noted, and not unworthy of grateful memory, that whereas in the Town of Uttoxater, commandment was directed unto him amongſt others from the Ordinary, for pulling down Monuments of Superſtition, and namely the Rood-loft; he being one of the Churchwardens or Sidemen, on a time had talk upon the ſame with certain of his Neighbours, where one wiſhed them ill to chieve, that ſhould go about ſuch an act.

Thomas Flier ſlain in Gods quarrel.

What words paſſed elſe amonſt them, miniſtring matter of further provocation, it is not perfectly known. In fine, the ſaid Flier being offended, and afterward meeting with him that had uſed ſuch words before, began to commune with him of the matter; but in the end the man ſo little repented him of thoſe ſayings, that he added yet more fierce words, and at length ſtrokes alſo, in ſuch wiſe, that at the conflict the ſaid Thomas Flier was ſlain; and yet ſo was the matter handled, and ſuch amends was made with Money by the Murtherer and his Friends, to the ſaid Fliers wife, that he ſuffered little or nothing for the ſame, ſave only that he was baniſhed the Town, and ſworn and bound never to come in it ſo long as the ſaid Fliers wife ſhould live.

Three men dead in the Priſon of the Kings Bench.

June 27. Tho. Parret.

AFter the burning of theſe in Stratford, the ſame Month died in the Priſon of the Kings Bench in Southwark, one Thomas Parret, and was buried in the backſide, the 27. day of the Month aboveſaid.

June 29. Mart. Hunt.

Alſo Martin Hunt (as is reported) in the ſame Priſon was famiſhed the 29. day. At which time likewiſe died in the ſame Priſon, as I find recorded, one John Norice, and after the ſame ſort as the other was buried on the backſide of the ſaid Priſon, the day above mentioned.

The Story of three Martyrs ſuffering at St. Edmundsbury.

June 4.

AFter the death of the aforeſaid Thomas Parret, Martin Hunt, and John Norice, were three maryred at St. Edmundsbury in Suffolk, in one fire; whoſe Names are here-under ſpecified:

Roger Bernard.
Adam Foſter.
Robert Lawſon.

The firſt Examination of Roger Bernard before Dr. Hopton Biſhop of Norwich.

Reg. Bernard Martyr.

WHen Roger Bernard came before the Biſhop, firſt he was asked whether he had been with the Prieſt at Eaſter to be ſhriven, and whether he had received the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, or no? Unto whom Roger Bernard anſwered; No: I have not been with the Prieſt, nor confeſſed my ſelf unto him, but I have confeſſed my ſins to Almighty God, and I truſt he hath forgiven me; whereof I ſhall not need to go to the Prieſt for ſuch matters, who cannot help himſelf.

Reg. Bernard refuſeth Auricular Confeſſion.

Biſh. Surely Bernard thou muſt needs go, and confeſs thy ſelf unto him.

Rog. That ſhall I not do (by Gods grace) while I live.

Biſh. What a ſtout boyly Heretick is this? How malapertly he anſwereth?

Rog. My Lord, it grieveth me no whit (I thank God) to be called Heretick at your hands: for ſo your Forefathers called the Prophets and Confeſſors of Chriſt, long before this time.

At theſe words the Biſhop roſe up in a great heat, and bade Bernard follow him. Then the Biſhop went and kneeled before that they call the Sacrament of the Altar, and as he was in his Prayers kneeling, he looked back, and asked Bernard why he came not and did as he did. Unto whom Bernard anſwered, I cannot tell why I ſhould ſo do. Why, quoth the Biſhop, thou lewd Fellow, whom ſeeſt thou yonder, pointing to the Pix over the Altar?

Rog. I ſee no Body there. Do you, my Lord?

Biſh. Why, naughty man, doſt thou not ſee thy Maker?

Rog. My maker? No, I ſee nothing but a few Clouts hanging together on a heap. With that the Biſhop roſe up ſore diſpleaſed, and commanded the Jayler to take him away, and to lay Irons enough on him. For, quoth he, I will tame him e're he go from me, I trow ſo: and ſo he was carried away.

Note the Catholick Charity of this Prelate

The ſecond Examination of Roger Bernard before the ſaid Biſhop.

Another Examination of Roger Bernard.

THe next day Bernard was brought again before the Biſhop, who asked him if he did not remember himſelf ſince the day before, that he was before him.

Rog. Yes, my Lord, I have remembred my ſelf very well, for the ſame man I was yeſterday, I am this day, and I hope ſhall be all the days of my life, concerning the matter you talked with me of.

One of the Guard taketh Bernard to School.

Then one of the Guard ſtanding by, ſaid, My Lord, I pray you trouble not your ſelf any more with him, but let me have the examining of him, I ſhall handle him after another ſort, I trow, and make him a fair Child e're he go, you ſhall ſee.

A wholſom company of Caterpillers.

So was he committed to him, and brought by him to an Inn, where were a great many of Prieſts aſſembled together, and there they fell all in flattering him; and perſwading him with gay inticing words what they could; but when therein they might not prevail, for that the Lord aſſiſted the good poor man, then began they to threaten him with whipping, ſtocking, burning, and ſuch like, that it was wonderful the do they made with him. Unto whom Bernard ſaid, Friends, I am not better then my Maſter Chriſt and the Prophets, which your Fathers ſerved after ſuch ſort; and I for his Names ſake am content tent to ſuffer the like at your hands, if God ſhall ſo permit, truſting that he will ſtrengthen me in the ſame according to his promiſe, in ſpite of the Devil and all his Miniſters. So when they could not make him to relent or yield, they ſaid, behold a right Scholar of John Fortune, whom they had then in priſon. Then carried they him to the Biſhop, who immediately condemned him as an Heretick, and delivered him to the Secular Power.

Roger Bernard was a ſingle Man; and by his vocation a Labourer, dwelling in Franſden in Suffolk, who was taken in the night by Maſter Tamages Men, becauſe he would not go to Church to hear their unſavory Service, and ſo by them carried to priſon.

Roger Bernard Condemned by the Biſhop of Norwich.

Bernard taken by Tamages Men.

Adam Foſter.

June 30. Adam Foſter Martyr.

Adam Foſter of the age of ſix and twenty years, Husbandman, being married, dwelling in Mendleſam in the County of Suffolk, was taken at home in his houſe a little before the Sun going down by the Conſtables of the ſaid Town, George Revet and Thomas Mouſe, at the Commandment of Sir John Tyrrel of Gyppinghal in Suffolk, Kt. becauſe he would not go to Church and hear Maſs, and receive at Eaſter, except he might have it after Chriſts Holy Ordinance. When they came for him, they told him he muſt go with them unto the Juſtice. Unto whom Adam Foſter ſaid, for Chriſts Cauſe, and to ſave his Conſcience, he was well contented; and ſo they led him to Sir John Tyrrel, and he ſent him to Aye dungeon in Suffolk, from whence at length he was ſent to Norwich, and there condemned by Biſhop Hopton.

George Revet, Tho. Mouſe, & Sir Jo. Tyrrel perſecutors.

Gods ſtroke upon wilful perſecutors.

Now after his taking, the ſaid Thomas Mouſe and George Revet were ſtriken with a great fear and ſickneſs, whereby Mouſe pined and conſumed away even unto death, although he was a Man of young and luſty age. But George Revet who was the ſaid Mouſes fellow, and a great Reader of the Scripture, or (as a Man may term it) a talkative Goſpeller, would not be premoniſhed by the Works of God, but ſet his Son to help the Prieſt ſay Maſs, and to be Clerk of the ſame Town of Mendleſham for lucres ſake; yet was there a fair warning given him of God, although he had not the Grace ſo to conſider it, the which thing was this.

A young Man Pariſh-clerk againſt his Conſcience.

A young Man of the ſame Pariſh newly married, called Robert Edgore, being of a ripe wit and ſound, was Clerk in the ſaid Church before the ſaid Revet ſet his Son in, that room, and executed the Office a little, yea, alas too long, againſt his own Conſcience; whereby at length the Lord ſo took away his wits, that many years after, his poor and woful Wife, good Woman, was compelled to keep him chained, and bound continually, leſt he ſhould unawares do himſelf or ſome other ſome miſchief, as many times (the more pitty) he was ready enough to do.

This (as I ſaid) would not admoniſh Revet, but needs he muſt perſiſt in his wicked purpoſe. Notwithſtanding at the length, as many Men were offended with him in the Pariſh, ſo honeſt women eſpecially (being mightily grieved at his ungodly doings) came to him and ſaid, Neighbour Revet, are ye not afraid to let your Son help the naughty Prieſt to ſay Maſs, and to ſerve that abominable Idol? and he ſaid, No.

Then ſaid they, we fear not to go to Church and hear Maſs, ſeeing you, being a Man that ſo much profeſs Chriſtianity, will let your Son help the Prieſt ſay Maſs, &c.

Revet prayed for a ſtrange token.

At which words Revet waxed angry, and in his rage immediately made his Prayer unto God after this manner, or with ſuch like words, ſaying; O Lord, if it be not thy will that my Son ſhould ſo do, then I beſeech thee ſend ſome ſtrange token to let me underſtand what thy good pleaſure is therein, &c. So according to his Petition, within ſhort ſpace after, his neighbors Bull came into his Paſture, and there he having a very proper Gelding, which was his felicity above any thing he had, the Bull running upon him, did ſo wound and gore him, that immediately thereof his Gelding died, and he thereby nothing amended. For although he knew and confeſſed, that it was the Lords hand upon him for the ſufferance of his Son in that wicked vocation; yet would he not take him from it, but permitted him ſtill to uſe and frequent the ſame againſt his own Conſcience.

Revet confeſſed the Lords hand againſt him, and yet continued in his ſin.

At the laſt, the Lord juſtly ſent upon him a great ſwelling in his Legs, which did ſo grievouſly vex and trouble him by reaſon it ſwelled upward, that at length having thereby brought upon him a very ſtrange ſickneſs, he died moſt miſerably, in ſo impatient manner, that it terrified all good hearts to hear thereof. The Lord grant for Chriſts ſake, that we may obſerve his Judgments better, to his glory and our comfort, Amen. Ex teſtimonio quorundam Suffolcenſium.

Anno 1556.

Revet died of a ſtrange ſickneſs. The Lords hand upon Revet.

Robert Lawſon.

June 30. Robert Lawſon Martyr. Robert Kereth a perſecutor.

Robert Lawſon was a ſingle Man, of the age of thirty years, and by vocation a Linen Weaver, who was apprehended in the night by one Robert Kereth, at the commandment of Sir John Tyrrel of Gyppinghal in Suffolk, Knight, and ſo was immediately carried to Aye Dungeon in Suffolk; where he remained a certain time, and after was led to Bury. The cauſe of his taking was, for that he would not go to Church to hear Maſs, and receive their Popiſh Idol.

The Martyrdom of Roger Bernard, Adam Foſter, Robert Lawſon at Bury. Ann. 1556. June 30.

When theſe three foreſaid Martyrs were carried to their deaths, viz. Roger Bernard, Adam Foſter, and Robert Lawſon at Bury, after they had made their Prayer, being at the Stake, and the tormentors attending the fire, they moſt triumphantly ended their lives, in ſuch happy and bleſſed condition, as did notably ſet forth their conſtancy and joyful end, to the great praiſe of God, and their commendation in him, and alſo to the incouragement of others in the ſame quarrel to do the like. The Lord of ſtrength fortifie us to ſtand as his true Souldiers in what ſtanding ſoever he ſhall think it good to place us, Amen.

In the Examination of Roger Bernard, ye heard a little before, how he was compared by the Prieſts there to John Fortune, and called his Scholar. This John Fortune, otherwiſe called Cutler, of Hintleſham in Suffolk, was by his occupation a Black-Smith, whom they had before them in Examination a little before, the 20. day of April. In Spirit he was zealous and ardent, in the Scriptures ready, in Chriſts Cauſe ſtout and valiant, in his anſwers marvellous, and no leſs patient in his wrongful ſuffering then conſtant in his Doctrine. Whether he was burned, or died in Priſon, I cannot certainly find; but rather I ſuppoſe that he was burned. Certain it is, howſoever he was made away, he never yielded. What his Anſwers and Examinations were before D. Parker and the Biſhop, ye ſhall hear him, although not with his own mouth ſpeaking, yet with his own hand you ſhall ſee written, what he did ſay, as followeth.

The Examination of John Fortune before Doctor Parker and Mr. Foſter.

The Examination of John Fortune before D. Parker, and M. Foſter.

FIrſt D. Parker asked me how I believed in the Catholick Faith.

And I asked him which Faith he meant; whether the Faith that Stephen had, or the Faith of them that put Stephen to death.

D. Parker being moved, ſaid, What a naughty fellow is this? you ſhall ſee anon he will deny the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar.

M. Foſter. Then ſaid Maſter Foſter, I know you well enough. You are a buſie Merchant. How fayeſt thou by the bleſſed Maſs?

For. And I ſtood ſtill and made no anſwer.

Foſt. Then ſaid Maſter Foſter, why ſpeakeſt thou not, and makeſt the Gentleman an anſwer?

Fort. And I ſaid, Silence is a good anſwer to a fooliſh queſtion.

Park. Then ſaid the Doctor, I am ſure he will deny the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar alſo.

The Sacrament of the Altar.

Fort. And I ſaid, I know none ſuch, but only the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Park. Then ſaid he, you deny the order of the ſeven Sacraments. And why doſt thou not believe in the Sacrament of the Altar?

Fort. And I ſaid, becauſe it is not written in Gods Book.

Park. Then ſaid he, you will not believe unwritten Verities.

Fort.

Anno 1556.

Fort. And I ſaid, I will believe that thoſe unwritten verities that agree with the written verities be true: but thoſe unwritten verities that be of your own making, and invented of your own brain, I do not believe.

M. Foſter threatneth Jo. Fortune to be whipped.

Foſt. Well, ſaid M. Foſter, you ſhall be whipped and burned for this gear I trow.

Fort. Then ſaid I, if you knew how theſe words do rejoyce my heart, you would not have ſpoken them.

Foſt. Way thou fool, doſt thou rejoyce in whipping?

Fort. Yea, ſaid I, for it is written in the Scriptures and Chriſt ſaith, Thou ſhalt be whipped for my names ſake: and ſince the time that the ſword of tyranny came into your hands, I heard of none that was whipped. Happy were I, if I had the maiden-head of this perſecution.

Away with him then (ſaid he) for he is ten times worſe then Samuel: and ſo he was carried to priſon again.

The Second Examination of John Fortune before the Biſhop of Norwich.

WHen I came before the Biſhop, he asked me if I did not believe in the Catholick Church. I ſaid I believe that Church whereof Chriſt is the head.

Then the ſaid Biſhop, Doſt thou not believe that the Pope is Supream Head of the Church? And I ſaid, No, Chriſt is the Head of the True Church.

Biſh. So do I believe alſo: but the Pope is Gods Vicar upon Earth, and the Head of the Church, and I believe that he hath power to forgive ſins alſo.

Pſal. 49.

Fort. Then ſaid I, the Pope is but a Man, and the Prophet David ſaith, that no Man can deliver his Brother, nor make agreement for him unto God: For it coſt more to redeem their Souls, ſo that he muſt let that alone for ever.

The Pope likened to a Belweather or a Maſter Bee.

Biſh. And the Biſhop again fetching about a great circumſtance, ſaid, Like as the Belweather weareth her Bell, and is the Head of the Flock of Sheep: ſo is the Pope our Head. And as the Hives of Bees have a Maſter Bee that bringeth the Bees to the hive again: ſo doth our Head bring us home again to our True Church.

Poyſoned Popes.

Fort. Then I asked him, whether the Pope were a Spiritual Man: and he ſaid, Yea. And I ſaid again, They are ſpiteful Men; for in ſeventeen Months there were three Popes, and one poyſoned another for that preſumptuous ſeat of Antichriſt.

Biſh. It is maliciouſly ſpoken (ſaid he) for thou muſt obey the power and not the Man. And thus was the Pope denied to be Supream Head.

Ceremonies of the Church. Matth. 15.

Well, ſaid he, why ſayſt thou to the Ceremonies of the Church?

Fort. And I anſwered, All things that are not planted by my Heavenly Father, ſhall be plucked up by the roots, ſaith Chriſt. For they are not from the beginning, neither ſhall they continue to the end.

Biſh. They are good and godly and neceſſary to be uſed.

Fort. Saint Paul called them weak and beggarly.

Biſh. No that is a lye.

Fort. I hearing that, ſaid, that Saint Paul writeth thus in the fourth to the Galathians, You fooliſh Galathians (ſaith he) who hath bewitched you, that ye ſeek to be in bondage to theſe weak and beggarly Ceremonies? Now which of you do lye? you or S. Paul? And alſo it is ſaid, that works inſtituted, and injoyned without the commandment of God, pertain not to the Worſhip of God, according to the text, Matth. 15. In vain do Men Worſhip me with Mens traditions and commandments. And S. Paul ſaith, Wherefore do ye carry us away from the Grace of Chriſt to another kind of Doctrine? And Chriſt openly rebuked the Scribes, Lawyers, Phariſees, Doctors, Prieſts, Biſhops, and Hypocrites, for making Gods commandments of none effect, to ſupport their own tradition.

Biſh. Thou lieſt, there is not ſuch a word in all the Scriptures, thou naughty Heretick. Thou art worſe then all other Hereticks: for Hooper (ſaid he) and Bradford allow them to be good, and thou doeſt not. Away with him.

It is pity that popiſh Prelates cannot lye.

Here you may perceive, how that the Catholick Church cannot err, but whatſoever they ſay muſt needs be true. And ſo my Lord Biſhop cannot lye, as it may appear to all Men plainly in the Text.

The Third Examination of John Fortune before the Biſhop of Norwich.

THe next day I was brought before the ſaid Biſhop again, where he made a Sermon upon the ſixth Chapter of St. Johns Goſpel, of Chriſts words, I am the Bread that came down from Heaven, &c. And thereupon had a great bibble babble to no purpoſe. So in the end I was called before him, and he ſaid to me:

Another Examination of John Fortune

Biſh. How believeſt thou in the Sacrament of the Altar? Doſt thou not believe, that after the conſecration, there is the real ſubſtance of the Body of Chriſt?

Sacrament of the Altar.

Fort. And I anſwered him, that is the greateſt plague that ever came into England.

Biſh. Why ſo?

Fort. I ſaid, if I were a Biſhop, and you a poor Man as I am, I would be aſhamed to ask ſuch a queſtion. For a Biſhop ſhould be apt to teach and not to learn.

Biſh. I am appointed by the Law to teach, ſo are not you.

Catholick Prelates obſequious to higher powers ſo long as they make for their dignity, but when they do otherwiſe, then they excommunicate them.

Fort. And I ſaid, Your Law breaketh out very well: for you have burned up the true Biſhops and Preachers, and maintained liars to be in their ſtead.

Biſh. Now you may underſtand that he is a Traitor: for he denieth the higher powers.

Fort. I am no Traitor: for Saint Paul Saith, All Souls muſt obey the higher powers, and I reſiſt not the higher powers, concerning my Body, but I muſt reſiſt your evil Doctrine wherewith you would infect my Soul.

A Doct. Then ſaid a Doctor, My Lord, you do not well; let him anſwer ſhortly to his Articles.

Biſh. How ſayeſt thou? make an anſwer quickly to theſe Articles.

Fort. Saint Paul ſaith, Heb. 10. Chriſt did one Sacrifice once for all, and ſet him down on the right hand of his Father, triumphing over Hell and Death making interceſſion for ſins.

Biſh. I ask thee no ſuch queſtion, but make anſwer to this Article.

Fort. If it be not God before the Conſecration, it is not God after: for God is without beginning and without ending.

Biſh. Then ſaid he, lo, what a ſtiff Heretick is this? He hath denied all together: how ſayeſt thou? Is it Idolatry to worſhip the Bleſſed Sacrament or no?

Fort. God is a Spirit, and will be worſhipped in Spirit and Truth.

Biſh. I ask thee no ſuch queſtion: anſwer me directly.

Fort. I anſwer that this is the God Mauzzim, that robbeth God of his honour.

Biſh. It is pitty that the ground beareth thee, or that thou haſt a Tongue to ſpeak. Then ſaid the Scribe; Here are a great many more Articles.

Biſh. Then ſaid the Biſhop, Away with him: for he hath ſpoken too much.

Another Examination of John Fortune.

ANd when I came to mine Examination again, the Biſhop asked me if I would ſtand unto mine anſwer that I had made before: and I ſaid, Yea: for I had ſpoken nothing but the truth. And after that he made a great circumſtance upon the Sacrament.

Other talk between Jo. Fortune and the B. of Norwich.

Then I deſired him to ſtand to the Text, and he read the Goſpel on Corpus Chriſti day, which ſaid, I am the Bread which came down from Heaven: believeſt thou not this? And I ſaid, Yea truly.

And he ſaid, Why doſt thou deny the Sacrament? Becauſe your Doctrine is falſe, ſaid I. John 6.

Then ſaid he, how can that be falſe which is ſpoken in the Scripture? And I ſaid, Chriſt ſaid, I am the Bread, and you ſay the Bread is he. Therefore your Doctrine is falſe, ſaid I.

And he ſaid, Doſt thou not believe that the Bread is he? And I ſaid, No.

Biſh. I will bring thee to it by the Scriptures.

Fort. Hold that faſt my Lord: for that is the beſt Argument that you have yet.

Biſh. Thou ſhalt be burned like an Heretick.

Fort.

Fort. Who ſhall give judgment upon me?

Biſh. I will judge an hundred ſuch as thou art, and never be ſhriven upon it.

Fort. Is there not law for the ſpiritualty as well as for the Temporalty? And Sir Clement Higham ſaid, Yes. What meaneſt thou by that?

The B. of Norwich charged with perjury.

Fort. When a Man is perjured by the Law, he is caſt over the Bar, and ſitteth no more in judgment. And the Biſhop is a perjured Man, and ought to ſit in judgment of no Man.

Biſh. How proveſt thou that?

Fort. Becauſe you took an Oath in King Henries days to reſiſt the Pope. So both ſpiritual and temporal are perjured, that here can be no true judgment.

Biſh. Thinkeſt thou to eſcape judgment by that? No: for my Chancellor ſhall judge thee. He took no Oath, for he was then out of the Realm.

M. Higham. It is time to weed out ſuch fellows as you be, indeed.

Biſh. Good fellow, why believeſt not thou in the Sacrament of the Altar?

Fort. Becauſe I find it not in Gods Book, nor yet in the Doctors. If it were there I would believe it with all my heart.

Biſh. How knoweſt thou it is not there?

Fort. Becauſe it is contrary to the ſecond Commandment: and ſeeing it is not written in Gods Book, why do you then rob me of my Life?

Then the Biſhop having no more to ſay, commanded the Bailiff to take him away.

The death of John Fortune.

And thus much touching the Examinations of this Man. Now whether he dyed in fire, or was otherwiſe prevented with death, as I ſaid before, I am uncertain.

In the Regiſter of Norwich this I do find, that his Sentence of Condemnation was drawn and regiſtred; but whether it was pronounced, in the ſaid Regiſter it is not expreſſed, according as the uſual manner of the Notary is ſo to declare, in the end of the ſentence. Nevertheleſs this is moſt certain, that he never abjured nor recanted, howſoever it pleaſed the Lord by death to call him out of the World.

The death of John Careles in the Kings Bench.

July 1. The death of Jo. Careles priſoner in the Kings Bench.

ABout this time, the firſt day of July, amongſt diverſ other priſoners which died the ſame year in the Kings Bench, was alſo one John Careles of Coventry a Weaver. Who though he were by the ſecret judgment of Almighty God prevented by death, ſo that he came not to the full Martyrdom of his Body, yet is he no leſs worthy to be counted in honour and place of Chriſts Martyrs, then other that ſuffered moſt cruel torments, as well for that he was for the ſame truths ſake a long time impriſoned, as alſo for his willing mind and zealous affection he had thereunto, if the Lord had ſo determined it, as well may appear by his Examination had before Doctor Martin. Which Examination becauſe it contained nothing almoſt but wrangling interrogations, and matters of contention, wherein Doctor Martin would enter into no communication about the Articles of his accuſation, but only urged him to detect his fellows, it ſhall not be greatly material therefore to expreſs the whole, but only to excerpt ſo much as pertaining to the queſtion of predeſtination, may bring ſome fruit to the Reader.

Jo. Careles of Examined before D. Martin.

The effect of John Careles Examination before Doctor Martin briefly declared.

The effect of Jo. Careles Examination.

FIrſt, Doctor Martin calling John Careles to him in his Chamber, demanded what was his name. To whom the other had anſwered, that his name was John Careles, then began Doctor Martin to deſcant at his pleaſure upon that name, ſaying, that it would appear by his condition, by that time he had done with him, that he would be a true careleſs Man indeed. And ſo after other by-talk there ſpent about much needleſs matter, then he asked him where he was born.

How John Careles was brought to the Kings Bench.

Careles. Forſooth, ſaith he, at Coventry.

Martin. At Coventry? what ſo farr, Man? How cameſt thou hither? Who ſent thee to the Kings Bench to priſon?

Carel. I was brought thither by a Writ, I trow, what he was I cannot tell. I think Maſter Marſhal can tell you. Anno 1556.

Marſhal. In good Faith I cannot tell what the matter is; but indeed my Lord chief Juſtice ſent him from the Bar.

Mart. Well Careles, I would thou ſhouldſt play the Wiſe Mans part. Thou art a handſom Man, and it is pitty but thou ſhouldſt do well, and ſave that which God hath bought.

Carel. I thank your good maſterſhip moſt heartily: and I put you out of doubt, that I am moſt ſure and certain of my Salvation by Jeſus Chriſt; ſo that my Soul is ſafe already, whatſoever pains my Body ſuffer here for a little time.

Jo. Careles examined upon predeſtination.

Mart. Yea marry, you ſay truth. For thou art ſo predeſtinate to life, that thou canſt not periſh in whatſoever opinion thou doſt dye.

Carel. That God hath predeſtinate me to eternal life in Jeſus Chriſt, I am moſt certain, and even ſo am I ſure that his Holy Spirit (wherewith I am ſealed) will ſo preſerve me from all Hereſies and evil opinions, that I ſhall dye in none at all.

Mart. Go to, let me hear your Faith in predeſtination. For that ſhall be written alſo.

Carel. Your maſterſhip ſhall pardon me herein. For you ſaid your ſelf ere while, that you had no Commiſſion to examine my Conſcience. I will trouble my ſelf with anſwering no more matters then I needs muſt, until I come before them that ſhall have more Authority further to examine me.

Mart. I tell thee then I have Commiſſion; yea, and commandment from the Council to examine thee: for they delivered me thy Articles.

Carel. Yea, I think indeed that your maſterſhip is appointed to examine me of my Articles, which you have there in writing, and I have told you the truth. I do confeſs them to be mine own fact and deed: but you do now examine me of predeſtination, whereof my Articles ſpeak nothing at all.

D. Martin declareth his Commiſſion.

Martin. I tell thee yet again, that I muſt alſo examine thee of ſuch things as be in controverſie between thee and thy fellows in the Kings Bench, whereof predeſtination is a part, as thy fellow N. hath confeſſed, and thy ſelf doſt not deny it.

Carel. I do not deny it. But he that firſt told you the matter, might have found himſelf much better occupied.

Why Dr. Martin would not Examine him of the Sacrament.

Mart. Why? what if he had not told me? thinkeſt that I would not have known it? Yes, or elſe thou ſhouldſt have withſtood my Commiſſion. For I tell thee truth, I may now examine thee of the Bleſſed Sacrament, or any other thing that I liſt, but that I would ſhew thee favour, and not be too haſty with thee at the firſt.

Marſh. Yea in deed Careles, Mr. Doctor hath Commiſſion to examine you or any other of your fellows.

Martin. Yea marry have I, I tell thee the truth of it.

Carel. Then let your Scribe ſet his pen to the paper, and you ſhall have it roundly, even as the truth is. I believe that Almighty God our moſt dear loving Father, of his great mercy and infinite goodneſs, did elect in Chriſt.

Carel. Tuſh, what need all that long circumſtance? Write, I believe God elected, and make no more ado.

Carel. No, not ſo M. Doctor. It is an high myſtery, and ought reverently to be ſpoken of. And if my words may not be written as I do utter them, I will not ſpeak at all.

Mart. Go to, go to, write what he will. Here is more buſineſs then needeth.

Careles opinion of Gods Election.

Carel. I believe that Almighty God our moſt dear loving Father, of his great mercy and infinite goodneſs (through Jeſus Chriſt) did elect and appoint in him before the Foundation of the Earth was laid, a Church or Congregation, which he doth continually guide and govern by his Grace and Holy Spirit, ſo that not one of them ſhall ever finally periſh. When this was written, M. Doctor took it in his hand and read it, ſaying:

Mart. Why, who will deny this?

Carel.

Anno 1556.

Carel. If your Maſterſhip do allow it, and other learned Men when they ſhall ſee it, I have my hearts deſire.

D. Martin avoweth Careles judgment of Gods Election.

Mart. And do you hold none otherwiſe, then is there written?

Carel. No verily, nor never did.

Mart. Write what he ſaith, otherwiſe he holdeth not: So that was written. It was told me alſo that thou doſt affirm, that Chriſt did not dye effectually for all Men.

Carel. Whatſoever hath been told you, it is not much material unto me. Let the tellers of ſuch tales come before my face, and I truſt to make them anſwer. For indeed I do believe that Chriſt did effectually dye for all thoſe that do effectually repent and believe, and for no other: ſo that was written alſo.

Mart. Now Sir, what is Trews Faith of Predeſtination? He believeth that all Men be predeſtinate, and that none ſhall be damned. Doth he not?

A wrong faith of predeſtination believing to be elected in reſpect of good works.

Carel. No forſooth, that he doth not.

Mart. How then?

Carel. Truly I think he doth believe as your Maſterſhip and the reſt of the Clergy do believe of predeſtination, that we be elected in reſpect of our good works, and ſo long elected, as we do them, and no longer.

Mart. Write what he ſaith, that his fellow Trew believeth of predeſtination as the Papiſts do believe.

Carel. Ah Maſter Doctor, did I ſo term you? Seeing that this my Confeſſion ſhall come before the Council, I pray you place my terms as reverently as I ſpeak them.

Mart. Well, well, write that Trew is of the ſame Faith as the Catholicks be.

Carel. I did not ſo call you neither, I wonder what you mean.

Mart. You ſaid the Clergy, did you not Careles?

Carel. Yes forſooth did I. So then it was written of the Clergy.

Mart. Now ſir, what ſay you more?

Carel. Forſooth I have no further to ſay in this matter.

Mart. Well Careles, I pray thee prove thy ſelf a wiſe Man, and do not caſt away thy life wilfully.

Carel. Now the Lord he knoweth, good M. Doctor, I would full gladly live, ſo that I might do the ſame with a ſafe Conſcience. And your Maſterſhip ſhall right well perceive that I will be no wilful Man, but in all things that I ſtand upon I will have ſure ground.

D. Martin pretendeth favour to Careles.

Mart. Now the Lord knoweth, good Careles, that I would gladly make ſome means to preſerve thy Life. But thou ſpeakeſt ſo much of the Lord, the Lord; wilt thou be content to go with my Lord Fitzwater into Ireland? me thinks thou art a goodly tall fellow to do the Queen ſervice there. How ſayeſt thou?

Carel. Verily Maſter Doctor, whether I be in Ireland, France, or Spain, or any place elſe, I am ready to do her Grace the beſt ſervice that I can, with Body, Goods and Life, ſo long as it doth laſt.

Mart. That is honeſtly ſaid, I promiſe thee, every Man will not ſay ſo. How ſay you M. Marſhal? this Man is meet for all manner of ſervice. Indeed thou art worthy, Careles, to have the more favour.

Carel. Indeed Sir, I hope to be meet and ready unto all things that pertain unto a true Chriſtian ſubject to do. And if her Grace or her Officers under her do require me to do any thing contrary to Chriſts Religion, I am ready alſo to do my ſervice in Smithfield for not obſerving it, as my Bed-fellow and other Brethren have done, praiſed be God for them.

Mart. By my troth thou art a pleaſant fellow as ever I talked with of all the Proteſtants, except it were Tomſon. I am ſorry that I muſt depart with thee ſo ſoon; but I have ſuch buſineſs now, that I can tarry with thee no longer. Well yet thou canſt not deny, but you are at jar mongſt your ſelves in the Kings Bench, and it is ſo throughout all your Congregation: for you will not be a Church.

More variety in the Popes Church then is amongſt the Proteſtants.

Carel. No Maſter Doctor that is not ſo. There is a thouſand times more variety in opinions among your Doctors, which you call of the Catholick Church, yea and that in the Sacrament, for the which there is ſo much Blood ſhed now adays, I mean of your latter Doctors and new Writers; as for the old they agree wholy with us.

Mart. No, Careles, this is not ſo; there thou art deceived.

Carel. Verily it is ſo; Maſter Doctor, I am not deceived therein any thing at all, as it hath been, and is evidently proved by ſuch as God hath indued with great learning. Then he turned to the Marſhal, and whiſpered with him a while.

D. Martin taketh his leave gently of Careles.

Mart. Turning unto me again, he ſaid; Farewel Careles: for I cannot tarry no longer with thee now, my buſineſs is ſuch.

Carel. God be with you, good Maſter Doctor, The Lord give your Maſterſhip health of Body and Soul.

Mart. God have mercy good Careles, and God keep thee from all errors, and give thee Grace to do as well as I would wiſh my ſelf.

Carel. I thank your good Maſterſhip; I pray God I may do always that is acceptable in his ſight. Whereunto they all ſaid; Amen. And ſo I departed with a glad heart; God only have the whole praiſe, Amen.

It appeareth by the Examination of the foreſaid John Careles, that he endured priſoner the ſpace of two whole years, having Wife and Children. In the which his captivity, firſt being in Coventry jayl, he was there in ſuch credit with his Keeper, that upon his word he was let out to play in the Pageant about the City with his companions. And that done, keeping touch with his Keeper, he turned again into priſon at his hour appointed.

Jo. Careles died in Priſon and was buried in the Fields.

And after that being brought up to London, he was indued with ſuch patience and conſtant fortitude; that he longed for nothing more earneſtly, than to come to the promotion to dye in the fire for the profeſſion of his Faith: and yet it ſo pleaſed the Lord to prevent him with death that he came not to it, but died in the priſon, and after was buried in the fields in a dunghil.

In the mean time while he was in Priſon in the Kings Bench, it chanced he was in great heavineſs and perturbation of mind and Conſcience, whereupon he wrote to Maſter Philpot being then in the Colehouſe. Upon the occaſion hereof M. Philpot ſent an Epiſtle conſolatory unto him, ſpecified before among M. Philpots Letters. Unto the which Epiſtle John Careles maketh anſwer again as followeth.

Letters of John Careleſs.

A Letter of John Careles anſwering to the loving Epiſtle or Letter ſent to him before by M. John Philpot.

A Faithful friend is a ſtrong defence, whoſo findeth ſuch a one, findeth a treaſure.

A Faithful friend hath no peer, the weight of Gold and Silver is not to be compared to the goodneſs of his Faith.

A Faithful friend is a medicine of life, and they that fear the Lord ſhall find him, Eccleſ. 6.

A Letter of John Careles to M. Philpot.

THE Father of mercy and God of all conſolation, comfort you with his eternal Spirit (my moſt dear and Faithful loving friend, good Maſter Philpot) as you have comforted me by the mighty operation of the ſame; the everlaſting God be praiſed therefore for ever, Amen.

Ah my dear heart and moſt loving brother, if I ſhould do nothing elſe day and night ſo long as the days of Heaven do endure, but kneel on my Knees, and read Pſalms, I can never be able to render unto God condign thanks, for his great mercy, fatherly kindneſs, and moſt loving compaſſion extended unto me moſt vile, ſinful, wicked, and unworthy wretch. Oh that the Lord would open my mouth and give me a thankful heart, that from the bottom of the ſame might flow his continual praiſe. Oh that my ſinful fleſh (which is the cauſe of ſorrow) were clean ſeparated from me, that I might ſing Pſalms of thankſgiving unto the Lords name for ever; that with good Samuels Mother I might continually record this noble verſe following, the which by the good experience I have found moſt true, praiſed be my good God therefore.

The

1 Reg. 2. John Careles raised up by the Lord, out of great heavines.

The Lord (ſaith that good Woman) killeth and maketh alive ; He bringeth down to Hell,and fetcheth up again. Praiſed be the Lord for ever,yea and praiſed be his name, for that he hath given me true experience and lively feeling of the ſame. Bleſſed be the Lord God , whoſe mercy endureth for ever , which hath not dealt with me according to my deep deſerts , nor deſtroyed me in his diſpleaſure when I had juſtly deſerved it. Oh what reward ſhall I give again unto the Lord for all the great benefits that he hath done for my Soul ? I will gladly receive the Cup of Salvation at his hand, and will worſhip his Name with Prayer and with Praiſe.

Ah my dear heart , yea moſt dear unto me in the Lord , think not this ſudden change in me , to be ſome fickle phantaſie of my fooliſh head (as in deed ſome other would ſurely ſuſpect it to be ;) for doubtleſs it is the marvellous doing of the Lord , moſt merciful unto me his unworthy Creature.God for his great mercies ſake give me Grace to be more thankful unto him then I heretofore have been , and keep me that I never fall forth of his favour again.

And now , my dear Brother and moſt bleſſed Meſſenger of the Lord,whoſe beautiful feet have brought much glad tidings to my Soul,what ſhall I do or ſay unto you, in the leaſt part to recompence the Fatherly affection and Godly care that you continually keep for me ? Oh that God would give me the Spirit of fervent Prayer, that I might yet that way ſupply ſome little part of my duty toward you. Ah my true loving friend,how ſoon did you lay aſide all other buſineſs,to make a ſweet plaiſter for my wounded Conſcience,yea,and that out of a painful pair of ſtocks,which place muſt needs be uneaſie to write in? But God hath brought you into a ſtraight place, that you might ſet my Soul at liberty. Out of your pinching and painful ſeat, you have plentifully poured upon me your precious Nard , the ſweet ſavour whereof hath greatly refreſhed my tired Soul. The Lord likewiſe refreſh you, both Body and Soul , by pouring the oyl of his gracious Spirit in your ſweet heart.

This comfort received of M. Philpot, read in M. Philpots Letters.

Ah good Jeremy,hath Phaſſor put thee into the Stocks? why , now thou haſt the right reward of a Prophet.Thy glory never began to appear until now. I doubt not but ſhortly , in ſtead of Abikam the Son of Shapham, Jeſus the Son of the living God will come and deliver thee forth of the hands of all thine enemies , and will alſo make good, againſt them and their Antichriſtian Synagogue , all the words that thou haſt ſpoken in his Name. The Lord hath made thee this day a ſtrong defenſed Tower, an Iron Pillar , and a brazen Wall againſt the whole rabble of Antichriſt,and though they fight againſt thee never ſo fiercely,yet ſhall they not overcome thee,for the Lord himſelf is with thee to help and deliver thee ; and he will rid thee out of the hands of the wicked , and will deliver thee out of the hands of the Tyrants. And in that you are not buſie in caſting pearls before ſwine,nor in giving the holy things unto dogs, you are much to be commended in my ſimple judgment. And ſure I am,that your circumſpect and modeſt behaviour hitherto hath been as much to Gods glory,and to the ſhame and confuſion of your enemies , as any Mens doings that are gone before you.

The circumſpect behaviour of M. Philpot.

John Careles advice to M. Philpot.

Wherefore mine advice and moſt earneſt deſire is, with all other of your loving friends , that you ſtill keep that order with thoſe blood-thirſty Biteſheeps, Biſhops I ſhould ſay , that you have begun. For though in concluſion they will ſurely have your Blood,yet ſhall they come by it with ſhame enough, and to their perpetual infamy whiles the World doth endure. They would indeed condemn you in hugger mugger , to darken Gods Glory if it might be: But Sathans thoughts are not unknown to you,and the depth of his ſubtilty is by you well foreſeen. Therefore let them do whatſoever God ſhall ſuffer them to do: for I know all things ſhall turn to your beſt. Though you lye in the dark , ſloried with the Biſhops black coal-duſt : yet ſhall you be ſhortly reſtored unto the heavenly Light , and made as white as Snow in Salmon , and as the wings of a Dove that is covered with Silver Wings, and her Feathers like Gold.You know the veſſel , before it be made bright, is ſoiled with Oil , and other things , that it may ſcoure the better.

Pſal.68.

Oh happy be you that you be now in the ſcouring houſe: for ſhortly you ſhall be ſet upon the Celeſtial ſhelf as bright as Angels. Therefore my dear heart, I will now according to your loving requeſt, caſt away all care, and rejoyce with you,and praiſe God for you,and pray for you day and night; yea , I will now with Gods Grace ſing Pſalms of praiſe and thankſgiving with you. For now my Soul is turned to her old reſt again, and hath taken a ſweet nap in Chriſts lap. I have caſt my care upon the Lord,which careth for me,and will be Careles, according to my name, in that reſpect you would have me. I will leave out my unſeemly addition as long as I live : for it can take no place where true faith and hope is reſident. So ſoon as I had read your moſt godly and comfortable Letter,my ſorrows vaniſhed away as ſmoak in the wind , my Spirit revived,and comfort came again, whereby I am ſure the Spirit of God was Author of it.

Anno 1556.

J. Careles care turned into joy.

Gods gracious work through M. Philpots Letter.

Oh my good M. Philpot, which art a principal Pot indeed filled with moſt precious liquor, as it appeareth by the plenteous pouring forth of the ſame ; Oh Pot moſt happy , of the high Potter ordained to honour , which doſt contain ſuch heavenly treaſure in the earthen veſſel;Oh Pot thrice happy,in whom Chriſt hath wrought a great miracle , altering thy nature , and turning Water into Wine,and that of the beſt, whereout the Maſter of the Feaſt hath filled my cup ſo full,that I am become drunken in the joy of the Spirit through the ſame:When Martyrdom ſhall break thee (O veſſel of honour) I know the fragrant ſavor of thy precious Nard will much rejoyce the heavy hearts of Chriſts true Members, although the Judaſſes will grudge and murmur at the ſame. Yea, and burſt out into words of ſlander, ſaying, it is but loſt and waſte.

John Careles drunken with the joy of the Spirit.

Be not offended, dear heart , at my Metaphorical ſpeech: For I am diſpoſed to be merry, and with David to dance before the Ark of the Lord ; and though you play upon a pair of Organs not very comly or eaſie to the Fleſh,yet the ſweet ſound that came from the ſame,cauſeth me thus to do.Oh that I were with you in Body,as preſent I am in Spirit, that I might ſing all care away in Chriſt : for now the time of comfort is come. I hope to be with you ſhortly , if all things happen right. For my old friends of Coventry have put the Council in remembrance of me, not ſix days ago , ſaying,that I am more worthy to be burned then any that was burned yet. Gods bleſſing on their hearts for their good report. God make me worthy of that dignity, and haſten the time, that I might ſet forth his glory.

2 Reg.6.

Careles accuſed to the Council by certain baek friends in Coventry.

Pray for me, dear heart , I beſeech you , and will all your company to do the ſame , and I will pray God for you all,ſo long as I live.And now farewel in Chriſt,thou bleſſed of Gods own Mouth. I will for a time take my leave, but not my laſt farewel. Bleſſed be the time that ever I came into the Kings Bench,to be joyned in love and fellowſhip with ſuch dear Children of the Lord. My good Brother Bradford ſhall not be dead whiles you be alive : for verily the Spirit of him doth reſt on you in moſt ample wiſe. Your Letters of comfort unto me in each point do agree , as though the one were a copy of the other. He hath planted in me, and you do water, the Lord give good increaſe. My dear Brethren and fellow Priſoners here, have them humbly and heartily commended unto you,and your company, mourning for your miſery,but yet rejoycing for your plenteous conſolation and comfort in Chriſt. We are all cheerful and merry under our Croſs,and do lack no neceſſaries,praiſed be God for his providence and great mercy towards us for evermore , Amen.

Note how comfortably the Lord worketh in his priſoned Saints.

Gods providence toward his people.

To his Wife.

Another letter of Careles to his Wife.

AS by the great mercy of God , at the time of his good will and providence appointed (my dearly beloved Wife)you and I were joyned together in the holy and Chriſtian ſtate of Godly Matrimony, as well to our great joy and comfort in Chriſt, as alſo to the increaſe of his Bleſſed Church and Faithful Congregation,by having lawful Children by and in the ſame,with the which God of his mercy hath bleſſed us,praiſed be his Name therefore: even ſo now by his merciful will and divine ordinance , the time is come (ſo far as I can perceive) wherein he will will, for his glory and our eternal comfort, diſſolve the ſame, and ſeparate us aſunder again for a time. Wherefore I thought it good, yea and my bounden duty, by this ſimple Letter to provoke, ſtir, and admoniſh you, to behave your ſelf in all your doings, ſayings, and thoughts, moſt thankfully unto our good God for the ſame. And therefore (my dear Wife) as you have heartily rejoyced in the Lord, and oftentimes given God thanks for his goodneſs, in bringing us together in his Holy Ordinance: even ſo now I deſire you, when this time of our ſeparation ſhall come, to rejoyce with me in the Lord, and to give him moſt hearty thanks, that he hath (to his glory and our endleſs commodity) ſeparated us again for a little time, and hath mercifully taken me unto himſelf, forth of this miſerable world, into his celeſtial Kingdom; believing and hoping alſo aſſuredly, that God of his goodneſs, for his Son Chriſts ſake, will ſhortly bring you, and your dear Children thither to me, that we may moſt joyfully together ſing praiſes unto his glorious name for ever. And yet once again I deſire you for love of God, and as ever you loved me, to rejoyce with me, and to give God continual thanks for doing his moſt merciful will upon me.

Here is a true mark of a faithful Chriſtian, forſaking Wife and Children for Chriſts ſake.

True obedience of a faithful Woman.

I hear ſay that you do oftentimes uſe to repeat this godly ſaying, The Lords will be fulfilled. Doubtleſs it rejoyceth my poor heart to hear that report of you, and for the Lords ſake, uſe that godly prayer continually, and teach your Children and family to ſay the ſame day and night: and not onely ſay it with your tongues, but alſo with your heart and mind, and joyfully ſubmit your will to Gods will in very deed, knowing and believing aſſuredly, that nothing ſhall come to you or any of yours, otherwiſe then it ſhall be his Almighty and Fatherly good will and pleaſure, and for your eternal comfort and commodity. Which thing to be moſt true and certain, Chriſt teſtifieth in his Holy Goſpel, ſaying, Are not two little Sparrows ſold for a farthing, and yet not one of them ſhall periſh without the will of our Heavenly Father? And he concludeth ſaying, Fear not ye therefore, for ye are better then many Sparrows. As though he ſhould have ſaid, If God have ſuch reſpect and care for a poor Sparrow, which is not worth one farthing, that it ſhall not be taken in the lime-twig, net, nor pitfal, until it be his good will and pleaſure; you may be well aſſured, that not one of you (whom he ſo dearly loveth, that he hath given his onely dear Son for you) ſhall periſh, or depart forth of this miſerable life without his Almighty good will and pleaſure.

Matth. 10.

Therefore dear Wife, put you truſt and confidence wholly and onely in him, and ever pray that his will be fulfilled, and not yours, except it be agreeing to his will; the which I pray God it may ever be, Amen. And as for worldly things, take you no care, but be you well aſſured the Lord your dear God and Father will not ſee you for yours lack, if you continue in his love and Childly fear, and keep a clear Conſcience from all kind of Idolatry, Superſtition, and wickedneſs, as my truſt is that you will do, although it be with the loſs and danger of this temporal life. And good Margaret, fear not them that can but kill the Body (and yet can they not do that until God give them leave, but fear to diſpleaſe him that can kill both Body and Soul, and caſt them into Hell Fire. Let not the remembrance of your Children keep you from God. The Lord himſelf will be a Father and a Mother, better then ever you or I could have been unto them. He himſelf will do all things neceſſary for them; yea, as much as rock the cradle, if need be. He hath given his Angels charge over them, therefore commit them unto him. But if you may live with a clear Conſcience (for elſe I would not have you to live) and ſee the bringing up of your Children your ſelf, look that you nurture them in the fear of God and keep them far from Idolatry, Superſtition, and other kind of wickedneſs; and for Gods ſake help them to ſome learning if it be poſſible, that they may increaſe in vertue and godly knowledge, which ſhall be a better dowry to marry them withal, then any worldly ſubſtance; and when they be come to age, provide them ſuch husbands as fear God, and love his holy word. I charge you take heed that you match them with no Papiſts; and if you live and marry again your ſelf (which thing I would wiſh you to do, if need require, or elſe not) good Wife take heed how you beſtow your ſelf that you and my poor Children be not compelled to wickedneſs. But if you ſhall be able well to live Gods true Widow, I would Counſel you ſo to live ſtill, for the more quietneſs of your ſelf and your poor Children. Take heed Margaret, and play the wiſe Womans part. You have warning by other, if you will take an example. And thus I commit you and my ſweet Children unto Gods moſt merciful defence. The bleſſing of God be with you, and God ſend us a merry meeting together in Heaven. Farewel in Chriſt, Farewel mine own dear Hearts all. Pray, pray.

Good counſel given to his Wife.

Care of children to be caſt upon the Lord.

The mothers duty in bringing up her children.

To my good Brother, Mr John Bradford.

THe peace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, the eternal comfort of his ſweet Spirit, which hath ſurely ſealed you unto eternal Salvation, be with you and ſtrengthen you in your joyful journey towards the celeſtial Hieruſalem (my dear Friend and moſt faithful Brother Mr. Bradford) to the ſetting forth of Gods glory, and to your eternal joy in Chriſt, Amen.

A ſweet Letter of Jo. Careles to M. Bradford a little before his Martyrdom.

Ever ſince that good Mr. Philpot ſhewed me your laſt Letter (my dear Heart in the Lord) I have continued in great heavineſs and perplexity; not for any hurt or diſcommodity that I can perceive coming towards you, unto whom doubtleſs death is made life and great felicity, but for the great loſs that Gods Church here in England ſhall ſuſtain by the taking away of ſo godly, worthy, and neceſſary an inſtrument, as the Lord hath made you to be. O that my life and a thouſand ſuch wretched lives more might go for yours. Oh, why doth God ſuffer me and ſuch other Caterpillers to live, that can do nothing but conſume the Alms of the Church, and take away you, ſo worthy a workman and labourer in the Lords Vineyard? But wo be to our ſins and great unthankfulneſs, which is the greateſt cauſe of the taking away of ſuch worthy inſtruments of God, as ſhould ſet forth his glory, and inſtruct his People. If we had been thankful unto God for the good Miniſters of his word, we had not been ſo ſoon deprived both of it and them. The Lord forgive our great ingratitude and ſins, and give us true repentance and faith, and hold his hand of mercy over us, for his dear Son Chriſts ſake. Take not away all thy true Preachers forth of this Realm (O Lord) but leave us a ſeed, leſt England be made like unto Sodom and Gomorrah, when thy true Lots be gone.

He mourneth for the loſs and lack of Mr. Bradford in the Church.

But what go I about to mingle your mirth, with my mourning, and your juſt joy with my deſerved ſorrow? If I loved you indeed, as I have pretended, I ſhould ſurely rejoyce with you moſt heartily, and praiſe God on your behalf from the very bottom of my Heart; I ſhould praiſe God day and night for your excellent election in and through his great mercy, and ſhould give him moſt humble thanks for your Vocation by his Goſpel, and your true knowledge in the ſame; I ſhould earneſtly praiſe him for your ſweet juſtification, whereof you are moſt certain by Gods Grace and Spirit, and ſhould inſtantly pray unto him for your glorification, which ſhall ſhortly enſue; I ſhould rejoyce and be glad to ſee you ſo dignified by the Crown of Martyrdom, and to be appointed to that honour, to teſtifie his truth, and to ſeal it with your Blood; I ſhould highly extol the Lord, who hath given you a Glorious Victory over all your enemies viſible and inviſible, and hath given you grace and ſtrength to finiſh the Tower that you have begun to build. Finally, if I loved you, I ſhould moſt heartily rejoyce and be glad to ſee you delivered from this Body of ſin, and vile priſon of the fleſh, and brought into that Heavenly Tabernacle where you ſhall be ſafely kept, and never offend him more.

He rejoyceth for the honour of Mr. Bradfords martyrdom.

This and much more ſhould I do, if I had a good heart towards God, or you his dear Child. But (alas) I am an Hypocrite, and do ſeek nothing but mine own commodity. I would have Gods everlaſting providence give place to my peeviſh will and purpoſe, although it were to the hinderance of his glory and your ſweet commodity. God forgive me my horrible ingratitude, ſins and offences againſt him: and good Brother, do you forgive me my great negligence and unthankfulneſs toward you, and henceforth I promiſe you, I will put my will to Gods will, and pray that the ſame may be fulfilled in you, as long as you be on this earth; and when you are taken hence, I will moſt heartily praiſe the Lord for you, ſo long as I have my being in this world. Ah my dear Heart, now I muſt take my leave of you, and as I think, my Ultimum vale in this life, but in the life to come I am right well aſſured we ſhall merrily meet together, and that ſhortly I truſt. And in taking of my leave of you (my dear Heart in the Lord) I ſhall deſire you faithfully to remember all the ſweet meſſages that the Lord our good God and moſt dear loving Father hath ſent you by me his moſt unworthy Servant, which as they are moſt true, ſo ſhall they be moſt truly accompliſhed upon you eternally; and for the more aſſurance and certificate thereof to your godly Conſcience, he hath commanded me to repeat the ſame unto you again, in his own name and word.

John Careles taketh his leave of M. Bradford.

Teſtimony of Gods Spirit.

John Careles doth Gods meſſage to M. Bradford.

Therefore now give ear and faithful credence. Hearken O ye Heavens, and thou Earth give ear, and bear me witneſs at the great day, that I do here faithfully and truly the Lords meſſage unto his dear Servant, his ſingularly beloved and elect Child John Bradford. John Bradford, thou man ſo ſpecially beloved of God, I pronounce and teſtifie unto thee in the word and name of the Lord Jehova, that all thy ſins whatſoever they be, be they never ſo many, ſo grievous or ſo great, be fully and freely pardoned, releaſed and forgiven thee, by the mercy of God in Jeſus Chriſt thine only Lord and ſweet Saviour, in whom thou doſt undoubtedly believe. Chriſt hath cleanſed thee with his blood, and clothed thee with his righteouſneſs, and hath made thee in the ſight of God his Father, without ſpot or wrinkle; ſo that when the fire doth his appointed office, thou ſhalt be received (as a ſweet burnt Sacrifice) into Heaven, where thou ſhalt joyfully remain in Gods preſence for ever, as the true inheritor of his everlaſting Kingdom, unto the which thou waſt undoubtedly predeſtinate and ordained by the Lords infallible purpoſe and decree, before the foundation of the world was laid. And that this is moſt true that I have ſaid, I call the whole Trinity, the Almighty and Eternal Majeſty of God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, to my record at this preſent; whom I humbly beſeech to confirm and ſtabliſh in thee the true and lively feeling of the ſame, Amen. Selah.

Power and practice of the Keys of the Goſpel.

Now with a merry heart and joyful ſpirit, ſomething mixed with lawful tears, I take my farewel of you, mine own dear Brother in the Lord; who ſend us ſhortly a merry meeting in his Kingdom, that we may both ſing praiſes together unto him with his holy Angels and bleſſed Spirits for ever and ever. Farewel thou bleſſed in the Lord, Farewel in Chriſt, depart unto my reſt in the Lord; and pray for me for Gods ſake.

As I had made an end of this ſimple Letter, I heard ſome comfort both of good Mr. Philpots Servant and yours: but (alas) I do ſcarcely believe them. Well, I will hope in God, and pray all night that God will ſend me ſome comfort to morrow, and if the Lord give you ſparing to morrow, let me hear four words of comfort from you, for Gods ſake. The bleſſing of God be with you now and for ever, Amen.

Yours for ever in the Lord Jeſus,
J. Careles, living in hope againſt hope.

In reading this Letter of John Careles to Mr. Bradford above prefixed, wherein he maketh ſo much mention of a certain Letter of his ſent to him, and of the great exceeding conſolation he received of the ſame, thou wilt wiſh peradventure (good loving Reader) in thy mind, to have ſome ſight alſo of the ſaid Letter of Mr. Bradford. Wherein to ſatiſfie thy deſire, or rather to prevent thy petition, I have hereunto annexed the ſame, to the intent thou maiſt not only underſtand the contents thereof, but alſo receive fruit thereof to thy conſolation likewiſe. The purport of the Letter here followeth.

Mr. Bradford to Careles.

Almighty God our dear Father, through and for the merits of his dearly beloved Son Jeſus Chriſt, be merciful unto us, pardon us our offences, and under the wings of his mercy protect us from all evil, from henceforth and for ever, Amen.

Anno 1556.

A comfortable Letter of M. Bradford to John Careles.

Dear Brother Careles, I heartily pray you to pray to God for me, for the pardon of my manifold ſins and moſt grievous offences, which need none other demonſtration unto you than this, namely, that I have behaved my ſelf ſo negligently in anſwering your godly triple Letters, which are three witneſſes againſt me. God lay not them, nor any other thing to my charge to condemnation, though to correction, not my will, but his will be done. Concerning your requeſt of abſolution (my deareſt Brother) what ſhall I ſay, but even as truth is? that the Lord of all mercy, and Father of all comfort, through the merits and mediation of his dear Son thy only Lord and Saviour, hath clearly remitted and pardoned all thy offences whatſoever they be, that ever hitherto thou haſt committed againſt his Majeſty: and therefore he hath given to thee as to his Child (dear Brother John Careles) in token that thy ſins are pardoned; he (I ſay) hath given thee a penitent and believing heart, that is, a heart which deſireth to repent and believe: For ſuch a one is taken of him (he accepting the will for the deed) for a penitent and believing heart indeed.

Practice of the Keys of the Goſpel.

Wherefore (my good Brother) be merry, glad, and of good chear, for the Lord hath taken away thy ſins; thou ſhalt not die. Go thy ways; the Lord hath put away thy ſins. The Eaſt is not ſo far from the Weſt, as the Lord hath now put thy ſins from thee. Look how the Heavens be in compariſon of the Earth, ſo far hath his mercy prevailed towards thee his dear Child, John Careles, through Chriſt the Beloved. Say therefore with David, Praiſe the Lord, O my Soul, and all that is within me praiſe his holy Name: for he hath forgiven thee all thy ſins; as truly he hath. And hereof I deſire to be a witneſs. God make me worthy to hear from you the like true meſſage for my ſelf. Mine own dearly Beloved, you have great cauſe to thank God moſt heartily that he hath given you ſuch repentance and faith; the Lord increaſe the ſame in you and me a moſt miſerable wretch, whoſe heart is harder than the Adamant ſtone, or elſe I could not thus long have ſtayed from writing unto you. If I live and may, I purpoſe and promiſe you to make amends. Pray for me, my moſt dear Brother, I heartily beſeech you, and forgive me my long ſilence. God our Father be with us for ever, Amen.

Yours in the Lord, J. Bradford.

To my moſt dear and faithful Brethren in Newgate, condemned to die for the teſtimony of Gods everlaſting Truth.

Another Letter of John Careles to the conſtant Brethren in Newgate condemned.

THE everlaſting peace of God, in Jeſus Chriſt, the continual joy, ſtrength and comfort of his moſt pure, holy, and mighty ſpirit, with the increaſe of faith and lively feeling of his eternal mercy, be with you, my moſt dear and faithful loving Brother Tyms, and with all the reſt of my dear Hearts in the Lord, your faithful fellow-Souldiers, and moſt conſtant Companions in bonds, yea of men condemned moſt cruelly for the ſincere teſtimony of Gods everlaſting Truth, to the full finiſhing of that good work, which he hath ſo graciouſly begun in you all, that the ſame may be to his glory, the commodity of his poor afflicted Church, and to your everlaſting comfort in him, Amen.

Ah my moſt ſweet and loving Brethren, and deareſt Hearts in the Lord, what ſhall I ſay, or how ſhall I write unto you, in the leaſt point or part to utter the great joy that my poor heart hath conceived in God, through the moſt godly example of your Chriſtian conſtancy and ſincere confeſſion of Chriſts Verity? Truly my tongue cannot declare, nor my pen expreſs the abundance of ſpiritual mirth and gladneſs, that my mind and inward man hath felt, ever ſince I heard of your hearty boldneſs, and modeſt behaviour before that bloody Butcher, in the time of all your crafty examinations, eſpecially at your cruel condemnation, in their curſed Conſiſtory place. Bleſſed be God the Father of all mercy, and praiſed be his name, for that he hath ſo graciouſly performed upon you his dear Darlings, his moſt ſweet and comfortable promiſes, in not only giving you the continual aid, ſtrength and comfort of his holy and mighty Spirit to the faithful confeſſion of his Chriſt, for whoſe cauſe (O moſt happy men) ye are condemned to die: but alſo in giving you ſuch a mouth and wiſdom, as all your wicked enemies were not able to reſiſt, but were fain to cry, Peace, peace, and not ſuffer you to ſpeak. As truly as God liveth (my dear Brethren) this is not onely unto you a moſt evident Probation that God is on our ſide, and a ſure certainty of your everlaſting ſalvation in him, but alſo to your cruel Adverſaries (or rather Gods curſed enemies) a plain demonſtration of their juſt eternal wo and damnation, which they ſhall be full ſure ſhortly to feel, when ye ſhall full ſweetly poſſeſs the place of felicity and pleaſure prepared for you from the beginning.

The enemies not able to withſtand th wiſdom of God in his Saints, but compelled to bid them hold their peace.

Therefore (my dearly beloved) ceaſe not ſo long as ye be in this life, to praiſe the Lord with a luſty courage, for that of his great mercy and infinite goodneſs, he hath vouched you worthy of this great dignity, to ſuffer for his ſake not onely the loſs of goods, Wife, and Children, long impriſonment, cruel oppreſſion, &c. but alſo the very deprivation of this mortal life with the diſſolution of your bodies in the fire. The which is the greateſt promotion that God can bring you or any other unto in this vale of miſery, yea ſo great an honour, as the higheſt Angel in heaven is not permitted to have; and yet hath the Lord for his dear Son Chriſts ſake reputed you worthy of the ſame, yea and that before me and many other, which have both long looked and longed for the ſame.

John Careles longeth to die a Martyr in the Goſpels cauſe.

Ah my moſt dear Brother Tyms, whoſe time reſteth altogether in the hands of the Lord, in a full happy time cameſt thou into this troubleſome world, but in a much more bleſſed hour ſhalt thou depart out of the ſame: ſo that the ſweet ſaying of Solomon, or rather of the Holy Ghoſt, ſhall be full well verified upon thee, yea and all thy faithful fellows, Better is the day of death (ſaith he) then the day of birth. This ſaying cannot be verified upon every man, but upon thee my dear Brother, and ſuch as thou art, whoſe death is moſt precious before God, and full dear ſhall your Blood be in his ſight. Bleſſed be God for thee my dear Brother Tyms, and bleſſed be God again that ever I knew thee, for in a moſt happy time I came firſt into thy company. Pray for me, dear Brother, pray for me, that God will once vouch me worthy, of that great dignity whereunto he hath brought you.

Eccleſ. 7.

Of the Martyrdom of this Tyms read before

Ah my loving Brother Drake, whoſe Soul now draweth nigh unto God, of whom ye have received the ſame, full glad may you be that ever God gave you a life to leave for his ſake: Full well will he reſtore it to you again in a thouſand fold more glorious wiſe. Praiſe God, good Brother, as you have a great cauſe, and pray for me, I beſeech you, which am ſo much unworthy (ſo great are my ſins) of that great dignity whereunto the Lord hath called you and the reſt of your godly Brethren; whom I beſeech you to comfort in the Lord, as you can full well; praiſed be God for his gifts, which you have heartily applied to the ſetting forth of his glory, and the commodity of his poor afflicted Church. Which thing ſhal ſurely redound to your everlaſting joy and comfort, as you ſhall moſt effectually feel ere ever it be long, though the wicked of the world judge far otherwiſe.

The martyrdom of Drake read before.

Ah mine own hearts, and moſt dearly beloved Brethren, Cavel, Ambroſe, and both the Spurges; bleſſed be the Lord on your behalf, and praiſed be his name, which hath given you ſuch a Glorious Victory; Full valiant have you ſhewed your ſelves in the Lords fight, and full faithful in your painful ſervice. Faint not, but go on forward as ye have moſt godly begun, for great ſhall your reward be at the end of this your travel. Ah my good faithful Brethren all, what ſhall I ſay, or what ſhall I write unto you? but even the ſame that good Elizabeth did ſay to her godly Kinſwoman Mary the bleſſed Mother of Chriſt, Happy art thou (quoth that good Woman) which haſt believed: for all things which the Lord hath ſpoken to thee, ſhall be fulfilled. So I ſay to you (my dear Hearts in the Lord) happy are ye all, yea twice happy ſhall you be for evermore, becauſe ye have ſtedfaſtly believed the moſt ſweet promiſes which God the Father hath made unto you with his own mouth, in that he hath promiſed you (which are the faithful ſeed of the believing Abraham) that ye ſhall be bleſſed ever, world without end. The promiſes of God your moſt ſweet Father as ye do believe, ſo do ye bear record that God is true. The teſtimony whereof ye have full worthily born to the world, and ſhortly will full ſurely ſeal the ſame with your Blood, yea even to morrow, I do underſtand. Oh conſtant Chriſtians! O valiant Souldiers of the high Captain Jeſus Chriſt! who for your ſake hath conquered the Devil, Death, Sin and Hell, and hath given you full victory over them for evermore. Oh worthy witneſſes, and moſt glorious Martyrs, whoſe invincible faith hath overcome that proud, ſturdy, bragging Prince of the world, and all his wicked army, over whom ye ſhall ſhortly Triumph for evermore. Ah my ſweet Hearts, the everlaſting treaſures are full ſurely laid up for you in Heaven. The immarceſſible and moſt Glorious Crown of Victory is already made and prepared for you, to be ſhortly clapt upon all your happy heads. The Holy Angels of your Heavenly Father are already appointed to conduct your ſweet Souls into Abrahams Boſom. All the Heavenly Hoſt rejoyceth already, for that they ſhall ſhortly receive you with joy and felicity, into their bleſſed fellowſhip, Selah.

The martyrdom of Cavel, Ambroſe, and both the Spurges, read before.

Luke 1.

He incourageth Gods Martyrs unto their death.

Rejoyce which double joy, and be glad my dear Brethren, for doubtleſs ye have more cauſe then can be expreſſed. But (alas) I that for my ſins am left behind, may lie and lament with the holy Prophet, ſaying, Woe is me that the days of my joyful reſt are prolonged. Ah curſed Satan, which hath cauſed me ſo ſore to offend my moſt dear loving Father, whereby mine exile and Baniſhment is ſo much prolonged. Oh Chriſt my dear Advocate, pacifie thy Fathers wrath, which I have juſtly deſerved, that he may take me home to him in his ſweet mercy. O that I might now come home unto thee with thy bleſſed Brethren. Well, thy will O Lord be effectuouſly fulfilled, for it is onely good, and turneth all things to the beſt, for ſuch as thou in thy mercy haſt choſen.

Pſal. 119.

And now farewel my dear hearts, moſt happy in the Lord: I truſt in my good God, yet ſhortly to ſee you in the Celeſtial City, whereof undoubtedly the Lord hath already made you free Citizens. Though you be yet with us for a little time, your very home is in Heaven, where your treaſure doth remain with your ſweet Lord and Redeemer Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe calling you have heard with the ears of your hearts, and therefore ye ſhall never come into judgment, but paſs from death to life. Your ſins ſhall never more be remembred, be they never ſo many ſo grievous, or ſo great: for your Saviour hath caſt them all into the bottom of the Sea; he hath removed them from you, as far as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, and his mercy hath much more prevailed over you, then is diſtance between Heaven and Earth; and he hath given you for everlaſting poſſeſſion of the ſame, all his holineſs, righteouſnes, and juſtification, yea and the Holy Ghoſt into your hearts, wherewith ye are ſurely ſealed unto the day of redemption, to certifie you of your eternal election, and that ye are his true adopted Sons, whereby ye may boldly cry unto God, Abba dear Father, for evermore: ſo that now no creature in Heaven, Earth nor Hell, ſhall be able to accuſe you before the Throne of the Heavenly King. Satan is now caſt out from you; he himſelf is judged, and hath no part in you. He will once more bite you by the heel, and then he hath done, for at that time you ſhall ſquiſe his head through your own good Chriſt, and ſo have you final victory for evermore. In joyful Triumph whereof, ye ſhall ſweetly aſcend into the place of eternal reſt, whither your eldeſt Brother Chriſt is gone before you to take poſſeſſion for you, and to prepare your place under the Holy Altar, with Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, Rogers, Hooper, Sanders, Farrar, Tailor, Bradford, Philpot, with many other, who will be full glad of your coming, to ſee ſix more of their appointed number that their Blood may ſo much the ſooner be revenged upon them that dwell on the Earth.

Triumph of Martyrs.

Geneſ. 2.

This I make an end, committing you all to Gods moſt merciful defence, whoſe quarrel ye have defended, whoſe cauſe ye have promoted, whoſe glory ye have ſet forth, and whoſe name ye have conſtantly confeſſed. Farewel for a while my dear hearts in the Lord, I will make as much haſte after you as I may. All our dear Brethren ſalute you. They pray for you, and praiſe God for you continually. Bleſſed be the dead that die in the Lord,

Apoc. 14.

Lord, for they reſt from their labours, ſaith the Holy Ghoſt, and their works follow them.

Your own John Careles, a moſt unprofitable ſervant of the Lord. Pray, pray, pray.

Ye heard before the Letter of Thomas Whittle, written to John Careles, wherein he yieldeth great thanks unto him for the ſingular joy and conſolation received by his Letters. The copy of which letters ſent unto him if any be diſpoſed to peruſe, here under followeth to ſatisfie his deſire.

To Mr. Green, Mr. Whittle, and certain other priſoners in Newgate, condemned, and ready to be burnt for the teſtimony of our Lord Jeſus.

Another letter of Jo. Careles, wherein he doth animate Green, Whittle and the reſt of that company unto their martyrdom.

THe everlaſting peace in Jeſus Chriſt, the continual comfort of his moſt pure and Holy Spirit, be with you my dear and faithful Brethren and Siſters of Newgate, the Lords appointed ſheep unto the ſlaughter, to the good performance of the great and noble work of the Lord, which he hath ſo graciouſly begun in you all; that the ſame may redound to the ſetting forth of his glory, and to the commodity of his Church, and to your own everlaſting comfort in him. So be it.

Ah my dear Hearts, and moſt faithful Brethren and Siſters in the Lord, what high lauds and praiſe, yea what humble and continual thanks am I bound to give to God our Father for you and on your moſt happy behalf, who ſo mightily hath magnified himſelf in you thus far forth, in giving you his holy and mighty Spirit, to the conſtant confeſſing of Chriſts verity, even to the cruel condemnation, and I doubt not but he will do the ſame to the death. Oh happy and bleſſed are you that ever you were born, that the Lord will vouch you worthy of this great dignity, to die for his ſake. Doubtleſs it is the greateſt honour that God can give you in this life. Yea if they be ſo bleſſed of God that die in the Lord, as the Holy Ghoſt ſaith they be; how much more bleſſed and happy then are you that die not onely in the Lord, but alſo for the Lord. O that it were the good will of God, that the good hour were now come, that I might go with you. Ah that my ſins made me not unworthy of ſuch an excellent dignity.

Apoc. 11. To die in the Lord, and for the Lord.

Be thankful dear Hearts, be thankful and rejoyce in the Lord: for mighty is his mercy towards you, and great is your reward in Heaven the which you like faithful perſons have plucked to you with a godly violence of an invincible faith. Oh worthy Warriours of the moſt high Captain! Oh conſtant confeſſors of the everlaſting verity! how glorious a Crown of Victory ſhall you ſhortly receive, which is prepared for all ſuch as do continue to the end? Oh you ſweet Saints of the Lord, how precious ſhall your death be in his ſight? Oh how dear are your Souls to your Redeemer, in whoſe hand they ſhall moſt joyfully reſt, and the pains of death ſhall never touch you? Oh how bleſſed ſhall you be, when Chriſt ſhall appear, at the which time you ſhall receive your Bodies again full of immortality? Oh how joyful ſhall you be, when Chriſt according to his promiſe ſhall knowledge you before his Father and his Holy Angels, as you have moſt conſtantly confeſſed him to be your Lord and onely Saviour before men?

Of this Burtis Green, read before.

Oh bleſſed Green, thou meek and loving Lamb of the Lord, how happy art thou to be appointed to die for his ſake? A full dainty diſh art thou for the Lords own tooth. Freſh and Green ſhalt thou be in the Houſe of the Lord, and thy fruits ſhall never wither nor decay. Although thou go here forth ſowing thy good fruit with tears, the time ſhall come that thou ſhalt reap with joy and gladneſs the fruits of everlaſting life, and that without ceaſing. Be merry therefore and fear not, for it is thy Fathers will to give thee a Kingdom, whereunto he hath choſen thee before the foundations of the world were laid.

Luke 12. Of this Tho. Whittle, read before.

Oh happy Miniſter, thou man of God, how glad mayeſt thou be of Gods moſt gracious favour, which hath prevented thee in the day of thy trial? Oh happy Peter, whoſe part thou haſt well played; therefore thy reward and portion ſhall be like unto his. Now haſt thou good experience of mans infirmity, but much more proof and taſt, yea ſenſe and feeling of Gods abundant bottomleſs mercy. Although Satan deſired to ſift thee, yet Chriſt thy good Captain prayed that thy faith ſhould not fail. Gods ſtrength is made perfect by thy weakneſs, and his grace is ſufficient for thee his dear Child. Thine example did ſo encourage and ſtrengthen thy poor Brethren, that God is every way glorified by thee, and ſhortly will he glorifie thee with himſelf, with that glory which he hath prepared for thee his elect dearling before the world was made. Therefore rejoyce and be glad, for thou haſt good occaſion, in finding ſuch favour in his ſight. Anno 1556. Luke 22

This is moſt true (O my other Brethren, whom I do not know, neither have I heard much of you) happy are you that ever you were born, and bleſſed be our God which hath given you ſuch victory over the bloody Beaſt; ſhortly ſhall you be cloathed in large white garments, and fine robes of righteouſneſs, and ſo ſhall you follow the Lamb on Mount Sion with new ſongs of mirth and melody, for your delivery forth of Satans power and tyranny. God for evermore be bleſſed for you, and ſtrengthen you to the end, as I doubt not but he will: for he never failed them that put their truſt in him. Apoc. 14.

Of Joan Warne, read before.

O my dear and faithful Siſter Joan Warne, what ſhall I ſay to thee? Thy trial hath been great; thy victory in Chriſt hath been notable. Thou haſt overcome many a ſharp ſhower and ſtorm. Shortly ſhalt thou arrive at the haven of quiet reſt, and receive a reward due to a conſtant Martyr. Thou ſhalt go home to thy heavenly Father, and poſſeſs for ever the inheritance which Chriſt hath purchaſed for thee, where thy earthly parents be, ſtill looking for thee, which have triumphed over Antichriſt moſt victoriouſly. Oh bleſſed parents of happy Children, which have ſhewed ſuch an example as the like hath been ſeldom ſeen! I ſalute thee dear Siſter of like conſtant mind, whoſe conſtant example is worthy of continual memory. Praiſed be God for you mine own ſweet Siſters, which hath made you play ſuch wiſe virgins parts. He hath plentifully poured the oil of his Spirit into the lamps of your faith, ſo that the light thereof ſhall never be extinct. You ſhall enter with your Bridegroom into everlaſting joy, whereunto you were choſen in him from the beginning.

He meaneth Elizabeth Foſter. Matth. 25.

Oh my dear Brethren and Siſters, you bleſſed Saints of the Lord, how much, and how deeply am I bound to praiſe God for you both day and night. Pray, pray for me (my dear Hearts) for the tender mercy of God, that I may be made worthy to follow your trace. Oh that I had run the race of my life as far as you have done yours and were as nigh my journeys end as you be unto yours. But alas, I ly like the lame man at the pools ſide by Solomons porch, and every man goeth into the place of health before me. But God will appoint me one, one day to put me in. I truſt my Lord of Londons Colehouſe is empty, and all his Officers Idle. Therefore they muſt ſhortly fetch more ſheep to the Shambles; for he is the common ſlaughter ſlave of all England. But happy are you that are paſſed through the pikes, and delivered out of his hands and from all the angels of the darkneſs of this world, which long tempted you in the Wilderneſs of the ſame: but now ſhall the Angels of God come and miniſter unto you; for thy are your ſervants to hold you up in their hands, that you ſhall not hurt your foot, no nor one hair of your head ſhall periſh. They ſhall carry you up to heaven in a fiery chariot, though you leave your mantle behind you for a time, until God reſtore the ſame again in a more ample and glorious ſort. John 5. Bp. Boner called the ſlaughter-ſlave of England. Pſal. 60. 4. Reg. 2.

Thus in haſt, as it doth appear, I am conſtrained to make an end, committing you all to Gods moſt merciful defence; who ever have you in his bleſſed keeping, deſiring you all to remember me in your godly and faithful prayers, as I will not forget you in mine, by Gods grace. The bleſſing of God be with you all my dear Brethren and Siſters. All our Brethren and fellow priſoners here have them moſt heartily commended unto you, and pray for you without ceaſing. God ſend us a merry meeting in his Kingdom, Amen.

By your Brother and unfained lover,
John Careles, priſoner, abiding his moſt merciful will and pleaſure. Pray, pray, pray.

To

Anno 1556.

To my dear and faithful Brother William Tyms, priſoner in Newgate.

Another Letter of Jo. Careles, privately written to his bedfellow Wil. Tyms.

THe everlaſting peace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, with the continual joy, comfort, and ſtrength of his ſweet Spirit, be multiplied, and daily more and more increaſed in your good heart (my moſt faithful and dear Brother Tyms) to the full quieting of your Conſcience, and beating back of all the fiery darts of the wicked, that you may ſhortly receive the glorious Crown of Victory, and in the ſame Triumph over all your enemies, for ever more, Amen.

I cannot expreſs the exceeding great joy and conſolation of my poor heart, conſidering the marvellous Works of God moſt graciouſly wrought upon you, not onely in proving you and trying your faith by his great and huge croſſes both inwardly and outwardly, but alſo in giving you ſo great conſolation and conſtancy in the midſt of the ſame. Faithful is God, and true of his promiſes, who hath ſaid; That he will never ſuffer his choſen Children to be tempted above their ſtrength, but in the midſt of their temptation will make an out-ſcape for them, by ſuch means as may make to his glory and their everlaſting conſolation. My dear heart, great cauſe have you to be of good comfort, I ſee in you as lively a token of Gods everlaſting love and favour in Jeſus Chriſt, as ever I perceived in any man. In reſpect whereof, I do even with my heart love, honour, and reverence you, beſeeching God for his glorious Names ſake, in the Bowels and Blood of our Lord and onely Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to finiſh his good work in you, as I doubt not but he will do, according to his infallible promiſes, yea I am well aſſured thereof, foraſmuch as you have ſo effectually received his Holy Spirit into your heart, as a pledge and a ſure ſeal of your eternal redemption, and a teſtimony of your adoption in Chriſt Jeſus. For which cauſe Satan ſo ſore envieth you, that he hath now bent all his fierce Ordnance againſt you, thinking thereby utterly to deſtroy the invincible Fort of your faith, founded moſt firmly upon the unmoveable Rock Chriſt, againſt the which neither the Devil, Sin, nor yet Hell Gates ſhall ever prevail, Selah.

Gods children never tempted above their ſtrength.

He confirmeth W. Tyms, being condemned, to the day of his martyrdom.

Therefore mine own bowels in the Lord, be not diſcomforted for this your conflict, which doubtleſs ſhall greatly increaſe your Crown of Glory, Triumph and Victory; but take a good heart unto you, and buckle boldly with Satan, both in himſelf and his ſubtle members. It is the very divine Ordinance of God, that all his regenerate People ſhall be tempted, proved, and tried, as we ſee by the example of our Saviour Chriſt; who as ſoon as he was Baptized, was ſtraightways led of the Holy Ghoſt into the Wilderneſs, there to be tempted of the Devil. But there got he ſuch a Glorious Victory of Satan, that he could never ſince finally prevail againſt any of his poor members, but in every aſſault that he maketh either inwardly or outwardly, he getteth a foil, and taketh ſhame; ſo that now he rageth with all the ſpite poſſible, ſpecially becauſe he knoweth his time is but ſhort. Saint James teſtifieth that he is but a very coward, that will ſoon flee if he be faithfully reſiſted. And as for his tempting tools, the Lord hath made them manifeſt unto us, ſo that he cannot deceive us though he aſſault us; For as S. Paul ſaith; His very thoughts are not unknown to us, as it doth in you largely appear, praiſed be the Lords Name therefore.

It is the nature of Gods children to be tempted. Matth. 4.

Satans tempting tools.

2 Cor. 2.

You ſee (dear Brother) that now to moleſt you and ſuch as you are, that be even paſſing from this vale of miſery, he hath but two wayes, or two pieces of Ordnance to ſhoot at you, with the which he cannot hurt you, becauſe you have two Bulwarks to defend you. The firſt of theſe terrible Guns that Satan hath ſhot at you, is the very ſame that he continually ſhooteth at me, that is to ſay, fear and infidelity; for the ugly ſomneſs of death and horror of my ſins, which be ſo many, grievous, and great. But this pellet is eaſily put away with the ſure ſhield of faith, in the moſt precious death and Bloodſhedding of our dear Lord and onely Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whom the Father hath given unto us wholly to be ours for evermore, and with him hath given us all things, as Paul ſaith; ſo that though we be never ſo great ſinners, yet Chriſt is made unto us holineſs, righteouſneſs, and juſtification. He hath clothed us with all his merits, mercies, and moſt ſweet ſufferings, and hath taken unto him all our miſery, wretchedneſs, ſin, and infirmity. So that if any ſhould now be condemned for the ſame, it muſt needs be Jeſus Chriſt, which hath taken them upon him. But indeed he hath made ſatisfaction for them to the uttermoſt jot; ſo that for his ſake they ſhall never be imputed to us, if they were a thouſand times ſo many more as they be. This do you moſt effectuouſly feel and know (dear Brother) a great deal better than I can tell you, bleſſed be God therefore.

Two principal pellets of Satan whereby he aſſaulteth Gods ſervants.

1. Fear of ſin and death, and infidelity of Gods promiſe.

Remedy againſt fear and infidelity.

And now Satan, ſeeing that he cannot prevail with his boyſterous battery againſt this Buwark of faith, which doth ſo quench all his fiery darts, that they can do you no harm, but rather do you good ſervice to caſt you down, under the mighty hand of God, that he may take you up by his onely grace and power, and ſo you may render him all the glory by Jeſus Chriſt (which thing the enemy can in no wiſe abide) therefore he ſhooteth off his other Piece moſt peſtilent, to provoke you to put ſome part of your truſt and confidence in your ſelf, and in your own holineſs and righteouſneſs, that you might that way rob God of his glory, and Chriſt of the honour and dignity of his death. But bleſſed be the Lord God, you have alſo a full ſtrong Bulwark to beat back this peſtiferous pellet alſo, even the pure Law of God, which proveth the beſt of us all damnable ſinners in the ſight of God, if he would enter into judgment with us according to the ſeverity of the ſame, and that even our beſt works are polluted and defiled in ſuch ſort, as the Prophet deſcribeth them. With which manner of ſpeaking our free-will Phariſees are much offended; for it felleth all mans righteouſneſs to the ground (I had like to have ſaid to the bottom of hell) and extolleth onely the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, which is allowed before God, and is freely given to all thoſe that firmly believe, as bleſſed be God you do.

The ſecond pellet of Satan, is confidence and truſt in our good works.

Remedy againſt the ſecond pellet. Iſa. 64.

Ah my good Brother Tyms, Satan hath but his hand in a wrong box when he beginneth to tempt you, either to gain-glory or miſtruſt: for you are an old beaten ſouldier, and have had good experience of theſe manner of temptations, both by your ſelf and other, whom you know well were beloved of God. Be of good cheer therefore dear heart, be of good cheer, for now Satan hath wrought all his malice, he hath done all that he can, and hath ſhot off all his laſt Pieces, wherewith he had thought to have done moſt miſchief; but now he ſeeth he cannot prevail (the ſtrong Tower of our faith being ſo invincible) he will pluck up all his tents, and get him to ſome other place to practiſe the like aſſaults, and then will the Angels of God come and miniſter unto you the moſt ſweet and heavenly conſolations of the Holy Ghoſt. To him therefore who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that ever we can deſire or think, I do moſt heartily commit you, with all the reſt of your godly priſon-fellows, who comfort, ſtrengthen, and defend you with his grace and mighty operation of his Holy Spirit, as he hath hitherto done, that you having a moſt glorious Victory over the ſubtle Serpent, and all his wicked ſeed, may alſo receive the Crown of glory and immortality prepared for you before the foundations of the World were laid, and is ſo ſurely kept for you in the hands of him whoſe promiſe is unfallible, that the Devil, ſin, death, or hell, ſhall never be able to deprive you of the ſame. The bleſſing of God be with you now and for evermore, Amen. Pray, pray, pray for me.

Satan overcome in Gods Saints

Your own for ever,
John Careles.

To my good Sister M. C.

THe peace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, and the eternal comforts of his ſweet Spirit, be with you my dear and faithful Siſter, to the full accompliſhment of that good work which he hath moſt graciouſly begun in you, that the ſame may be effectually to the ſetting forth of his glory and to your everlaſting Conſolation in him, Amen.

Another letter of Jo. Careles to Miſtreſs Cotton, a faithful Siſter and favourer of the Goſpel.

My loving and faithful Sister in the Lord, I thank you for all your loving kindneſs ſhewed unto me in your fervent and faithful Prayers, and for your moſt godly and comfortable Letter, whereby you do not only much increaſe my joy and comfort, but alſo put me in remembrance of my duty towards you.

Gods great gifts in Women.

Bleſſed be the Lord God, which of his great mercy hath ſo beautified his Church in theſe our days, that even unto many godly women he hath given moſt excellent gifts of knowledge and underſtanding of his Truth, ſo that they are not only well able to inform their own Conſciences in all things neceſſary to ſalvation, but alſo moſt ſweetly comfort their ſorrowful Brethren and Siſters that ſuſtain any trouble for the teſtimony of Gods Truth, yea, and that which is more, even in the midſt of their great conflicts of Conſcience. Of which moſt happy number of godly and vertuous women (my dear Heart) you are one, and that of the chiefeſt, being plentifully indued with the gifts of Gods moſt gracious Spirit, as it doth full well appear in your daily doings. God only have the praiſe therefore.

Note how God ſometime gives comfort by weaker veſſels.

Foraſmuch then as God hath given you the gift to write, I ſhall moſt heartily deſire you to let me hear from you ſometimes, be it never ſo little, for truly I take great comfort and courage thereby, ſpecially in my poor Conſcience, which is ſore aſſaulted of ſubtle Satan, and in a manner oppreſſed of my ſins. Pray (dear Siſter) that God may give me true, hearty and earneſt repentance, and increaſe my faith, for they are both the good gifts of God only, and far paſs the reach of my power, to take at my pleaſure.

Therefore (dear Siſter) if you help me to beg the ſame of our dear loving Father, I am ſure that he both can and will give them in his good time. As for the fear of death, or terrour of the fire, I moſt heartily thank my good God, I feel it not; only it is mine own ſins and unthankfulneſs which holdeth hard battel, and wageth ſtrong war againſt me, which only goeth about to ſeparate me from my good Captain Chriſt, that I ſhould not enjoy his glorious victory; but God being on my ſide (as I am ſure he is) that cannot continually prevail againſt me. Though God for a time permit Satan to take his pleaſure on me, as he did upon Job, yet I doubt not but in the end all ſhall turn to my profit, through the merits of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to whoſe moſt merciful defence I commit you (dear Siſter) with all the reſt of the Lords elect. Farewel in Chriſt.

John Careles nothing touched with fear of death, or of the fire, but only of his ſins.

Yours unfeignedly, John Careles.
Pray, pray, pray, pray.

To my dear Brother T. V.

Another Letter of John Careles, wherein he comforteth the afflicted mind of a certain good Brother, mourning for lack of Gods feeling.

THe everlaſting peace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, the continual comforts of his moſt pure and holy Spirit, be with you my moſt dear Friend and faithful Brother V. to the increaſe of your Faith, and comfort of your ſorrowful Spirit, which is to the Father a ſweet ſacrifice through Chriſt, for whoſe ſake he will never deſpiſe your humble and contrite heart, but doth favourably accept the ſame, and will in moſt ample wiſe perform the deſire thereof to his glory, and your eternal comfort in him.

In the midſt of my manifold croſſes and troubles, wherein I am conſtrained to flee unto God for refuge and ſuccour by earneſt and faithful Prayer, I cannot forget you my dear heart in the Lord, but eſteeming your ſtate for mine own, I do pour forth my complaint for you, as I do for my ſelf, and rather more, as I think preſent need doth require, deſiring moſt heartily to hear the good ſucceſs of the ſame in you. The Lord God, for his great mercies ſake, accompliſh my deſire, as I doubt not but he will, when he ſeeth it good and moſt to his glory, and to your comfort and commodity. Oh that I might once ſee you ſo merry in Chriſt, as you have juſt cauſe to be, that you might ſay with David, Pſal. 57. Awake my glory, awake Lute and Harp, bring forth the Pſalter with the merry Song, that I might ſing a new Song of praiſe and thankſgiving unto the Lord, for the light of his favourable countenance, his help and deliverance. Oh, that would refreſh me as a moſt precious Oil, and gladden my poor heart, which is aſſaulted with ſorrow more ways than one. I doubt not but the ſame ſhall by your means receive much comfort, though for a time it doth mourn with you, that we may be made both glad together; yea, and that with ſuch gladneſs as ſhall continue for ever. But in the mean ſpace (I ſay) moſt happy are you, that ſo heartily mourn for the abſence of the Bridegroom. If you were not a wedding Child, you could never do it. Only Chriſts true Diſciples do mourn for his abſence: therefore ſhall they doubtleſs rejoyce at his preſence, which will be ſo much more joyful, by how much the abſence is more ſorrowful.

Anno 1556.

Comfort for a ſick Conſcience.

Therefore (my good Brother) take a good heart unto you, and be of good chear. Say with the Prophet David, Pſalm 42. O my Soul, why art thou ſo heavy, and why art thou ſo diſquieted within me? O put thy truſt in God, for I will yet give him thanks for the help of his loving countenance, and becauſe he is my God. Read Pſalm 41. and 42. for your comfort, and conſider that the holy King and Prophet, at the making and firſt ſaying of them, was even in the ſame caſe that you are now in; but he ſtill comforted himſelf with the ſweet Promiſes of God: and ſo do you my dear heart, for to you they do as well pertain as they did to him, and as ſurely ſhall they be performed upon you, as they were upon him: for he is one God and dear Father unto you both, and for his mercy, truth and promiſe ſake, he muſt needs make good unto you all that he hath ſaid. If his love towards you ſtood in the reſpect of your own merit and worthineſs, you might well mourn, lament and complain; yea, you had good cauſe to doubt, fear, and miſtruſt. But ſeeing he loveth you only for and in Jeſus Chriſt, who is your whole holineſs, righteouſneſs and redemption; lay away all mourning, lamenting, and complaining, baniſh from you all fear, miſtruſt, and infidelity, and know that as long as Chriſt doth continue Gods Son, ſo long muſt the love of the Father continue towards you immutable, and his good will unchangeable, and cannot be altered through any of your infirmities. For this is moſt true, that as long as the cauſe of any thing doth laſt, ſo long muſt the effect remain; but Chriſt is the whole cauſe why the Father loveth you, and he alſo continueth for ever; then muſt I needs conclude, that the love of the Father continueth towards you for ever, and (as the Pſalmiſt moſt joyfully ſo often ſingeth) His mercy endureth for ever and ever.

Gods love goeth not by our deſervings, but by faith in Jeſus Chriſt.

Chriſt only is the cauſe why his Father loveth us.

This is moſt true (mine own dear Heart) although the Lord for a time hide it from your ſenſes, that you might be the more earneſt in prayer to him for the feeling of it, and alſo the more thankful for it when he doth give the lively taſt of it, as doubtleſs he will do ere ever it be long; and then ſhall you be well able to comfort other in the ſame ſtate that you are now in, with the ſame comfort wherewith you are, and further ſhall be comforted of God.

Why God ſometime hideth himſelf from us.

Therefore lift up your hands that are now a little fallen down, and ſtretch forth the weak knees of your troubled mind, which now mourneth with a godly mourning, and therefore ſhall it be full well comforted with that ſweet peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding: and you are ſure already to enjoy the bleſſing that Chriſt gave unto the godly mourners of Sion upon the Mount, at the firſt Sermon that he made. Oh happy V. in whoſe mourning company I had rather be, than in the houſe of mirth and banquetting of ſuch as ſee not what cauſe they have to mourn and be ſorry. But yet (my good Brother) uſe a meaſure in this your godly mourning, and make not your faithful Friends too much ſorry for you. Let the perſwaſions of ſuch godly Lovers as you do daily company withal, or rather the perſwaſions of the Holy Ghoſt by them, move you to ſome godly mirth and rejoycing. Conſider that you are commanded of God by the mouth of Saint Paul thereto, Rejoyce in the Lord (ſaith he) and I ſay again rejoyce, Philip. 4. Mark how he doubleth the ſentence, that we may perceive it is a moſt earneſt and neceſſary thing he requireth. Obey the Commandment of God in this behalf; wherein, as you cannot but highly pleaſe him, ſo I aſſure you, you ſhall very much rejoyce my poor heart, and the hearts of other which pray for you with mourning Tears, and make that cruel enemy Satan and all your Adverſaries ſorry, which will rejoyce and laugh to ſee you mourn. Oh my good Brother, let it manifeſtly appear; that the Lord of his great mercy hath heard our faithful and hearty requeſts for you. Oh how would that rejoyce me in the midſt of my troubles.

Therefore now to conclude, becauſe the darkneſs conſtraineth me to make an end for this time, I ſay, my dear and faithful Brother, you in reſpect of the great cauſe you have of your own part through Chriſt, and for the glory and honour of Almighty God, the comfort, joy, and rejoycing of your dear Brethren and Siſters in Chriſt, alſo your own duty to the commandment of God; and laſt of all to vex, moleſt, and greive Satan withal, rejoyce in the Lord, and be moſt heartily glad in him, who is wholy yours, and you are his, and ſhall be for ever more, Selah.

Farewel mine own bowels in the Lord, and praiſe God with joyful lips and a merry heart, and pray for me his moſt unprofitable Servant, which have more cauſe concerning my ſelf to lament, then any one man elſe living: but my good Bridegroom is preſent, and biddeth me caſt away my mourning garments, and therefore I muſt needs be merry with him: and ſo he biddeth you to be, by my mouth, for he is preſent with you, although for ſorrow you cannot know him, as Magdalen could not in the garden, until he ſpake unto her. The Lord God ſpeak theſe words of comfort in your heart, and open the eyes of your mind, that you may perfectly perceive and feel his Bleſſed preſence, and ſo rejoyce in the ſame for evermore, Amen. Comfort your heart in Chriſt, and caſt your care upon him, for he careth for you.

Your Brother in the Lord, abiding his good pleaſure, John Careles.

To my dear and faithful Brother, Auguſtine Bernher.

Another Letter of John Careles to faithful Auguſtine Bernher, counſelling him to be circumſpect in theſe dangerous days.

THe peace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, the help, comfort, and aſſiſtance of his eternal Spirit be with you my dear and faithful Brother Auguſtine, and with all the reſt of my good Brethren and Siſters of the houſes of Baxterley und Manceter (which mourn for the miſery of Gods People) to your everlaſting conſolation in him, Amen.

Right glad I am to hear (my dear and faithful Brother Auguſtine) that God of his great mercy and infinite goodneſs hath yet ſo graciouſly delivered and preſerved you out of your enemies hands, beſeeching Almighty God alſo from the bottom of my heart, to be your continual defence unto the end, as hitherto he hath moſt graciouſly been, that you may live and die both to Gods glory, the commodity of his Church, and to the increaſe of your own everlaſting joy and comfort in him.

Know you (dear Brother) that I have received your Letter, for the which I heartily thank you. Indeed I think it very ſhort, although it ſeemeth ſomething ſharply to rebuke me in the beginning, for the breach of my promiſe in not writing to you of this long time. Well Brother, I am content to bear it with patience, conſidering that you are troubled otherwiſe (the Lord comfort you and all heavy hearts;) neither will I ſpend Ink and Paper for my purgation in this point. God he knoweth whether I be ſo mindleſs of my promiſe as it appeareth in your ſight I am. Your requeſt I will truly perform to the uttermoſt of my Power, as gladly as any poor wretch ſhall do in the world, and I thank God I have done no leſs of long time. And as my poor Prayer ſhall be a handmaid to wait upon you which way ſoever you ride or go; ſo I beſeech you that my ſimple counſel may take ſome place in you, in this time of your Pilgrimage, which you paſs in no ſmall peril. God keep and preſerve you for his Names ſake.

He counſelleth Auguſtine to be circumſpect, and not raſhly to thruſt himſelf in danger.

I do not diſallow, but much praiſe and commend your hearty boldneſs in putting your ſelf in preſs, when any one of Gods People needeth your help in any point. But yet I would not have you thruſt your ſelf in danger, when you can do them no good, or at leaſtwiſe when they may well enough ſpare that good you would do them: For if you ſhould then chance to be taken, you ſhall not only be no comfort unto them, but alſo a great diſcomfort, adding ſorrow unto their ſorrow.

I do not perſwade you to abſent your ſelf from any place where your preſence of neceſſity is required; for in all ſuch places, I know, God will preſerve you as he hath hitherto wonderfully done, praiſed be his Name therefore: or if it ſhall pleaſe him to permit you in any ſuch place to be taken, I know he will moſt ſweetly comfort your Conſcience with this conſideration, that it is the very providence and appointment of God, that you ſhould there and then be taken up for a witneſs of his Truth unto the world: but I cannot allow, nor be contented that you ſhould raſhly or negligently thruſt your ſelf into that place where your wicked enemies do continually haunt, yea and lay wait for you, when no neceſſity of your ſelf, nor of any other of Gods People doth require your company. If they need any of your godly counſel, you may write unto them that thing that you think good; which (I dare ſay) will be ſufficient unto them. For (continual thanks and praiſes be given unto the everlaſting God) there is none of thoſe that be cruelly condemned for Gods Truth, that now be weaklings; for they have manfully paſſed through the pikes, and they have boldly abiden the brunt of the Battle, and therefore I reckon the worſt is paſt with them already. So that now and then a godly Letter from you to them ſhall do as much good, as your company ſhall do, and perchance more too; for writing ſticketh longer in the memory then words do, yea though your Letters were as ſhort to them, as your laſt was to me, ſo that the ſame be ſomething ſweeter, and not all thing ſo ſharp.

This (dear Brother) is the ſimple counſel which I would gladly have you obſerve, partly for that I heartily pray for your preſervation to the commodity of Chriſts Church, and partly for that I unfainedly wiſh the peace, comfort, and tranquillity of your own Conſcience, which I know will be quickly ready to accuſe you, if you do any thing wherein you have not the Word of God for your warrant. For as in a glaſs that is clear, a ſmall mote will ſoon appear: even ſo the good Conſcience of Gods choſen Children, being more clear then chryſtal, will quickly accuſe them at the leaſt fault they do commit; whereas the wicked worldlings have their Conſcience ſo clogged, and corrupted through the cuſtom of ſin, that they cannot once ſee or perceive their ſhameful deeds and wicked works, until God ſet the ſame before them for their utter deſtruction, and then deſpair they immediately. But ſeeing that God hath given you a clear Conſcience, and a pure, ſharp, quick and lively ſight in your Soul, I would wiſh you to beware that you do nothing unadviſedly, but upon a good ground. For an accuſing Conſcience is a ſore thing when death doth approach, and then Satan will not ſtick to tell you that you have too much tempted God, when peradventure you have done nothing ſo at all. For this cauſe (I ſay) partly I have thought it good to admoniſh you (as I have done often) to be circumſpect, according to the counſel of Chriſt, which biddeth you beware of men. Other things I have not to write, for I know this bearer can certifie you of all things at large, better then I can declare it by writing.

A good Conſcience is ſoon troubled.

Conſcience of ſin ſometime is taken where none is committed. Matth. 10.

I beſeech you, good Auguſtine, help me forwards with your hearty prayers, for I truſt I have but a ſmall time to tarry in this troubleſom world. Dr. Story told out Marſhal that we ſhould all be diſpatched ſo ſoon as he came from Oxford, whither he and other bloody Butchers be gone to make ſlaughter of Chriſts ſheep that lie there appointed to be ſlain. God for Chriſts ſake put them and ſuch like beſides their cruel purpoſe, if it be his good will and pleaſure, Amen good Lord. I pray you do my moſt hearty commendations to my dear Siſter and Faithful Friend, good Miſtreſs Mary Glover. I beſeech God be her comfort, as I doubt not but he is. I am very glad to hear that ſhe doth ſo joyfully and ſo patiently bear this great Croſs that God hath laid upon her. I pray God ſtrengthen her, and all other his dear Saints unto the end, Amen. Commend me unto my dear and faithful Siſter Elizabeth B. I thank her moſt heartily for my Napkin, and ſo I do your dear Brother for my Shirt. Truly that day that we were appointed to come to our anſwer before the Commiſſioners (which had ſent word the ſame morning that they would come to the Kings Bench by eight of the Clock, and the houſe and all things were trimmed and made ready for them) I got that Shirt on my back, and that Napkin in my hand, and me thought they did help to harneſs me, and weapon me well to go fight againſt that bloody Beaſt of Babylon. And truſt me, truly if they had come, I would have ſtricken three ſtrokes the more for your two ſakes, as well as God would have abled me to have ſet them on, as by Gods grace I will not fail to do at the next skirmiſh that I come to. Wherefore I pray you pray for me, that I may be ſtrong and hardy to lay on good load. Oh that I might ſo ſtrike him down, that he ſhould never be able to riſe again. But that ſtroke belongeth only unto the Lord, to ſtrike at his coming, the which I truſt will be ſhortly. Oh haſten it good Lord, and ſhorten theſe ſorrowful and ſinful days, for thy great mercies ſake.

The Chriſtian courage of John Careles.

Farewel my dear and faithful loving Brother. The Lord defend, keep, and preſerve you from the power of your enemies viſible and inviſible, and ſend us a moſt joyful and merry meeting here or elſewhere, as it ſhall pleaſe his goodneſs to appoint us.

In the mean ſpace I ſhall moſt earneſtly deſire you to pray for me, for I never had more need in my life, and doubtleſs you ſhall never want my poor prayer, if it ſhall pleaſe God to accept the prayer of ſo ſinful a wretch as I am. The Lord impute not my ſins to me, for Jeſus Chriſt ſake; unto whoſe moſt merciful defence I do moſt heartily commit you. The bleſſing of God be with you now and ever, Amen. I pray you do my moſt hearty commendations unto Mr. John Glover. I do not forget him in my daily prayers, and I truſt he doth remember me.

Your poor Brother always mindful of you in my prayer, John Careles Priſoner, abiding Gods pleaſure.

To my dear Brother Henry Adlington, Priſoner in the Lollards Tower.

Another Letter of John Careles to Henry Adlington, after a Martyr, partly comforting, and partly counſelling him how to anſwer his Adverſaries.

THe everlaſting peace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, the continual aid, ſtrength, joy, and comfort of his moſt pure, holy, and mighty Spirit, with the increaſe of Faith, and lively feeling of his mercies be moſt effectuouſly wrought in your heart, my dear and faithful loving Brother Adlington, and in the hearts of all your other godly Priſon-fellows, to the full finiſhing of that good work, which the Lord hath moſt graciouſly begun in you; that the ſame may be to the advancing and ſetting forth of his glory, the Commodity of his poor afflicted Church, and to your own eternal joy and comfort in him, Amen.

My moſt dear and faithful loving Brother in the Lord, I with all the reſt of my loving Brethren here with me, do moſt humbly and heartily commend us unto you, with all faithful remembrance of you in our daily prayers, giving God earneſt thanks on your moſt happy behalf, for that he hath given you ſuch hearty boldneſs and Chriſtian conſtancy in the faithful confeſſion of his everlaſting verity. Bleſſed be God for thee my dearly beloved Brother, which hath vouched thee worthy of ſo great dignity, as to ſuffer for his ſake, and ſetting forth of his glory. Oh glad in heart mayſt thou be, to whom it is given, not only to believe in thy Lord and Chriſt moſt lively, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake, as one of his ſeelly ſheep appointed to the ſlaughter. Be of good comfort therefore my good Brother; for your calling unto the Croſs of Chriſt was after a marvelous ſort. Surely, it was only the Lords appointment, and therefore he will well perform his own work in and upon you, to the great magnifying of his glory, and comfort of your Brethren, whoſe hearts are mightily refreſhed, to hear how heartily you have behaved your ſelf hitherto.

This preſent day I received a Letter from you, at the reading whereof my Brethren and I were not a little comforted, to ſee your Conſcience ſo quieted in Chriſt and your continuance ſo ſtedfaſt in him; which things be the ſpecial gifts of God, not given unto every man, but to you his dear darling, elect and Choſen in Chriſt, and ſuch as you be. And whereas you do require to know my ſimple mind concerning your anſwer unto Dr. Story and the Chancellour; truly I ſay you did anſwer them very well: for there are but two Sacraments indeed that is to ſay, the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, as you have full well anſwered them, praiſed be God for his good gifts, who chuſeth the weak to confound the ſtrong, and the fooliſh to confound the worldly wiſe. If when you come before them again, they do ask you what a Sacrament is, ſay you that a Sacrament, being miniſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution, is a viſible ſign of an inviſible grace, and hath the promiſe of Gods mercy annexed unto it, available to all ſuch as do worthily receive it, and not unworthily worſhip it, as they would have us to do, contrary to Gods commandment. And theſe properties, belonging to Chriſts true Sacraments, cannot be applied unto any one of thoſe five Sacraments which they have invented of their own brain, ſince Antichriſt began to reign, to blind the People withal.

Anno 1556.

What a Sacrament is.

I perceive (dear heart) that upon Friday they do intend to condemn you, and give you your judgment. Therefore I think they will have no great reaſoning with you, but bid you anſwer them directly, either yea, or nay, to all ſuch things as they have to charge you withal, which they have gathered of you ſince you came into their cruel hands. But if they will needs make many words with you, becauſe you are but a ſimple man, and therefore perchance they will be the buſier with you to trouble you with many queſtions, to comber your knowledge, and then ſeem to triumph over you and that Truth that you do hold; if (I ſay) they do this (as perhaps for ſome evil purpoſe they will) then be you ſo plain and as ſhort as you can, ſaying roundly unto them theſe or ſuch like words, as nigh as you can.

He inſtructeth him how and what to anſwer to the Adverſaries.

Be it known unto you, that I in all points do believe as it becometh a true Chriſtian, and as I have been truly taught in the days of that good King Edward, of ſuch godly Preachers and Prophets ſent of God, as have ſealed their Doctrine with their Blood, from whom I will diſſent in no point: for I am a poor man without learning, but am commanded of God to follow the counſel of his conſtant Preachers, and ſo do I intend to do, God giving me grace and aſſiſtance thereto.

We are bound to follow our true preachers.

As for you, I know you to be none of Chriſts Shepherds, but ravening Wolves, which come to kill and ſcatter the flock of Chriſt, as the Lord ſaid you ſhould; and doth will us to beware of you and your poyſoned Doctrine, bidding us to Judge you according to your fruits, whereby all men may ſee and know what ye be, that will not be wilfully blind. But the good Shepherds have given their lives for the defence of Chriſts flock; and I am commanded to follow their faithful and godly example, and to confeſs with them one Truth, even to the fire, if God ſhall ſee it good; and this as a true Chriſtian I have hitherto done, and henceforth by Gods grace intend to do.

And if for the ſame God ſhall ſuffer you to take away my life, as you have done theirs, I am contented therewith: his will be done, for that only is good. But of this be you ſure, the Lord will ſhortly call you to account for all the innocent Blood that is ſhed within this Realm; which you have brought into a moſt woful caſe, and made many a heavy heart in the ſame, and more I perceive you will make, ſo long as the Lord for our ſins will ſuffer you to proſper, and until the time that your iniquities ſhall be full ripe. But then be you ſure, the Lord will ſit in judgment upon you, as well as you do now upon his Saints, and will reward you according to your deſervings; to whom with my whole heart I commit my cauſe, and he will make anſwer for me, when the full time of my refreſhing cometh. In the mean ſpace, I will keep ſilence with this that I have ſaid, truſting that I have ſufficiently diſcharged my Conſcience in confeſſing my Faith and Religion to you, declaring of what Church I am, even of the Catholick Church of Jeſus Chriſt, which was well known to be here in England in our late good King Edwards days, by two ſpecial tokens which cannot deceive me, nor yet ſuffer me to be deceived; that is to ſay, the pure preaching of his holy Word, and the due adminiſtration of his holy Sacraments, which is not to be ſeen in your Romiſh Church,

God will require account of Blood.

The Catholick Church in King Edwards days in England.

Two ſpecial marks to know the true Church in England in King Edwards days.

Anno 1556.

Church, and therefore it cannot justly be called the Church and Spouse of Christ. I believe in the holy Trinity, and all the other Articles of the Christian Faith contained in the three Creeds; and finally all the Canonical Scripture to be true in every sentence. And I detest all Sects both of the Arrians and Anabaptists, or any other that divide themselves from the true Church of Christ, which is his mystical Body, the ground and pillar of Truth, and the very House of the living God. And if for these things you take away my life, and make your selves guilty of my blood, you may; for I am in your hands as the Sheep brought to the shambles, abiding the grace of the Butcher. And be you sure your judgment sleepeth not, but when you cry peace, peace, and all is safe, then shall your plagues begin like the sorrow of a Woman travelling with Child, according to Christs infallible promise.

This kind of Answer, my dear Heart, it shall be best for you to make; and by Gods grace I do intend to take the same order my self in time to come, when the Lord shall vouch me worthy of that great dignity, whereunto he hath called you. And if they shall laugh you to scorn, as I know they will, saying, thou art a Fool, and an unlearned Ass-head, and art able to make answer to nothing, &c. care you not for it, but still commit your cause unto God, who will make answer for you, and tell them that they have been answered again and again of divers godly and learned men; but all will not help: for you have one solution of all manner of questions, even a fair fire and faggots, this will be the end of your disputations. Therefore I pray you to trouble me no more, but do that which you are appointed, when God shall permit the time. I am no better than Christ, his Apostles, and other of my good Brethren that are gone before me.

1 Theff 5. The Papists have one solution for all manner of questions.

This kind of answer will cut their Combs most, and edifie the people that stand by, so that the same be done coldly, with sobriety, meekness and patience; as I heard say our sweet Brethren Thomas Harland and John Oswald did at Lewes in Sussex, to the great rejoycing of the Children of God that were in those parts: and I hear say, that they were dissolved from this earthly Tabernacle at Lewes on Saturday last, and were condemned but the Wednesday before; so that we may perceive the Papists have quick work in hand, that they make such haste to have us home to our heavenly Father. Therefore let us make our selves ready to ride in the fiery Chariot, leaving these sorry Mantles and old Cloaks behind us for a time, which God shall restore to us again in a more glorious wise.

Of Thomas Harland and John Oswald, read in the second impression.

4 Reg. 2.

My good Brother Henry, you shall understand that bragging John T. hath beguiled his Keepers (who trusted him too well) and is run away from them, and hath brought the poor men into great danger by the same. The one of them is cast by the Councils commandment into the Gate-house at Westminster, the other is fled forth of the Country for fear.

Free-will.

Thus you may see the fruits of our Free-will men, that made so much boast of their own strength. But that house which is not builded surely upon the unmoveable Rock, will not long stand against the boisterous winds and storms, that blow so strongly in these days of trouble.

But, my dearly beloved Brother, blessed be God for you, and such as you be, which have played the parts of wise builders. You have digged down past the sand of your own natural strength, and beneath the earth of your own worldly wisdom, and are now come to the hard Stone and unmoveable Rock Christ, who is your only-Keeper; and upon him alone have you builded your Faith most firmly, without doubting, mistrust or wavering. Therefore neither the storms nor tempests, winds nor weathers that Satan and all his wily workmen can bring against you, with the very gates of Hell to help them, shall ever be able once to move your house, much less to overthrow it; for the Lord God himself, and no man is the builder thereof, and hath promised to preserve and keep the same for ever. Unto his most merciful defence therefore I do heartily commit you and all your good company, desiring him for his sweet Son Jesus Christs sake, to confirm and strengthen you all, that you may be constant unto the very end, that after the final victory is once gotten, you may receive the immarcessible Crown of glory, of Gods free gift, through his great mercy in Jesus Christ our only Saviour. To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be all honour, glory, praise, thanks, power, rule and dominion for ever and evermore, Amen. The blessing of God be with you all.

John Careles.

To my most dear and faithful Brother T.V.

A Letter of John Careles written with heavenly power to comfort an afflicted Brother, oppressed with pensiveness and mourning for his sins.

THe everlasting peace of God in Jesus Christ, the continual joy and comfort of his most pure, holy and mighty Spirit, with the increase of faith, and lively feeling of his mercy, be with you my dear heart in the Lord, and faithful loving Brother T. V. to the full accomplishing of that good work which he hath so graciously begun in you, that the same by all means may be to the setting forth of his glory, to the commodity of his poor afflicted Congregation, and to the sweet comfort and quietness of your Conscience in him now and evermore, Amen.

With such due honour, love and reverence, as it becometh me to bear unto the sweet Saints and dearly beloved Children of God, I have me most heartily commended unto you my dear Brother V. with all earnest and faithful remembrance of you in my daily prayers, thanking God right heartily that you do likewise remember me in yours; assuring you that my poor heart doth daily feel great consolation thereby, God only have the praise for the same and all other his benefits. Ah my dear Heart in the Lord, well is me that ever I was born, that God of his great mercy and infinite goodness hath used me (most miserable wretch) at any time, as his instrument, to minister any thing unto you either by word or writing, that might be an occasion of your joy and comfort in the Lord, and a provoking of you to praise and thanksgiving unto God for the same, as your most loving and godly Letter seemeth to import. Oh, happy am I that the Lord hath appointed me unto so good a ground to sow his seed upon; but much more happy are you, whose heart the Lord hath prepared and made so meet to receive the same so effectuously, giving thereto the sweet showers and heavenly dews of his grace and holy Spirit, that it may bring forth fruit in due season accordingly; the increase whereof we shall shortly reap together with perfect joy and gladness, and that continually.

Therefore, my dear Brother, I say unto you as good Elizabeth did to her dear cousin Mary, Luke 1. Happy are you, and happy shall you be for evermore, because you have believed. The most sweet and faithful promises of your Redeemer Jesus Christ you have surely laid up in the treasury of your heart. His comfortable dealings you have faithfully heard, his faithful admonitions you have humbly obeyed; and therefore you shall never come into judgment: your sins shall never be remembred; for your Saviour hath cast them all into the bottom of the Sea, he hath removed them from you as far as the East is from the West, and hath given you for an everlasting possession, his justification and holiness, so that now no Creature, neither in Heaven nor in Earth, shall be able to accuse you before the Throne of the heavenly King.

Remission of sins. Matth. 7. Psal. 103.

Satan is now judged, he is now cast out from you, he hath no part in you; you are wholly given unto Christ, which will not lose you: your stedfast faith in him hath overcome the sturdy and bragging Prince of the world; Christ hath given you the final victory over him and all his Army, that they shall never hurt you.

What would you have more? Oh my dear heart, how great treasures are laid up in store for you, and how glorious a Crown is already made and prepared for you?

And albeit the Holy Ghost doth bear witness of all these things in your heart, and maketh you more sure and certain thereof, than if you had all the outward Oracles in the world; yet I, being certainly perswaded, and fully assured by the testimony of Gods Spirit in my Conscience of your eternal and sure salvation in our Testimony of Gods Spirit.

Anno 1556.

Sweet Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, have thought it good, yea and my bounden duty, not only at this time to write unto you, and to ſhew you my joyful heart in that behalf, but alſo by the word and commandment of Chriſt to pronounce and affirm in the Name and Word of the heavenly King Jehovah, and in the behalf of his ſweet Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, to whom all knees ſhall bow, whom all Creatures ſhall worſhip, and alſo by the impulſion of the Holy Ghoſt, by whoſe power and ſtrength all the faithful be regenerate; I do (I ſay) pronounce to thee my dear Brother T. V. that thou art already a Citizen of Heaven.

Practice of the true Keys of the Goſpel.

The Lord thy God in whom thou doſt put all thy truſt, for his dear Sons ſake, in whom thou doſt alſo undoubtedly believe, hath freely forgiven thee all thy ſins, clearly releaſed all thine iniquities, and fully pardoned all thy offences, be they never ſo many, ſo griveous, or ſo great, and will never remember them any more to condemnation. As truly as he liveth, he will not have thee die the death, but hath utterly determined, purpoſed, and eternally decreed, that thou ſhalt live with him for ever. Thy ſore ſhall be healed and thy wounds bound up even of himſelf for his own names ſake. He doth not, nor will he look upon thy ſins in thee; but he reſpecteth and beholdeth thee in Chriſt, into whom thou art lively graffed by Faith in his Blood, and in whom thou art moſt aſſuredly elected and choſen to be a ſweet veſſel of his mercy and ſalvation, and waſt thereto predeſtinate into him before the foundation of the world was laid. In teſtimony and earneſt whereof he hath given thee his good and holy Spirit, which worketh in thee Faith, Love, and unfained Repentance, with other godly vertues contrary to the corruption of thy nature.

Experience of Chriſt working in his Church.

Alſo he hath commanded me this day (although a moſt unworthy wretch) to be a witneſs thereof by the miniſtry of his holy Word, grounded upon the Truth of his moſt faithfull Promiſes; the which thou believing ſhalt live for ever. Believeſt thou this my dear heart? I know well thou doſt believe. The Lord increaſe thy Faith, and give thee a lively feeling of all his mercies, whereof thou art warranted and aſſured by the teſtimony of the Holy Ghoſt, who confirm in thy Conſcience (to the utter overthrowing of Satan, and thoſe his moſt hurtful dubitations, whereby he is accuſtomed to moleſt and vex the true Children of God) all that I have ſaid; and by Gods grace I will, as a witneſs thereof, confirm and ſeal the ſame with my Blood, for a moſt certain Truth.

Wherefore (my good Brother) praiſe the Lord with a joyful heart, and give him thanks for this his exceeding great mercy, caſting away all dubitation and wavering, yea all ſorrow of heart, and penſiveneſs of mind, : for this, the Lord your God, and moſt dear and loving Father, commandeth you to do by me, nay rather by his own mouth and word pronounced by me. But now my dear Brother, after that I have done my meſſage, or rather the Lords meſſage, indeed I could find in my heart to write two or three ſheets of Paper, declaring the joy I bear in my heart for you, mine own bowels in the Lord: yet the time being ſo ſhort (as you do well know) I am here conſtrained to make an end, deſiring you to pardon my ſlackneſs, and to forgive my great negligence towards you, promiſing you ſtill that ſo long as my poor life doth laſt, my prayer ſhall ſupply that my pen doth want, as knoweth the Almighty God, to whoſe moſt merciful defence I do heartily commit you and all other his dear Children, as well as though I had rehearſed them by name, deſiring them moſt heartily to remember me in their hearty and daily prayers, as I know right well they do; for I feel the daily comfort and commodity thereof, and therefore I neither will nor can forget them, nor you, or any ſuch like. The bleſſing of God be with you all, Amen.

Yours for ever unfainedly,
John Careles.

A Letter of Thanks to a faithful Friend of his, by whom he had received much comfort in his inward troubles.

A Letter of John Careles to a faithful Friend of his, of Thankſgiving.

BLeſſed be God the Father of all mercy, for the great comfort and Chriſtian conſolation which he hath ſo mercifully miniſtred unto my poor afflicted heart by your means, my moſt dear and faithful Brother. Truly methinketh your words, or rather Gods words by you uttered, have a wonderful power and efficacy working in my heart at the hearing and reading of them. Rejoyce therefore, my dear Brother, and be thankful unto God; for verily he both is and will be mightily magnified in you, and that divers and many ways, both to the ſtrengthning of them that ſtand in his Truth, and alſo to the raiſing up of ſuch as are fallen from the ſame. God make me thankful for you, and on your behalf; for verily great is the goodneſs of God towards me, in giving me acquaintance in faithful love and amity with you; Gods Name be praiſed for ever therefore, and he perform all his merciful promiſes upon you, as I doubt not but he will, for his ſake in whom you truſt.

He giveth him thanks.

* I thank my God moſt heartily, and alſo you, my good Brother, for that you are careful for me in your faithful prayers, remembring my juſt deſerved ſorrows, as though they were your own, and labouring ſo much to ſolace the ſame. Ah my gracious good God, what am I, for whom thou and thy dear Children ſhould be ſo careful? O ſweet Lord, forgive me my great ingratitude and ſin, and grant that I never abuſe thy great benefits. O let the love of thine elect, which love me for thy ſake, be a ſure ſign and token, yea a moſt firm teſtimony and ſeal to my ſinful Conſcience of thine everlaſting love and mercy towards me in Chriſt; as verily it would and ought to be, if mine infidelity did not let it. Oh circumciſe therefore the foreskin of my heart, that I may with lively faith behold thy great love towards me in all thine elect, that I may alwaies be thankful for the ſame, and love thee and them again moſt heartily and unfeignedly.

Ah my dear Heart, how ſweetly and how truly, yea how godly and how comfortably have you rehearſed the ſweet ſaying of Solomon concerning proſperity with true and Godly Friends? I will joyn with it the ſentence which goeth a little before, for doubtleſs it may be well verified on you. A ſure Friend (ſaith the wiſe man in Eccleſ. 6.) will be unto thee even as thine own ſoul, and deal faithfully with thy houſhold-folk. If thou ſuffer trouble and adverſity, he is with thee, and hideth not his face from thee. A faithful friend is a ſtrong defence: whoſo findeth ſuch an one, findeth a treaſure. A faithful friend hath no peer: the weight of gold is not to be compared to the goodneſs of his faith. A faithful friend is a medicine of life, and they that fear the Lord ſhall find him, &c. Lo (my dear Heart in the Lord) here is a lively image or deſcription of you; for verily ſuch an one have I alwaies found you unto me, not only ſorrowing for my great ſorrow, but alſo oftentimes making me merry and joyful, with ſuch joys as the world cannot feel. Now let the world brag of his fained friendſhip; but I will boaſt of this true friendſhip in God, and eſteem it a more treaſure then all tranſitory things.

What a treaſure a truſty frie is.

There is no true friendſhip but among godly perſons.

And as for my mourning, dear brother, God hath made you to turn it unto mirth; for God hath put you in ſtead of them to be my comfort, whom he hath in his great mercy taken away. I truſt henceforth to leave the mourning for my great loſs, and to praiſe God for gaining unto himſelf ſo great glory by his choſen Children. God make me a true mourner of Sion, both for mine own ſin and wickedneſs, and alſo to ſee his honour defaced, that I may be made meet and apt to bear the joyful and comfortable meſſage that your beautiful feet ſhall bring me. God bleſs thee my dear Heart, and faithful loving Brother, and increaſe his good gifts of grace in thee, as he hath moſt happily begun, that you may daily more effectually feel and lively perceive the certainty of Gods grace wherein you ſtand, and firmly teſtifie the ſame to the converſion or confounding of all gain-ſayers, and to the comfort and confirmation of all Gods dear Children, Amen. Farewel mine own ſweet Brother, Farewel as mine own Heart.

Such mourners ſhould we be continually with this and others Gods dear Children, and bleſſed be they that ſo mourn.

Your own in Chriſt,

John Careles.

Anno 1556.

Another Letter of John Careles, to a certain godly faithful Sister, by the name of E. K.

Another Letter of John Careles to a godly Christian Woman.

THe grace and free mercy of God in Jesus Christ, the sweet consolations of the Holy Ghost, the guide of all Gods dear Children, be with you, strengthen and comfort you my dearly beloved sweet Sister, E. K. now and ever, Amen.

Albeit (my dearly beloved Sister in Christ) as yet we did never see one another personally to any knowledge, yet by the vertuous report that I have heard of you, and also by the large loving Token that I have received from you, me think that I do even presently see you, and behold your person faithfully walking in the fear and love of God, joying and rejoycing with you in the spirit, as though we were sweetly talking together of Christs verity. The Lord God do I humbly beseech in the Bowels and Blood of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, that he will strengthen us both with his holy and mighty Spirit, that we may constantly continue in the confession of his Truth unto the end; that like as we now see one another presently in Spirit, we may also see one another personally in the glorious presence of God and his holy Angels, where undoubtedly we shall know one anothers personage, to our great joy, felicity, and endless comfort.

Preparation to the Cross.

And now therefore dear Sister K. be strong in the Lord our God, for doubtless the time of tryal is at hand; a great persecution, with cruel murthering of Gods dear Saints is like to be very shortly in this woful wicked Realm of England. Therefore (dear Sister) for the love of God prepare you to the Cross with all diligence, and make your self ready to die with Christ, that you may also live with him for ever. There is no remedy, if you will be Christs Disciple, you must needs take up your Cross nnd follow him; for the Disciple must not look to be above his Master, nor the Servant to be better intreated then his Lord. If we were of the world (good Sister) no doubt the world would love us. But forasmuch as Christ hath chosen us out of the world to serve God in Spirit and verity, let us be well assured the world will hate us and persecute us, as it hath done our Lord and Master Christ. But yet let us be of good cheer, for Christ hath overcome the world. The pain is but short that we can feel here, but the pleasure is perpetual that we shall feell else where.

Consolation under the Cross.

Let us set before us the example of Christ, which abode the Cross, and despised the shame, in respect of the joy that was set before him; even so let us consider for whose sake we suffer, whose cause we defend, and what glorious reward we shall have at the day of our victory, and then doubtless the consolation of these things will make sweet all our sufferings, and soon swallow up all the sorrows that we are fowsed in for Gods sake. I could recite divers Texts of the Scriptures to confirm this point. But I need not, for I am well assured that you do know them most perfectly already. The Lord give you strength, and assist you with his holy Spirit, that you may continually walk in all points according to your godly knowledge: And then shall you not do as the most part of our Gospellers do now adaies, the more is the pity.

Against Massing Gospellers.

There are a great many in England that do perfectly know, that the Idolatrous Mass is abominable, devillish, and detestable in the sight of God. And yet alas, they be not affraid to pollute and defile their bodies, which ought to be the temples of the Holy Ghost, with being present at it, so sinning against God and their own Conscience.

Exhortation to fly from the Mass.

But dear Sister K. do you fly from it both in body and Soul, as you would fly from the very Devil himself. Drink not of the Whore of Babylons Cup by any means; for it will infect the body, and Poyson the Soul. Be not partakers of her sins (saith the Angel) lest ye be partakers of the plagues that shall shortly be poured upon her. O what an aray is this, that so many that know Gods Truth will now turn again and defile themselves in the filthy puddle of Antichrists stinking Religion? They go about to save their lives with their double dissimulation; but doubtless, they shall lose everlasting life by it, if they do not repent in time, and turn unto the Lord. But (dear Sister) my trust is, that you do utterly abhor the coming to any such thing. I hope that you will not by any means turn back into Egypt now, but that you will boldly venture through the wilderness of trouble and persecution, that you may come into the land that floweth with all kind of heavenly pleasures and joyful delectations, and possess the same for ever.

Let us consider, how that every one of us doth owe unto God a death by nature, and how soon the Lord will require it of us we know not. O how happy are we then, if God of his goodness appoint us to pay natures debt with suffering for his Truth and Gospels sake, and so making us his faithful witnesses with the Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, and Confessors, yea, with his dearly beloved Son Jesus Christ, to whom he doth here begin to fashion us like in suffering, that we might be like him also in glory. Thus my dearly beloved Sister, I have been bold to trouble you a little with my rude and simple Letter, being made in haste as it doth appear. Yet I desire you to take it in good worth, as a token of my poor zeal unto you, and to accept my good will. And if it please God to spare me life and liberty, I trust hereafter to write unto you more largely. Fare ye well dear Sister, E. K. the Lord bless you and all yours, and pour upon you the heavenly dew of his grace. The Lord endue you with plentiful knowledge of his verity, and fill you with his holy and mighty Spirit, that you may continually rejoyce in the comforts of the same now and ever, Amen. Pray, pray, pray with stedfast Faith.

Your daily Oratour John Careles,

Prisoner of the Lord.

In the Letters of William Tyms, ye heard before much mention made of Agnes Glascock. This Agnes Glascock, through infirmity, and her Husbands perswasions, was allured to go to Mass. For which cause she falling into great sorrow and repentance, was raised up again by the comfortable Letters of William Tyms, and John Careles, as before you may read; and after that was constant in the sincere profession of the Verity, and in danger for the same of persecution; unto whom John Careles writeth therefore his Letter, as followeth.

A Letter of John Careles to Agnes Glascock.

A Letter of John Careles to Mrs. Agnes Glascock.

THe everlasting peace of God in Jesus Christ, the continual aid, strength, and comforts of his most pure, holy and mighty Spirit be with you my dear and faithful Sister Glascock, to the good performance of that good work which God hath so graciously begun in you, to his Glory, the commodity of his poor afflicted Church and to your own eternal confort in him, Amen.

In our Lord I have my most humble and hearty commendations unto you, my dear Sister and most faithful Mother Glascock, with all remembrance of you in my daily prayers, giving God most hearty laud, praise, and thanks for you, and on your behalf, in that he of his great mercy hath hitherto so mightily strenthened you, constantly to cleave unto your Captain Christ, notwithstanding the great assaults and manifold temptations that you have had to the contrary. Doubtless (dear Heart) it cannot be expressed what joy and comfort it is unto my very Soul, to see how mightily the Lord hath magnified himself in you, and other his dear elect dearelings, whom he will shortly glorifie with himself, as he hath done other of his sweet Saints, that are gone before you. Rejoyce therefore and be glad; for verily you have good cause, if you diligently consider the great dignity that God hath called you unto, even now in your old age, to be one of his worthy witnesses unto the world: and I think you shall with me and other your Brethren in bonds, seal the Lords verity with the testimony of your Blood. Surely (sweet Sister) this is the greatest promotion that God can bring you or any other unto, in this life; and an honour that the highest Angel in Heaven is not permitted to have.

What an high honour it is to suffer for Christ.

Therefore

Therefore happy are you, O faithful Daughter of Abraham, that the Lord will now prefer you before many other, yea or any other of your age, that I do know in England. Oh faithful and vertuous Matron, which wilt not be moved from the ſure Rock Chriſt, upon whom you have ſo firmly built your houſe, that neither ſtorms nor tempeſts, neither yet Hell-gates, or any other temptations, ſhall ever be able to prevail againſt it. Full well doth it appear by your conſtant continuance, that you have plaid the part of a wiſe Builder, in counting the coſt aforehand, belonging to the finiſhing up of your Tower. And I doubt not but (through Gods gift) you have ſufficient to the performance thereof, that the hypocrites of their part ſhall have no juſt cauſe to triumph againſt you, or to mock you, ſaying, Lo, this woman began to build, but is not able to make an end. Therefore go on boldly and fear not; for God is faithful (as St. Paul ſaith) which will not ſuffer you to be tempted above your ſtrength, but either he will give you grace and ſtrength to ſtand unto the death (which is the gate and entrance into life) or elſe he will make ſuch an outſcape for you, as ſhall be to the ſetting forth of his glory; the which above all other things, we that are his choſen Children ought to ſeek, yea even with the loſs of our own lives, being yet well aſſured that the ſame ſhall not be ſhortened one minute of an hour before the time that God hath appointed.

Caſt therefore (dear Siſter) all your care upon the Lord, which (as St. Peter ſaith) careth for you. Great is his Providence for you, and mighty is his love and mercy towards you. With his grace he will defend you, and with his holy Spirit he will evermore guide you, wherewith he hath ſurely ſealed you unto the day of redemption; he hath alſo given you the ſame in earneſt for the recovery of the purchaſed poſſeſſion, which he hath prepared for you before the foundation of the world was laid. Be ſtrong therefore, and take a good heart, as I hear ſay you be. God for ever be bleſſed for you, which hath ſo graft his love in your good heart, that nothing is able to ſeparate you from the ſame, but will rather chuſe to ſuffer adverſity with the People of God, than to enjoy the pleaſure of ſin for a little ſeaſon. Oh happy Woman, that canſt find in thy heart to eſteem the rebukes of Chriſt to be greater riches than all the treaſures of the world, as good Moſes did. Doubtleſs great is your reward in Heaven; which you ſhall ſhortly receive of his free gift, and not of any deſerving.

He exhorteth her to be ſtrong.

Thus (dear Mother Glaſcock) I have been bold to trouble you with my rude and ſimple Letters, deſiring you to take them in good worth, being done in great haſt, as it doth appear, but yet proceeding from a poor heart which floweth over in love towards you, as my daily prayers for you can teſtifie; which I truſt ſhall ſupply that part of my duty towards you, that my Pen now wanteth. I thank you, dear Heart, for all your loving tokens, and for the great kindneſs you have hitherto ſhewed unto my poor Brother Tyms and his Wife and Children, with all other of Gods People, to whom you daily do good: the Lord recompence the ſame ſevenfold into your boſom, as I doubt not but he will, according to his unfallible promiſes. I pray you have my hearty commendations unto your Husband. I beſeech the Lord ſtrengthen him in the confeſſion of his Truth (as my truſt is that he will) that we may all joyfully reſt with Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God; unto the which he bring us, that with his moſt precious Blood hath bought us. The bleſſing of God be with you now and ever, Amen.

The charity of Mrs. Glaſcock to the priſoned Saints.

Your daily Orator and unfeigned Lover,
John Careles, Priſoner of the Lord.
Pray, pray, pray.

A brief Admonition written to Mrs. Agnes Glaſcock, in a Book of hers, when ſhe came to the Priſon to viſit him.

THere is nothing that the holy Scripture throughout doth ſo much commend unto us, as true faith and ſtedfaſt truſt in the promiſes of Gods eternal mercies towards us in Jeſus Chriſt. For from the ſame, as forth of the chief fountain and well-ſpring of life, do flow all kind of vertues and godly fruits, ſpecially true love towards God, in the which we ought purely to ſerve him all the days of our life; and alſo Chriſtian charity towards our Neighbours, as well to help them at all needs, as alſo not to hurt them by any means. Therefore pray earneſtly for the increaſe of faith and lively feeling of Gods mercy; for all things are poſſible unto him that can undoubtedly believe. Faith is that thing which aſſureth us of Gods mercy, and whereby we vanquiſh all the fiery darts of the Devil; our victory that overcometh the world; the knife that killeth and mortifieth the fleſh: and finally that which ſetteth us at peace with God, and quieteth our Conſciences always before him, and maketh us merry and joyful under the Croſs, with many more things than I can now expreſs. Pray therefore for Faith, in faith. And for the Lords ſake beware of Popery and Popiſh Idolatry, the Idol of the wicked Maſs, and other Idolatrous ſervice. Make not your Body, which is a member of Chriſt, a member of Antichriſt. Remember that we ſhall receive of God according to that we do in the body, be it good or evil. Therefore glorifie God in your Body which is dearly bought. Betray not the Truth, leſt the Lord deny you. If God be God, follow him. You cannot ſerve two Maſters. I write not this as doubting you, but by the way of admonition. God keep you from all evil.

A note or poeſie written in Mrs. Glaſcocks Book by John Careles.

The effects of Faith.

My Siſter dear, God give you grace,
With ſtedfaſt Faith in Chriſts Name,
His Goſpel ſtill for to embrace,
And live according to the ſame.
To die therefore think it no ſhame,
But hope in God with faithful truſt;
And he will give you praiſe with fame,
When you ſhall riſe out of the duſt.
For which moſt ſweet and joyful day,
To God with Faith your prayer make:
And think on me I do you pray,
The which did write this for your ſake.
And thus to God I you betake,
Who is your Caſtle and ſtrong Rock;
He keep you whether you ſleep or wake,
Farewel dear Mrs. A. Glaſcock.

THe peace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, the eternal comforts of his ſweet Spirit be with you, and ſtrengthen and comfort you my dear and faithful Siſter, Amen.

Another comfortable Letter of John Carele to Mrs. Agnes Glaſcock being in great repentance for going to the Maſs.

Although the perillous daies be come, whereof Chriſt propheſied, that if it were poſſible the very elect ſhould be deceived; yet let the true faithful Chriſtians rejoyce and be glad, knowing that the Lord himſelf is their Keeper, who will not ſuffer one hair of their heads to periſh without his Almighty good will and pleaſure, neither will ſuffer them to be further tempted then he will give them ſtrength to bear; but will in the midſt of their temptation make a way for them to eſcape out; ſo good and gracious a God is he to all his choſen Children. And though ſometimes he do let his elect ſtumble and fall, yet (no doubt) he will raiſe them up again, to the further increaſe of their comfort, and to the ſetting forth of his glory and praiſe. Which thing (my dear and faithful loving Siſter) I truſt ſhall be well verified on you. For I do hear ſay, that by the manifold allurements, inticements, procurements, yea and inforcements that you dear heart have had, your foot hath chanced to ſlip forth of the way, to the great diſcomfort of your ſoul, and the heavineſs of your heart: But my good Siſter be of good chear, for the Lord will not ſo leave you, but he will raiſe you up again, and make you ſtronger than ever you were; ſo that your fall ſhall turn to his glory and your profit. For if you had not by this proved the experience of your own ſtrength, or rather your own weakneſs,

you

you would have ſtood too much in your own conceit, or perchance have gloried in your ſelf, and have deſpiſed and condemned other weak perſons that have committed the like offence. Therefore now you may ſee what the beſt of us all can do, if God leave us to our ſelves. Which thing ought to move you to be diligent to call earneſtly upon God for his grace and the ſtrength of his Holy Spirit (without the which we are not able to ſtand one hour) and to be moſt thankful for the ſame when you have it, and then to be more circumſpect in time to come.

Therefore (dear Siſter) ſeeing that you have done otherwiſe then the Word of God and your own conſcience would allow; yet dear Heart, do you not think that God therefore will caſt you clean away, but know that he hath mercy enough in ſtore for all them that truly repent and believe in him, although the ſins of them were as many in number as the ſands in the Sea, and as great as the ſins of the whole world. It is a greater ſin to miſtruſt the mercy and promiſes of God, then to commit the greateſt offence in the world. Therefore (good Siſter) beware in any wiſe, that you do not once miſtruſt the promiſes of Gods mercy towards you; but know for a very ſurety, that all your ſins be utterly forgiven you for Chriſts ſake, be they never ſo many, ſo grievous, or ſo great.

To truſt to Gods promiſes.

But now (dear Heart) take heed and beware that you do not cloak that ſin, and increaſe the ſame daily, in communicating with the wicked in their Idolatry, and deviliſh doings at their den of thieves. Do not (I ſay) dear Siſter, come at any of the Antichriſtian Service, leſt by little and little you utterly loſe a good Conſcience and at length eſteem it for no offence; as alas, a great number do at this day, to the great peril of their Souls. The Lord be merciful to them, and give them grace to repent in time and turn to the Lord, and then they ſhall be ſure to find mercy at the Lords hand, as doubtleſs you have done, praiſed be his name therefore.

Cuſtom of ſin a perilous matter.

A. S. inticed by her Husband to go to the maſs.

Ah my dear Siſter, you may now ſee the words of Chriſt verified upon your ſelf, that a mans greateſt foes ſhall be they of his own houſhold; for your husband hath gotten you to do that, which all the Tyrants in the world could never have made you to do. Doubtleſs he may be ſorry for it. God give him grace to repent, or elſe, without doubt, it will be laid to his charge one day, when he would not by his will hear it for all the goods in the world. Well, I think my Brother Tyms will write him a Letter ſhortly that ſhall touch his Conſcience, if he have any Conſcience at all.

But now again to you dear Siſter. The thing that is done cannot be undon, and you are not the firſt that hath offended, neither are you ſo good and ſo holy, as hath at a time ſlipt forth of the way. Therefore I would not have you to be ſo much diſcomforted as I hear ſay you be, as though God were not as able to forgive you your offence, as he was to forgive his dear Saints that offended him in times paſt; or as though God were not as merciful now, as ever he was. Whereas in very deed, There is with the Lord (as the Prophet ſaith) mercy and plentiful redemption, and his mercy far ſurmounteth all his works; and he never faileth any that put their whole truſt and confidence in him, how great an offender or how wicked a Treſpaſſer ſoever he be: No, he maketh their falls and backſlidings many times to turn to their profit and commodity, and to the ſetting forth of his glory; as doubtleſs, dear Siſter, yours ſhall do, if you put your whole faith, hope, and truſt onely in his infinite and eternal ſweet mercies.

The raiſing up of a troubled Conſcience after his fall.

God turneth all things to the beſt, to them that be his.

Oh what a ſubtle, crafty, lying Serpent is that Satan our old enemy? that when he ſeeth that he cannot make us to continue in our wickedneſs to do him ſervice, would then bring us into a doubting and miſtruſting of the mercy of God, which is the greateſt offence that can be; yea, infidelity is the root and original of all other ſins. Therefore (my ſweet Siſter) give no place to that cruel Adverſary of mankind, who hath been a liar and a murderer from the beginning, but ſtedfaſtly believe the Lord, who hath ſent you word by me his moſt unworthy ſervant, that all your ſins be pardoned, forgiven, and clean releaſed for Jeſus Chriſts ſake our onely Lord and Saviour. To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, be all honour, glory, praiſe, thanks, power, rule, and dominion for ever and for ever, Amen. Farewel, my dear Siſter, be of good cheer. Believe in the Lord and you ſhall live for ever: The Lord increaſe your faith, Amen, Amen.

Satan when he cannot bring a man to his ſervice, he preſenteth him with diſtruſt of Gods mercy.

Your poor Brother, and daily faithful Orator John Careles, priſoner of the Lord. Pray for me.

Another Letter of John Careles to A. B. a faithful Miniſter of the Lord, containing certain fruitful precepts of Matrimony.

A Letter of Jo. Careles to B. a faithful ſervant of Chriſt.

I Beſeech the ſame everlaſting Lord (my dear and faithful Brother) that bleſſed young Tobias with his Wife Sarah, and brought them together in due time with reverence and fear, preſerve and bleſs you both, and your ſeed after you that they may increaſe the number of the faithful by thouſands and thouſands. And as the Lord of his great mercy and fatherly providence hath been always careful for you, and now hath for your comfort accompliſhed his good work in coupling you with a faithful mate; ſo ſee that you be thankful for his providence towards you, that it may every way in you be an increaſe of love and godlineſs, yea of Chriſtian Joy and gladneſs in theſe ſorrowful days, but yet ſo, that you mourn with the true Mourners of Sion, and be ſorry (yet in meaſure) for the hurt of the ſame. Pray alſo in faith for her proſperity, that the Lord may build up the Walls of Jeruſalem again.

Oh that the Lord would turn Sions Captivity as the Rivers into the South: Then ſhould our hearts be made glad, and our mouths filled with laughter. Then would the Heathen Hypocrites ſay; The Lord hath done much for them. Oh, the Lord hath done great things for us already, whereof let us heartily rejoyce and praiſe his name therefore. For though we now ſow with tears, yet ſhall we be ſure to reap with gladneſs: and as we now go forth weeping, bearing forth good ſeed, ſo ſhall we come again with joy, and bring our ſheaves full of Corn. Yea the death of the Martyrs (which is moſt precious in his ſight) ſhall be the life of the Goſpel, ſpite of the Papiſts Hearts.

Pſal. 14.

The death of the Martyrs is the life of the Goſpel.

Pray for me (dear Heart) that I may be counted worthy to ſow ſome ſeed amongſt the ſweet Saints of the Lord, that I may reap the ſame again, without ceaſing, at the harveſt. It is now ſowing time of the year, men ſay in the Countrey, and I think I ſhall make an end of ſowing before all March be paſt; for I hear ſay that I ſhall prove how my plough will enter into the ſtony ground of the hard hearted Papiſts, within theſe four days. I hope to hold faſt, and not to look back, neither for fear nor flattery, until I have made an end of ſowing, and then will I ſet me down and reſt me, and aſk them all no leave, and look for the lively fruit and increaſe thereof with joy and gladneſs.

A ſowing time in Chriſts Church.

My dear Brother, the time approacheth near (I praiſe God therefore) that I muſt put off this ſinful tabernacle, and go home to my Heavenly Father, where divers of my dear Brethren are already looking and wiſhing for me. I beſeech you therefore that you will help me forward with your faithful prayers, as I know you do, for I do feel the comfort and commodity thereof.

That you have obſerved my ſimple Counſel I am right glad; and I truſt in the Lord God, you ſhall find comfort in the ſame. And that you may ſo do indeed, I have been ſo bold to write theſe few words unto you, becauſe I ſhall ſee you no more in this corruptible life; therefore mark them well. Firſt and above all things you muſt be very circumſpect to keep the band of love, and beware that there never ſpring up the root of bitterneſs between you. If at any time there happen to riſe any cauſe of unkindneſs between you, (as it is unpoſſible always to be free from it) ſee that you weed up the ſame with all lenity, gentleneſs, and patience, and never ſuffer your ſelf, nor your Wife to ſleep in diſpleaſure.

This counſel was that he ſhould marry, notwithſtanding certain lets whereby Satan ſought to hinder his marriage.

The root of bitterneſs to be weeded out with the ſpade of patience.

If you have cauſe to ſpeak ſharply, and ſometimes to reprove, beware that you do not the ſame in the preſence of other, but keep your words until a convenient time (which is the point of a Wiſe Man, ſaith Solomon)

How and when the husband ought to reprove.

and then utter them in the Spirit of meekneſs, and the groaning Spirit of perfect love; which you muſt alſo let ſometimes to cover faults, and wink at them if they be not intolerable. Whatſoever loſs and miſchance ſhall happen unto you, take it patiently, and bear it merrily; and though the ſame ſhould come partly through your wives negligence, yet let it rather be a loving warning to take heed in time to come, then a cauſe of ſorrow for that which is paſt and cannot be holpen. I know by mine own experience, that we are in this life ſubject to many inconveniences, and that of nature we are prone to diſpleaſure, and ready to think unkindneſs for every little trifle, and ſpecially with our beſt friends, yea ſooneſt with our loving wives, which be moſt loth to diſpleaſe us.

Faults ſome time muſt be covered with love.

Not to take unkindneſs for every trifle.

But let us beware of this cankered corruption, and conſider that we ought moſt of all in love to bear with them according to Chriſts example towards his congregation, for whom he gave himſelf to cleanſe it, &c. I had thought to have treated this matter at large, but even now I am intermitted and otherwiſe letted. I doubt not but you know your duty therein a great deal better then I can declare it unto you; and as you know it, ſo will do it: but I love to be bold with you. I intend to write to your Wife very ſhortly, and ſo take my laſt farewell of you for ever in this world. And thus in great haſt I am now conſtrained to make an end. The bleſſing of God be always with you.

Your own for ever, John Careles.
Pray, pray, pray with faith.

Another Letter of John Careles, to Elizabeth, Wife of the ſaid A. B. containing certain godly precepts of Matrimony perteining to her duty.

Another Letter of Jo. Careles to the wife of the party above ſpecified.

THE everlaſting peace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, the continual aid, ſtrength, and comfort of his moſt holy and mighty Spirit, with increaſe of knowledge, faith, and perfect feeling of Gods eternal mercy, be with you my dear and faithful loving Siſter E. B. and with your godly loving Husband and my dear and faithful Brother, to the full performance of that good which he hath ſo graciouſly begun in you, that in all things you may be made rich and bleſſed in him, and your ſeed after you, now and ever, Amen.

As I have been long deſirous to write unto you (my dear Heart in the Lord) not onely being thereto bound of duty, but alſo often provoked of him, to whom I owe my ſelf and all that I am able to do (I mean even that bleſſed of the Lords own Mouth, whom God hath joyned with you in that holy and chriſtian ſtate of Matrimony) even ſo at the laſt I have obtained time and occaſion in ſome part to perform that which I have long purpoſed. And foraſmuch as the Lord of his great mercy and fatherly care and providence over you his dear Child, hath now graciouſly accompliſhed that good work amongſt many others, which I (as a friend of the Bridegroom) have full heartily wiſhed and often praied for; I think it good, yea and my bounden duty, to treat of ſuch things as may be profitable to preſerve mutual love and faithful amity between you, which I know Satan will chiefly labour to diminiſh, if he cannot altogether deſtroy the ſame, leſt by many joyful occaſions you ſhould be provoked continually to praiſe God for his good gift, which that enemy hath by all means ſought to hinder from you.

Satan an enemy to all godly affairs.

As for all other things I know you are ſufficiently inſtructed, and alſo have a moſt learned companion, who is well able further to teach you if need do require: But in this thing I know my experience is more then his. Therefore (my good Siſter) firſt and before all things ſee that you do diligently conſider, that as every good and perfect gift pertaining to Soul and Body, is given from above, and cometh from the Father of light: even ſo to whomſoever the Lord dealeth any of his benefits, of them he doth chiefly require always a thankful heart for the ſame; for elſe he will either take away his good gifts again, or turn the ſame to their great diſcommodity, and in the end to the increaſe of their damnation: ſo deteſtable in his ſight is the ſin of ingratitude. But to ſuch as be thankful for his benefits, he doth not onely to the old ever add new, but alſo maketh the commodity of his former gifts ever more and more to increaſe, until by them they are fully perſwaded and throughly certified of his everlaſting love in Chriſt Jeſus, which is eternal life it ſelf: ſo much doth he of his great mercy delight in a thankful heart.

The ſign of ingratitude.

Therefore I do yet once again earneſtly require you, that above all things you be thankful to God for his benefits; not onely for your election, creation, redemption, and preſervation; but alſo for his other temporal gifts, wherewith he hath indued you: amongſt the which chief and moſt excellent is (as teſtifieth the Holy Ghoſt) your good, godly, and faithful loving Husband. For (as the wiſe man ſaith) Goods and Poſſeſſions may come to a man by the death of his friends, but a good Wife is the gift of God, which the Lord will give for a good portion to ſuch as fear him.

Anno 1556.

God loveth a thankful heart.

A good wife is the gift of God.

And the like is of a good Husband, as the Lord hath now given you, praiſed be his name therefore. He hath not given you, an Ignorant, Froward, Churliſh, Brawling, Waſtful, Rioting, Drunken Husband, wherewith he hath plagued many other (as he might alſo have done you) but he hath given you a moſt godly, learned, gentle, loving, quiet, patient, thrifty, diligent, and ſober husband, by whom he will nouriſh, cheriſh, keep, and defend you, inſtruct and teach you, yea care and provide for you and your Children (the which he will alſo by him give you) ſuch things as be neceſſary for you. He hath not dealt ſo with every Body; and yet he hath done this much more for you my dear Siſter, and will thereto increaſe joy and love between you. For as he delighteth in the love and godly agreement of Man and Wife together; ſo is it he onely that maketh them and all the whole houſhold to be of one mind. Unto the which his gracious work he requireth your diligence, and will uſe you as his inſtrument and mean, the more effectuouſly to accompliſh the ſame. And therefore I now require you to obſerve this my ſimple counſel, the which I have here written as a teſtimonial of my good will towards you, becauſe I think in this life I ſhall never more ſee you.

God delighteth in the agreement between man & wife.

Now as I have ſhewed you how you ſhould be thankful unto God for his good gifts, ſo I exhort you, and (as much as in me lieth) charge you to be evermore thankful unto your dear loving husband, who hath given himſelf unto you; which is a more precious jewel in the Church of God, then perchance you are yet aware of. Think your ſelf unworthy to be matched with ſuch a inſtrument of God; and alſo reverence evermore the gifts of God in him, and ſeek with true obedience and love to ſerve him, in recompence of his true and painful heart towards you. Be loath in any wiſe to offend him, yea rather be careful and diligent to pleaſe him, that his Soul may bleſs you. If at any time you ſhall chance to anger him, or to do or ſpeak any thing that ſhall grieve him, ſee that you never reſt until you have pacified him and made him merry again.

The duty of wives toward their husbands.

If at any time he ſhall chance to blame you without a cauſe, or for that you cannot do therewith (which thing hapneth ſometimes to the beſt man living) ſee that you bear it patiently, and give him no uncomely or unkind word for it; but evermore look upon him with a loving and cheerful countenance, and rather take the fault upon you, then ſeem to be diſpleaſed.

Be always merry and cheerful in his company, but not with too much lightneſs. Beware in any wiſe of ſwelling, powting, or lowring, for that is a token of a cruel and unloving heart; except it be in reſpect of ſin, or in the time of ſickneſs.

A cheerful countenance.

Be not ſorrowful for any adverſity that God ſendeth; but beware that nothing be ſpilt or go to waſt through your negligence. In any wiſe ſee that you be quick and cleanly about his meat and drink, and prepare him the ſame according to his diet in due ſeaſon. Go cleanly and well favouredly in your apparel, but beware of pride in any wiſe.

Temerance in apparel.

Finally, in word and deed ſhew your ſelf wiſe, humble, merry, and loving towards him, and alſo towards ſuch as he doth love, and then ſhall you lead a bleſſed life. I could ſpeak of many things, the which I have learned and proved true by experience; but I know that you will do in all things much better then I can teach you, becauſe you have that anointing that teacheth you all things, things, who hath alſo given you an heart to obey, and ſerve him. Yet I truſt you will not be offended for this, which I have written, but rather accept my good will towards you, whom I love in the Lord, as well as I do my Daughter Judith.

Anno 1556.

Thus as mine own Soul I commend you both to God, deſiring him to bleſs you with all manner of ſpiritual bleſſings in heavenly things, and alſo with the dew of Heaven, and Fatneſs of the Earth, that in all things you may be made rich in Jeſus Chriſt our Lord and onely Saviour. The Lord increaſe and bleſs the fruit of your Bodies, that your Children may ſtand round about your table, thick, freſh, and luſty, like the Olive Branches. God give you both a long life, that you may ſee and bleſs your Childrens Children, unto the third and fourth Generation, and teach them the true fear and love of God, and that faith for the which they ſhall be accepted in his ſight.

Note that both theſe departed in quiet peace, the one 1565. the other 1568.

God let you ſee the proſperity of Sion, for whoſe lying in the duſt let your Hearts mourn. The Lord make perfect your love together in him, and always increaſe the ſame, and bring you both in peace to your graves, at a good age. And now I bid you both moſt heartily Farewel; and I think I ſhall now take my leave of you for ever in this life. I beſeech you both to aid me with your continual prayers, (as I will not forget you in mine) that I may have a joyful Victory through Jeſus Chriſt: To whoſe moſt merciful defence I do moſt heartily for ever commend you to be kept unblameable until his coming. The which I beſeech him to haſten for his mercies ſake.

Your own unfained, John Careles, priſoner of the Lord.

Here endeth the Letters of John Careles.

The Hiſtory and Martyrdom of a learned and vertuous young Man, called Julius Palmer, ſomtime Fellow of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, with two other Martyrs to wit, John Gwin, and Thomas Askin, burned together in Newbery, at a place there called the Sand pits.

3 Martyrs ſuffering at Newbery, Julius Palmer John Gwin, Tho. Askin, Martyrs. July 16.

THe ſame Month of July, in which Careles, as before is declared, was releaſed out of priſon by death, in ſhort time after, about the ſixteenth day of the ſame Month of July, ſuffered theſe three godly and conſtant Martyrs above mentioned, at Newbery, in which number was Julius Palmer, ſometime ſtudent and Fellow of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, and afterwards School-maſter in the Town of Reding. Concerning whoſe ſtory and Martyrdom here followeth although not ſo much as he deſerveth to have ſaid, yet ſo much as ſufficiently may ſet forth the great working of God in this young man.

Julius Palmer.

The ſtory of Palmer.

AS all Gods works are wondrous, in calling of all ſorts of men to confirm his truth, and to bear witneſs unto his aſſured and infallible word, which the Adverſaries have depraved and corrupted with their falſe gloſſes, to eſtabliſh the fleſhly Kingdom of Antichriſt, and to purchaſe ſecurity in the World, which they ſeek to keep in there poſſeſſion by all means poſſible, rather curſing with the Thunderbolt of Excommunication, burning, hanging, drowning, racking, ſcourging, and perſecuting by ſecret practice, and open violence the ſimple ſheep of our Saviour Chriſt, then that their falſe forged packing ſhould be detected, their eſtimation appaired, their kitchen coled, their rents, revenues, goods, lands and poſſeſſions abated: I ſay, as Gods Works be wonderful, which chuſeth ſome of all ſorts to confeſs his Goſpel; ſo there is no one example, in the whole godly fellowſhip of Martyrs, more to be marked, yea more to be wondred at, then this, that one, which all King Edwards days was a Papiſt within the Univerſity of Oxford, and ſo obſtinate, as that he did utterly abhor all godly prayer, and ſincere preaching, and almoſt of all them, with whom he lived, was therefore likewiſe abhorred, and (as I may ſay) pointed at with the finger, did yet after in Queen Maries time ſuffer moſt cruel death, at the Papiſts hands at Newbery in Barkſhire, for the moſt rendy and zealous profeſſion of the bleſſed truth.

Julius Palmer born in Coventry.

His Name was Julius Palmer, born in Coventry, where alſo his parents dwelt. His Father had ſometime been Maior of the City, and occupied Merchandiſe, albeit he was an Upholſter by his myſtery. How he was brought up in his young and tender years, from his firſt entring, we know not, but as we have learned, he was ſometime ſcholar to Mr. Harley, which taught the free Scholler of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford; by whoſe diligence, and the goodneſs of his own capacity, he became a toward young ſcholler in proſe and verſe. For he had a very prompt and ready memory, a wit ſharp and pregnant. He ſpake Latin with great facility of utterance, and wanted not competent knowledge in the Greek tongue; inſomuch that divers times he ſupplied the Room of the Greek Reader in his houſe. He was a ſubtle diſputer, both in the publik ſchools, and alſo at home. He uſed to ſay, that he was never ſo pleaſantly occupied, as when he came to the hard debating of profound queſtions in Philoſophy; ſo that he hath oftentimes watched and ſpent the whole night in the diſcuſſing and ſearching out the truth of deep and diffuſe queſtions, as De principiis, de infinito, de vacuo, de tempore, de caſu, & fortuna, &c. And this uſed he to do ſundry times, with divers of his equals.

Julius Palmer ſcholar to Mr. Harley ſchoolmaſter of Magdalen Colledge.

Julius Palmer addicted to philoſophy.

Julius Palmer begin neth to apply Divinity.

In familiar talk he greatly delighted, for the exerciſe of his learning, to defend the contrary to that which was affirmed, yet with modeſty, and without all oſtentation. For he greatly abhorred all overthwart cavelling, all frivolous talk, and unſavory brabling. He was not captious, but would reaſon ſo ſoberly, and with ſuch probability, that even his Adverſaries would no leſs marvel at the dexterity of his invention, then at his comely and decent behaviour in proſecuting the ſame.

And although he applied Divinity very lately, it appeareth that he recompenced the ſmal time of his ſtudy with the greatneſs of his diligence beſtowed in the ſame, and his late coming to the truth, with his earneſt and zealous proceeding therein. For by the ſecret inſpiration of Gods Holy Spirit, inwardly working in his heart, he gave an apparent ſignification in his young years, that if God had ſpared his life to age, he would have grown to ſuch maturity and ripeneſs of judgment, as whereby he ſhould have been an ornament to Chriſts Church, and an honour to his Countrey.

The civil behaviour of Julius Palmer.

And ſome what to ſpeak of his Civil behaviour, he was of manners courteous without curioſity, of countenance cheerful, without high looks, of ſpeech pleaſant, without affectation, he was affable and lowly as any Child, and yet quick ſpirited, and vehement in reaſoning. He practiſed no deceit toward any man, for he was of ſuch ſimplicity, that he was apter to be deceived, then to deceive, and he was ſo great a contemner of all reproaches and injuries, that he would ſay, None were to be counted valiant, but ſuch as could deſpiſe injury.

Palmers proverb.

In private ſtudy he was ſo infatigable, that he aroſe ordinarily every morning at four of the clock, and went not lightly to bed before ten at night. Inſomuch that as he grew in years and underſtanding; ſo he came to be a Bacherlor of Art, and at length, for the hope appearing in him, to the preferment of a fellowſhip in Magdalen Colledge, where alſo he was admitted to the office of a Reader in Logick, Anno 1550. Now if he had at the firſt favoured ſincere Religion, ſo much as he followed his book, then had we had the leſs matter to note in him. But indeed he was ſo much (as is aforeſaid) addicted to the Romiſh faith, that his company and converſation in the ſame houſe was altogether with ſuch, as were utter enemies to the Goſpel of Chriſt. If he came to common prayer at any time, it was by violence and compulſion, for otherwiſe he came not. Sermons would he hear none himſelf, nor yet ſuffer his ſcholars to reſort unto them by his good will: for he was fully perſwaded, that they might be better occupied at home. The Preachers themſelves he did both diſdain and deſpiſe, and all ſuch as were ſetters forth of ſound doctrine beſide. For the which contumacy and ſtubbornneſs, he was ſo oft called before the Officers of the Colledge, and puniſhed ſometimes by the purſe, ſometime by the lack of his commons, and otherwhile by certain tasks, and exerciſes of learning, injoyned unto him, that divers ſuppoſed him to have endeavoured, of ſet purpoſe, continually to ſeek occaſion, whereby he might be counted a ſufferer for the fantaſied Religion of the Romiſh Church.

Libels ſet up in Oxford againſt D. Haddon Preſident.

In the end, not long before the death of King Edward that godly Prince, certain ſlanderous Libels, and railing Verſes, were privily fixed to the walls and doors in ſundry places of the Colledge againſt the Preſident, which was then Dr. Haddon, whereby was miniſtred further matter of trouble to Palmer. For whereas it was well known that he, and ſome of his Companions, had a very little while before ſpoken contumelious words againſt the Preſident; it could not be now avoided, but that thereby aroſe a vehement ſurmiſe and ſuſpicion, that he conſpiring with others, had contrived, made and ſcattered abroad the ſaid ſlanderous Writings. Great inquiſition was made in the Colledge, to ſearch out the Author of ſo malicious and deſpiteful a deed, but nothing could be found and proved againſt Palmer, or any of his Companions. Now Palmer, being hereupon examined by the Officers, did not only with ſtout courage deny the fact to have been his, but alſo ſpake further many reproachful words touching the ſaid Officers, and ſent the ſame to them in writing, whereby he was by them adjudged to be an unworthy Member of that Society. And ſo for this, and other Popiſh pranks (continuing obſtinate ſtill) he was expelled the Houſe.

Julius Palmer expelled the Colledge for Popery.

Jul. Palmer driven to teach Children.

After he was thus diſpatched of his Room, he was fain for his own maintenance to apply himſelf to be a teacher of Children in the houſe of Sir Francis Knolles, in the which Trade he continued until the coming in of Queen Mary. And when her Viſitors were ſent to Magdalen Colledge, under a title of Reformation (whereas all things were better afore) I mean to diſplace divers of the Fellows that were learned, and to put right Catholicks (as they called them) in their rooms; then came this Julius Palmer, waiting to be reſtored to his Living again, of which he had been deprived before, thinking by good right to be reſtored of them, whoſe Faith and Religion (as he ſaid) he did to the uttermoſt of his power defend and maintain. And indeed at length he obtained the ſame. Then after he was reſtored again to his Houſe in Queen Maries reign, God dealt ſo mercifully with him, that in the end he became of an obſtinate Papiſt, an earneſt and zealous Goſpeller.

Palmer reſtored again to his Colledge.

Concerning whoſe converſion to the Truth, for the more credit to be given to the ſame, we have here put down a Letter written by one Mr. Bullingham, Fellow in ſome part of King Edwards time with the ſaid Palmer, then alſo of the ſame faction of Religion with him, and toward the latter end of the ſaid Kings Reign, a voluntary Exile in France for Papiſtry. In Q. Maries days, likewiſe a Chaplain unto Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter. And after the coming in of Queen Elizabeth ſuch an one, as for his obſtinacy was quite and clean diſpatched from all his Livings by her Majeſties Commiſſioners. And yet now (God be praiſed therefore) a moſt conſtant Profeſſor, and earneſt teacher of the Word of God. This Man at the requeſt of a certain Friend of his in London, being deſirous to know the certain truth thereof, wrote unto him concerning this Julius. The Copy of which Letter we thought good here to inſert, for that the parties being alive can teſtifie the ſame to be true and certain, if any man ſhall doubt thereof.

The Letter of Mr. Bullingham is this.

MAſter Bullingham, I wiſh you and all yours continual health in the Lord. Hitherto have I not written any thing unto you concerning Julius Palmer, that conſtant witneſs of Gods Truth, for that his doings and ſayings known unto me, were worn out of my remembrance; and to write an untruth, it were rather to deface and blemiſh, than to adorn and beautifie him. After his converſion to the moſt holy Goſpel, I never ſaw his face. Wherefore the leſs have I to certifie you of. But ſo much as ſeemeth to me to ſerve moſt unto the purpoſe, here I commend unto you; and in witneſs that my ſayings are true, I ſubſcribe my name, willing, praying, and beſeeching you to publiſh the ſame to the whole world, &c. At what time I Bullingham intended to forſake England, and to flie into France for the wicked Popes ſake, (which came to paſs indeed: for in Roan I was for a time) this Julius Palmer and Richard Duck, brought me outwards in my journey till we came to London: where on a day Julius Palmer and I walked to St. James the Queens Palace; and as we leaned at the great Gate of that place, Palmer ſpake thus unto me. Bullingham, you know in what miſery and calamities we are fallen for the Pope and his Religion. We are young men, abhorred of all men now preſently, and like to be abhorred more and more. Let us conſider what hangeth over our heads. You are departing into a ſtrange Country, both friendleſs and moneleſs, where I fear me you ſhall taſt of ſowrer ſawces then hitherto you have done. And as for me, I am at my wits end. The face of Hell it ſelf is as amiable unto me, as the ſight of Magdalen Colledge; For there I am hated as a venemous Toad. Would God I were raked under the Earth. And as touching our Religion, even our Conſcience bear witneſs that we taſt not ſuch an inward ſweetneſs in the profeſſion thereof, as we underſtand the Goſpellers to taſt in their Religion: Yea, to ſay the truth, we maintain we wot not what, rather of will than of knowledge. But what then? Rather than I will yield unto them, I will beg my Bread. So Palmer bequeathed himſelf to the wide world, and I paſſed over into Normandy. At my return into England again, my chance was to meet Palmer in Pauls, where a Rood was ſet up. (This our meeting was in the beginning of Queen Maries reign, and our miſerable departing not long before the end of King Edwards days.) Then after our greeting, thus ſaid Palmer. Bullingham, is this our god, for whom we have ſmarted? No Palmer, quoth I, it is an Image of him. An Image, quoth he? I tell thee plainly Bullingham, John Calvin (whoſe Inſtitutions I have peruſed ſince our departure) telleth me plainly by Gods Word that it is an Idol, and that the Pope is Antichriſt, and his Clergy the filthy ſink-hole of Hell, and now I believe it. For I feel it ſenſibly. Oh that God had revealed theſe matters unto me in times paſt. I would have bequeathed this Romiſh Religion or rather irreligion to the Devil of Hell from whence it came. Believe them not Bullingham. I will rather have theſe knees pared of, then I will kneel to yonder Jacknapes (meaning the Rood.) God help me, I am born to trouble and adverſity in this World. Well Palmer, ſaid I, is the wind in that Corner with you? I warrant you it will blow you to little eaſe at the end. I will never have to do with you again. So I left Palmer walking in Pauls, who thorow the element of fire is exalted above the elements, where eternal reſt is prepared for perſecuted Martyrs. Thus much is true, and let it be known that I Bullingham affirm it to be true. More I have not to ſay. In theſe words and deeds is appeareth that God had elected him. From Bridgewater, April 26. Anno 1562.

Anno 1556.

Behold the obſtinacy of the Papiſts, which knowing the Truth will not yield.

Behold his earneſtneſs now he is turned to the Truth.

By me John Bullingham.

When he was by the Viſitors reſtored to his Colledge, although he began ſomething to ſavour and taſt of Gods Truth, by conference and company of certain godly and zealous men abroad, in time of his expulſion, eſpecially at the houſe of Sir Francis Knolles: yet was he not throughly perſwaded, but in moſt points continued for a while either blind, or elſe doubtful. Neither could he chuſe, but utter himſelf in private reaſoning from time to time, both in what points he was fully reſolved, and alſo of what points he doubted. For ſuch was his nature alway, both in Papiſtry and in the Goſpel, utterly to detect all diſſimulation, inſomuch that by the means of his plainneſs, and for that he could not flatter, he ſuffered much wo, both in King Edwards, and alſo in Queen Maries time. Whereas he might at the firſt have lived in great quietneſs, if he could have diſſembled, and both done and ſpoken againſt his Conſcience, as many ſtirring Papiſts then did. And likewiſe he might have eſcaped burning in Queen Maries time, if he would either have ſpoken, or kept ſilence againſt his Conſcience, as many weak Goſpellers did. But Palmer could in no wiſe diſſemble.

The converſion of Palmer after his reſtoring again into the Colledge.

Plain Palmer could never diſſemble with his Conſcience.

Now

Anno 1556.

The firſt occaſion of Julius Palmers converſion was by the conſtant death of the Martyrs.

Now wihin ſhort ſpace, God ſo wrought in his heart, that he became very inquiſitive, and careful to hear and underſtand, how the Martyrs were apprehended, what Articles they died for, how they were uſed, and after what ſort they took their death. Inſomuch that he ſpared not at his own charges to ſend over one of his ſcholars, in the Company of a Bachelor of that houſe, to Gloceſter, to ſee and underſtand the whole order of Biſhop Hoopers death, and to bring him true report thereof. Which thing ſome think he the rather did, becauſe he was wont in King Edwards time to ſay; that none of them all would ſtand to death for their Religion. Thus he learned with what great, extreme and horrible cruelty the Martyrs of God were tried, and how valiantly they overcame all kind of torments to the end. Whereof he himſelf alſo did ſee more experience afterward, at the examination and death of thoſe holy confeſſors and Martyrs which were burned at Oxford before his eyes; inſomuch that the firſt hope, which the godly conceived of him, was at his return from the burning of Bp. Ridley, and Biſhop Latimer. At what time, in the hearing of divers of his friends, he brake out into theſe words and ſuch like; Oh raging cruelty! Oh tyranny tragical, and more then barbarous!

Note how the Blood of Martyrs worketh.

From that day forward he ſtudiouſly ſought to underſtand the truth, and therefore with all ſpeed he borrowed Peter Martyrs Commentaries upon the firſt to the Corinths, of one of Magdalens yet alive, and other good books of other men. And ſo through hearty prayer and diligent ſearch and conference of the Scriptures, at length he believed and imbraced the truth with great joy; and ſo profited in the ſame, that daily more and more, he declared it both in word and deed: In ſuch ſort, as he never hated the truth more ſtubbornly before, than afterward he willingly imbraced the ſame, when it pleaſed God to open his eyes, and to reveal unto him the light of his word. And now again when he ſhould come to Church, in thoſe dayes of Popery, there to be occupied among the reſt, in ſinging of Reſponds, reading of legends, and ſuch like ſtuff allotted unto him, he had as much pleaſure, he ſaid, to be at them, as a Bear to be baited, and worried with dogs. When he came, it was (as it appeared) more to avoid diſpleaſure and danger, then for any good will, and ready affection.

Palmer fervent in the Goſpels cauſe.

Superſtitious joyes.

At length through Gods grace, he grew up to ſuch maturity and ripeneſs in the truth, that he ſpared not to declare certain ſparks thereof in his outward behaviour and doings. For when he ſhould keep his bowing meaſures at * Confiteor, (as the cuſtom there was) in turning himſelf to and fro, ſometime Eaſtward, ſometime Weſtward and afterward knock his breſt at the elevation time, againſt theſe Idolatrous Adorations his heart did ſo vehemently riſe, that ſometime he would abſent himſelf from them, and ſometime being there, he would even at the facring time (as they termed it) get him out of the Church to avoid thoſe ungodly geſtures, and Idolatrous Adoration. To be ſhort, perceiving after a while, that he was greatly ſuſpected and abhorred of the Preſident then being, which was Mr. Cole, and of divers others which before were his friends, and therewithal feeling great conflict and Torment of Conſcience daily to grow, with his Converſation with Idolaters; ſeeing alſo that his new life and old living might not well nor quietly ſtand together, he addreſſed himſelf to depart the houſe. For he thought it not beſt to abide the danger of expulſion, as he did at the firſt; ſeeing the weather was now waxed warmer. And being demanded at that time of a ſpecial friend (who would gladly have perſwaded him to ſtay there longer) whither he would go, or how he would live, he made this anſwer, Domini eſt terra, & plenitudo ejus, i. The earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs thereof. Let the Lord Work, I will commit my ſelf to God, and the wide World.

* By theſe meaſures he meaneth a certain ceremony of the Colledge, which was this, That in the Confiteor time at evenſong, the whole company of the quire (which was there to the number of 8) ſtanding up, and turning their faces firſt to the high Altar, ſhould then turn them to the Preſident, & from the Preſident to the high Altar again, and ſo after turning and returning 3. times together, the Preſident ſhould ſay, Miſereatur, which done every man to place himſelf again in his ſtall.

Here I think it expedient, before I write of the painful ſurges that he ſuffered after he came abroad into the perillous gulphs, and deep ſea of this wretched wide world, firſt, to rehearſe one or two examples of his outward behaviour, at ſuch times as he had recourſe to the Colledge, after his laſt departure, whereby the Reader may yet better underſtand of his ſimplicity and plainneſs, and how far wide he was from all cloked diſſimulation in Gods cauſe, which certain godleſs perſons have ſought maliciouſly to charge him withall. Being at Oxford a certain time in Magdalen Colledge, and having knowledge that the Spaniſh Frier John (who ſucceeded D. Peter Martyr, in the office of the Divinity Lecture) would preach there that preſent Sunday, he would not at the firſt grant to be preſent at it. At length a friend of his, a Fellow of that houſe, perſwaded ſo much with him, that he was content to accompany his ſaid friend to the Church. But ſuddenly as the Frier vehemently inveyed againſt Gods truth, in defending certain Popiſh Hereſies, Palmer, having many eyes bent and directed towards him, departed from amongſt the midſt of the auditory, and was found in his friends chamber weeping bitterly. Afterward being demanded why he ſlipt away upon ſuch a ſudden, Oh ſaid he, if I had not openly departed, I ſhould have openly ſtopped mine ears. For the Friers Blaſphemous talk, in diſproving, or rather depraving the verity, made mine ears not to glow, but my heart worſe to ſmart, then if mine ears had been cut from my head.

Dr. John the Spaniſh Frier ſucceeded Dr. Peter Martyr in the Divinity Lecture.

Palmer could not abide the blaſphemous ſermon of Frier John.

It chanced another time, that the ſame friend of his, called Mr. Shipper, being then Burſar of the houſe, bade him to dinner in his chamber. Palmer not knowing what gheſts were alſo thither invited and bidden, hapned there (contrary to his expectation) to meet with the foreſaid Frier, with whom were preſent Dr. Smith, Dr. Treſham, and divers other Papiſts, whoſe company Palmer could not well bear: and therefore whiſpering his friend in the ear, he ſaid he would be gon, for that was no place for him. I will, ſaith he, to the Burſars table in the great Hall. The Burſar underſtanding his minde, deſired him of all friendſhip not ſo to depart, alledging that it were the next way to bewray himſelf, and as it were of purpoſe to caſt himſelf into the Briers, with many other perſwaſions, as the ſhortneſs of time would permit. In the end he condeſcended to his requeſt and tarried. Now as he came to the fire ſide, the Frier ſaluted him chearfully in Latine, for he could not ſpeak Engliſh. Palmer with an amiable countenance reſaluted him gently: But when the Frier offered him his hand, he caſting his eye aſide, as though he had not ſeen it, found matter of talk to another ſtanding by, and ſo avoided it; which thing was well marked of ſome, not without great grudge of ſtomach.

Palmer refuſeth to take Frier John by the hands.

After they were ſet and had well eaten, the Frier with a pleaſant look offering him the cup, ſaid, Propino tibi, juvenis erudite, i. I drink to you, learned young man. Palmer at that word bluſhing as red as ſcarlet, anſwered, Non agnoſco nomen, domine, i. I knowledge no ſuch name O ſir. And therewith taking the cup at his hand, he ſet it down by him, as though he would have pledged him anon after, but in the end it was alſo well marked, that he did it not. When dinner was done, being ſharply rebuked of the ſaid Burſar his friend, for his ſo unwiſe, uncivil and unſeemly behaviour (as he termed it) he made anſwer for himſelf, and ſaid, Oleum eorum non demulcet, ſed frangit caput meum, i. The oyl of theſe men doth not ſupple, but breaketh my head.

Julius Palmer refuſeth to drink with Frier John.

Another time, which was alſo the laſt time of his being at Oxford, not long before his death, one Barwick an old acquantance of his, being ſometime Clerk of Magdalen, and then Fellow of Trinity Colledge, a ranck Papiſt, began to reaſon with him in his friends chamber aforeſaid, and perceiving him to be zealous and earneſt in the defence of the verity, he ſaid unto him in the hearing of Mr. Thomas Parry, and others there preſent: Well Palmer, well, now thou art ſtout, and hardy in thine opinion, but if thou wert once brought to the ſtake, I believe thou wouldſt tell me another tale. I adviſe thee beware of the fire, it is a ſhrewd matter to burn. Truly, ſaid Palmer, I have been in danger of burning once or twice, and hitherto (I thank God) I have eſcaped it. But I judge verily, it will be my end at the laſt, welcome be it, by the Grace of God. Indeed it is a hard matter for them to burn, that have the mind and Soul linked to the Body, as a thiefs foot is tied in a pair of fetters: but if a man be once able, through the help of Gods Spirit, to ſeparate and divide the Soul from the Body, for him it is no more Maſtery to burn, then for me to eat this peece of bread.

Barwicks words to Palmer.

Palmers godly anſwer to Barwick.

Thus much by the way concerning his plainneſs, without diſſimulation, & how he feared not openly to ſhew himſelf more grieved in heart to hear the Word of God blaſphemed, than to ſuffer any worldly pains. Now let us proceed in our ſtory, and faithfully declare both the occaſion and manner of his death.

Anno 1556.

Ju. Palmer placed by patent to be School-maſter at Reading.

Within ſhort ſpace after he had yielded up his Fellowſhip in Oxford, he was through Gods providence (who never faileth them that firſt ſeek his glory) placed School-maſter by Patent in the Grammar-School of Reading, where he was well accepted of all thoſe that feared God, and ſavoured his Word, as well for his good learning and knowledge, as alſo for his earneſt zeal, and profeſſion of the Truth. But Satan the enemy of all godly attempts, envying his good proceedings and proſperous ſucceſs in the ſame, would not ſuffer him there long to be quiet. Wherefore he ſtirred up againſt him certain double faced hypocrites, which by diſſimulation and crafty inſinuation had crept in, to underſtand his ſecrets, under pretence of a zeal to the Goſpel. Which men he (ſuſpecting no deceit) right joyfully imbraced, making them privy of all his doings. For as he himſelf was then fervently inflamed with the love of heavenly Doctrine; ſo had he an incredible deſire by all means poſſible to allure and incourage others to the profeſſion of the ſame.

Palmer circumvented by falſe Judaſſes.

Palmers ſtudy ſearched for Books.

Theſe faithful and truſty Brethren, ſo ſoon as they had found good opportunity, ſpared not in his abſence to rifle his ſtudy of certain godly Books and Writings; amongſt the which was his replication to Morewines Verſes, touching Wincheſters Epitaph, and other Arguments both in Latine and Engliſh, written by him againſt the Popiſh proceedings, and ſpecially againſt their unnatural and brutiſh tyranny, executed toward the Martyrs of God. When they had thus done, they were not aſhamed to threaten him that they would exhibit the ſame to the Council, unleſs he would without delay depart out of their Coaſts, and give over the School to a Friend of theirs. The Truth of this ſtory appeareth in part by a Letter written, with his own hand, out of Priſon eight days before he was burned; which becauſe it is of certain credit, and came to our hands, therefore we are the bolder to avouch it for a Truth.

J. Palmer forced to depart the Town of Reading.

Thus then was this ſilly young man, for the ſafeguard of his life, forced to depart upon the ſudden from Reading, leaving behind him in the hands of his enemies his ſtuff, and one quaters ſtipend, and ſo he took his journey toward Enſham, where his Mother then dwelt, hoping to obtain at her hands certain Legacies due to him by his Fathers laſt Will, which he ſhould have received certain years before; and taking his journey by Oxford he requeſted certain of his Friends to accompany him thither. His Mother underſtanding his ſtate and errand by Maſter Shipper and his Brother (whom he had ſent before to intreat for him) as ſoon as ſhe beheld him on his knees, asking her bleſſing as he had been accuſtomed to do: thou ſhalt, ſaid ſhe, have Chriſts curſe and mine whereſoever thou go. He pauſing a little, as one amazed at ſo heavy a greeting, at length ſaid, Oh Mother, your own curſe you may give me, which God knoweth I never deſerved, but Gods curſe you cannot give me, for he hath already bleſſed me. Nay, ſaith ſhe, thou wenteſt from Gods bleſſing into the warm Sun, when thou was baniſhed for an Heretick out of that worſhipful Houſe in Oxford, and now for the like knavery, art driven out of Reading too. Alas Mother, ſaith he, you have been miſ-informed. I was not expelled nor driven away, but freely reſigned of mine own accord. And Heretick I am none, for I ſtand not ſtubbornly againſt any true Doctrine, but defend it to my power. And you may be ſure, they uſe not to expel nor baniſh, but to burn Hereticks (as they term them.) Well quoth ſhe, I am ſure thou doſt not believe as thy Father and I, and all our Fore-fathers have done; but as we were taught by the new Law in King Edwards days which is damnable Hereſie.

Unnatural words of a Mother may give their own curſe, but Gods curſe they cannot give, much leſs can the Pope.

Indeed I confeſs, ſaid, he, that I believe that Doctrine which was taught in King Edwards time, which is not Hereſie but Truth, neither is it new, but as old as Chriſt and his Apoſtles. If thou be at that point, ſaith ſhe, I require thee to depart from my houſe, and out of my ſight, and never take me more for thy Mother hereafter. As for mony and goods I have none of thine, thy Father bequeathed nought for Hereticks. Fagots I have to burn thee, more thou getteſt not at my hands. Mother, ſaith he, whereas you have curſed me. I again pray God to bleſs you, and proſper you all your life long, and with like ſoft talk, ſweet words and abundance of tears trickling down his cheeks, he departed from her, wherewith he ſo mollified her hard heart, that ſhe hurled an old Angel after, him and ſaid, take that to keep thee a true man.

The Father ſhall be divided againſt the Son, the Mother againſt, &c. Luke 12.

Palmer driven from his Mother.

Thus poor Palmer being deſtitute of worldy friendſhip, and cruelly repelled of her, whom he took to have been his ſureſt friend, wiſt not which way to turn his face. Soon after, when he had bethought himſelf, it came to his mind to return ſecretly to Magdalen Colledge, upon the aſſured truſt and affiance, that he had a privy Friend or two in that houſe. At what time, by the ſute of one Alane Cope, then Fellow of the Houſe, he obtained Letters Commendatory, from Maſter Cole Preſident there, for his preferment to a School in Glouceſterſhire. So he getteth him away, committed by his Friends to Gods divine protection, of whom ſome accompained him as far as Enſam Ferry, and ſome to Burford.

Alane Cope an helper and ſupporter of Julius Palmer.

Afterward as he went alone, muſing and pondering of matters, it came in his head (as he writeth in an Epiſtle to one of his Friends) to leave his appointed journey, and to return cloſely to Reading, truſting there by the help of Friends to receive his quarters ſtipend, and convey his ſtuff to the cuſtody of ſome truſty Body. To Reading he cometh, and taketh up his lodging at the Cardinals Hat, deſiring his Hoſteſs inſtantly to aſſign him a cloſe Chamber, where he might be alone from all reſort of company. He came not ſo cloſely, but that this viperous generation had knowledge thereof. Wherefore without delay they laid their heads together, and conſulted what way they might moſt ſafely proceed againſt him, to bring their old cankered malice to paſs. And ſoon it was concluded, that one Mr. Hampton (which then bare too faces in one hood, and under the colour of a Brother played the part of a diſſembling hypocrite) ſhould reſort to him under the pretence of friendſhip, to feel and fiſh out the cauſe of his repair to Reading.

Hampton of Reading, a diſſembling hypocrite, and a falſe witneſs.

Palmer as he was a ſimple man, and without all wrinkles of cloked colluſion, opened to him his whole intent. But Hampton earneſtly perſwaded him to the contrary, declaring what danger might enſue if this were attempted. Againſt his counſel Palmer replied very much, and as they waxed hot in talk, Hampton flang away in a fury, and ſaid; as he had fiſhed, ſo ſhould he fowl for him. Palmer not yet ſuſpecting ſuch pretenſed and deviſed miſchief, as by this crooked and peſtiferous generation was now in brewing againſt him, called for his Supper, and went quietly to bed: But quietly he could not long reſt there. For within ſhort ſpace after, the Officers and their retinue came ruſhing in with Lanterns and Bills, requiring him in the King and Queens name to make ready himſelf and quietly to depart with them. So this ſilly young man perceiving that he was thus Judaſly betrayed (without opening his lips) was lead away as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and was committed to ward, whom the Keeper as a ravening Wolf of greedy of his prey, brought down into a vile, ſtinking, and blind dungeon, prepared for thieves and murderers, and there he left him for a time, hanging by the hands and feet in a pair of ſtocks, ſo high, that well-near no part of his Body touched the ground.

Palmer betrayed and apprehended.

In this Cave or Dungeon he remained about ten days under the tyranny of this unmerciful Keeper.

Palmer miſerably uſed in Priſon.

Here by the way, gentle Reader, I have by a little digreſſion to give thee to underſtand, concerning one Thomas Thackham, for that the ſaid Thomas Thackham in the ſtory of this Julius Palmer, was noted and named in our former Book, to be a doer and a worker againſt the ſaid bleſſed Martyr: he therefore being not a little grieved, made his reply again in writing, for purgation and defence of himſelf againſt the falſe information of his ſlanderer. Albeit for his confutation in writing I paſs not much upon, either what he hath written or can write. Only the thing that moveth me moſt is this; For that the ſaid Thomas Thackham not long ſince, coming to me himſelf, hath ſo atteſted and depoſed againſt the information, with ſuch ſwearing and deep adjuration, taking the name of the Lord God to witneſs, and appealing to his judgment to the utter perdition of his Soul, if it were not falſe which by information was reported of him, and he faultleſs in the matter. Which being ſo, I could not otherwiſe refuſe, but to give credit to his Oath, and upon the ſame to alter and correct ſo much as appertaineth to the

Anno 1556.

the defamation (as he calleth it) of his name, referring the truth of the matter to his own Conſcience, and the judgment of the Lord God, to whom either he ſtandeth if it be true, or falleth if it be falſe.

And now to our ſtory again, concerning the proceſs and accuſation of Julius Palmer, omitting by the way the Names of Thomas Thackham, and Downer.

Here followeth the firſt Examination and accuſation of Julius Palmer at Reading.

The firſt examination of Julius Palmer.

AFter this he was brought before the Major, and there by the procurement of certain falſe Brethren (the Lord knoweth what they were) who had been converſant with Palmer, and robbed his ſtudy, divers grievous and enormous Crimes were laid to his charge, as Treaſon, Sedition, ſurmiſed Murther, and Adultery.

To whom Palmer anſwered, that if ſuch Horrible and Hainous Crimes might be proved againſt him, he would patiently ſubmit himſelf to all kind of Torments that could be deviſed. But O ye cruel Blood-ſuckers (ſaith he) ye follow the old practices of your progenitors, the Viperous and Woolviſh generation of Phariſees and Papiſts: but be ye well aſſured, that God already ſeeth your ſubtle devices and crafty packing, and will not ſuffer the outragious fury of your Venemous Tongues and fiery Hearts to eſcape unpuniſhed. All this while no mention was made of Hereſie or Heretical writings.

Their greateſt proofs againſt him were theſe.

Evidence put up againſt Palmer

FIrſt, that Palmer ſaid, the Queens Sword was not put in her hand to execute Tyranny, and to kill and murder the true Servants of God.

Item, that her Sword was too blunt toward the Papiſts, but toward the true Chriſtians it was too ſharp.

Note the Wopſhipful proceſs of the quarrelling Papiſts.

Item, that certain Servants of Sir Francis Knolles and others, reſorting to his lectures, had fallen out among themſelves, and were like to have committed Murther, and therefore he was a ſower of ſedition, and a procurer of unlawful Aſſemblies.

Item, that his Hoſteſs had written a Letter unto him (which they had intercepted) wherein ſhe required him to return to Reading, and ſent him her Commendations, by the token that the knife lay hid under the beam, whereby they gathered that ſhe had conſpired with him to murder her Husband.

Item, that they found him alone with his Hoſteſs by the fire ſide in the Hall, the Door being ſhut to them forſooth. When the evidence was given up, the Mayor diſmiſſed them and went to dinner, commanding Palmer to the Cage, to make him an open ſpectacle of ignominy to the eyes of the world. And Thackham, the better to cover his own ſhame, cauſed it to be bruted, that he was ſo puniſhed for his evil life and wickedneſs already proved againſt him.

Palmer clareth himſelf.

In the afternoon Palmer came to his anſwer, and did ſo mightily and clearly deface their evidence, and defend his own Innocency, proving alſo that the ſaid Letters were by themſelves forged, that the Mayor himſelf was much aſhamed that he had given ſuch credit unto them, and ſo much born with them, ſo that he ſought means how they might convey him out of the Country privily.

Note here the fruit of Romiſh Religion.

John Galant, a zealous profeſſor.

But here among other things this is not with ſilence to be paſſed over, that one John Galant, a zealous profeſſor of the Goſpel, a little after this came to the priſon and found him ſome what better intreated then before. When he beheld him, O Palmer, ſaith he, thou haſt deceived divers mens expectation: for we hear that you ſuffer not for righteouſneſs ſake, but for your own demerits.

Oh Brother Galant, ſaith he, theſe be the old practices of that Satanical brood. But be you well aſſured, and God be praiſed for it, I have ſo purged my ſelf, and detected their falſhood, that from henceforth I ſhall be no more moleſted therewith. And there having pen and ink, he did write ſome what whereby part of his ſtory here rehearſed, is well confirmed. But now to theſe Bloody Adverſaries.

New policie deviſed againſt Julius Palmer.

After this, when they ſaw the matter frame ſo ill favouredly, fearing that if he ſhould eſcape ſecretly, their doing would tend no leſs to their ſhame and danger, then to the Mayors diſhoneſty; they deviſed a new policy to bring to paſs their long hidden and feſtered malice againſt him, which was by this extreme refuge. For, whereas before they were partly aſhamed to accuſe him of Hereſie, ſeeing they had been counted earneſt Brethren themſelves; and partly afraid, becauſe they had broken up his ſtudy, and committed theft: yet now left their iniquity ſhould have been revealed to the world, they put both fear and ſhame aſide, and began to refricat and rip up the old ſore, the ſcar whereof had been but ſuperficially cured, as you have heard; and ſo to colour their former practices with the pretence of his reformation in Religion, they charged him with the writings that they had ſtolen out of his ſtudy.

Palmer caled before the Mayor of Reading, Bird the Official, and two Juſtices.

Thus Palmer was once again called out of the priſon to appear before the Mayor, and Bird the Official, and two other Juſtices, to render an account of his faith before them; to anſwer to ſuch Articles and Informations, as were laid againſt him. And when they had gathered of his own mouth ſufficient matter to intrap him, they deviſed a certificate, or bill of inſtructions againſt him, to be directed to Doctor Jeffrey, who had determined to hold his Viſitation the next Tueſday at Newbery, which was the ſixteenth of July. And thus were the falſe witneſſes and bloody Accuſers winked at, and the innocent delivered to the Lyon to be devoured. When it was therefore concluded that Palmer ſhould be ſent over to Newbery, the ſaid Letters teſtimonial were conveyed over together with him; the contents whereof ſhall partly appear hereafter; In the mean time I think it good here to rehearſe one example among other, both of charitable affection toward him, and of his modeſty correſpondent to the ſame.

Dr. Jeffrey, the Biſhops chancellor of Sarum.

Maſter Rider of Reading, a faithful witneſs of Gods Truth, hearing how cruelly Palmer had been dealt withal in the priſon, and pined away for lack of neceſſaries, and how evidently he had proved himſelf innocent before the Officers, of ſuch Crimes as were objected againſt him, he ſent to him his ſervant ſecretly the night before his departure to Newbery, with a bowed groat in token of his good heart toward him, requiring him to let him underſtand if he lacked neceſſaries, and he would provide for him. Palmer anſwered, the Lord reward your Mr. for his benevolence toward me, a miſerable abject in this world, and tell him that (God be praiſed) I lack nothing.

Mr. Rider of Reading a faithful favourer of Gods Goſpel

Thom. Askin or Roberts, fellow-priſoner with Julius Palmer.

In the morning before they took their Journey, Thomas Askin, alias Roberts, being fellow priſoner with him in Chriſts cauſe, ſitting at breakfaſt, and beholding Palmer very ſad, leaning to a window in the corner of the houſe asked why he came not to breakfaſt. Becauſe I lack money (ſaith Palmer) to diſcharge the ſhot. Come on man (quoth he) God be praiſed for it, I have enough for us both. Which thing when Mr. Rider heard of, it cannot be expreſſed, how much it grieved him that Palmer had deceived him with ſo modeſt an anſwer.

Julius Palmer brought to Newbery.

Thus to Newbery they came on Monday night, and forthwith they were committed to the comfortable Hoſtry of the blind houſe, where they found John Gain, their faithful Brother in the Lord. Now how they came before the Conſiſtory of Dr. Jeffrey, and how Palmer was examined, it doth in part appear by this examination hereunto annexed, which although it be not perfectly and orderly penned, as the report goeth it was ſpoken, nor perchance altogether in ſuch form of words, yet as exactly as we are able to compact and diſpoſe it, being gathered out of ſeveral notes of Richard Shipper, John Hunt, John Kirry of Newbery, Richard White of Marlborough, which were oculati teſtes, and preſent at the hearing thereof.

Witneſſes to the ſecond part of this ſtory.

The ſecond Examination and accuſation of Julius Palmer at Newbery, in the hearing of more then three hundred perſons.

The examination of Palmer before Dr. Jeffrey at Newbery.

IN the year 1556. xvj. of July, four or five ſeats were prepared in the Quire of the Pariſh Church of Newbery for the Viſitors, whoſe names here enſue. Doctor Jeffrey for the Biſhop of Sarum, Sir Richard

D. Jeffrey, Sir Ri. Abridges Knight, M. Jo. Wimbecom, the Parson of Ingefield, judge against Julius Palmer.

Richard Abridges Knight, and then High-Sheriff of the Shire, Sir William Ramsford Knight, Mr. John Winchcomb Esquire, and the Parson of Inglefield. After the Prisoners were presented, the Commission read, and other things done in order accordingly, Doctor Jeffrey called to Palmer, and said; Art thou that jolly Writer of three Half-penny Books that we hear of?

Palm. I know not what you mean.

Jeff. Have you taught Latin so long, that now you understand not English?

To this he answered nothing.

Then Dr. Jeffrey standing up said, We have received certain Writings, and Articles against you, from the Right worshipful the Mayor of Reading, and other Justices, whereby we understand, that being convented afore them, you were convict of certain Heresies.

First, That you deny the Popes Holiness Supremacy.

Next, That there are but two Sacraments.

Thirdly, That the Priest sheweth up an Idol at Mass; and therefore you went to no Mass, since your first coming to Reading.

Fourthly, That there is no Purgatory.

Last of all, That you be a sower of Sedition, and have sought to divide the unity of the Queens Subjects.

The Sheriff. You were best see first what he will say to his own handy work.

Jeff. Ye say truth. Tell me Palmer, art thou he that wrote this fair Volume? Look upon it.

Palm. I wrote it indeed, and gathered it out of the Scripture.

Jeff. Is this doggish Rhime yours also? Look.

Palm. I wrote this, I deny not.

Jeff. And what say you to these Latin Verses, entituled Epicedion, &c. Are they yours too?

Palm. Yea Sir.

Jeff. Art thou not ashamed to affirm it? It came of no good spirit, that thou didst both rail at the dead, and slander a Learned and Catholick man yet alive.

Palm. If it be a slander, he hath slandered himself: for I do but report his own writing, and open the folly therein declared. And I reckon it no railing to inveigh against Annas and Caiphas being dead.

Jeff. Saist thou so? I will make thee recant it, and wring peccavi out of your lying lips, ere I have done with thee.

Palm. But I know, that although of my self I be able to do nothing, yet if you and all mine enemies both bodily and ghostly, should do your worst, you shall not be able to bring that to pass, neither shall ye prevail against Gods mighty Spirit, by whom we understand the Truth, and speak it so boldly.

Jeff. Ah, are you full of the Spirit? are you inspired with the Holy Ghost?

Palm. Sir, no man can believe, but by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. Therefore, if I were not a Spiritual man, and inspired with Gods Holy Spirit, I were not a true Christian. Qui spiritum Christi non habet, hic non est ejus, i. He that hath not the Spirit of Christ, is none of his.

Jeff. I perceive you lack no words.

Palm. Christ hath promised not only to give us store of words necessary, but with them, such force of matter, as the gates of Hell shall not be able to confound, or prevail against it.

The Holy Ghost shall teach you in that hour what you shall answer. Luke 12.

Jeff. Christ made such a promise to his Apostles, I trow you will not compare with them.

Palm. With the holy Apostles I may not compare, neither have I any affiance in mine own wit or learning, which I know is but small: yet this promise I am certain pertaineth to all such as are appointed to defend Gods Truth against his enemies, in the time of their persecution for the same.

Jeff. Then it pertaineth not to thee.

Palm. Yes, I am right well assured, that through his grace it appertaineth at this present to me, as it shall (I doubt not) appear, if you give me leave to dispute with you before this audience, in the defence of all that I have there written.

A marvel to the Papists, that young men should have the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Jeff. Thou art but a beardless Boy, start up yesterday out of the Schools, and darest thou presume to offer disputation, or to encounter with a Doctor.

Palm. Remember Master Doctor, Spiritus ubi vult spirat. And again, Ex ore infantium, &c. And in another place, Abscondisti hæc à sapientibus, &c. i. The Spirit breatheth where it pleaseth him, &c. Out of the mouth of Infants, &c. And thou hast hidden these things from the wise, &c. God is not tied to time, wit, learning, place, nor person. And although your wit and learning be greater than mine; yet your belief in the Truth, and zeal to defend the same is no greater than mine.

Anno 1556.

Gods Spirit not bound to place or person.

Regist. Sir, if you suffer him thus impudently to trifle with you, he will never have done.

Jeffrey Well, ye shall understand, that I have it not in Commission at this present to dispute with you, neither were it meet that we should call again into question such Articles as are already discussed, and perfectly defined by our Mother the holy Church, whom we ought to believe without why, or wherefore, as the Creed telleth us. But the cause why ye be now called hither, is that ye might be examined upon such Articles as are ministred against you, and such matter as is here contained in your hand-writing, that it may be seen whether you will stand to it, or nay. How say you to this?

Note how these men dare not abide disputation.

Palmer. By your holy Church you mean the Synagogue of Rome, which is not universal, but a particular Church of shavelings. The Catholick Church I believe, yet not for her own sake, but because she is holy, that is to say, a Church that grounded her belief upon the word of her Spouse Christ.

The Church of Rome is but a particular Church.

The Church is not to be believed for her self.

Jeffrey. Leave railing, and answer me directly to my question. Will you stand to your writing, or will you not?

Palmer. If you prove any sentence therein comprized, not to stand with Gods Word, I will presently recant it.

Jeffrey. Thou impudent Fellow, have I not told thee, that I came not to dispute with thee, but to examine thee?

Here the Parson of Inglefield pointing to the Pix, said, What seest thou yonder?

Palm. A Canopy of silk broidered with gold.

Parson. Yea, but what is within it?

Palmer. A piece of Bread, in a Clout, I trow.

Parson. Thou art as froward an Heretick as ever I talked withal. Here was much spoken of Confiteor, and other parts of the Mass.

Parson. Do you not believe that they which receive the holy Sacrament of the Altar, do truly eat Christs natural Body?

Palmer. If the Sacrament of the Lords Supper be ministred, as Christ did ordain it, the faithful Receivers do indeed spiritually and truly eat and drink in it Christs very natural Body and Blood.

The Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

Parson. The faithful Receivers? Ye cannot blear our eyes with such sophistry. Do not all manner of Receivers, good and bad, faithful and unfaithful receive the very natural Body in form of Bread?

Palmer. No Sir.

Parson. How prove you that?

Palm. By this place, Qui manducat me, vivet propter me, i. He that eateth me, shall live for me.

The wicked receive not the Lords Body.

Parson. See that fond Fellow, whilst he taketh himself to be a Doctor of the Law, you shall see me prove him a stark foolish Daw. Do you not read likewise, Quicunq; invocaverit nomen Domini, salvus erit? id est, Whosoever invocateth the Name of the Lord, shall be saved? Ergo, Do none but the godly call upon him? Therefore you must mark how St. Paul answereth you. He saith, that the wicked do eat the true Body to their condemnation.

As Palmer was bent to answer him at the full, the Parson interrupted him, crying still, what saist thou to St. Paul?

Palm. I say, that St. Paul hath no such words.

Parson. See, the impudent Fellow denieth the plain Text. Qui edit & bibit corpus Domini indigne, reus erit judicii. i. He that eateth and drinketh the Body of the Lord unworthily, is guilty of judgment.

Palmer. I beseech you lend me your Book.

Parson. Not so.

The Sheriff. I pray you lend him your Book. So the Book was given over to him, Palmer.

Anno 1556.

Palmer. Your own Book ſaith, Qui manducat hunc panem, &c. i. He that eateth this Bread.

Parſon. But Saint Hieromes Tranſlation hath Corpus.

Palmer. Not ſo Mr. Parſon, and God be praiſed that I have in the mean ſeaſon, ſhut up your lips with your own Book.

The Parſon confounded with his own Book. The Parſons mouth ſtopped.

Jeffrey. It skilleth no matter whether ye write Bread or Body, for we be able to prove that he meant the Body. And whereas you ſay, they eat it ſpiritually, that is but a blind ſhift of deſcant.

Palmer. What ſhould I ſay elſe?

Jeffrey. As holy Church ſaith, really, carnally, ſubſtantially.

Palmer. And with as good Scripture, I may ſay, groſly or monſtrouſly.

Jeffrey. Thou ſpeakeſt wickedly. But tell me, Is Chriſt preſent in the Sacrament or no?

Palmer. He is preſent.

Jeffrey. How is he preſent?

Preſence in the Sacraments.

Palmer. The Doctors ſay, modo ineffabili. Therefore why do ye ask me? Would God ye had a mind ready to believe it, or a tongue able to expreſs it unto you.

Baptiſm of Infants.

Jeffrey. What ſay you to the Baptiſm of Infants?

Palmer. I ſay, that it ſtandeth with Gods Word, and therefore it ought of neceſſity to be retained in the Church.

Jeffrey. Ye have forgotten your ſelf I wis, for ye write that Children may be ſaved without it.

Palmer. So I write, and ſo I ſay.

Children dying before they come to Baptiſm are ſaved, of this it followeth not. Ergo, Children that are brought, ought not to be baptized.

Jeffrey. Then it is not neceſſary to be frequented and continued in the Church.

Palmer. Your Argument is not good, Mr. Doctor.

Jeffrey. Will you ſtand to it?

Palmer. Yea, Mr. Doctor, God willing.

Jeffrey. Note it, Regiſter.

More of his Examination in that time and place is not yet come to our hands: whenſoever God ſendeth it, I will impart and communicate the ſame to the Reader. In the mean ſeaſon we are credibly informed of this, that Sir Richard Abridges, the ſame day after dinner, ſent for him to his lodging, and there, in the preſence of divers perſons yet alive in Newbery and elſewhere, friendly exhorted him to revoke his Opinion, to ſpare his young years, wit, and learning. If thou wilt be conformable, and ſhew thy ſelf corrigible and repentant, in good faith (ſaid he) I promiſe thee before this Company, I will give thee meat and drink, and books, and ten pound yearly, ſo long as thou wilt dwell with me. And if thou wilt ſet thy mind to marriage, I will procure thee a Wife and a Farm, and help to ſtuff and fit thy Farm for thee.

Sir Richard Abridges gentle offer to Palmer,

How ſayſt thou?

Palmer thanked him very courteouſly, and made him further anſwer concerning his Religion ſomewhat at large, but very modeſtly and reverently, concluding in the end, that as he had already in two places renounced his living for Chriſts ſake, ſo he would with Gods grace be ready to ſurrender and yield up his life alſo for the ſame, when God ſhould ſend time.

Palmer refuſed worldly offers to keep his Conſcience.

When Sir Richard perceived that he would by no means relent: Well Palmer (ſaith he) then I perceive one of us twain ſhall be damned. For we be of two Faiths, and certain I am there is but one Faith that leadeth to life and ſalvation.

Palmer. O Sir, I hope that we both ſhall be ſaved.

Sir Richard. How may that be?

God calleth at divers times and hours.

Palm. Right well Sir. For as it hath pleaſed our merciful Saviour, according to the Goſpels Parable, to call me at the third hour of the day, even in my flowers, at the age of four and twenty years, even ſo I truſt he hath called, and will call you at the eleventh hour of this your old age, and give you everlaſting life for your portion.

Sir Rich. Sayſt thou ſo? Well Palmer well, I would I might have thee but one month in my houſe, I doubt not but I would convert thee, or thou ſhouldſt convert me.

Then ſaid M. Winchcom, Take pity on thy golden years, and pleaſant flowers of luſty youth, before it be too late.

Palm. Sir, I long for thoſe ſpringing flowers, that ſhall never fade away.

Winchcom. If thou be at that point, I have done with thee.

Then was Palmer commanded again to the Blind-houſe, but the other two ſilly men were led again the ſame After-noon to the Conſiſtory, and there were condemned, and delivered to the Secular power of the Sheriff there preſent, by name Sir Richard Abridges.

John Guin, Tho. Askin, Martyrs, condemned. Sir Richard Abridges, Sheriff.

It is reported alſo, that Doctor Jeffrey offered Palmer a good Living if he would outwardly ſhew himſelf conformable, keeping his Conſcience ſecret to himſelf, or at leaſt declare that he doubted which was the trueſt Doctrine. But I cannot affirm it for a Surety.

Palmer required to ſet his hand to his Articles.

The next Morning the 16. of July, Palmer was required to ſubſcribe to certain Articles, which they had drawn out, touching the cauſe of his Condemnation: In the Front whereof, were heapt together many hainous terms, as horrible, heretical, damnable, deviliſh and execrable Doctrine. To theſe words Palmer refuſed to ſubſcribe, affirming that the Doctrine which he profeſſed, was not ſuch, but good and ſound Doctrine.

Jeffrey. Ye may ſee, good People, what ſhifts theſe Hereticks ſeek, to eſcape burning, when they ſee juſtice miniſtred unto them. But I tell thee, this ſtile is agreeable to the Law, and therefore I cannot alter it.

Palm. Then I cannot ſubſcribe to it.

Jeffrey. Wilt thou then crave mercy, if thou like not juſtice, and revoke thy hereſie?

Palmer. I forſake the Pope, and his Popelings, with all Popiſh hereſie.

Jeffrey. Then ſubſcribe to the Articles.

Palmer. Alter the Epithethons, and I will ſubſcribe.

Jeffrey. Subſcribe, and qualifie the matter with thine own Pen. So he ſubſcribed. Whereupon Doctor Jeffrey proceeded to read the Popiſh Sentence of his cruel Condemnation, and ſo was he delivered to the charge of the Secular power, and was burned the ſame day in the After-noon, about five of the Clock.

The Popiſh Sentence read againſt Palmer.

Within one hour before they went to the place of Execution, Palmer in the preſence of many people, comforted his Fellows with theſe words. Brethren (ſaith he) be of good chear in the Lord, and faint not. Remember the words of our Saviour Chriſt, where he ſaith, Happy are you when men revile you and perſecute you for righteouſneſs ſake. Rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven. Fear not them that kill the body, and be not able to touch the ſoul. God is faithful, and will not ſuffer us to be tempted further than we ſhall be able to bear it. We ſhall not end our lives in the fire, but make a change for a better life. Yea for Coals, we ſhall receive Pearls. For Gods holy Spirit certifieth our ſpirit, that he hath even now prepared for us a ſweet Supper in Heaven for his ſake which ſuffered firſt for us.

Palmer comforteth his two fellow Martyrs going to their death.

With theſe and ſuch like words, he did not only comfort the hearts of his ſilly Brethren that were with him appointed as Sheep to be ſlain, but alſo wreſted out plentiful tears from the eyes of many that heard him. And as they were ſinging a Pſalm, came the Sheriff Sir Richard Abridges and the Bayliffs of the Town, with a great company of harneſſed and weaponed men to conduct them to the fire. When they were come to the place where they ſhould ſuffer, they fell all three to the ground, and Palmer with an audible voice pronounced the 31. Pſalm, but the other two made their ptayers ſecretly to Almighty God.

Palmer, Guin, Askin, brought to the place of ſlaughter.

And as Palmer began to ariſe, their came behind him two Popiſh Prieſts, exhorting him yet to recant and ſave his Soul. Palmer anſwered and ſaid, Away, away, tempt me no longer. Away, I ſay, from me all ye that work iniquity: for the Lord hath heard the voice of my tears. And ſo forthwith they put of their rayment, and went to the Stake and kiſſed it. And when they were bound to the poſt, Palmer ſaid, Good People, pray for us, that we may perſevere to the end. And for Chriſts ſake beware of Popiſh Teachers, for they deceive you.

The words of Palmer to the Popiſh Prieſts.

As he ſpake this, a Servant of one of the Bayliffs, threw a Fagot at his face, that the blood guſhed out in divers places. For the which fact the Sheriff reviled him, calling him cruel Tormentor, and with his walking Staff brake his Head, that the blood likewiſe ran about

The words of theſe Martyrs at their death.] about his ears. When the Fire was kindled, and began to take hold upon their bodies, they lifted up their hands towards heaven, and quietly and chearly, as though they had felt no ſmart, they cried; Lord Jeſus ſtrengthen us, Lord Jeſus aſſiſt us, Lord Jeſus receive our Souls. And ſo they continued without any ſtrugling, holding up their hands, and knocking their hearts, and calling upon Jeſus until they had ended their mortal lives.

Anno 1556

The Martyrdom of the three godly Saints.

A notable ſpectacle in the Martyrdom of Julius Palmer. Among other things this is alſo to be noted, that after their three Heads by force of the raging and devouring flames of Fire, were fallen together in a lump or cluſter, which was marvellous to behold, and that they all were judged already to have given up the Ghoſt, ſuddenly Palmer, as a man waked out of ſleep, moved his tongue and jaws, and was heard to pronounce this word Jeſus. So, being reſolved into aſhes, he yielded to God as joyful a Soul (confirmed with the ſweet promiſes of Chriſt) as any one that ever was called beſide to ſuffer for his bleſſed Name. God grant us all to be moved with the like ſpirit, working in our hearts conſtantly to ſtand in defence and confeſſion of Chriſts holy Goſpel, to the end, Amen.

A memorable Story of one Agnes Wardall in the Town of Ipſwich, purſued for the true Faith of Chriſts Goſpel.

A notable Story of Agnes Wardall of Ipſwich. D. Argentine Schoolmaſter. Mat. Butler Conſtable. Phi. Ulmes, Edm. Leach, J. Steward, Perſecutors.

ABout the ſaid month of July, in this preſent year, 1556. there was one Richard Argentine, Doctor of Phyſick, otherwiſe called Richard Sexten, with certain other dwelling in the Town of Ipſwich, not many in number, but in heart and purpoſe mightily bent to impugn and impeach the growing of Chriſts Goſpel and favourers of the ſame. In the number of whom were Philip Ulmes, Edmund Leach, John Steward, and Matthew Butler Apothecary, a curious ſinging Man, a fine player of the Organs, a perfect Papiſt, and a diligent promoter of good men. This Butler being then Conſtable in the Town of Ipſwich, as he was in the watch by night upon Cornhil, cometh to him Doctor Argentine in great haſt, giving him intelligence of one Agnes Wardall, being then lately come home to her houſe in Ipſwich. Whereupon immediately, ſuch a way was contrived between them, that the ſaid Agnes Wardall forthwith ſhould be apprehended: but God, in whoſe providence the direction of all things conſiſteth, by whoſe diſpoſition they have their operation, ſo graciouſly provided for his Servant, and ſo prevented their malignant devices, that they came to no great effect in working, although on the contrary part there wanted no good will, as here conſequently you ſhall further underſtand.

This Agnes Wardall was a Woman that lived in Gods fear, and was at defiance with their Romiſh traſh, deſiring rather with hard fare and evil lodging to be abroad, than to be at home in her houſe, and among the tents of the ungodly: her Husband alſo being a man living in the fear of God, and for the teſtimony of his Conſcience being alſo hunted, by force of the Law was conſtrained to avoid his houſe, and got into a Crair with an honeſt man, ſerving as a Saylor, a faculty not of him before frequented, nor he a man nimble for that trade, becauſe God had given him an impediment by reaſon of a ſtumped foot, unfit to climb to top and yard; yet ſo it pleaſed God to enable him with his ſtrength, that he was ſtrong and luſty to do good ſervice, as they can well witneſs that were of his company.

Rob. Wardall driven by perſecution to ſerve in a Ship.

The ſaid Agnes Wardall chanced on a day to come home to ſee her poor Houſe and Children, which was under the guiding of a young Maid, and being eſpied, news was born to Dr. Argentine: who having knowledge thereof, as is aforeſaid, went ſpeedily unto the Apothecary the Conſtable aforeſaid, and informed him what a notable Cure was to be wrought on Wardals Wife in the apprehending of her. Which was more like to ſpeed than miſs, had not the mighty providence of God wrought contrary to their expectation.

Agnes Wardall perſecuted by D. Argentine and his Mates.

This being known to the Conſtable, the Watch was charged ſpeedily, and each Company ſent to his place. And Argentine and Butler took unto them a good number,

Anno 1556.

Unmerciful ſeekers of a poor womans Blood.

number, and forth they go unto the houſe of this poor woman to lay hands upon her, and beſet the houſe on the foreſide and backſide, lying open in the fields, and otherſome were ſent to the houſe of his Mother, which was not far from his houſe. This done one knockt at the ſtreet door where Argentine and Butler was, with one of their weapons, and no anſwer was made; the ſecond time ſomewhat harder, but had no anſwer. In the mean time they fearing that ſome conveyance was made knocked the third time more hard then before.

There was not far from the door where they knocked, a certain Day-window, where one might look out and ſpeak: And ſo at the third knocking, a woman who at that time was tenant to R. Wardall's Mother, and had but two nights before lyen in the houſe, ſpeaking out hard by their ears, asked who was there?

The Lord bleſs every good man and woman from ſuch wicked ſpirits.

Ah ſirrah, quoth Argentine, are you ſo nigh and will not ſpeak? How fortuned it that ye ſpake not at the firſt, being ſo nigh? How fortuned it, quoth the woman? Marry I ſhall tell you; I am but a ſtranger here, and I have heard ſay, that there be ſpirits walking here about, which if a man do anſwer at the firſt call or ſecond, he ſtands in great danger, and I was never ſo afraid of my life. At this her anſwer they laughed, and commanded her to open the door in the Queens name, for they were the Queens watch.

He ſleepeth nor ſlumbreth not that keepeth Iſrael. Pſal. 100.

Agnes Wardall being at that time in bed in an inner Chamber, having her Maid with her, and her two Children ſhe being at that time very heavy aſleep, heard not the knocking. Her Maid hearing at the ſecond knock, called and ſhogged her Dame, and with much ado awaked her, and ſaid, The watch is at the door. What? thou lyeſt, ſaid ſhe. Yes truly ſaid the Maid, and hath knockt twice. With that ſhe aroſe with all ſpeed, and put on her cloaths very ſlightly, and took with her a Buckeram Apron, which afterward ſhe caſt on her head, when ſhe was fain to creep in a ditch with nettles, and ſo paſſed down into a Parlour, wherein ſtood a Cupbord with a fair Preſs, into the which the Maid did lock her.

Agnes Wardall hideth her ſelf in a preſs from the hands of her perſecutors.

And immediately went up to a Chamber which was hard by the ſtreet, where ſhe might ſee and ſpeak to the Watch, and ſaid, Who is there? Then they bade her open the door. And ſhe ſaid, We have no Candle. And they ſaid, Open the door, or we will lay it on the floor. With that ſhe came down and opened the door. Then asked they the Maid, who is within? And ſhe ſaid, none but a woman that dwelleth with in us, and two Children. Then ſaid they, where is thy Dame? Truly ſaid ſhe I cannot tell, ſhe is not within, She was here in the evening, ſaid they. Yea ſaid the Maid, but ſhe went forth I know not whither. Notwithſtanding they charged her that ſhe knew where ſhe was, which ſhe denied. Then got they a Candle light at one of the neighbours houſes, and came in, and in the entry met the woman which had anſwered them at the window, and ſaid ſhe was affraid of Sprites. Argentine looking upon her, clapt her on the back, and ſaid, Thou art not the woman whom we ſeek for.

Example of a faithful Maid to her Miſtreſs.

The houſe ſearched for Agnes Wardall.

So entred they the houſe, and ſearched a Parlour next the ſtreet where the woman lay which was his Mothers Tenant, and a young Child that ſucked on her breaſt, and not only in the bed, turning it down paſt all honeſt humanity, but alſo under the bed, behind the painted Clothes, and in the Chimney, and up into the Chimney, and finding the bed hot, ſaid, Who lay here in the Bed? The woman ſaid I and the Child. And none elſe, quoth they? No ſaid the woman. When they could find nothing there for their purpoſe, from thence they went into an inner Parlour, in the which ſtood the Cupbord wherin ſhe was, and ſearched the Parlour which was but a little one. And one of the Company, laying his hand on the Cupbord, ſaid, This is a fair Cupbord, ſhe may be here for any thing that is done. That is true ſaith another of them. Notwithſtanding, they looked no further, but went from that into the Chamber aloft, wherein ſhe ſaid Agnes had lyen with her Maid and Children, with all other rooms and chambers.

Gods marvellous protection working for his Servants.

At length they came down into the Yard, where they found a horſe tied at a pale eating of ſhorn graſs. Then asked they the Maid, whoſe Horſe is this? She anſwered, it is her Horſe indeed, and ſhe came in before night and went abroad again, but I konw not whither. Then were they in good hope to find their prey, and beſtirred them with ſpeed, and went into an out-chamber that was in the Yard, in which was a Boy in bed of 12. or 14. years old. And being in his dead ſleep, they ſuddenly awaked him and examined him for his Dame. Who anſwered, he knew not where ſhe was, and unto that ſtood firmly, although their threats were vehement, not only to the poor ſilly Boy, but alſo to the good ſimple plain Maid. Then cauſed they him to ariſe and dreſs him, and ſent both Maid and Boy up to the Cage, where they put the Maid, but kept the Boy, among their truſty Souldiers, ſo that one of them ſhould not ſpeak with another.

Agnes Wardall in danger to be ſmothered.

Now while ſome were on the Cornhil, and other ſome ſearching the neighbours houſes and backſides, the wife of Wardal bing in the Preſs faſt locked up, and almoſt ſmothered for want of breath, deſired the woman her Mothers Tenant, when ſhe heard her in the Parlour, to let her out. She asked her where the Keys were, who anſwered they were in a Hamper, which ſhe found, and aſſayed to unlock the Preſs, and of a long time could not. Then deſired ſhe her to break it open; for (ſaid ſhe) I had rather fall into their hands, then to kill my ſelf. Then went ſhe to her Mothers Tenant and fought for her Husbands Hammer and Chiſel, to break it open, but could not find it, nor any thing elſe to break it open withal, and came again and told her ſhe could find nothing to break it open with.

Gods mereiful help in the time of need.

Then ſaid ſhe, aſſay again to open it, for I truſt God will give you power to open it. And being within in much extremity, ſhe heartily prayed unto God, who heard her prayer and helped her: for at the firſt aſſay and turn of the Key, it opened eaſily. When ſhe came out, ſhe looked as pale and as bleak, as one that were laid out dead by the wall, and as ſhe her ſelf looked afterward when ſhe was dead as the ſame woman reported, which then let her out, and was alſo at her death long after in the Queens Majeſties Reign that now is, and all on a vehement ſweat was ſhe like drops of rain.

Then went ſhe out into the backſide, where was a pale toward the fields for the defence of the garden, wherein was one or two looſe pales, by the which both ſhe and her Husband had divers times uſed to come and go in and out, ſo went ſhe out into the fields. And paſſing one little field, and over a ſtyle, ſhrouded her ſelf in a low ditch with nettles, and covered her head with the Buckeram Apron afore mentioned, and ſo crept low, and lay in the ditch. After long ſearch when they could not find her in the Town, certain of the Watch returned again to the fields ſide; among whom was one George Manning, with John Bate the Crier of the ſame Town coming together. This Manning was a ſimple honeſt plain man, but Bate a very enemy, and one that in Queen Maries time would have been a Prieſt as it was reported, but that he was married.

Another eſcape of Agnes Wardal, by Gods good providence.

Manning eſpying where ſhe lay, gave a hem, and made a noiſe with his Bill, he being before Bate; at the which ſhe lay ſtill, and at the laſt they departed to the ſtreet ſide to the Conſtable. All this time the Maid was in the Cage, and the Boy with the other of the watch until perfect daylight. Then went they up, and let out the Maid, and ſent her home, and the Boy alſo; but they made the Maid believe they had found her Dame. Who anſwered, if ye have her, keep her faſt.

On the morrow, Manning ſent her word to beware that ſhe ſhould hide her ſelf no more ſo near.

George Manning an honeſt man.

Thus by the might and Power of God was his faithful Servant delivered from their cruelty, and they known to be his Adverſaries, not only at that time, but divers times after and before. Notwithſtanding, the ſaid Argentine, at his firſt coming to Ipſwich, came in a Servingmans Coat. And then being in the days of K. Henry the Eighth, he would accuſtomably uſe the reading of Lectures himſelf; in the which he was well commended at that time. After obtained the office of Uſher of the free Gammar School, and the Maſter being dead, got to be Maſter himſelf. And being married to a very honeſt woman remained there the days of K. Edward; And when God took him from us for our juſt deſerved plague, plague, and Queen Mary came to her Reign, none more hot in all Papistry and superstition then he, Painting the posts of the Town with Vivat Regina Maria, and in every Corner.

Furthermore, after the death of his Wife (which was an honest woman) he was made a Priest, taking upon him divers times to preach (but never without his white Minerver-hood) such Doctrine as was shameful to hear, saying Mass, and carrying about the pix in high processions. Furthermore, leading the Boy S. Nicholas with his Minerver-hood about the streets for Apples and Belly-chear. And who so would not receive him, he made them Hereticks, and such also as would not give his Fagot to the Bonfire for Queen Maries Child. And thus continued he at Ipswich the most part of Queen Maries days, molesting their good men, some for not going to the Church, some for not being confessed, some for not receiving, &c. till at length, toward the end of Queen Mary he came to London, and in this Queens time began to shew himself again a perfect Protestant. And thus much of Argentine. Ex testimon. Petri Moonæi.

The trouble of Peter Moon and his Wife, and of other godly Protestants at Bishop Hoptons Visitation in Ipswich.

IN the year of our Lord God, 1556. the Scene or Visitation being kept before Whitsontide in the Town of Ipswich in Suffolk, by Dr. Hopton being then Bishop of Norwich, and Miles Dunnings, being then his Chancellor, divers and sundry godly Protestants, through the accusation of evil men, were sore troubled and presented before him: among whom were accused one Peter Moon a Taylor, and Anne his Wife, for their disobedience to the Law, in not shewing their readiness to come to the Church, and to be partakers of such Romish Observances as at that time were used.

Peter Moon accused to B. Hopton.

And first the said Peter Moon was commanded to come before the Bishop, where he was examined of three sundry Articles, to wit: 1. Whether the Pope were supream Head: 2. Whether King Philip and Queen Mary were right Inheritors to the Crown: 3, And whether in the Sacrament of the Altar was the very Body of Christ substantially and really there present.

Unto the which the said Peter being timorous and weak, fearing more the face of man then the heavy wrath of God, affirmed, and in manner granted unto their demands. Whereupon the Bishop being in good hope, that although he had not come to the Church, nor received the Sacrament of the Altar, nor been ready to do his duty as the law had commanded; yet there shewing his mind, said, that he liked well the man: for such as have been (said he) earnest in evil things, will also be earnest in that that is good and godly, if once they be won.

3. Articles objected to Peter Moon.

Peter Moon cometh to the Bishops Articles through infirmity.

Thus as this spiritual Father was commanding his carnal Child, and rather preferring him to Hell-fire, then unto the sincere Word and Commandments of God, it chanced amongst many others in the Chamber, was one of the Portmen of the same Town, named Smart, an earnest member of their Romish Law, doing of a very good Conscience that he did, who after the death of Queen Mary lived not many years, but rendred his life in godly repentance, protesting, that if God should suffer him to live, he would never be the man he had been before, what Laws soever should come again: so that before the time of his sickness he frequenting earnestly the Sermons in the same Town, made by divers godly learned men, would weep as it had been a Child, being notwithstanding of courage as stout a man as any was in Ipswich. Such is the marvellous mercy of God in calling to his Kingdom, whom, and when he pleaseth.

Commendation of Smart of Ipswich.

R. Smart of Ipswich repenteth his Popery at his death.

Smart accuseth Moons Wife.

This Portman aforesaid, perceiving the Bishop thus, as it were, at an end with the said Moon, and so he like to be discharged, said unto the Bishop; My Lord, indeed I have good hope in the man and that he will be conformable: but my Lord, he hath a perilous woman to his Wife. For I will tell you my Lord, she never came to Church yet, since the Queens Reign, except it were at Evensong, or when she was Churched. And not then until Mass were done. Wherefore your good Lordship might do a good deed to cause her to come before you, and to see if you could do any good. And therefore I beseech your good Lordship to command him to pray her to come before your Lordship.

Anno 1556.

At which words Moon was somewhat stirred, in that he said command him to pray her to come before your Ldp. And he said unto him, under my Lords correction I speak, I am as able to command her to come before my Lord, as ye are to command the worst Boy in your house. Yea my Lord, said the other, I cry your Lordships mercy: I have informed your Lordship with an untruth, if this be so. But if he be so able as he saith, he might have commanded her to have come to Church in all this time, if it had pleased him. Well said the Bishop, look you come before me at Afternoon, and bring your Wife with you; I will talk with her.

Peter Moon commanded to bring his Wife before the Bishop.

As my Lords Dinner at that time was serving up, Moon departed and tarried not to take part thereof, having such an hard breakfast given him before to digest. At Afternoon Moon delayed and waited his time, bethinking when he might most conveniently come, especially when his Accuser and his wives should not have been there. And according to the commandment came with his Wife; which was not so secretly done, but his Accuser had knowledge thereof, and came with all expedition in such post speed, that in manner he was windless entering into the Bishops Chamber.

The Bishop hearing that Moon and his Wife were come, called for them, and said to Moon; Is this your Wife, Moon? Yea, my Lord, said he. O good Lord (said the Bishop) how a man may be deceived in a woman? I promise you a man would take her for as honest a woman, by all outward appearance, as can be. Why, my Lord, said Moons Wife, I trust there is none that can charge me with any dishonesty, as concerning my Body; I defie all the world in that respect.

Moon and his Wife brought before the Bishop.

Nay (quoth the Bishop) I mean not as concerning the dishonesty of thy Body: but thou hadst been better to have given the use of thy Body unto twenty sundry men, then to do as thou hast done. For thou hast done as much as in thee lyeth, to pluck the King and the Queens Majesties out of their Royal seats through thy disobedience, in shewing thy self an open enemy unto Gods Laws, and their proceedings.

B. Hopton preferreth 20. men committing adultery, before one woman transgressing the Popes Ordinances.

Then began the Bishop to examine the said Moon again, with the aforesaid Articles, and his Wife also. And she hearing her Husband relent, did also affirm the same, which turned unto either of them to no small trouble of mind afterward, but, yet neither were they like thus to escape, but that in the mean time Dunning the Bishops Chancellor came up in great hast, and brought news to the Bishop, that there were such a number of Hereticks come, of which some came from Boxford, some from Lanham and about from the Cloth-country, that it would make a man out of his wits to hear them: and there are among them both Hereticks, and Anabaptists, said he. And thus Doctor Dunning with his blustering words interrupting Moons Examination, went down again as the Devil had driven him, to keep his stir among them, and to take order what should be done with them.

The Bishop beginning to bewail the state of the Country, in that it was so infected with such a number of Hereticks, and rehearsing partly their Opinions to those that were at that time in the Chamber, Moons Wife had a young Child, which she her self nursed, and the Child being brought into the yard under the Bishops Chamber, cried, so that she heard it, and then said; My Lord, I trust ye have done with me. My Child crieth beneath, I must go give my Child suck, with such like words. And the Bishop being (as it were) out of wind to talk with them any more, said; Go your way, I will talk with you in the morning; look ye be here again in the morning: with this they both departed.

Moons Child a part of Gods providence in their deliverance from further trouble.

And beneath in the stone-Hall of the same house, the Chancellor Dunning being very busie about his bloody business, espyed Moon and his Wife coming, and must needs pass by the place where he stood, and said: Nay soft, I must talk with you both; for ye are as evil as any that are here to day. To whom Moons Wife answered; My Lord hath had us in examination, and therefore ye shall have nought to do with us. Nay quoth he, ye ye ſhall not ſo eſcape, I muſt talk with you alſo. Unto whom Moone anſwered, In the preſence of the more, the leſs hath no power: My Lord hath taken order with us, and therefore we are as his Lordſhip hath appointed, and muſt repair again before him again to morrow. At the which he let them go, although he was earneſtly procured by the party above ſpecified to have ſhewed his quality, which was nothing elſe but tyranny.

Moons Anſwer to the Biſhop and his Chancellor.

Moon and his wife eſcaped from the Biſhop and his Chancellor.

So departed Moone and his Wife without hurt of body: but afterward when they with Peter the Apoſtle beheld the face of Chriſt, they were ſore wounded in their Conſciences, aſhamed of their doings, and alſo at the door of deſperation. Inſomuch, that when the ſaid Moone came home to his houſe, and entring into a Parlour alone by himſelf, conſidering his eſtate, and ſeeing where a Sword of his did hang againſt a Wall, he was earneſtly allured by the Enemy Satan to have taken it down, and therewith to have ſlain himſelf: but God, who caſteth not away the penitent ſinner repenting his fall with heart, defended his unworthy Servant from that temptation, and hath (I truſt) left him to the amendment of life by the aſſiſtance of his holy Spirit, and to make him one among the elect that ſhall be ſaved.

Moon and his wife confounded in Conſcience for their denial.

Moon ſeeketh to kill himſelf, but by Gods merciful Providence was preſerved.

The morrow they both remained and kept Houſe with no ſmall grief of Conſcience, waiting and looking with fear, when to beſent for to the Biſhop, rather then offering their diligence to keep the Biſhops appointment: but God ſo wrought, that when the time drew near that they feared calling forth, the Bells rung for the Biſhops departure out of the Town. For the which they were not only glad, but alſo many a good heart in Ipſwich rejoyced and gave thanks to God. God for his mercy grant, that our ſin never deſerve to provoke Gods ire, that the like days come again. And if it ſo do, God make them, with all other weaklings, ſtrong and worthy Souldiers to encounter with the ghoſtly Enemies, the World, the Fleſh, and the Devil; and boldly to ſtand to the Confeſſion of Chriſt, and of his Goſpel, ſaying with the Apoſtles, Whether it be right in the ſight of God, that we ſhould obey you more then God, judge ye.

Gods providence in ſending away the Biſhop.

Teſtified and recorded by Peter Moone.

A tragical, lamentable, and pitiful Hiſtory, full of moſt cruel and tyrannical murther, done by the pretenſed Catholicks, upon three Women and an Infant; to wit, the Mother, her two Daughters, and the Child, in the Iſle of Garnſey, for Chriſts true Religion, the year of our Lord 1556. July 18.

The martyrdom of three women with a young infant, burned in the Iſle of Garnſey. July 18.

AMongſt all and ſingular Hiſtories touched in this Book before, as there be many pitiful, divers lamentable, ſome horrible and tragical; ſo is there none almoſt either in cruelty to be compared, or ſo far off from all compaſſion and ſenſe of humanity, as this mercileſs fact of the Papiſts, done in the Iſle of Garnſey, upon three Women and an Infant, whoſe names be theſe as follow:

Katherine Cawches, the Mother.
Guillemine Gilbert, the Daughter.
Perotine Maſſey, the other Daughter.
An Infant, the Son of Perotine.

But before I come to the purpoſe of this Story, it ſhall be neceſſary, for the better explaining of the matter, to begin firſt with the Circumſtances, whereupon the firſt original and occaſion did riſe of this tragical cruelty, the caſe was this:

The firſt occaſion of the trouble of theſe women.

The 17. day of May, Anno 1556. in the Iſle of Garnſey, which is a Member of England, in a Town there called S. Peters Port, was a naughty woman named Vincent Goſſet, who being evil diſpoſed, (went the day aforeſaid) to the houſe of one Nicholas le Conronney, dwelling in the Town of the ſaid S. Peters Port, about ten of the clock at night, and there taking the Key of the Houſe (lying under the door) entred into a Chamber toward the ſtreet, where ſhe eſpying a Cup of Silver within a Cupboard, took it away, and ſo conveighed her ſelf out of the Houſe again. Who immediately after this fact done (whether by counſel or by what occaſion elſe I have not to ſay) brought the ſaid Cup to one Perotine Maſſey, an honeſt woman, dwelling in the ſaid Town, deſiring her to lend her 6 d. upon the ſame.

Perotine ſeeing the Cup or Goblet, and ſuſpecting (as truth was) the ſame to be ſtoln, anſwered, that ſhe would not take it: yet nevertheleſs, having knowledge of the owner thereof, took it to reſtore it again to whom it did appertain; and to the end ſhe ſhould not carry it to another, gave her then preſently 6 d. Where moreover is to be noted, that Thomas Effart ſaith and teſtifieth, that knowledge was given by the ſaid Perotine to Conronney touching the ſtealing of this piece, who eftſoons upon the miſliking thereof attached the ſaid Vincent Goſſet of the Treſpaſs: Who being apprehended and examined upon the ſame, immediately confeſſed the fact, deſiring to have one ſent with her (which was Collas de Loutre) with 6 d. to fetch again the Goblet, where it was; and ſo did.

Nicholas Cary Conſtable, accuſer.

The next day following, the Kings Officers being informed of the premiſſes by one Nicholas Cary, of the ſaid Town, Conſtable, aſſembled the Juſtices there to inquire and examine further, as well upon the fact of Vincent Goſſet, as upon other griefs and things there amiſs. So that after declaration made by the Officers and Conſtable before the Juſtice, for that the ſaid Conſtable did report to have found a certain Veſſel of Pewter in the houſe the foreſaid Perotine Maſſey (who then dwelt with her Mother Katherine Cawches, and her Siſter Guillemine Gilbert) the which Veſſel did bear no mark, and eſpecially for that there was a Pewter diſh, whereof the name was ſcraped out, their bodies upon the ſame were attached, and put in priſon, and their moveable goods taken by inventory. Within a few days after theſe things thus done and paſt, theſe three ſilly women, abiding thus in durance in the Caſtle, made their Supplication to the Juſtices to have juſtice miniſtred unto them, viz. If they had offended the Law, then to let them have the Law; if not, beſeeching to grant them the benefit of Subjects, &c. Which Supplication put up, thereupon they were appointed to come to their anſwer the fifth day of June, in the year aforeſaid. Upon which day, after ſtreight examining of the matter, and the honeſt anſwering of the cauſe by the ſaid good women, at the laſt they ſubmitted themſelves to the report of their Neighbours, that they were no Thieves, nor evil diſpoſed Perſons, but lived truly and honeſtly, as became Chriſtian women to do, the falſe and untrue report of their Accuſers notwithſtanding.

Katherine with her two daughters impriſoned in the Caſtle.

Katherine with her two daughters ſtand to the judgment of their Neighbours.

So the Cauſe being thus debated, after the inquiry made by the Kings Officers, they were found by the ſaid Neighbours not guilty of that they were charged with, but had lived always as honeſt women among them; ſaving only that to the commandments of holy Church they had not been obedient, &c. Upon this Trial and Verdict of their Neighbours, it was in fine adjudged, firſt, that the ſaid Vincent Goſſet, being attainted of Felony, and condemned for the ſame, ſhould be whipped, and after her ear being nailed to the Pillory, ſhould ſo be baniſhed out of the Iſle without further puniſhment. And as touching the other three Women, the Mother with her two Daughters, for their not coming to the Church, they were returned Priſoners again into the Caſtle the firſt of July. And thus far concerning the true diſcourſe of this matter, with all the circumſtances and appurtenances of the ſame in every point as the caſe ſtood, according to the faithful tenor and teſtimony of the Garnſey men, written with their own hands both in the French and Engliſh Tongue. Wherein you ſee what falſe ſurmiſed matter was pretended againſt theſe women, and nothing proved, and how by the atteſtation of their Neighbours they were fully cleared of the fact, and ſhould by the Temporal Court have been diſmiſſed, had not the Spiritual Clergy men, picked matter of Religion againſt them, exerciſed ſuch extremity in perſecuting theſe miſerable Priſoners, that in no caſe they ſhould eſcape their bloody hands, till at length they had brought them (as you ſhall hear) to their final end. For after the time of this declaration above mentioned made by the Neighbours, whereby they were purged of all other things, and being then known of their not coming to the Church, the Bailiffs Lieutenant and the Juſtice thinking the matter not to pertain to them, but to the Clergy, forthwith wrote their Letters or Mandate under their Signets to the Dean, whoſe name was Jaques Amy, and Curates of the ſaid Iſle: The Contents whereof here followeth.

These three women quit of theft and diſhoneſty.

New trouble againſt the three women for not coming to the Church.

Jaques Amy Dean of Garnſey, Perſecutor.

A Letter sent from the Bayliffs, Lieutenant, and Jurates of St. Peters Port, to the Dean and Curates of the Isle of Garnsey

A Letter of the Bayliff to the Dean of Garnsey.

After Dean and Justices in your Court and Jurisdiction, after all amicable recommendations, pleaseth you to know that we are informed by the disposition of certain honest men, past before us in manner of an inquiry; in the which inquiry Katherine Cawches, and her two daughters, have submitted themselves in a certain matter criminal: Wherein we be informed that they have been disobedient to the commandments and ordinances of the Church, in contemning and forsaking the Mass, and the ordinances of the same, against the will and commandment of our Sovereign Lord the King and the Queen. Whereof we send you the said matter, forasmuch as the matter is spiritual, to the end you may proceed therein after your good discretions, and as briefly as you can possible, and also that it pertained to your office, recommending you to God, the which give you grace to do that which pertaineth to right and justice. Written the first day of the month of July, in the year of our Lord 1556.

After these Letters and Information thus addressed to Jaques Amy Dean, and to other of the Clergy, the said women were again convented before the Justice aforesaid with his Assistants. In the presence of whom they being examined of their Faith, concerning the Ordinances of the Romish Church, made their Answer that they would obey and keep the Ordinances of the King and Queen, and the Commandments of the Church, notwithstanding that they had said and done the contrary in the time of King Edward the Sixth, in shewing obedience to his Ordinances and Commandments before. After which Answer taken, they were returned again to Prison, until the other had an answer of their Letter from the Dean and his Complices. During which time, the Dean and Curate gave their Information touching the said women, and delivered the same to the Bayliff and Jurates, condemning and reputing them for Hereticks, the women neither hearing of any Information, neither yet being ever examined at any time before of their Faith and Religion. Whereupon when the said Bayliff and Jurates understood that the said Dean and Curates had not examined the women of their Faith, they would not sit in Judgment on that day, but ordained the women to come first before the Dean and Curates to be examined of their Faith. And so the Officers, at the commandment of the Justices, did fetch and present them before the said Dean and Curates. The which being accomplished and done, they were examined apart severally one from another: After which Examination, they incontinently were returned again into Prison.

Rash Information given, before the cause was heard.

Katherine Cawches, Perotine Massy, Guillemine Gilbert, examined before the Dean and his Fellows.

Then the fourteenth day of the said Month of July, in the year aforesaid, after the Examination above specified before Elier Gosselin Bayliff, in the Presence of Thomas Devicke, Pierres Martine, Nicholas Cary, John Blundel, Nicholas de Lisle, John Laverchaunt, John le Fever, Pierres Bonamy, Nicholas Martine, John de la March, Jurates; Sir Jaques Amy, Dean, and the Curates, did deliver before the Justice, under the Seal of the Dean, and under the signs of the Curates, a certain Act and Sentence, the sum whereof was, that Katherine Cawches and her two daughters were found Hereticks, and such they reputed them, and have delivered them to Justice, to do execution according to the Sentence; of the which the tenor followeth.

The names of the Persecutors which sate upon the death of the three women.

The Sentence.

The unjust Sentence of the Dean against the 3. Martyrs.

Anno 1556.

* Solœcismus Catholicus.

When this was done, commandment was given to the Kings Officers to go to the Castle to fetch the said women, to hear the Sentence against them in the presence aforesaid. And they appearing before them, said in the ears of all the Auditory, that they would see their Accusers, and know them that have deposed against them, because they might make Answers to their sayings and personages, and to have their Libel accordingly; for they knew not that they had offended the Majesties, of the King and Queen, nor of the Church, but intirely would obey, serve, and keep the Ordinances of the King and Queen, and of the Church, as all good and true Subjects are bound to do. And for any breach of the King and Queens Laws that they had done, they required Justice. All which their Reasons and Allegations notwithstanding, the said poor women were Condemned, and adjudged to be burnt, until they were consumed unto ashes, according to a Sentence given by Elier Gosselin Bayliff: of the which Sentence the tenor hereafter followeth.

The three women willing to be conformed to the Queens Ordinances, were notwithstanding Condemned.

The effect of the Sentence in English.

The wilful Sentence and Murther of Elier Gosselin Bayliff, against the three innocent women in Garnsey.

THE 17. (or some other think the 27.) day of the month of July, 1556. Elier Gosselin Bayliff, in the presence of Thomas Devicke, Pierres Martine, Nicholas Cary, John Blondel, Nicholas Devise, John le Marchant, John le Feaver, Pierres Bonamy, Nicholas Martine, and John de la March, Jurates, Katherine Cawches, Perotine Massey, Guillemine Gilbert, the said Perotine and Guillemine, daughters to the said Katherine, are all condemned and judged this day to be burned, until they be consumed to ashes in the place accustomed, with the confiscation of all their goods, moveables, and heritages, to be in the hands of the King and Queens Majesties, according and after the effect of a Sentence delivered in Justice by Mr. Dean and the Curates, the 13. day of the month of July, in the year aforesaid, in the which they have been approved Hereticks.

After which Sentence pronounced, the said women did appeal unto the King and Queen, and their honourable Council, saying, That against reason and right they were condemned, and for that cause they made their Appeal; notwithstanding they could not be heard, but were delivered by the said Bailiff to the King and Queens Officers, to see the Execution done on them according to the said Sentence.

The Mother and two daughters made their Appeal to the King and Queen, but could not be heard

The time then being come, when these three good Servants and holy Saints of God, the innocent Mother with her two Daughters should suffer, in the place where they should consummate their Martyrdom were three Stakes set up. At the middle Post was the Mother, the eldest daughter on the right hand, the youngest on the other. They were first strangled, but the Rope brake before they were dead, and so the poor women fell in the fire. Perotine, who was then great with Child, did fall on her side, where happened a rueful sight, not only to the eyes of all that there stood, but also to the ears of all true-hearted Christians that shall read this History. For as the belly of the woman burst asunder by the vehemency of the flame, the Infant being a fair Man-child, fell into the fire, and effsoons being taken out of the fire by one W. House, was laid upon the Grass.

Then was the Child had to the Provost, and from him to the Bayliff, who gave censure that it should be carried back again and cast into the fire. And so the Infant

To the Right Honourable, and the Queens Highneſs moſt gracious Commiſſioners, for the hearing and determining of matters of Religion and cauſes Eccleſiaſtical.

A Supplication.

MOſt lamentably and wofully complaining, ſheweth unto your gracious and Honourable Lordſhips, your poor and humble Orator Matthew Cawches, of the Iſle of Garnſey, that where Jaques Amy Clerk, Dean of the Iſle aforeſaid, aſſiſted by the Curates there, againſt all Order, Law, and Reaſon, by colour of a Sentence of Hereſie, pronounced againſt Katherine Cawches, the Siſter of your Honours ſaid Suppliant, and Perotine and Guillemine her two Daughters, did cauſe the ſaid Katherine, being a poor Widow, and her ſaid two Daughters moſt cruelly to be burned, although the ſaid perſons, nor any of them, did hold, maintain, or defend any thing directly againſt the Eccleſiaſtical Laws then in place, under the Reign of the late Queen Mary, but in all things ſubmitted themſelves obediently to the Laws then in force: and yet the cruelty of the ſaid Dean and his Accomplices, in perpetrating ſuch Murther as aforeſaid, raged ſo far, that whereas, whilſt the ſaid perſons did conſume with violent Fire, the womb of the ſaid Perotine being burned, there did iſſue from her a goodly Man-Child, which by the Officers was taken up and handled, and after in a moſt deſpiteful manner thrown into the Fire, and there alſo with the ſilly Mother moſt cruelly burnt: In tender conſideration whereof, and forſomuch as this Bloody Murther was not in due order of any Law, or in any manner according to Juſtice, but of meer malicious hatred, as the true Copy of the whole proceedings in this matter, by the ſaid Dean and his Accomplices, here ready to be ſhewed to your Honours, will make very plain and manifeſt: It may therefore pleaſe your good and gracious Lordſhips, of the zeal that you bear to Juſtice, and for our Lord Jeſus Chriſts ſake, to have due conſideration in Juſtice of ſuch horrible Murther, ſo cruelly committed as aforeſaid, according to the right demerit thereof. And that it may pleaſe your Honourable Lordſhips to order and decree alſo, that all the goods of all the ſaid parties, by pretence aforeſaid wrongfully taken as confiſcate, may be delivered your ſaid poor beſeecher, to whom of right they do belong. And your Honors ſaid Suppliant will daily pray to God for your long preſervation, to his glory, and your everlaſting health.

This Supplication being preſented in manner aforeſaid to the Queens Honourable Commiſſioners, in the year 1562. ſuch order therein was taken, that the matter being returned again down to the ſaid Country, further to be examined, the Dean thereupon was committed to Priſon, and diſpoſſeſſed of all his Livings. So that in concluſion, both he, and all other partakers of that Bloody Murther, whether of Conſcience, or for fear of the Law, were driven not long after to acknowledge their treſpaſs, and to ſubmit themſelves to the Queens pardon. The tenor of whoſe ſeveral ſubmiſſion, as they are left in the Rolls, I thought here to publiſh to the World, for a memorial of the more truth of this ſtory.

A Defence of this Garnsey Story against Mr. Harding.

AND thus have you the true narration of this History, discoursed without corrupting or falsifying any part or sentence thereof, no less faithfully of my part reported, then I received of them, who dwelling in the same Isle, and being present the same time, were best acquainted with the matter, and have given sufficient evidence, not only to me, but also to the Queens Highness Com-

Defence of this Garnsey Story against Mr. Harding.

Anno 1556. Commiſſioners, concerning the ſame, as both by the Letter of the Bailiff, by the Sentence of the Dean, by the Supplication of the Plaintiff, and ſubmiſſion of the Parties, and likewiſe by the Queens pardon granted unto them, may well appear.

By all which proofs and circumſtances thus debated, it remaineth manifeſt for all men to perceive, what cruelty and wrong was wrought againſt theſe poor women above ſpecified, and no leſs matter offered, in a caſe ſo unjuſt, juſtly to expoſtulate, or rather to wonder at the hard hearts of theſe men, but eſpecially of the Catholick Clergy of Garnſey, who profeſſing the Goſpel of Peace and Charity, ſhould after the example of Chriſt walk in the ſteps of meekneſs and mercy, and yet contrary, not only to all Chriſtian Charity and Manſuetude, but alſo againſt all order of Equity or Humanity, were ſo extream and rigorous to condemn them to the burning fire, under the pretenſed colour of Hereſie. Who if they had been Hereticks indeed, yet mercy would have corrected the errour, and ſaved life; equity would have conſidered mans weak fragility, at leaſt true juſtice would have heard both the Parties adviſedly, and alſo ſubſtantially have ſurveighed the cauſe, and not have raſhed out the Sentence of Death ſo haſtily as they did: yea, and though they had been Hereticks indeed, yet true Chriſtian Charity would have ſtretched farther, and at leaſt have given them leiſure and reſpite of time to reclaim themſelves. But now what is here to be ſaid? they being no Hereticks at all, as neither it could then, nor yet can be proved. For if King Edwards Religion (which was objected to them) were Hereſie, yet were they then no Hereticks, when they revoked the ſame; and if Queen Maries Religion were Hereſie, then were they much more Hereticks themſelves, which condemned them of Hereſie.

The cruel dealing of the Garnſey men againſt theſe three women.

But moſt of all we have herein to wonder at Maſter Harding, who in his late Rejoynder, written againſt the Biſhop of Salisbury, notwithſtanding all theſe evidences and demonſtrations ſo certain and manifeſtly appearing, yet goeth about firſt to deny the ſtory, terming it to be a fable; and afterward being forced to fly à ſtatu inficiali, to admit the ſtory, he removeth ad tranſlationem criminis; and there ſeeking by all means to clear the Clergy from the ſpot of cruelty, transferreth the whole blame only upon the women that ſuffered; but principally upon poor Perotine, whom he ſpecially charged with two Capital Crimes; to wit, Whoredom and Murder.

Mr. Harding in his Rejoynder againſt Mr. Jewel, p. 184.

Two crimes objected againſt Perotine Maſſey.

And firſt, touching his Accuſation of Whoredom, let us hear how he proveth this matter: Becauſe (he ſaith) by ſtory it is granted, that ſhe was with child: and yet the Hiſtoriographer doth not declare (neither durſt for ſhame) who was her Husband, or Father to the Child, &c. As though that Hiſtoriographers, being occupied in ſetting forth the Perſecution of Gods People, ſuffering death for Religion and Doctrine of Chriſt, were bound, or had nothing elſe to do but to play the Sumner, and to bring forth who were Husbands to their Wives, and Fathers to their Children; which new found Law of Hiſtory being never required before, nor obſerved of any Story writers. If Mr. Harding now ſhall exact of me, firſt let him begin with himſelf, and ſhew us (as wiſe as he is) who was his own Father, if he can. And yet I think not contrary, but his Mother was an honeſt woman. And no leſs alſo do I think of this of Perotine aforeſaid; whereof more ſhall be ſaid (God willing) hereafter.

Mr. Harding in his Rejoynder, fol. 184. p. 2.

But in the mean time here cometh in the cavilling Objection of Mr. Harding, who beareth the Reader in hand, as though for ſhame I durſt not, or of purpoſe would not expreſs it, &c. My anſwer whereunto is this: Firſt, to expreſs every minute of matter in every Story occurrent, what Story-writer in all the world is able to perform it? Secondly, although it might be done, what reaſonable Reader would require it? Thirdly, albeit ſome curious Readers would ſo require, yet I ſuppoſe it neither requiſite, nor convenient to be obſerved. And fourthly, what if it were not remembred of the Author? What if it were to him not known? what if it were of purpoſe omitted, as a matter not material to the purpoſe? Many other cauſes beſides might incur, which the Reader knoweth not of. And ſhall it then by and by be imputed to ſhame and blame, whatſoever in every narration is not expreſſed? or doth Mr. Harding himſelf, in all his Sermons, never pretermit any thing that conveniently might be inferred? Who was the Husband of this Perotine, the Hiſtoriographer hath not expreſſed; I grant: and what thereof? Ergo, Thereupon concludeth he, that for ſhame I durſt not. Nay, I may marvel rather, that he durſt for ſhame utter ſuch untidy Arguments, or ſo aſſeverantly pronounce of another mans mind and purpoſe, which is as privy to him, as then it was to me unknown what was her Husbands name. And though it had been known, what was that material in the Story to be uttered? or what had it relieved the cruel parts of them, which burned both the Mother and Infant together, though the Infants Father had been expreſſed? And how then did I for ſhame conceal that which was not in my knowledge at that time (if I would) to expreſs, nor in my ſuſpicion to miſdeem?

Perotine unruly accuſed of Whoredom.

Nevertheleſs, if he be ſo greatly deſirous (as he pretendeth) to know of me, who was this Infants Father, I will not ſtick with Mr. Harding, although I cannot ſwear for the matter, yet to take ſo much pain for his pleaſure, to go as near as I may. For preciſely and determinately to point out the right Father, either of this, or any Child; I trow, neither will Mr. Harding require it of me, neither is he able peradventure himſelf, being asked, to demonſtrate his own. And yet, as much as I may, to ſatisfie his dainty deſire herein, and partly to help the innocency of the woman, touching this demand, Who ſhould be the Infants Father: Who, ſay I, but his own Mothers Husband? the name of which Husband was David Jores, a Miniſter, and married to the ſaid Perotine in King Edwards time, in the Church of our Ladies Caſtle Pariſh at Garnſey; the party which married them being called Mr. Noel Regnet a Frenchman, and yet alive, witneſs hereunto, and now dwelling in London in S. Martins le grand.

Mr. Harding requireth of others to do that, which he is not able to do himſelf.

David Jores Husband to Perotine Maſſey. Perotine married, where, and by whom.

Thus then, after my knowledge, I have ſhewed forth, for Mr. Hardings pleaſure, the right Husband of this Perotine, and what was his name, who was alſo alive, his wife being great with Child, and partaker of the Perſecution of the ſame time, and a Schoolmaſter afterward in Normandy, &c. Now if Mr. Harding can take any ſuch advantage hereof to diſprove that I have ſaid; or be ſo privy to the begetting of this Child, that he can prove the ſaid David Jores, which was the right Husband to this Wife, not to be the right Father to this Infant, let him ſhew herein his cunning by what mighty demonſtrations he can induce us to deem the contrary; and as I ſhall ſee his reaſon, I ſhall ſhape him an anſwer, in ſuch ſort (I truſt) that he will perceive, that Whoredom, whereſoever I may know it, ſhall find no boſſtering by me; I wiſh it might find as little amongſt the chaſt Catholicks of Mr. Hardings Church.

From this I proceed now to the ſecond part of his infamous Accuſation, wherein he chargeth her of Murther. A ſtrange Caſe, that ſhe which was murthered her ſelf, with her Child, and died before him, ſhould yet be accuſed to murther the Child. Murther doubtleſs is an horrible iniquity in any perſon; but the Mother to be murderer of her own Infant, it is a double abomination; and more then a Monſter, ſo far diſagreeing from all Nature, that it is not lightly to be ſurmiſed of any, without vehement cauſes of manifeſt probation.

Perotine falſly accuſed of murther.

Wherefore, to try out this matter more thorowly touching this murthering Mother, let us ſee: Firſt, what hand did ſhe lay upon the Child? None. What weapon had ſhe? None. Did ſhe then drown it, or caſt it in ſome pond, as we read of the Strumpets at Rome, whoſe Childrens heads were taken up in Pope Gregories More by hundreds, what time Prieſts began firſt to be reſtrained of a lawful Wedlock: witneſs the Epiſtle of Voluſianus? or elſe did ſhe throw it by the walls into ſome private corner, as I am credibly certified, that in the eighth year of Queen Elizabeth, certain Scalps and other young Infants Bones were found and taken out with a ſtick in the hole of a ſtone wall, in Lenton Abbey, by certain Gentlemen within the Country of Nottingham, James Baruſſe, Richard Loveit, and W. Lovelace

Vide ſupra. A ſtory of young Infants murthered in Lenton Abbey, and found in the eighth year of Queen Elizabeth.

lace walking in the Prior-Chamber; witneſs the ſaid W. Lovelace, with other which ſaw the Bones aforeſaid? Or otherwiſe did ſhe take any hurtful drink to impotionate the Child within her, as commonly it is reported few Nunneries to have been in England, wherein ſuch a Tree hath not been growing within their ground, meet for practiſing of ſuch a purpoſe? Neither ſo, nor ſo. What then? did ſhe purpoſely and wittingly thruſt her ſelf in jeopardy, to the deſtruction of her Child, when ſhe needed not, as Pope Jean, when ſhe might have kept her Bed, would needs adventure forth in Proceſſion, where both ſhe her ſelf, and her Infant periſhed in the open ſtreet?

Pope Jean murderer of her child.

Well then, thus much by this hitherto alledged and granted, we have gotten this woman here to be accuſed of murdering her Child, which neither laid hand upon it, nor uſed weapon againſt it; neither uſed any other practiſe in drowning, hanging, breaking, burying, poyſoning, or any other wilful means, whereby to deſtroy it. And how then? by what manner of way was this woman a murderer of her young Babe? Forſooth (ſaith Mr. Harding) when ſhe was accuſed and condemned to be burned, ſhe did not claim the benefit of her Belly, whereby the life both of her ſelf for the time might have been delayed, and the Child preſerved.

How and by what reaſon Mr. Harding proveth Perotine to be a murderer.

Whether ſhe did or no, I have not perfectly to ſay; no more, I ween, hath Mr. Harding. Howbeit this is certain, and by witneſs known, that ſhe uttered no leſs to her Ghoſtly Father in Confeſſion. And what if ſhe had opened the ſame to the Judges? They would (ſaith he) have ſpared her life for the time, and ſo the Innocent had been preſerved. And how is Mr. Harding ſure of this, more then was the life ſpared of the young Lady, and Miſtreſs ſometime of Mr. Harding, who ſuffered, notwithſtanding ſhe was reported of ſome to be with Child; becauſe the Law (ſaith he) is beneficial to women in her caſe, claiming the benefit thereof.

Lady Jane thought to be with child at her death. The Law beneficial to women claiming the benefit of their belly.

The Law ſo giveth, I grant. But it followeth not therefore, whatſoever the Law giveth or preſcribeth, the ſame to be put by and by in execution. But many times the Law goeth as it pleaſeth them which have the handling of the Law. As for example; the Law willeth none to be condemned by Sentence of Death for Hereſie, which the firſt time revoke their opinion, and yet contrary to this Law they condemned her unlawfully. Again, the like Law, none to be executed for Hereſie, before the Writ be ſent down De Comburendo, and yet contrary to this Law, without any ſuch Writ, (as far as I yet underſtand) they burned her moſt cruelly. And what Law then was here to be looked for of theſe men, who in their doings herein ſeemed neither to obſerve Law, nor to regard Honeſty, nor much to paſs for Charity? And albeit ſhe had claimed never ſo much the priviledge of the Law, what had that availed with thoſe men, whoſe hunting altogether (as by their own proceedings may appear) ſeemeth to be for the houſhold goods of theſe women, which after their death immediately they incroached into their own hands.

Unlawful proceeding in the death of Perotine.

But be it admitted, that neither ſhe demanded this benefit of the Law, nor that the Judges would ever have denied her, if ſhe had ſo done; yet it had been the part of a grave Accuſer, before he had been diſcended into ſuch a railing action of murder againſt a poor woman now dead and gone, firſt to have adviſed wiſely with himſelf, whether it might be, that ſhe had no ſuch intelligence what benefit the Law would have given, in caſe it had been required. For not unlike it is, and well may be thought, rather yea, than no, that the ſimple woman, brought up all her life long in her Mothers houſe in an obſcure Iſland, and in ſuch an out-corner of the Realm, far off from the Court, and practiſe of Engliſh Laws, never heard before of any ſuch benefit of the Law; and therefore upon meer ſimplicity, and for lack of skill required it not, becauſe ſhe knew not what to require. Peradventure alſo her Senſes might be ſo aſtonied with the greatneſs and ſuddenneſs of the fear, that it was out of her remembrance. Certes, It had been the duty of the Judges, which knew the Law, and having of the woman before them, could not be ignorant of her caſe, to have queſtioned with her thereof, and to have holpen her ſimplicity in that behalf. Or at leaſt, if they had diſdained, yet it had been the Prieſts part, who was her Ghoſtly Father, and made privy thereunto, either to have inſtructed her, or to have ſtayed the execution of her death for ſafeguard of the Child.

Perotine defended by ſimple ignorance.

Lack in the Judges.

Anno 1556.

The Prieſt to blame.

But all this deniceth Mr. Harding, and to aggravate the matter, inferreth, that ſhe not of any ſimple unskilfulneſs of the Law, but only of meer wilfulneſs, for avoiding of worldly ſhame, concealed her own turpitude, and ſo became a murderer of her Babe, &c. Theſe be the words of Mr. Harding, written by him not of any ſure ground, but only upon his Catholick conjecture; for other demonſtration certainly to prove this true, he bringeth none. Wherefore to anſwer conjecture by conjecture, thus I reply to him again, That in caſe ſhe had been asked the queſtion of the Judges and Inquiſitors, whether ſhe had been with child, and then had denied the ſame; or elſe if ſhe, by any other colourable means, had cloaked her being with child, whereby it ſhould not appear, this Accuſer might have ſpoken probable advantage againſt the woman. Now, as ſhe was never demanded of their parts any ſuch queſtion, nor did ever deny any ſuch matter; ſo to anſwer this man with as good probability, I hold, that in caſe they had required that matter of her, ſhe would never have denied it. And therefore whereas ſhe is accuſed for her not uttering of her being with Child; why may ſhe not, by as good reaſon again be defended for not denying the ſame?

Rejoynder, fol. 185. Pa. 1.

Mr. Hardings ground only upon conjectures.

Perotine as ſhe did not open her being with child, ſo neither did ſhe ever deny it.

But ſhe ſhould have uttered it, ſaith he. It had been well done, ſay I; and I would ſhe had: but yet that is not the queſtion between him and me, what ſhe ſhould have done, but why ſhe did it not. Mr. Harding wandring in his blind ſurmiſes, phantaſieth the cauſe only to be, for hiding her diſhoneſty, and for that ſhe would not ſhame the Goſpel. So that in ſumma, to this effect tendeth all his Accuſation.

The ſtate of Mr Hardings Accuſation.

Perotine being big with child, at her Condemnation did not ſhew it to the Judges:
Ergo, She did it to conceal her turpitude, and becauſe ſhe would not ſhame the Goſpel.

Mr. Hardings Argument.

But here this Accuſer muſt underſtand, if he have not forgot his Logick, that ſuch Arguments which do truly hold à ſignis, do always preſuppoſe, that the ſigns which go before the things ſignified, muſt be neceſſary, perpetual and firm, as is between cauſes natural and their effects. Otherwiſe, if the ſigns be doubtful, voluntary, or accidental, there is no firm conſequent can proceed thereof.

The Argument anſwered.

Now, if the ſaid Accuſer ſhould be put to his proof, how to juſtifie this his ſequel to be true by evident demonſtration, that ſhe did it only for covering her diſhoneſty; I ſuppoſe verily he ſhould be found to ſay more than he is able to make good, and in concluſion ſhould be brought into the like caſe, as were the Phariſees, who coming to accuſe the Adultereſs before Chriſt, went away mute, with as much ſhame out of the Temple, as the woman her ſelf came in, having not one word to anſwer. For, a man to pronounce aſſuredly upon the ſecret cogitation and intent either of man or woman, farther than by utterance of ſpeech is to him ſignified, paſſeth his capacity, and is to be left only to him, which is ſcrutans corda & renes Deus.

Arguments of ſigns and conjectures, how they hold.

But foraſmuch as Mr. Harding worketh (as I ſaid) by ſurmiſes, confirming every thing to the worſt, let us ſee what may be ſurmiſed as much again to the contrary, concerning the quality of this ſurmiſed murder: wherein divers things are to be conſidered, as hereunder followeth.

The firſt Conjecture is this, That ſuch manner of women, which for worldly ſhame are diſpoſed to murder their children, have other ways to compaſs that wickedneſs, then by ſilence keeping. Now, as touching this Perotine going to be burned, neither could this ſilence ſave her, if ſhe would, from worldly ſhame, neither is it to be thought any ſuch intent ever to be in her, to murder her child; as might well appear in her Mothers houſe, where if ſhe might have continued her whole time out, ſhe intended no leſs but honeſtly to be brought to bed, and to nurſe up her Child, neither caring for ſhame of the world, nor fearing any ſlander to the Goſpel. Whereby may be argued, that no ſuch intent of murder was ever in her thought.

For how is it like that ſhe, which had gone ſo long with Child, almoſt to the full time of her deliverance, and never thought, nor wrought any hurt to the Infant all that while, ſhould now, going to her own death, mind more hurt to her child, then ſhe did before, hoping her ſelf to live?

The ſecond conjecture.

Secondly, how knoweth Maſter Harding to the contrary, but that ſhe was known in the Town to be with Child, and went boldly abroad without note of any ſhame, before the time ſhe came in trouble? Which being true, ſhame then could be no cauſe, why ſhe ſhould conceal her Child more now after her Condemnation, then ſhe did before ſhe was condemned.

The third conjecture.

Thirdly, admit the caſe it was not known before, what advantage thereby ſhould riſe to her being now appointed to dye, by concealing her being with Child? She ſhould have eſchewed (ſaith M. Harding) the publick ſhame and obloquy of the World, in that none ſhould have known her to be with Child. Firſt, what ſhame was it for a married Wife to be noted to be with Child? Again, what gain had that been to her, to avoid the ſhame and fame of the World, which had not to live in the World, being now condemned to dye?

The fourth conjecture.

Fourthly, how is it like, that for ſhame ſhe meant to conceal that from the World, which both knew ſhe ſhould not live in the World, and alſo ſuffer that kind of death whereby her Child could not be hidden from the ſight of the World, though ſhe had gone about her ſelf never ſo much to conceal it?

The fifth conjecture.

Fifthly, now is it to be thought that any Woman, going to ſuch a ſharp puniſhment of Fire to be conſumed, would let for any Worldly ſhame to reſcue her own Life from ſo bitter torment, at leaſt ſo long as ſhe might, beſide the ſafeguard alſo of her Child, if by any means ſhe had known any remedy.

The ſixth conjecture.

Sixthly, forſomuch as Maſter Harding doth ſo hainouſly charge her with the wilful murdering of her own naturas Child, let all indifferent Conſciences this conſider with themſelves, what was the cauſe that moved her ſo willingly to recant as ſhe did, but partly to ſave her own Life, and eſpecially the poor innocent? Whereby it is manifeſt to be underſtood, what a motherly affection ſhe had to ſave her infant, if the Fathers of the ſpirituality had not been ſo cruel, againſt all order of Law to caſt both her and her Child away, all this her ſaid recantation notwithſtanding.

The ſeventh conjecture.

Seventhly and laſtly, when Maſter Harding hath enveighed all that ever he can againſt this poor Perotine, yet is all the ſame but a by-matter from this principal purpoſe pretended, ſuppoſing thereby, through his depraving of her, to juſtifie and excuſe the Popes Holy Clergy, which wrought her death. Which will not be: For whatſoever her Life was beſides, yet forſomuch as the cauſe of her death and condemnation was neither for theft, whoredom, nor murder, but only and meerly for Religion, which deſerved no death; I therefore having in my ſtory no further to deal, as I ſaid before, ſo do I ſay again, that the cauſe of her condemning was wrongful, her death was cruel, the ſight of the Babe was rueful, the proceeding of the Judges was unlawful, the whole ſtory is pittiful, and of all this the Prieſt and Clergy were the Authors principal. All which being conſidered, and well expended, Maſter Harding, I truſt, may ſtand ſufficiently contented. Or if he think murder to be a thing, which ought not (as it ought not indeed) lightly to be paſſed over, let him then find out murder where it is, and tell us truly without affection of partiality, where the true murder lyeth; whether in the poor Woman, which together with her Child was murdered, or in them, which without all Law and Conſcience brought them both to death.

The concluſion of this defence.

Briefly and finally to conclude with this Man, whatſoever the Woman was, ſhe is now gone. To bite ſo bitterly againſt the dead is little honeſty. And though the accuſation had in it ſome truth, yet this accuſation here needed not. Now the ſame being falſe, is is too much unmerciful. At leaſt being doubtful and to him unknown, charity would have judged the beſt. Humanity would have ſpared the dead. And if he could not afford her his good word; yet he might have left her cauſe unto the Lord, which ſhall judge both her and him. To pray for the dead he findeth in his Maſs; but to backbite the dead, he neither findeth in his Maſs, Mattens, nor Evenſong. And no doubt but in his Diridge and Commendations he commendeth many a one, leſs deſerving to be commended then this Woman, let Catholick affection be ſet aſide. And though the merits of her cauſe deſerved not his commendations, yet did ſhe never deſerve at Maſter Hardings hand to give her ſuch a Kirieleſon (as they ſay) after her departure. Cruelty ſhe ſuffered enough alive, though Maſter Harding had not added this cruel invective to her former afflictions: wherein notwithſtanding he hurteth not her, but hurteth peradventure himſelf, neither ſo much diſtaineth her honeſty, as he bleminſheth his own. It hath been the manner of learned Men in time paſt, with their defending Oration ever to be more ready, then to accuſe And if they did at any time accuſe, yet never but inforced; neither did they accuſe any but ſuch only as were alive, and that neither but in ſuch matters, wherein either the Common-Wealth or themſelves were vehemently touched.

Now if this grieve him ſo greatly, that in my ſtory I have termed her to be a Martyr; let him conſider the cauſe wherefore ſhe ſuffered, which was neither for Felony, Murder, nor Whoredom, but only for the Religion in King Edwards time received; and when he hath confuted that Religion, I ſhall croſs her out of the Book and fellowſhip of Martyrs. In the mean time my exhortation ſhall be this to Maſter Harding.

Firſt, that if he will needs become a writer in theſe ſo furious and outragious days of ours, he will ſeaſon his Vein of writings with more mildneſs and charity, and not give ſuch example of railing to others.

Exhortation to M. Harding.

Secondly, that he will moderate his judging and condemning of other with more equity and indifferency, and not to be ſo raſh and partial. For if ſhe be to be accounted a murderer, which ſo carefully went about by recantation to ſave both her ſelf and her Child from the Fire; what is to be ſaid of them which condemned her ſo cruelly, and cauſed both her and the Infant to be burned, notwithſtanding that ſhe for ſafeguard of their Lives had (as I ſaid) recanted. And yet ſo partial is he, that in all this invective, crying out ſo intemperately againſt the Woman and the Child that were burned, he ſpeaketh never a word of their condemners and true murderers indeed.

Murder in the Spiritual Clergy noted.

Thirdly, forſomuch as Maſter Harding is here in hand with infanticide, and with a caſting away young Childrens lives, I would wiſh, that as he hath ſifted the doings of this Woman to the uttermoſt, who was rather murdered then a murderer; ſo he would with an indifferent eye look on the other ſide a little upon them of his own Clergy, and ſee what he could find there amongſt thoſe wilful contemners of immaculate marriage. Not that I do accuſe any of incontinency, whoſe lives I know not, but there is one above, that well knoweth and ſeeth all things, be they never ſo ſecret to Man, and moſt certainly will pay home at length with Fire and Brimſtone when he ſeeth his time.

God knoweth what ſpilling and Murdering of Infants there is in the World.

I ſay no more, and not ſo much as I might, following herein the Painters, which when their colours will not ſerve to expreſs a thing that they mean, they ſhadow it with a vail. But howſoever the matter goeth with them, whether they may or may not be ſuſpected touching this crime aforeſaid of infanticide; moſt ſure and manifeſt it is that they are more then worthily to be accuſed of homicide in murdering the Children and Servants of God, both men and women, wives and mayds, old and young, blind and lame, mad and unmad, diſcreet and ſimple innocents, learned with the unlearned, and that of all degrees, from the high Archbiſhop to the Clerk and Sexton of the Church, and that moſt wrongfully and wilfully, with ſuch effuſion of innocent Chriſtian Blood, as crieth up daily to God for vengeance.

And therefore Maſter Harding, in my mind ſhould do well, to ſpare a little time from theſe his invectives, wherewith he appeacheth the poor Proteſtants of Murder, whom they have murdered themſelves, and exerciſe his pen with ſome more fruitful matter, to exhort theſe ſpiritual Fathers firſt to ceaſe from murdering of their own Children, dren, to ſpare the Blood of Innocents, and not to perſecute Chriſt ſo cruelly in his members as they do: And furthermore, to exhort in like manner theſe Agamiſts, and wilful rejecters of Matrimony, to take themſelves to lawful wives, and not to reſiſt Gods Holy Ordinance, nor incounter his Inſtitution with another contrary Inſtitution of their own deviſing, leſt perhaps they prevented by fragility, may fall into danger of ſuch inconveniences above touched: which if they be not in them, I ſhall be glad; but if they be, it is neither their railing againſt the poor Proteſtants, nor yet their ſecret auricular confeſſion, that ſhall cover their iniquities from the face of the Lord, when he ſhall come to reveal abſcondita tenebrarum, & judicare ſæculum per ignem.

Agamiſts, of ἀγαμία, which ſignifieth Men unmarried, or againſt Marriage.

And thus, for lack of further leaſure, I end with Maſter Harding; having no more at this time to ſay unto him, but wiſh him to fear God, to embrace his truth, to remember himſelf, and to forceaſe from this uncharitable railing and brawling, eſpecially againſt the dead, which cannot anſwer him; Or if he will needs continue ſtill to be ſuch a vehement accuſer of other, yet that he will remember what belongeth to the part of a right accuſer: Firſt, that his accuſation be true; ſecondly, that no blind affection of partiality be mixt withal: thirdly, whoſoever taketh upon him to carp and appeach the crimes of other, ought themſelves to be ſincere and upright, and to ſee what may be written in their own foreheads.

The part of a true accuſer.

Whoredom and Murder be grievous offences, and worthy to be accuſed. But to accuſe of Murder the parties that were murdered, and to leave the other perſons untouched which were the true murderers, it is the part of an accuſer, which deſerveth himſelf to be accuſed of partiality.

As verily I think by this Woman, that if ſhe had been a Catholick Papiſt, and a devout follower of their Church, as ſhe was a Proteſtant, ſhe had neither been condemned then alive of them, nor now accuſed, being dead, of M. Harding. But God forgive him, and make him a good Man if it be his will.

Three Martyrs burned at Greenſtead in Suſſex.

July 18. The Martyrdom of two Men and one Women at Greenſtead in Suſſex.

NEre about the ſame time that theſe three Women with the Infant were burned at Garnſey, ſuffered other three likewiſe at Greenſtead in Suſſex, two Men and one Woman; the Names of whom were Thomas Dungate, John Foreman, and Mother Tree, who for righteouſneſs ſake gave themſelves to death and torments of the fire, patiently abiding what the furious rage of Man could ſay or work againſt them, at the ſaid Town of Greenſtead ending their lives, the 18. of the ſaid Month of July, and in the year aforeſaid.

The Burning and Martyrdom of Thomas Moor in the Town of Leiceſter, June 26. the year, 1556.

July 26.

AS the Bloody rage of this perſecution ſpared neither man, woman nor child, wife nor maid, lame, blind nor cripple, and ſo through all Men and Women, as there was no difference either of Age or Sex conſidered, ſo neither was there any condition or quality reſpected of any perſon: but whoſoever he were, that held not as they did on the Pope, and Sacrament of the Altar, were he learned or unlearned, wiſe, or ſimple innocent, all went to the fire, as may appear by this ſimple poor Creature and innocent Soul, named Thomas Moor, retaining as a Servant to a Mans Houſe in the Town of Leiceſter, about the age of 24. and after manner of an Husbandman, who for ſpeaking certain words, that his Maker was in Heaven, and not in the Pix, was thereupon apprehended in the Country, being with his friends. Who coming before his Ordinary, firſt was asked, whether he did not believe his Maker there to be, pointing to the high Altar. Which he denied.

The burning of Tho. Moor a ſimple innocent, at Leiceſter.

Tho. Moor examined before the Biſhop.

Then asked the Biſhop, How then, ſaid he, doſt thou believe?

The young Man anſwered again; as his Creed did teach him.

To whom the Biſhop ſaid; And what is yonder that thou ſeeſt above the Altar? He anſwering, ſaid; Forſooth I cannot tell what you would have me to ſee. I ſee there fine Clothes, with Golden Taſſels, and other gay geer hanging about the Pix, what is within I cannot ſee.

Why? Doſt thou not believe, ſaid the Biſhop, Chriſt to be there, Fleſh, Blood, and Bone? No, that I do not, ſaid he.

Anno 1556.

Whereupon the Ordinary making ſhort with him, read the Sentence, and ſo condemned the true and Faithful Servant of Chriſt to death, in Saint Margarets Church in Leiceſter; who was burnt, and ſuffered a joyful and glorious Martyrdom, for the teſtimony of righteouſneſs, in the ſame Town of Leiceſter, the year from our Lord above mentioned, 1556. about the 26. of June.

The condemnation and Martyrdom of Tho. Moor. Ex Regiſt. Epiſc. Lincoln.

To this Thomas Moore, we have alſo annexed the Anſwers and Examination of one John Jackſon, before Doctor Cook, one of the Commiſſioners, for that it belongeth much unto the ſame time.

The Examination of John Jackſon, had before Doctor Cook, the 11. day of March, Anno 1556.

FIrſt, when I came before him, he railed on me, and called me Heretick. I anſwered and ſaid, I am no Heretick.

Examination of John Jackſon before Doctor Cook.

Cook. Yes quoth he. For M. Read told me, that thou waſt the rankeſt Heretick of all them in the Kings Bench.

Jackſon. I ſaid, I knew him not.

Cook. No, quoth he? Yes, he examined thee at the Kings Bench.

Jack. I anſwered him, and ſaid, he examined five other, but not me.

Cook. Then anſwer me: what ſayeſt thou to the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar? tell me.

Jack. I anſwered, it is a diffuſe queſtion, to ask me at the firſt daſh, you promiſing to deliver me.

Cook. What an Heretick is this, quoth he?

Jack. I ſaid, it is eaſier to call a Man Heretick, then to prove him one.

Cook. Then he ſaid, What Church art thou of?

The Church.

Jack. What Church, quoth I? I am of the ſame Church that is builded on the Foundation of the Prophets and the Apoſtles, Jeſus Chriſt being the head corner ſtone.

Cook. Thou art an Heretick, quoth he.

Jackſon. Yea, quoth I? how can that be, ſeeing that I am of that Church? I am ſure that you will not ſay that the Prophets and Apoſtles were Hereticks.

The Sacrament of the Altar.

Cook. No, quoth he. But what ſayeſt thou to the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar again? Tell me.

Jackſon. I anſwered him and ſaid, I find it not written.

Cook. No, quoth he? Keeper away with him.

Jack. Yet I tarried there long, and did talk with him, and I ſaid; Sir, I can be content to be tractable, and obedient to the Word of God.

Cook. He anſwered and ſaid to me, that I knew not what the Word of God meant, nor yet whether it were true or not.

Jackſon. I anſwered, and ſaid to him, yea that I do.

Cook. Whereby, quoth he?

Jackſon. Hereby, ſaid I. Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith; Search the Scriptures; for in them you think to have eternal life. For they be they that teſtifie of me.

Cook. This is a wiſe proof, quoth he.

Jack. Is it ſo, quoth I? What ſay you then to theſe words that the Prophet David ſaid? Whatſoever he be that feareth the Lord, he will ſhew him the way that he hath choſen: his Soul ſhall dwell at eaſe, and his ſeed ſhall poſſeſs the land. The ſecrets of the Lord are among them that fear him, and he ſheweth them his covenant.

Cook. Well, quoth he, you ſhall be rid ſhortly one way or other.

Jack. Then I ſaid to him, my life lieth not in mans hands; therefore no Man ſhall do more unto me then God will ſuffer him.

Although they call you Papiſts, yet they judge you not to death.

Cook. No, quoth he? Thou art a ſtubborn and naughty fellow.

Jack. You cannot ſo judg of me, quoth I, except you did ſee ſome evil by me.

Cook. No, quoth he? Why may not I judge thee, as well as thou and thy fellows judge us, and call us Papiſts?

Jack. Why, quoth I? that is no Judgment: but

Chriſt

Anno 1556.

Christ saith; If you refuse me, and receive not my word, you have one that judgeth you. The word that I have spoken unto you now, shall judge you in the last day.

Head of the Church.

Cook. I pray thee tell me, who is the Head of the Congregation?

Jack. I answered, and said, Christ is the Head.

Cook. But who is Head in Earth?

Jack. I said, Christ hath Members here in Earth.

Cook. Who are they, quoth he?

Jack. They, quoth I, that are ruled by the Word of God.

Cook. You are a good fellow, quoth he.

Jack. I am that I am, quoth I.

Cook. Then he said to my Keeper, Have him to Prison again.

Jack. I am contented with that, quoth I; and so we departed. I answered no further in this matter, because I thought he should not have my Blood in a corner. But I hope in the living God, that when the time shall come, before the Congregation I shall shake their building after another manner of fashion. For they build but upon the sand, and their walls be dawbed with untempered mortar, and therefore they cannot stand long.

The build of the Papists be but dawbed walls.

Therefore (good Brothers and Sisters) be of good cheer: for I trust in my God, I and my other prison-fellows shall go joyfully before you, praising God most heartily, that we are counted worthy to be witnesses of his truth. I pray you accept my simple answer, at this time, committing you unto God.

Of this John Jackson, besides these his foresaid Answers and Examination before D. Cook one of the Commissioners, no more as yet came unto our hands:

The Examination of John Newman, Martyr, which is to be referred to his Story before.

John Newman was first apprehended in Kent, dwelling in the Town of Maidstone, and there was examined before D. Thornton Suffragan and others, at Tenterden. From thence he was brought to Boner, and there condemned with Master Denley and Packingham and burned at Saffron Walden, as is before storied. But because his Examinations and Answers before the Suffragan came not then to my hands, I thought here in this place to bestow them, rather then they should utterly be suppressed. And first what his answers were by writing to the said Suffragan after his apprehension, you shall hear by the tenor of his own words, as follow.

The copy of Jo. Newmans words in writing to D. Thornton.

I T may please you to understand, that for the space of all the time of King Edwards Reign, we were diligently instructed with continual Sermons, made by such Men, whose faith, wisdom, learning, and vertuous living was commended unto all Men, under the Kings hand and Seal, and under the hands of the whole Council. These Men taught diligently a long time, perswading us by the allegations of Gods Word, that there was no Transubstantiation, nor corporal presence in the Sacrament. Their Doctrine was not believed of us suddenly, but by their continual preaching, and also by our continual Prayer unto God, that we might never be deceived, but if it were true that God would incline our hearts unto it; and if it were not true, that we might never believe it.

We weighed that they laboured with Gods Word, and we asked the advice of our friends; neither could we find that they Preached false Doctrine. We considered also, as we did learn, that the Kings Grace and his Council, and the most part of all the whole Realm, believed as they taught, because no Man Preached the contrary. Also we know, that the Preachers were commanded by the King, and the Laws of the Realm, to Preach unto us such Doctrine, as was to the Authority of Gods Word agreeable, and none other. And by their diligent setting forth of it, by the Kings Commandment, and the consent of the whole Council, and by the Authority of the Parliament, we embraced it, and received it, as a very infallible truth taught unto us, for the space of seven years. Wherefore until such time as our Consciences are otherwise taught and instructed by Gods Word, we cannot with safeguard of our Consciences take it, as many suppose at this time. And we trust in God, that the Queens merciful Highness; neither yet her most Honourable Council, will in a matter of faith use compulsion or violence, because faith is the gift of God, and cometh not of Man, neither of Mans Laws, neither at such time as Men require it, but at such time as God giveth it.

The Examination and Answers of John Newman, Martyr, before Doctor Thornton, and others.

The Examination and Answers of Jo. Newman.

FIrst, one of the Doctors, or one of the Bench, either the Archdeacon, or Fauced, or some other, whose Name John Newman doth not express, beginneth, asking in this wise.

Doctor. How say you to this? This is my Body, which is given for you.

Newman. It is a figurative speech, one thing spoken, and another meant, as Christ saith, I am a vine, I am a door, I am a stone, &c. Is he therefore a material stone, a vine, or a door?

Doct. This is no figurative speech. For he saith; This is my Body, which is given for you. And so saith he not of the stone, vine, or door; but that is a figurative speech.

This cup is the New Testament, is a figurative speech.

New. Christ saith, This cup is the New Testament in my Blood. If ye will have it so meant, then let them take and eat the Cup.

Doctor. Nay, that is not so meant; so it is a common phrase of speech among our selves: We say to our friend, Drink a Cup of drink, and yet we mean he should drink the drink in the Cup.

New. Why, if ye will have the one so understood, ye must so understand the other.

Doct. Nay, it is a common use of speech, to say drink a Cup of Ale or Beer: and therefore it is no figurative speech.

What is a figurative speech.

New. The often using of a thing, doth not make that thing otherwise then it is: but whersoever one thing is spoken, and another meant, it is a figurative speech.

Doct. Well, we will not stand here about. How say ye by the Real Presence? is not Christs Natural Body there that was born of the Virgin Mary?

New. No, I do not so believe, neither can I so believe; for the Soul of Man doth not feed upon natural things, as the Body doth.

Doct. Why, how then doth it feed?

New. I think the Soul of Man doth feed as the Angels in Heaven, whose feeding is only the pleasure, joy, felicity, and delectation that they have of God; and so the Soul of Man doth feed and eat, through faith, the Body of Christ.

Collins reasoneth with Newman.

Collins. Yea, but if the Body do not feed upon natural things, the Soul cannot continue with the Body: therefore the Body must needs feed upon natural things, that both may live together.

New. I grant it to be true: but yet the Soul doth live otherwise then the Body, which doth perish; therefore natural things do but feed the Body only. I pray you what did Judas receive at the Supper?

Collins. Marry, Judas did receive the very Body of Christ, but it was to his damnation.

Whether Judas received the Body of Christ, or no.

New. Why? was the Devil entred into him before? Then he had both the Devil and Christ in him at one time.

Collins. Nay, the Devil did enter into him afterward.

New. Yea, and before too: what do you think? had he but one Devil? Nay, I think he had rather a legion of Devils at the latter end.

Collins. Well, put case it be so, what say you to that?

New. Marry, if Christ and the Devil were both in Judas at once, I pray you how did they two agree together?

Collins. We grant they were both in Judas at that time; for Christ may be where the Devil is, if he will: but the Devil cannot be where Christ is, except it please Christ.

New. Christ will not be in an unclean person that hath the Devil.

D. Thornton reasoneth with John Newman.

Thornton. Why, will ye not believe that Christ was in Hell? yet ye will grant that the Devil is there; and so might he be in Judas if it pleased him.

New. Christ would not suffer Mary Magdalen to touch touch him, which ſought him at his Grave, and did love him intirely; much leſs he will ſuffer an ungodly man to receive him into his unclean body.

Thornton. Yes, ſeeing God may do all things, he may do what he liſt, and be where he will: And doth not the Pſalmiſt ſay, He is in Hell, and in all places? Why ſhould we then doubt of his being there?

New. Though his Godhead be in all places, yet that is not ſufficient to prove that his Humanity is in all places.

Thorn. No? Do you not believe that God is Omnipotent, and may do all things?

New. I do believe that God is Almighty, and may do all that he will do.

The Omnipotency of Chriſt doth not prove him to be really in the Sacrament.

Thorn. Nay, but if he be Omnipotent, he may do all things, and there is nothing unpoſſible for him to do.

New. I know God is Almighty, and can do all that he will; but he cannot make his Son a Lyar, he cannot deny himſelf, nor can he reſtore Virginity once violated and defiled.

Thorn. What is that to your purpoſe? God doth not defile Virginity; we ſpeak but of things that God doth.

New. Why? will ye have the Humanity of Chriſt in all places, as the Deity is?

Abſurdity in the Popes Doctrine.

Thorn. Yea, he is in all places, as the Deity is, if it pleaſe him.

New. I will promiſe you that ſeemeth to me a very great Hereſie; for Heaven and Earth are not able to contain the Divine Power of God: for it is in all places, as here and in every place; and yet ye will ſay, that whereſoever the Deity is, there is alſo the Humanity; and ſo ye will make him no body, but a phantaſtical body, and not a body indeed.

Thorn. Nay, we do not ſay he is in all places, as the Deity is; but if it pleaſe him, he may be in all places with the Deity.

The Humanity of Chriſt may not be in all places.

New. I promiſe you that ſeemeth to me as great an Hereſie as ever I heard of in my life, and I dare not grant it, leſt I ſhould deny Chriſt to be a very Man, and that were againſt all the Scriptures.

Thorn. Tuſh, what ſhall we ſtand reaſoning with him? I dare ſay he doth not believe that Chriſt came out of his Mother, not opening the Matrice. Do you believe that Chriſt roſe from death, and came thorow the ſtone?

New. I do believe that Chriſt roſe from death, but I do not believe that he came thorow the ſtone, neither doth the Scripture ſo ſay.

Thorn. Lo, how ſay you? he doth not believe that Chriſt came thorow the ſtone: And if he doth not believe this, how ſhall he believe the other? If he could believe this, it were eaſie for him to believe the other.

Note the groſs ignorance of this Suffragan.

New. The Scripture doth not ſay he went thorow the ſtone, but it ſaith the Angels of God came down, and rolled away the ſtone, and for fear of him the Keepers became even as dead men.

Thorn. Ah fool, ah fool! that was becauſe the women ſhould ſee that he was riſen again from death.

New. Well, the Scripture maketh as much for me, as it doth for you, and more too.

Thorn. Well, let us not ſtand any longer about him. Back again to the Real Preſence. How ſay ye? is the Body of Chriſt really in the Sacrament, or no?

New. I have anſwered you already.

Thorn. Well, do ye not believe that he is there really?

New. No, I believe it not.

Thorn. Well, will ye ſtand to it?

New. I muſt needs ſtand to it, till I be perſwaded to a further truth.

Thorn. Nay, ye will not be perſwaded, but ſtand to your own Opinion.

New. Nay, I ſtand not to mine own Opinion, God I take to witneſs, but only to the Scriptures of God, and that can all thoſe that ſtand here witneſs with me, and nothing but the Scriptures: and I take God to witneſs, that I do nothing of preſumption, but that which I do is only in regard of my Conſcience; and if there be a further truth than I ſee, except it appear a truth to me, I cannot receive it as a truth. And ſeeing Faith is the gift of God, and cometh not of man (for it is not you that can give me Faith, nor any man elſe) therefore I truſt ye will bear the more with me, ſeeing it muſt be wrought by God; and when it ſhall pleaſe God to open a further truth to me, I ſhall receive it with all my heart, and embrace it. Anno 1556.

Thornton had many other queſtions, which I did not bear away; but as I do underſtand, theſe are the chiefeſt: as for taunts, fooliſh and unlearned, he lacked none. Praiſe God for his gifts, and God increaſe in us ſtrength.

The Argument of John Newman.

Argument in the ſecond figure.

If the Body of Chriſt were really and bodily in the Sacrament, then whoſoever received the Sacrament, received alſo the Body.
The wicked, receiving the Sacrament, receive not the Body of Chriſt:
Ergo, The Body of Chriſt is not really in the Sacrament.

Argument.

Ca- They which eat the Fleſh, and drink the Blood of Chriſt, dwell in him, and he in them.
meſ- The wicked dwell not in Chriſt, nor he in them:
tres. Ergo, The wicked eat not the Fleſh, nor drink the Blood of Chriſt.

Argument.

Ca- They that have Chriſt dwelling in them, bring forth much fruit. John 15. He that dwelleth in me, and I in him, bringeth forth much fruit, &c.
meſ- The wicked bringeth forth no fruit of goodneſs:
tres. Ergo, They have not Chriſts Body dwelling in them

Argument.

Argument in the third figure.

Da- Where remembrance is of a thing, there is imported the abſence thereof.
ti- Remembrance of Chriſts Body is in the Sacrament; Do this in remembrance of me, &c.
ſi. Ergo, Chriſts Body there is imported to be abſent.

Marry they will ſay, We ſee him not with our outward eyes; but he is commended under the Forms of Bread and Wine: and that that we ſee, is nothing but a Quality or an Accident. But let them ſhew me a Quality or an Accident without a Subſtance, and I will believe them. And thus much concerning Newman's Examinations and Arguments, whoſe Martyrdom is before expreſſed.

The Martyrdom of Joan Waſte, a blind woman, in the Town of Derby.

Auguſt 1. Joan Waſte a blind woman and Martyr.

THe firſt day of Auguſt, in the year above ſpecified, ſuffered likewiſe at the Town of Derby a certain poor honeſt godly woman, being blind from her birth, and unmarried, about the Age of 22. named Joan Waſte, of the Pariſh of Alhallows. Of them that ſate upon this innocent womans blood, the chiefeſt was Ralph Baine Biſhop of the Dioceſs, Dr. Draicot his Chancellor, Sir John Port Knight, Henry Vernon Eſquire, Peter Finch Official of Derby, with the aſſiſtance alſo of divers other, Richard Ward, and William Bembridge the ſame time being Bayliffs of the Town of Derby, &c. Firſt, after the above-named Biſhop and Doctor Draicot had cauſed the ſaid Joan Waſte to be apprehended in the Town of Derby, ſuſpecting her to be guilty of certain Hereſies, ſhe was divers times privily examined, as well in Priſon as out of Priſon, by Finch the Official aforeſaid: After that, brought to publick Examination before the Biſhop; at laſt, was there burnt in Derby, as is aboveſaid. Touching whoſe life, bringing up, and converſation, ſomewhat more amply we mind to diſcourſe, as by faithful relation hath come to my hands.

The life and converſation of Joan Waſte.

Firſt, This Joan Waſte was the daughter of one William Waſte, an honeſt poor man, and by his Science a Barber, who ſometimes alſo uſed to make Ropes. His Wife had the ſame Joan and one other at one birth, and ſhe was born blind. And when ſhe was about

Anno 1556

12. or 14. years old, ſhe learned to knit hoſen and ſleeves, and other things, which in time ſhe could do very well. Furthermore, as time ſerved, ſhe would help her Father to turn ropes, and do ſuch other things as ſhe was able, and in no caſe would be idle. Thus continued ſhe with her Father and Mother, during their lives. After whoſe departure, then kept ſhe with one Roger Waſte her Brother, who in the time of King Edward the fixth, of bleſſed memory, gave her ſelf daily to go to the Church to hear Divine Service read in the vulgar Tongue. And thus by hearing Homilies and Sermons, ſhe became marvellouſly well affected to the Religion then taught. So at length having by her labour gotten and ſaved ſo much money as would buy her a New Teſtament, ſhe cauſed one to be provided for her. And though ſhe was of her ſelf unlearned, and by reaſon of her blindneſs unable to read, yet for the great deſire ſhe had to underſtand, and have printed in her memory the ſayings of the Holy Scriptures contained in the New Teſtament, ſhe acquainted her ſelf chiefly with one John Hurt, then Priſoner in the Common Hall of Derby for debts.

John Waſte drawn by the Spirit of God, to the love of Religion.

The earneſt deſire of Joan Waſte to learn the Scriptures. John Hurt and John Pemerton readers to Joan Waſte.

The ſame John Hurt being a ſober grave Man, of the Age of threeſcore and ten years, by her earneſt entreaty, and being Priſoner, and many times idle and without company, did for his exerciſe daily read unto her ſome one Chapter of the New Teſtament. And if at any time he were otherwiſe occupied or letted through ſickneſs, ſhe would repair unto one John Pemerton Clerk of the Pariſh Church of All-Saints in the ſame Town of Derby, or to ſome other perſon which could read, and ſometime ſhe would give a penny or two (as ſhe might ſpare) to ſuch perſons as would not freely read unto her, appointing unto them aforehand how many Chapters of the New Teſtament they ſhould read, or how often they ſhould repeat one Chapter upon a price.

A notable gift of God in a blind Woman.

Joan Waſte both blind and unlearned, yet was perfect in the Scriptures.

Moreover, in the ſaid Joan Waſte this was notorious, that ſhe being utterly blind, could notwithſtanding, without a guide, go to any Church within the ſaid Town of Derby, or at any other place or perſon, with whom ſhe had any ſuch exerciſe. By the which exerciſe ſhe ſo profited, that ſhe was able not only to recite many Chapters of the New Teſtament without Book, but alſo could aptly impugn, by divers places of Scriptures, as well ſin, as ſuch abuſes in Religion, as then were too much in uſe in divers and ſundry Perſons.

As this Godly Woman thus daily increaſed in the knowledge of Gods Holy Word, and no leſs in her life expreſſed the vertuous fruits and exerciſe of the ſame: Not long after, through the fatal death of bleſſed King Edward followed the woful ruin of Religion, in the Reign of Queen Mary his ſiſter. In which alteration, notwithſtanding the general backſliding of the greateſt part and multitude of the whole Realm into the old Papiſm again, yet this poor blind Woman, continuing in a conſtant Conſcience, proceeded ſtill in her former exerciſe, both being zealous in that ſhe had learned, and alſo refuſing to communicate in Religion with thoſe which taught contrary Doctrine to that ſhe before had learned in King Edwards time, as it is above declared.

For the which ſhe was called and convented before the foreſaid Biſhop and Doctor Draicot, with divers other called in to bear witneſs.

Articles miniſtred unto her.

The Articles objected againſt Joan Waſte.

THe Articles miniſtred unto her, and wherewith ſhe was charged, were theſe: Firſt, that ſhe did hold the Sacrament of the Altar to be but only a memory or repreſentation of Chriſts Body, and material Bread and Wine, but not his Natural Body, unleſs it were received. And that it ought not to be reſerved from time to time over the Altar, but immediately to be received, &c.

Item, That ſhe did hold, in receiving of the Sacrament of the Altar, ſhe did not receive the ſame Body that was born of the Virgin Mary, and ſuffered upon the Croſs for our redemption, &c.

Item, She did hold, that Chriſt at his laſt Supper did not bleſs the Bread that he had then in his hands, but was bleſſed himſelf, and by the vertue of the words of Conſecration, the ſubſtance of the Bread and Wine is not converted & turned into the ſubſtance of the Body & Blood of Chriſt.

Item, That ſhe did grant that ſhe was of the Pariſh of All-Hallows in Derby, &c.

Item, That all and ſingular the premiſſes are true and notorious by publick report and fame, &c.

The Anſwer of Joan Waſte to the Articles.

Whereunto ſhe anſwered, that ſhe believed therein ſo much as the Holy Scripture taught her; and according to that ſhe had heard Preached unto her by divers learned Men. Whereof ſome ſuffered Impriſonment, and other ſome ſuffered death for the ſame Doctrine. Amongſt whom ſhe named, beſide other, Dr. Taylor, who ſhe ſaid, took it of his Conſcience, that that Doctrine which he taught was true, and asked of them, if they would do ſo in like caſe for their Doctrine: which if they would not, ſhe deſired them for Gods ſake not to trouble her, being a blind, poor, and unlearned Woman, with any further talk, ſaying (by Gods aſſiſtance) that ſhe was ready to yield up her Life in that Faith, in ſuch ſort as they ſhould appoint.

Well argued. Becauſe Chriſt is omnipotent, Ergo, there is no Bread in the Sacrament.

And yet notwithſtanding being preſt by the ſaid Biſhop and Doctor Draicot, with many Arguments of Chriſts omnipotency, as, why was not Chriſt able as well to make the Bread his Body, as to turn Water into Wine, raiſe Lazarus from the dead? and ſuch other like Arguments; and many times being threatned with grievous impriſonments, torments, and death: The poor Woman thus being, as it were, half aſtonied through their terrors and threats, and deſirous (as it ſeemed) to prolong her Life, offered unto the Biſhop then preſent, that if he would before that company, take it upon his Conſcience, that that Doctrine which he would have her to believe concerning the Sacrament was true, and that he would at the dreadful day of Judgment anſwer for her therein (as the ſaid Doctor Taylor in divers of his Sermons did offer) ſhe would then further anſwer them.

The Biſhop and his Chancellor durſt not take upon their conſcience to anſwer before God for their Doctrine.

Whereunto the Biſhop anſwered, he would. But Doctor Draicot his Chancellor, hearing that, ſaid, My Lord, you know not what you do, you may in no caſe anſwer for an Heretick. And immediately he asked the poor Woman whether ſhe would recant or no, and ſaid ſhe ſhould anſwer for her ſelf. Unto whoſe ſayings the Biſhop alſo reformed himſelf.

Sentence pronounced againſt Joan Waſte.

The poor Woman perceiving this, anſwered again, that if they refuſed to take of their Conſcience that it was true they would have her to believe, ſhe would anſwer no further, but deſired them to do their pleaſure, and ſo after certain circumſtances, they pronounced Sentence againſt her, and delivered her unto the Bailiffs of the ſaid Town of Derby aforenamed. Who after they had kept her about a Month or five weeks, at length there came unto them a Writ De hæretico comburendo; by vertue whereof they were appointed by the ſaid Biſhop to bring her to the Pariſh Church of All-Saints at a day appointed, where Doctor Draicot ſhould make a Sermon.

The Writ brought down for the burning of Joan Waſte.

When the day and time was come that this Innocent Martyr ſhould ſuffer, firſt cometh to the Church Doctor Draicot, accompanied with divers Gentlemen, as M. Thomas Powthread, Maſter Henry Vernon, Maſter Dethick of Newal, and divers other. This done, and all things now in a readineſs, at laſt the poor blind creature and Servant of God was brought and ſet before the Pulpit, where the ſaid Doctor being entred into his Sermon, and there inveighing againſt many matters, which he called Hereſies, declared unto the people that that Woman was condemned for denying the Sacramens of the Altar to be the very Body and Blood of Chriſt really and ſubſtantially, and was thereby cut off from the Body of the Catholick Church; and ſaid, that ſhe was not only blind of her bodily eyes, but alſo blind in the eyes of her Soul. And he ſaid, that as her Body ſhould be preſently conſumed with material fire, ſo her Soul ſhould be burned in Hell with everlaſting fire, as ſoon as it ſhall be ſeparated from the Body, and there remain world without end, and ſaid, it was not lawful for the people to pray for her: and ſo with many terrible threats he made an end of his Sermon, and commanded the Bayliffs and thoſe Gentlemen to ſee her executed. And the Sermon thus ended, eftſoons the Bleſſed Servant of God was carried away from the ſaid Church, to a place called the Windmil pit, near unto the ſaid Town, & holding the forſaid Roger Waſte her Brother by the hand ſhe prepared her ſelf, and deſired fired the people to pray with her; and ſaid ſuch Prayers as ſhe before had learned, and cried upon Chriſt to have mercy upon her, as long as Life ſerved. In this mean ſeaſon, the ſaid Doctor Draicot went to his Inn, for great ſorrow of her death, and there laid him down, and ſlept, during all the time of her execution. And thus much of Joan Waſte.

Now, foraſmuch as I am not ignorant (Faithful Reader) that this, and other Stories more, ſet forth of the Martyrs, ſhall not lack carpers and markers enow, ready to ſeek all holes and corners how to defame the memory of Gods good Saints, and to condemn theſe Hiſtories, of lies and untruths, eſpecially Hiſtorics wherein they ſee their ſhameful acts and unchriſtian cruelty detected and brought to light, therefore for better confirmation of this Hiſtory above written, and to ſtop the Mouths of ſuch Momes, this ſhall be to admoniſh all and ſingular readers hereof, that the diſcourſe of this poor blind womans life and death, in ſuch ſort as is above prefixed, hath been confeſſed to be very true, by divers perſons of worthy credit, and yet living; and alſo hath been ſpecially peruſed and examined by W. Bainbridge, before mentioned, Bayliff then of Darby; who as well of his own knowledge, as by ſpecial inquiry and conference by him made, with divers others, hath certified us the ſame to be undoubted; beſide the teſtimonial of John Cadman, Curate of the ſaid Town, and of other alſo, upon whoſe honeſty well known, and their report herein nothing differing from ſuch as were beſt acquainted with that matter, I have been here the more bold to commit this Story to poſterity, for all good Men to conſider, and judge upon.

Septemb. 8. The Martyrdom of Edw. Sharp at Briſtow.

ABout the beginning of the next Month following, which was September, a certain godly, aged, devout perſon, and zealous of the Lords glory, born in Wiltſhire, named Edward Sharp, of the age of forty years or thereabout, was condemned at Briſtow to the like Martyrdom, where he conſtantly and manfully perſiſting in the juſt quarrel of Chriſts Goſpel, for miſliking and renouncing the Ordinances of the Romiſh Church, was tried as pure Gold, and made a lively Sacrifice in the Fire: in whoſe death, as in the death of all his other Saints, the Lord be glorified and thanked for his great grace of conſtancy; to whom be praiſe for ever, Amen.

Four ſuffered at Mayfield.

Septemb. 24 The Martyrdom of 4. at Mayfield in Suſſex.

NExt after the Martyrdom of Edward Sparp, above ſaid, followed four, which ſuffered at Mayfield, in Suſſex, the 24. day of September, Ann. 1556. of whoſe Names, two we find recorded, and the other two we yet know not, and therefore according to our Regiſter, hereunder they be ſpecified, as we find them.

John Hart.
Thomas Ravenſdale.
A Shoomaker.
And a Currier.

Which ſaid four, being at the place where they ſhould ſuffer, after they had made their prayer, and were at the Stake ready to abide the force of the Fire, they conſtantly and joyfully yielded their Lives for the teſtimony of the Glorious Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, unto whom be praiſe for ever and ever, Amen.

Septemb. 25. The Martyrdom of a Carpenter at Briſtow.

The day after the Martyrdom of theſe forſaid at Mayfield, which was the 25. of September, Annn. 1556. was a young man (which by ſcience was a Carpenter, whoſe Name we have not) put to death, for the like teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt, at Briſtow, where he yielding himſelf to the torments of the Fire, gave up his Life into the hands of the Lord, with ſuch joyful conſtancy and triumph, as all the Church of Chriſt have juſt cauſe to praiſe God for him.

The Martyrdom of John Horn and a Woman.

Anno 1556.

NOw not long after the death of the ſaid young man at Briſtow, in the ſame Month were two more Godly Martyrs conſumed by Fire at Wotton Underhedge in Gloceſterſhire, whoſe Names are above ſpecified, which died very gloriouſly in a conſtant Faith, to the terror of the wicked, and comfort of the Godly. So gloriouſly did the Lord work in them, that death unto them was Life, and Life with a blotted Conſcience was death.

Septemb 27. The Martyrdom of John Horn, and a Woman at Wotton Underhedge in Gloceſterſhire.

A pittiful Story concerning the unmerciful handling of William Dangerfield, and Joan his Wife being in Child-Bed, taken out of her Houſe, with her ſucking Infant of fourteen days old, and laid in the common jayl amongſt thieves and murtherers.

The cruel handling of W. Dangerfield and Joan his Wife.

WHen I had written and finiſhed the Story of the Garnſey Women, with the young Infant there with them burned, and alſo had paſſed the burning of the poor blind woman Joan Waſte at Darby, I well hoped I ſhould have found no more ſuch Stories of unmerciful cruelty ſhewed upon ſilly Women with their Children and young Infants: but now coming to the perſecution of Gloceſterſhire about the parts of Briſtow, I find another Story of ſuch unmercifulneſs ſhewed againſt a Woman in Child-Bed, as far from all charity and humanity, as hath been any other Story yet hitherto rehearſed, as by the ſequel hereof may appear.

In the Pariſh of Wotton Underhedge, not far from Briſtow, was dwelling one W. Dangerfield, a right honeſt and godly poor Man, who by Joan Dangerfield his Wife had nine Children, and ſhe now lying in Child-Bed of the tenth. This William after he had been abroad from his houſe a certain ſpace, for fear of perſecution hearing that his Wife was brought to Bed, repaired home to viſit her, as natural duty required, and to ſee his Children, ſhe being now delivered four days before.

The return of this Man was not ſo ſoon known to ſome of his unkind and uncharitable Neighbours, but they incenſed with the Spirit of Papiſtry, eſtſoons beſet the houſe about, and there took the ſame William Dangerfield, and carried him to priſon, and ſo at length he was brought to the Biſhop, being then Brooks, in whoſe cruel handling he remained a certain ſpace, ſo long, till his Legs almoſt were fretted off with Irons.

W. Dangerfield apprehended in his own houſe.

No charity in Popery to be noted.

After the apprehenſion of the Husband, the Wife likewiſe was taken, with her young born Child, being but fourteen days old (as is ſaid) out of her Child-Bed, and carried into the Common Jayl, and there placed amongſt thieves and murtherers, where both ſhe and her poor innocent found ſo ſmall charity amongſt the Catholick Men, that ſhe never could come to any Fire, but was driven to warm the clothes that ſhe ſhould put about the Child in her boſom.

Joan the Wife of W. Dangerfield taken with her young infant out of Child-Bed, and had to priſon.

In the mean ſeaſon while they lay thus incloſed in ſeveral Priſons, the Husband and the Wife, the Biſhop beginneth to practiſe not with the Woman firſt, as the Serpent did with Eve, but with the Man, craftily deceiving his ſimplicity with fair glozing words, falſly perſwading him that his Wife had recanted, and asking him, wherefore he ſhould more ſtand in his own conceit, then ſhe being as well learned as he, and ſo ſubtlely drew out a form of recantation, wherewith he deceived the ſimple Soul. Whereunto after that he had once granted that he would conſent, although he had not yet recanted they ſuffered him to go to his Wife, where ſhe lay in the Common Jayl, Dangerfield made to believe falſly, that his Wife had recanted.

Dangerfield upon hope of his Wives recantation, conſenced to the Biſhop.

Then they with melting hearts opening their minds one to another, when he ſaw his Wife not releaſed, and perceiving that he had not done well, he declared unto her the whole matter, how falſly he was circumvented by the ſubtle flatterings of the Biſhop, bearing him in hand, that certainly ſhe had recanted: and thus deceiving me (ſaid he) brought this unto me, and ſo plucked out of his boſom the Copy of the recantation, whereunto he had granted his promiſe. At the ſight whereof the Wife hearing what her Husband had done, her heart clave a ſunder, ſaying, Alack, thus long have we continued one, and hath Satan ſo prevailed, to cauſe you to break your firſt vow made Anno 1557. made to Christ in Baptism? And so departed the said William and Joan his wife, with what hearts the Lord knoweth. Then began he not a little to bewail his promise made to the Bishop, and to make his Prayer to Almighty God, desiring him that he might not live so long as to call evil good, and good evil; or light darkness, or darkness light; and so departed he home toward his house: where, by the way homeward (as it is affirmed) he took his death, and shortly after departed, according to his prayer, after he had endured in Prison twelve weeks.

The prayer of Dangerfield to God. The death of the Husband.

After this, Joan his wife continued still in Prison with her tender Infant, till at last she was brought before that Bishop to be examined. Whereunto what her Answers were, it is not certainly known. Howbeit most like it is whatsoever they were, they pleased not the Bishop, as appeared by his ire increased against the poor woman, and her long continuance in the Prison, together with her tender Babe, which also remained with her in the Jayl, partaker of her Martyrdom, so long as her milk would serve to give it suck, till at length the child, being starved for cold and famine, was sent away when it was past all remedy, and so shortly after died: And not long after the Mother also followed. Besides, the old woman, which was Mother of the Husband, of the age of eighty years and upward, who being left in the House after their apprehension, for lack of comfort there perished also.

The young Infant famished in Prison. The martyrdom of the Mother.

The death of the old Woman.

And thus have ye in one Story the death of four together; first of the old Woman, then of the Husband, after that of the innocent Child, and lastly of the Mother. What became of the other nine Children, I am not perfectly sure, but that I partly understand, that they were all undone by the same.

This Story is reported and testified as well by others, as namely by Mrs. Bridges, dwelling in the same Town, and partaker then of the like Afflictions, and hardly escaped with her life.

A Shoo-maker suffering in Northampton.

Octob. 11. The martyrdom of a Shoo-maker of Northampton.

IN the Month of October following, was burned at the Town of Northampton a Shoo-maker, a true Witness and Disciple of the Lord, who according to the grace of God given unto him, cleaving fast to the sound Doctrine and preaching of Gods Word, renounced the untrue and false coloured Religion of the Romish See, wherein many a good man hath been drowned.

Octob. 18. Three died in the Castle of Chichester, Confessors. John Hooke Martyr.

After whom, not long after in the same Month of October, died also in the Castle of Chichester three godly Confessors, being there in Bonds for the like cause of Christs Gospel, who also should have suffered the like Martyrdom, had not their natural death, or rather (as it is to be suspected) the cruel handling of the Papists, made them away before, and afterward buried them in the field.

I read moreover that in this present year, to wit, Anno 1556. was burnt one called Hooke, a true Witness of the Lords truth at Chester.

Five famished in Canterbury Castle, by the unmerciful tyranny of the Papists, about the beginning of November.

Bp. Boner, Nich. Harpsfield, D. Dunning, three fore Persecutors.

AS among all the Bishops, Boner Bishop of London, principally excelled in persecuting the poor Members and Saints of Christ; so of all Archdeacons, Nicholas Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury (as may by mans sight appear) was the forest, and of least Compassion (only Dunning of Norwich excepted) by whose unmerciful Nature and agrest Disposition, very many were put to death in that Dioceis of Canterbury, not only in the bloody time of that Queen, but some also in the blessed beginning of this our most renowned Queen that now is, as by the grace of Christ hereafter shall appear.

Persecution in Kent.

Of those that suffered in Queen Maries time within the aforesaid Dioceis of Canterbury, some be recited already, with the order and form set down of such Articles as then were most commonly ministred to the Examinates by Thornton, Suffragan of Dover, and the said Nicholas Harpsfield, and others, as before in the Volume of this History may appear.

Now to proceed in order and course of time where we left, next followeth the Month of November.

15. Martyrs and Confessors together prisoners in Canterbury.

In the beginning whereof were together in the Castle of Canterbury fifteen godly and innocent Martyrs, of which number not one escaped with their life, but either were burned, or else famished in Prison. Of the which two sorts, which is the easier death, God knoweth, it is hard to judge. Notwithstanding, the truth is, that of these fifteen, ten were burned and suffered in the fire, of whom in the next Book more shall follow hereafter, the Lord willing. The other five were pined and famished most unmercifully in the streight Prison, of whom we have here presently to intreat. Whose names were these:

Five Confessors and Martyrs famished in Prison.

1. John Clark.
2. Dunston Chittenden.
3. William Foster of Stone.
4. Alice, Potkins wife of Staplehurst.
5. John Archer of Crambroke, Weaver.

Which two were yet uncondemned.

These were condemned to be burned.

Mr. Foster, Alice Potkin, John Archer, died after their Condemnation.

Of these five Prisoners, the first two were uncondemned, the other three last were condemned, and should have been burned, but suffered no less torments then if they had abided the fire, being macerate and pined to death by Famine. What their Articles and Answers were, I need not here to recite, seeing all they, in the time of Queen Mary, commonly suffered for one manner and sort of cause, that is, for holding against the seven Sacraments, against the Reality of Christs being in his Supper, for speaking against the Church of Rome, and determinations of the same, against Images set up and worshipped in the Church, for not coming to Church, and other like, &c.

W. Foster Martyr. His Answer to the Articles.

First, William Foster, answering to these and like Articles, said, That he believed well in all the Articles of the Creed; but to believe that there be more Sacraments then two, and to pray to Saints either to profit us, or to pray for Souls in Purgatory to profit them, that Faith and Works do justifie, or to allow the Popish Ceremonies in the Church, that he denied. Moreover he said, to carry Candles upon Candlemas-day, were as good for him, as to carry a Dung-fork, and that it is as necessary to carry the Gallows about, if his Father were hanged, as the Cross. To come to the Church he cannot, said he, with a safe Conscience. Concerning Fish-days and Flesh-days, he granted it good to put difference therein, except where necessity required the contrary.

Carrying about the Cross. Necessity always excused in matters indifferent.

W. Foster apprehended by Sir Tho. Moyle.

This William Foster was a Labouring man, of the age of fourty years. He was apprehended and imprisoned by Sir Thomas Moyle Kt.

Mother Potkins, Martyr, troubled by W. Roberts.

Alice Potkins for the like Confession, was condemned to be burned, for that she was not, neither would be confessed to the Priest, for that she received not the Sacrament of the Altar, because she would not pray to Saints, nor creep to the Cross, &c. Being demanded of her age, she said that she was 49. years old, according to her old age; and according to her young age, since she learned Christ, she was of one years age, and was committed by Mr. Roberts to Prison.

Alice Potkins in Christ but one year old.

The Answer of John Archer, Martyr.

The Answer and Confession of John Archer of Crambroke was much in like sort. And although certain of these upon ignorant simplicity swerved a little in the number of Sacraments, some granting one Sacrament, that is, the body of Christ hanging upon the Cross, some more, some less, &c. yet in the principal matter touching the Doctrine of Salvation for Faith to stay upon, and in disagreeing from the dreaming determinations of the Popish Church, they most agreed. Concerning the not praying to Saints; and for the Dead in Purgatory; for not creeping to the Cross, for Faith only to justifie; for taking of an Oath, and other such like, he granted as the other had done. This Father Archer, by his Occupation a Weaver of the Town of Crambroke, of the age of fifty years, was attached and imprisoned by Sir John Gilford Kt. And thus have ye the Cause and Imprisonment of these five godly Prisoners. Now as touching the cruelty of their death, that ye shall not surmise the suspicion or relation thereof to proceed of my self, you shall hear their own testimony and certification by their own Letter, thrown out of the Prison, concerning the unmerciful dealing of the Catholick Tyrants in famishing them, as is aforesaid. The Words and Copy of their Letter is this.

Sir John Gilford committed Father Archer to Prison.

The Copy of a Letter written and caſt out of the Caſtle of Canterbury by the Priſoners there in Bonds for Gods Word, declaring how the Papiſts went about to famiſh them to death; of the which Company five were famiſhed among them already.

The Priſoners Letter, declaring how they were handled and famiſhed in Priſon.

BE it known to all men that ſhall read, or hear read theſe our Letters, that we the poor Priſoners of the Caſtle of Canterbury for Gods Truth, are kept and lye in cold Irons, and our Keepers will not ſuffer any meat to be brought to us to comfort us. And if any man do bring us any thing, as bread, butter, cheeſe, or any other food, the ſaid Keeper will charge them that ſo bring us any thing, except mony or rayment, to carry it them again; or elſe if he do receive any food of any for us, he doth keep it for himſelf, and he and his ſervants do ſpend it, ſo that we have nothing thereof; and thus the Keeper keepeth away our victuals from us. Inſomuch that there are four of us Priſoners there for Gods Truth, famiſhed already, and thus is it his mind to famiſh us all: and we think he is appointed thereunto by the Biſhops and Prieſts, and alſo of the Juſtices, ſo to famiſh us, and not only us of the ſaid Caſtle, but alſo all other Priſoners in other Priſons for the like cauſe to be alſo famiſhed: notwithſtanding we write not theſe our Letters, to that intent we might not afford to be famiſhed for the Lord Jeſus ſake, but for this cauſe and intent, that they, having no law ſo to famiſh us in Priſon, ſhould not do it privily, but that the Murtherers hearts ſhould be openly known to all the world, that all men may know of what Church they are, and who is their Father. Out of the Caſtle of Canterbury.

The trouble and vexation of good people in the Dioceſs of Lichfield.

Dr. Baine, Dr. Draicut, his Chancellor in Lichfield, cruel Perſecutors.

THeſe foreſaid Months of September, November, and December, as they were troubleſome to divers other places, and eſpecially to the Dioceſs of Canterbury, by reaſon of the Archdeacon above named; ſo likewiſe they brought no little buſineſs in the Country to Lichfield and Coventry, by a cruel Biſhop there, called Ralph Baine, and a more cruel Chancellor named Doctor Draicot, through the fierce Inquiſition of whom great ſtir was there among the People, being called to examination of their Faith, and many cauſed to bear Fagots. Who, although they were not put to the torment of death, yet becauſe it may appear what a number there is in the Countries of England abroad, which in their hearts have a miſliking of the Popes Romiſh Laws and Religion, if for fear they durſt utter their minds, I thought to make a rehearſal of their names, which in the foreſaid Dioceſs of Coventry and Lichfield, were taken in ſuſpicion, and examined for their Religion.

The names of them that bare Fagots in the Dioceſs of Lichfield and Coventry.

And firſt amongſt them that were detected and enjoyned to the Popiſh Penance, that is, to bear a Fagot, Candle, and Beads about in Proceſſion, were Agnes Foreman, detected, examined, and by witneſs convicted, and bare a Fagot the 12th of September. Likewiſe Margery Kirry, Thomas Norris, Tho. Stiffe, Will. Kaime, Robert Katrenes, Tho. Smith, John Borſley the younger. Item, John Waterhouſe, againſt whom came in witneſs and accuſers Richard Caterbanke, J. Edge, William Smith, Robert Cooke, laying againſt him for ſeldom coming to the Church, for giving no reverence at the elevation of the Sacrament, but looking upon his Book, for not kiſſing the Pax, &c. Robert Biſſel, Leonard Weſt, Richard Baily of the Pariſh of Whiteacre.

Theſe were deprived.

Theſe forenamed perſons, with many more following in the next year after, although they did ſubſcribe and relent through fear of death; yet for this cauſe I do here recite them, that by them it might appear, what a number there were, not only in the Country of Lichfield, but alſo in other parts, in heart ſet againſt the Popes proceedings, if that Fear rather than Conſcience had not compelled them to the contrary.

The Concluſion of this Eleventh Book, with a brief Story of Sir John Cheeke, &c.

The Concluſion of the 11th Book.

AND thus have ye the whole Perſecution of this year declared, which was the year of our Lord 1556, and the fourth of Queen Maries Reign, with the Names and Cauſes of all them which ſuffered Martyrdom within the compaſs of the ſaid year: the number of all which, ſlain and martyred in divers places of England at ſundry times this year, came to above 84. Perſons, whereof many were Women, Wives, Widows, and Maidens; beſides them which otherwiſe by ſecret practiſe were made away, or driven out of Goods and Houſes, or out of the Realm, or elſe within the Realm were put to Penance and coacted by forcible violence to Recant, ſave only that I have omitted the Story of Sir John Cheeke, Kt. and Schoolmaſter ſometime of K. Edward. The worthineſs of which man deſerveth much to be ſaid of him; but his fall would rather be covered in ſilence and oblivion. Only to note a word or two of a few things to the preſent Story moſt principally appertaining, it ſhall ſuffice.

84. Martyrs and above in this year 1556. put to death in this Realm.

A brief declaration of Mr. Cheeks Recantation.

Firſt Mr. Cheeke being in the Country of Germany, out of all danger of Perſecution, with many more of his own Country-men and Acquaintance, was not only in Safety, but alſo with Reputation accordingly eſteemed among the Germans, and alſo well placed in the City of Strausbourge. Where if he had contented himſelf to have remained, rather giving place to time, then to preſume upon Adventures, peradventure it had been better with him. But what fatal inſtigation wrought in his mind I know not. In the end ſo it fell, that he would needs take his Journey with Sir Peter Carew, from High Germany unto Bruxels, and that (as I have credibly heard of them which knew ſomewhat) not without the forecaſting of his adventured Journey by the conſtellation of the Stars, and diſpoſition of the Heavens above. For as he was a man famouſly expert, and travelled in the knowledge of ſundry Arts and Sciences; ſo was he a little too much addicted to the curious practiſing of this Star Divinity, which we call Aſtrology. But howſoever it was, or whatſoever it was that the Stars did promiſe him, truth was, that men here in earth kept little promiſe with him. For having (as it is ſaid) King Philips ſafe conduct to paſs and repaſs, and that by the means (as I find) of the Lord Paget, and Sir John Maſ. pledging for his ſafeguard King Philips fidelity, he came to Bruxels to ſee the Queens Ambaſſadors: and having brought the Lord Paget on his way toward England, in the return between Bruxels and Antwerp he was taken with Sir Peter Carew by the Provoſt Marſhal, ſpoiled of their Horſes, and clapped into a Cart, their Legs, Arms and bodies tied with Haltars to the body of the Cart, and ſo ſhipped being blindfold under the Hatches, and ſo brought to the Tower of London.

Aſtrology.

Mr. Cheeke and Sir Peter Carew apprehended in their Journey to Antwerp.

Thus

Anno 1557.

Thus the good man being intrapped, and in the hands now of his Enemies, had but one of these two ways to take, either to change his Religion, or to change his life, other remedy with those holy Catholicks there was none. Neither could his Conscience excuse him, nor Truth defend him, nor Learning help him.

Mr. Fecknam speaketh for Mr. Cheeke.

Albeit Mr. Fecknam, whether by the Queen suborned, or upon his own Devotion or Friendship toward his old Acquaintance, took upon him the Defence and Commendation of Mr. Cheek, speaking in his behalf: yet no Mercy could be had with the Queen, but he must needs Recant, and so did he. The Copy of whose Recantation prescribed unto him, because it is known and in the hands of divers, it needeth not here to be expressed.

The death and repentance of Sir John Cheeke.

Then after this Recantation, he was through the crafty handling of the Catholicks, allured first to dine and company with them, at length drawn unawares to sit in place, whereas the poor Martyrs were brought before Boner and other Bishops to be condemned; the remorse whereof so mightily wrought in his heart, that not long after he left this mortal life. Whose fall, although it was full of Infirmity, yet his rising again by Repentance was great, and his end comfortable, the Lord be praised.

THE TWELFTH BOOK:

CONTAINING

The bloody Doings and Persecutions of the Adversaries, against the faithful and true Servants of Christ, with the particular Processes and Names of such as were put to slaughter from the beginning of January 1557. and the fifth year of Queen Mary.

The order and manner of the Cardinals Visitation in Cambridge, with the condemning, taking up, and burning the Bones and Books of Bucer and Paulus Phagius, Anno 1557. January 9.

Visitation of Cambridge, with the burning of Martin Bucer's & Paulus Phagius's bones.

CArdinal Poole, three years after his return into England, having somewhat withdrawn his mind from other Affairs of the Realm, and having in all points established the Romish Religion, began to have an eye to the University of Cambridge, which place among other, specially seemed to have need of Reformation out of hand. To perform this charge were chosen Cuthbert Scot, not long before consecrated Bishop of Chester, Nicholas Ormanet an Italian, Arch-priest of the People of Bodolon, in the Diocese of Vernon, professed in both the Laws, and bearing the name of the Popes Datary, Thomas Watson, elected Bishop of Lincoln, John Christopherson, elected Bishop of Chichester, and Henry Cole Provost of the College of Eaton. There was good cause why the matter was especially committed to these persons. For as touching Ormanet, it is well known that he was a man of much estimation with Julius the third, at that time Bishop of Rome, and was appointed to come into England with Cardinal Poole, because without his knowledge (as in whom he put his chief trust and confidence) the Bishop would have nothing done that was of any importance or weight.

The Inquisitors.

These persons thus appointed (in the mean while as the Visitors were addressing themselves to their Journey) sent their Letters with the Cardinals Citation before to Doctor Andrew Pern, Vice-Chancellor then of Cambridge, with the other Commissioners associate, commanding him to warn all the Graduates of the University, in their Name, to be in a readiness against the 11th day of January, betwixt eight and ten of the Clock, in the Church of S. Mary the Virgin: willing him especially to be there himself in Presence, and also to set forward all the residue, to whose charge it belonged, that they should search out all Statutes, Books, Priviledges, and Monuments appertaining to the University, or to any of the Colledges, or finally to any of themselves, and these to present the same before them at the day appointed, and every man to appear there personally: for they would not fail, but be there at the same time, to lay before them such things as should seem necessary to this charge of reforming the University, and further to give charge of all such things as should seem most for the profit and behoof of the same, together with such things as were to be done on their part, according as should seem most agreeable to the Decrees of the Canon Law.

A Citation sent before to Dr. Andrew Pern, Vice-Chancellor.

This Citation of the Cardinal, being brought to Cambridge by Mr. Bullock, was first exhibited in the Convocation House of Regents, and there openly read by the Orator of the University the 11. of December.

Preparation in Cambridge toward the Visitation.

After this, upon the 24. of December, which was Christmas-Even, the Vice-Chancellor with the Heads of the Houses, meeting together in the Schools, it was there concluded, that the Visitors charges should be born by the University and Colledges (which then cost the University an hundred pound thick) and also that no Master of any Colledge should suffer any of the Fellows, Scholars, or Ministers to go forth of the Town, but to return before the Visitation.

On Friday the eighth of January, the Queens Commissioners, videlicet, Dr. Perne Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Segewicke, Dr. Harvy, Mr. Franck, Kust, and another who is here nameless, and also Sir James Dyer, the Recorder, Mr. Chapman, Evered sitting together in the Hall, certain were there called by the appointment of L. Hawes, and charge given what should be done. And first the Commission was read. Then were all the High-Constables called to bring in their Precepts, and sworn. Also two of every Parish of ten or twelve hundreds, were sworn to inquire of Heresie, Lollardy, Conspiracy, Seditious Words, Tales, and Rumours against the King and Queen. Item, For Heretical and Seditious Books, for negligences and misdemeanor in the Church, for observation of Ceremonies, for Ornaments, and Stock of the Church.

The cause why the Reformation was taken in hand.

We said at the first, that the Cardinal thought the University to have need of Reformation. The reason why he should think so, was this; either because the same of long continuance since any man could remember, had cast off the yoke of the Bishop of Rome, and cleaved to the wholesom Doctrine of the Gospel; or else by reason that both for the late Schism, not yet worn out of memory, and for the Doctrine of Martin Bucer, who not long before openly in the said University interpreted holy Scripture, they saw many so sore corrupted and spotted with this infection, that (even as when fire is spread in a Town) unless a speedy remedy were adhibited out of hand, it were not possible to their thinking, to quench it many years after. Who also feared (if it were not looked to in time) lest this mischief should take root, and by little and little infect all the Members next unto it, which yet were whole and sound.

Anno 1556.

This was the year of our Lord 1556. To the intent therefore to make a salve for this sore, the Inquisitors, of whom we spake before, came unto Cambridge the ninth day of January. And as they were yet in their Journey, and far from the Town, divers of the Masters and Presidents of the Colledges met them, and brought them courteously, first into the Town, and after to their Lodgings. They were entertained in Trinity Colledge by Mr. John Christopherson Master of the same House, and lately before elected Bishop of Chichester. Notwithstanding they were delired, some to one place, and some to another, as occasion served, either to do their duties, or to shew their good wills: Cole to the Kings Colledge, and Doctor Watson to S. Johns. But whether it were for the acquaintance of Christopherson, or for the largeness of the House, which seemed most convenient for their purpose, they all took up their Lodgings in the said Colledge with Mr. Christopherson.

The coming of the Inquisitors, and of their entertainment.

Mr. Christopherson Master of Trinity Colledge, Bp. elect of Chichester.

At their coming thither an Oration was made by a Fellow of the House, who in the name of all the rest, with long protestation declared that they were most heartily welcome thither, and that He and his Fellows gave them great thanks, that it had pleased their Lordships to have so good opinion of them, as to chuse their house especially to lodge in, whereby they had both incouraged them to stand in hope of some further Benevolence towards them, and also done great worship to their Colledge by their being there: wherefore they should look at their hand again for as much duty and reverence, as lay in their power to perform.

An Oration gratulatory at their coming thither.

To this Oration Watson made answer, That this forward and earnest good wills and minds of theirs, in doing such courtesie, was right thankfully taken, both of him, and his, exhorting them to continue stedfastly in the same, and to proceed also when need should require: for it was so far from any of their thoughts, to stop them in this their race, that they would rather haste them forward to run through more speedily, being not without good cause perswaded to conceive good hope of their Benevolence towards them, in as much as they would do for them, whatsoever might turn to their profit and commodity.

Watson answereth to the Oration.

This day, for so much as it was toward Evening e're they came, and the Sun was going down, was nothing else done. The next day, being the Tenth of January, they bestowed in recreating themselves after their Journey, and in letting other things at a stay. Nevertheless, to the intent the same should not escape altogether without doing somewhat, they interdicted the two Churches, namely S. Maries, where Mr. Bucer, and S. Michaels, where Paulus Phagius lay buried.

Jan. 9, 10. S. Maries and S. Michaels interdicted because of Martin Bucer and Paulus Phagius Burial.

These men were dead a good while before, Paulus Phagius had scarce yet shewed the proof of his Wit and Learning, when he departed to God, 1549. Bucer lived but a little after. During which time somewhat by writing, but chiefly by reading and preaching openly (wherein the old man, being painful in the Word of God, never spared himself, nor regarded his health) he brought all men into such admiration of him, that neither his Friends could sufficiently praise him, neither his Enemies in any point find fault with his singular Life and sincere Doctrine. A most certain Token whereof may be his sumptuous Burial, solemnized with so great assistance and gladness of all the Degrees of the University, that it was not possible to devise more to the setting out and amplifying of the same. The whole manner and order of the doing whereof being written by Mr. Nicholas Carre, a Learned man, in a little Treatise to Sir John Cheeke Kt. with an Epistle full of Consolation, as concerning his departure added thereunto, was sent afterward unto Peter Martyr, then abiding at Oxford.

Commendation of Martin Bucer.

From the Burial of Bucer and Phagius, unto the coming of these Visitors, were passed about three or four years more or less. And from the time that that blessed King Edward the Sixth, deceased, unto that day, the Priests never ceased to celebrate their Masses, and other kind of Ceremonies in those places, and that without scruple of Conscience, as far as men could perceive. But after the time that these Commissioners came thither, those things that before were accounted for sacred and holy, began to be denounced for prophane and unholy. For they commanded that all those Assemblies that should hereafter be made for the executing of holy Ceremonies, should be removed to the Kings Chappel, which is a place far more stately than all the other.

Now was come the 11. day, in the which the Vice-Chancellor of the University, with the Masters and Presidents of Colledges, and all the other Graduates of every House, were commanded to appear before the said Commissioners in their Habits. It was commanded that the Scholars also should come in their Surplices, but that was not done. They assembled in great number to Trinity Colledge, having the University Cros born before them, and in the Gatehouse a Fourm was set and covered, with Cushions and Carpet on the ground for the Visitors. Where the Vice-Chancellor, having on a Tisshew Cope, sprinkled Holy-water on them, and purposed to cense them, but they refused it there, which notwithstanding afterward in the Queens Colledge, and elsewhere, they refused not.

January 11.

There Mr. John Stokes, common Orator of the University, made an Oration in the Name of all the rest. The Copy whereof I thought good here to exemplificate in Latin, as it was pronounced.

Mr. Stokes Oration to Queen Maries Visitors at Cambridge An. 1557. January 11.

The Oration of Mr. Stokes publick Orator of the University.

Academia, Reverendi Patres, in expectatione adventus vestri sollicita aliquandiu fuit, nunc præsentiæ dominationum vestrarum valde recreata libentissime vultus vestros intuetur, & ad apertam voluntatis suæ testificationem ecce universa se suasq; opes effudit. Convenit in hunc locum tota Cantabrigiæ frequentia, adsunt omnes ordines, de quorum certa mihi & explorata ad hanc rem voluntate illud publica fide, apud dominationes vestras affirmo, eos, & separatim singulos, & conjunctim omnes; optatissimum hunc adventum mirificis studiis, & consentientibus animis gratulari. Illud enim omnium animis habemus persuasum, & negotium hoc quod hodierno die, favente Deo, excellentia vestra auspicatur, ad Academiæ rationes fore accommodum, neq; in re ad communem salutem tam necessaria operam aliquando vestram nobis defuturam. Permulta sunt ad hanc opinionem confirmandam, sed cætera non persequor: ea tantum oratione attingam, quæ ita intime cum præsenti negotio cohærent, ut divelli ab eo disjungiq; nulla ratione possint. Atq; sunt illa quidem numero certa & finita; verum re & virtute ita immensa, ut nullâ dicendi facultate mea plenè comprehendi possint: quoniam tamen ut antea sum professus summam esse Academiæ lætitiam, eamq; justis de causis in adventu vestro susceptam, quæso à vobis ut dum eas breviter recenseo faciles mihi aures præbeatis.

Reverendiss. in Christo Pater Cardinalis Polus, Legatus, qui religionem oppressam restituit, patriæ ruinas sustulsit, leges & decreta quasi postliminio reduxit, iste inquam, iste Polus Anglus & vere noster Moses, legationis vestræ autor est, a cujus excellenti virtute in omnes suæ patriæ partes plurima commoda dimanarunt. Quo vinculo necessitudinis, etsi omnibus temporibus optima ab illo sperare liceret, quod ex corpore simus ipsius Reipub. arctior est tamen & interior causa, quæ nobis cum dominatione illius separatim intercedit. Superiore anno Academiæ procurationem in se humaniss. recepit, quam liberari custodia ita cœptam tenere se velle literis significavit, ut non solum incommoda dimoveret, quibus studia nostra affligerentur, sed ut ornamenta adjiceret ea, quorum splendore augeri dignitas Academiæ aut maxime illustrari posset. Quæ res & spem antea nostram confirmavit, et nunc in eam cogitationem nos adduxit, ut omnem illius humanitatem in hanc unam visitationem esse collectam putemus, in qua quidem ea a vobis expectamus omnia, quæ summi Cancellarii nostri insignis amor, præter communem charitatem Academiæ, quasi pupillæ suæ propriæ pollicetur. Atq; utinam quidem ipse fine Reipublicæ detrimento hoc tempore adesse posset, & Academiam suam è tenebris & profunda nocte emersam ipse suis radiis veræ religionis splendore illustraret: verum optioni nostræ publica utilitas repugnat, qua valde impeditus sanctissimæ sedis Apost. legatus vos vicarios substituit; quorum naturas propter providentiam, personas propter dignitatem, voluntates propter educationem aptissimas ad hanc rem esse judicavit. Itaque illud verè & ex animis istorum omnium affirmare possum, vos eos esse viros quorum religionem amamus, virtutem colimus, voluntatem, fidem, & consilium ad publicam salutem Card. Pole.

Anno 1556.

ſalutem impendimus. Poſt quam enim ſingulari & præſtantiſſima virtute Cardinalis Poli, Legati, è ſuperiorum temporum caligine, & tenebris, lucem in republica reſticere cœpimus, una certè graviſſima etiam ſuperioris ætatis mala ſenſimus, quibus profecto infinitis & miſerrimis etſi antea premeremur, tamen ad calamitatis noſtræ magnitudinem acceſſit ejuſdem ignoratio, ut (mea quidem opinione) eo magis ſimus miſerabiles judicandi, quòd tam turbulenta tempeſtate jactati ne moveri quidem nos, tam gravi & periculoſo hæreſis morbo oppreſſi, aut ægrotare mentes noſtras intelleximus. Valde enim periculoſa eſt ægrotatio illa, quæcunque ſine doloris ſenſu naturam conficit, & affectos ſæpe prius extinguit, quam ægrotare ſe fateantur. Ejuſmodi morbo Academia laborabat, quæ ad alias fortaſſe res ſatis ingenioſa & ſolers, in hac Religionis cauſa, propter caput Eccleſiæ læſum, unde omnis ſentiendi vis eſt, omnino hebes, ſtupida, & ſine mente fuit, quoad tertio ante hunc anno divina ſanctiſſimi Patris Julij Clementia Angliæ fere emortuæ miſerata, iterum nos Eccleſiæ inſerit, corpus ſenſuſq; recreat, cujus ope convaleſcens Britannia, quam certa gehennæ pericula effugerit quivis facile intelligit. Idem Academia cernit acutius, neq; quicquam mali uſpiam accidiſſe putat, quo noſtra regio in hac religionis vaſtitate & peſtilentia miſerius fuerit afflicta. Non eſt opus recenſere in hoc loco everſa Monaſteria, ſpoliata Templa, ſtrages Sacerdotum, ædes Nobilium, motus & tumultus populi, totius regni egeſtatem, quæ etſi aliunde accidere poſſunt, tamen cum gravia ſint ut opprimant, ultionis & vindictæ potius quam probandi cauſa in malos & nocentes inſligi putamus. Sed ſunt iſta fortunæ ludibria; Graviora ſumus paſſi religionis & conſcientiæ detrimenta. Pietas in Deum omnis evanuerat, virginalis ſacerdotum profeſſio ad libidinem ſoluta eſt, animus quaſi conſopitus jacebat, quem nullæ Ceremoniæ excitabant, ipſa mens opinionum veritate ita diſtricta, ita ſibi ipſi diſſentiens, ut infinitis erroribus implicaretur. In his erant duo præcipue fontes, ex quorum rivulis & hauſiſſe Academiam paulo liberalius, & illa potione ferme inebriatam confitemur.

Prior ortum habebat ex illa noſtri violenta divulſione à Catholicæ Eccleſiæ unitate, re non diſſimili illius pugnæ, quam olim Menenius Agrippa, in inteſtina civium diſcordia, de corpore humano memorabat. Poſterior ex immenſa palude & cæno Wicleviano emanavit: quem celebris apud nos imo miſerabilis de Sacramento Altaris patefecit. De cujus rei veritate plerique ſuo ſenſu abundantes pro arbitrio quiſque ſuo ſtatuerat. Nos Philoſophos, nec illos quidem optimos, imitati ex Epicureorum ſchola ad ſcripturæ lumen aliquid attulimus. Quod enim Chriſtus omnino, præciſe, & ſine exceptione, de vera & perpetua ſui corporis præſentia affirmarat, (in cujus verbi veritate fundamentum fidei noſtræ collocatur) id nos ita ſumus interpretati, ut mancam & alienam Chriſti vocem judicaremus, niſi illa Epicuri propria particula (quaſi) adderetur, & quod Chriſtiani corpus & ſanguinem, id nos quaſi corpus & ſanguinem diceremus. Sed non eſt iſtius temporis præterita nimium meminiſſe, quæ utinam æterna oblivione obrui poſſent, neque ulla tantæ labis memoria ad poſteros noſtros propagetur; tamen fuerunt attingenda generatim quidem, quod erranti confeſſio ſalutaris ſit: membratim vero, quod Academia his vulneribus à Cenſoria poteſtate confecta, à Cenſoria medicina ad ſalutem reduci poſtulat. Ipſa vero pro ſe & ſuis ſpondet omnes in authoritate veſtra futuros, quos aſſiduis concionibus adeo ad pœnitentiam edocuit, ut & eos ad ſanam religionem fidiſſime tranſiſſe, & in eadem diligenti præſentis vitæ uſu ſuperioris ætatis damna ſarcituros putetis. Nam qui primi in hoc curſu ſunt, acerrimè contendunt in eo, quod tam voluntariè ſeſceperunt: & qui pigrius egreſſi quaſi pomeridianis horis ad hoc certamen acceſſerunt, ea certè præbent jam immutatæ voluntatis indicia, ut quomodo temere & juveniliter à ſana religione defecerunt, ita non niſi maturi & cum judicio ab hæreſi deſciviſſe videantur. Univerſis vero ſimul reſtituta & deſiderata religio magis placere videtur, quam ſi aſſidue præcepta, neque ad tempus obſcurata fuiſſet.

Quapropter Academia ſupplex & proſtrata primum à Deo immortali pacem & veniam petit, precaturque ab eo, ut hodiernum diem ad ſuorum ſalutem conſervandam & Rempubl. hanc conſtituendam illuxiſſe patiatur. Deinde pro ſe, pro ſuis, pro univerſis, pro ſingulis, hanc petitionem ad celſitudines veſtras affert, ut ſuperiorum temporum offenſas ex errore & injuſtitia profectas præſenti hominum induſtriæ condonetis. De reliquis vero pro ſumma prudentia veſtra, & ſingulari in nos amore, eam ſententiam feratis, ut ſuorum cauſas vel juſtitiæ veſtræ bonas inveniat, vel clementia bonas eſſe faciat. In utroque par erit beneficium, ſive Academiam pro cauſarum æquitate judicaveritis, ſive pro amoris veſtri abundantia innocentem eam eſſe volueritis. Nos pro referenda gratia ſummam in ſacris modeſtiam, aſſiduam in litteris operam, perpetuum veræ religionis amorem, ſempiternam veſtri beneficij memoriam repromittimus.

The Anſwer of Mr. Scot, Bp. of Cheſter, to the Oration of John Stokes.

When he had made an end of ſpeaking, the Biſhop of Cheſter anſwered thereunto, that they took in right good part, that the Mother the Univerſity had made ſo open a declaration of her good will toward them: for the which he gave moſt hearty thanks, deſiring her to perform in deed, and in her works, the things that ſhe had ſo largely promiſed of her ſelf in words and communication.

The Commiſſion ſigned by the Cardinal, and why?

AS concerning their good wills, there was no cauſe to miſtruſt. For their coming thither was not to deal any thing roughly with ſuch as fell to the amendment: but both the Cardinal himſelf, and they alſo, were fully minded to ſhew favour, deviſing how to bring all things to peace and tranquillity, deſiring nothing more earneſtly, then that they which have erred and gone aſtray, ſhould return into the right path again. The right Reverend Father, the Lord Cardinal, whom he wiſhed to have been preſent, wiſhed the ſelf ſame thing alſo, deſiring nothing ſo much as he with his own hands to ſuſtain and hold up, now ready to fall, or rather to raiſe up already fallen to the ground, the Univerſity of his Ward: for he gladly taketh upon him the name and duty of her Guardian, whom it greatly grieved, that the infections of the times paſt had ſpread abroad ſo grievous Diſeaſes, that even the Univerſity it ſelf was touched with the contagious Air thereof. For he would gladlier have come hither to viſit and ſalute it, then to correct it, if the weighty affairs of the Realm would have permitted it. But now ſeeing he could not ſo do, he had appointed this Commiſſion, in the which he had aſſigned them to be his Deputies, which (becauſe they knew him to ſet ſo much ſtore by the Univerſity) ſhould extend the more favour to it, and (becauſe they themſelves had been there brought up) would the more earneſtly imbrace it. The chief matter that they came for, tended to this end, that ſuch as had erred ſhould confeſs their faults, and return into the right way again. For they were in good forwardneſs of healing, that acknowledged themſelves to have offended. And therefore it was wiſely propounded on his part, that he would not altogether excuſe the faults of the Univerſity, nor of other men, but confeſs and acknowledge the Crime, as that there were many things had need to be corrected and amended.

The Cauſes declared.

The cauſe why they were ſent thither, was to raiſe up them that were faln, and to receive into favour ſuch as were ſorry and would amend, wherein, if (contrary to their expectation) they ſhould not be able to do ſo much with ſome men as they would: yet notwithſtanding, according to their duty, they would ſhew themſelves ſo diligent for their part, as that no lack might be found in them. For it was more openly known, then that it could be denied, that many men did divers things of a froward wilfulneſs, and took ſtoutly upon them: wherewith as they were greatly moved and grieved (as reaſon was) ſo they coveted to remedy the miſchief. Againſt whom, if any thing ſhould ſeem hereafter to be ſtreightly determined, it was to be imputed to their own deſerts, and not to the wills of them. Neither ought ſuch as are whole and found to be moved at the Chaſtiſement of others, for ſo much as it pertained not only to the wiping out of the foul blot which now ſticked on the Univerſity, but alſo to the health of many others which had taken much hurt by the infection of them. For their own parts they more inclined unto mercy than rigor. Howbeit, conſidering that ſo great diſeaſes could not by gentle medicines be healed, they were driven of neceſſity to uſe ſtronger. And yet if they would be contented to be brought Mercy more commended of all men, but rigor moſt commonly in acts of moſt men expreſſed.

Anno 1556.

again to their right minds, which thing they chiefly covered (for they wished that all should amend and be led by wholesom counsel) and would yet at length wax weary of their Errors, and instead of them frequent again the ancient Customs of themselves, and of their Forefathers, they might boldly look for all kind of Humanity and Gentleness at their hands, in all this their business of Reformation, which they had now entred and begun, requesting no more of the University, but to do as became them: which being performed, he promised that their benevolence, neither in any publick nor in any private persons case, should in any wise be behind hand.

A Mass at the Kings Colledge.

These things being finished, they were brought processionaliter to the Kings Colledge, by all the Graduates of the University, where was sung a Mass of the Holy Ghost with great solemnity, nothing wanting in that behalf that might make to the setting forth of the same. In this place it was marked that Nicholas Ormanet, commonly firnamed Datary, (who albeit he were inferiour in estate unto Chester being a Bishop, yet was superiour to them all in Authority) while the Mass was celebrating, eft standing, eft sitting, and sometime kneeling on his knees, observed certain Ceremonies, which afterward were required of all others to be observed, as in process hereof was to be seen.

Ormanet Datary.

From thence they attended all upon the Legates to St. Maries Church, which we declared before to have been interdicted. In the which place, for so much as it was suspended, although no Mass might be sung, yet there was a Sermon made in open Audience by Master Peacock in the Latin Tongue, preaching against Heresies and Hereticks, as Bilney, Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, &c. The which being ended, they proceeded eftsoons to the Visitation: Where, first Dr. Harvy did in the Cardinals name exhibit the Commission to the Bishop of Chester with a few words in Latin. Which being accepted, and by Master Clerk openly read to the end, then the Vice-Chancellor with an Oration did exhibit the Certificate under his Seal of Office with the Cardinals Citation annexed, containing every mans name in the University and Colledges, with the Officers and all the Masters of Houses. Among whom was also Robert Brassey Master of Kings Colledge, a worthy old man, both for his Wisdom and his Hoar-hairs: Who hearing his own name recited next after the Vice-chancellors, said, He was there present as all the other were: nevertheless, forsomuch as the Reformation of his House was wholly reserved to the discretion of the Bishop of Lincoln, not only by the Kings Letters Patents, but also by grant of Confirmation from the Bishop of Rome himself, under a Penalty, if he should suffer any Strangers to intermeddle, he openly protested in discharge of his duty, that unless their Commission gave them Authority and Jurisdiction upon the Colledge, either by expres words or manifest sense, he utterly exempted himself from being present. This his Exception they took all in great displeasure; alledging that they were fully authorised for the order of the matter by the Cardinal, out of whose Jurisdiction, no place nor persons was exempted: wherefore he had done evil to call into question their Authority, so well known to all men. Chester seemed to be more moved with the matter then all the other; and that was because Brassey had a little before obtained the worship of that room, even utterly against his will, and maugre his head, he doing the worst he could against him.

Rob. Brassey's exception.

Altercation betwixt Dr. Brassey and Dr. Scot.

After the formal Solemnity of these things thus accomplished, the Commission being read, and the Citation exhibited, all the Masters of Houses being openly cited, every man for a while departed home to his own House, with commandment to be at the Common Schools of the said University at one of the Clock the same day. When the Degrees of the University, commonly called Regents and Non-Regents, were assembled thither, they spent the rest of the day in reading over of Charters, granted to the University by Kings and Princes, in searching out of Bulls and Pardons from the Pope, and in perusing of other Monuments pertaining to the University.

Inquisition at the common Schools

January 12. Inquisition at the Kings Colledge.

The next day following, being the 12. of January, they resorted to the Kings Colledge to make Inquisition, either because the same for the worthiness thereof was chief and sovereign of all the residue, or else because that that House specially before all others had been counted, time out of mind, never to be without an Heretick (as they termed them) or twain. And at that present time, albeit that many now of late had withdrawn themselves from thence, yet they judged there were some remaining still. The order and manner how they would be entertained of every Colledge, when they should come to make inquisition, they themselves appointed, which was in this sort.

The manner of receiving the Inquisitors when they went to make Inquisition.

They commanded the Master of every House, together with the residue, as well Fellows as Scholars, apparelled in Priest-like Garments (which they call Habits) to meet them at the uttermost gate of their House towards the Town. The Master himself to be dressed in like Apparel as the Priest when he harnesseth himself to Mass, saving that he should put on uppermost his Habit, as the rest did. The order of their going they appointed to be in this wise: The Master of the House to go foremost; next unto him, every man in his order as he was of degree, seigniority, or of years. Before the Master should be carried a Cross and Holy-water to sprinkle the Commissioners withal, and then after that the said Commissioners to be censed. And so after this meeting, and mumbling of a few Devotions, they determined with this Pomp and Solemnity to be brought to the Chappel.

Note the ambitious pomp of these Papists.

The Commissioners represent the Pope.

Many thought they took more honour upon them then belonged to the state of man. Otherwhile (forasmuch as at that time they not only pretended the Jurisdiction of the Cardinal; but also represented the Power and Authority of the Bishop of Rome himself, who was accounted to be more than a mortal man) said; it was far less then of duty appertained to his Holiness, in that the honour that was done to his Legates, was not done to them but to his Holiness. Now was the hour come, at which they appointed to meet: and being entered the Kings Colledge Gate, where they looked for the Master and Fellows of the House, seeing no man came to meet them, they proceeded forth to the Church door, where they stayed. There perceiving how the Master and the rest of the House were dressing themselves as fast as they could, in such order as was appointed before, they came in suddenly upon them, before they had set out any foot out of their places.

Here was a foul fault committed, that these men came in without the Procession.

Dr. Brassey excuseth himself for the slackness of this Procession.

Then the Master first excused himself, that he was ready no sooner, acknowledging that it had been his duty to have been in a readiness. Secondly, he said he was very glad of their coming, promising first in his own name, and after in the name of all the rest, as much reverence as might be, in all matters concerning their common utility, the which he doubted not but should be performed at their hands, according to his expectation. But like as he had done the other day in S. Maries Church, the same exception he made to them now also; the which his doing he besought them not to be offended withal. For seeing he did it only for the discharge of his duty, he had juster cause to be held excused.

Mr. Brassey maketh exception again.

He had scarcely yet finished his Tale, but the Bishop of Chester with a frowning look and an angry countenance interrupting him of his talk, said, he needed not to repeat the things he had protested before, nor they to make answer any more to those things wherein they had sufficiently informed him before. He rather feared that their quarrel was not good, that they made such ado about it, and sought such starting holes. For so were diseased persons oftentimes wont to do, when for the pain and grief they are not able to abide a strong Medicine. As though that any man were able to grant so strong a priviledge, as to withstand the Popes Authority. As for the Popes Letters, he said, must needs make on his side, and with such as were with him, and could not in any wise be alledged against him. Therefore he admonished him to desist from his unprofitable altercation, and to conform himself and his to such things as then were in doing.

Dr. Scots answer to Mr. Brassey.

The Popes Authority swalloweth up all other Priviledges.

After this they went to Mass. Which finished, with great solemnity, first they went to the high Altar of the Church, and having there saluted their god, and searching whether all were well about him or no, they walked thorow all the inner Chappels of the Church. The Church Goods, the Crosses, the Chalices, the Mass-Books, the Vestments, ments, and whatſoever Ornaments were beſides; were commanded to be brought out unto them. When they had ſufficiently viewed all things, and had called forth by Name every Fellow and Scholar of the Houſe, they went to the Maſters Lodging, where firſt and formoſt ſwearing them upon a Book to anſwer to all ſuch Interrogatories as ſhould be propounded unto them (as far as they knew) they examined firſt the Maſter himſelf, and afterward all the reſidue, every Man in his turn. But there were ſome that refuſed to take this Oath, becauſe they had given their Faith to the Colledge before, and alſo becauſe they thought it againſt all right and reaſon to ſwear againſt themſelves: For it was contrary to all Law, that a Man ſhould be compelled to bewray himſelf, and not to be ſuffered to keep his Conſcience free, when there is no manifeſt proof to be laid to his charge, but much more unjuſt it is, that a Man ſhould be conſtrained perforce to accuſe himſelf. Nevertheleſs theſe perſons alſo, after ſuch altercation, at length (conditionally, that their Faith given before to the Colledge were not impeached thereby) were contented to be ſworn.

The Oath refuſed of ſome in the Kings Colledge, and why.

The conſultation of Maſters upon the taking up of M. Bucer.

Three days long laſted the Inquiſition there. This was now the third day of their coming, and it was thought that the caſe of Bucer and Phagius, was delayed longer then needed. For they looked to have had much altercation and buſineſs about the matter. Now, foraſmuch as the preſent ſtate of the caſe required good deliberation and adviſement, the Vicechancellor and the Maſters of the Colledges aſſembled at the common Schools, where every Man gave his verdict what he thought meet to be done in this matter of Bucer. After much debating, they agreed all together in this Determination; that foraſmuch as Martin Bucer, whiles he lived, had not only ſowed pernicious and erroneous Doctrine among them, but alſo had himſelf been a Sectary and famous Heretick, erring from the Catholick Church, and giving others occaſion to fall from the ſame likewiſe: a Supplication ſhould be made to the Lord Commiſſioners, in the Name of the whole Univerſity, that his dead Carkaſs might forthwith be digged up (for ſo it was needful to be done) to the intent that Inquiſition might be made as touching his Doctrine, the which being brought in Examination, if it were not found to be good and wholeſom, the Law might proceed againſt him. For it was againſt the rule of the Holy Canons, that his Body ſhould be buried in Chriſtian Burial. Yea, and beſides that it was to the open derogation of Gods Honor, and the violating of his Holy Laws, with the great peril of many Mens Souls, and the offence of the Faithful, eſpecially in ſo difficult and contagious a time as that was. Wherefore it was not to be ſuffered, that they, which utterly diſſented from all other Men in the trade of their living, Laws, and Cuſtoms, ſhould have any part with them in the honor of Burial. And therefore the Glory of God firſt and before all things ought to be defended, the infamy (which through this thing riſeth on them) with all ſpeed put away, no room at all left unto thoſe Perſons to reſt in, who even in the ſame places where they lay, were injurious and noyſom to the very Elements, but the place ought to be purged, and all things ſo ordered as might be to the ſatisfying of the Conſciences of the weak. In executing whereof ſo notable an example ought to be given to all Men, that no Man hereafter ſhould be ſo bold to attempt the like.

Inquiſition to be made of M. Bucers Doctrine.

Martin Bucers burial againſt the Holy Canon Laws.

Cauſes why M. Bucer and Paulus Phagius Bodies ought to be taken up.

They gave the ſame Verdict by common aſſent upon Phagius alſo. Unto this Writing they annexed another, by the which they lawfully Authoriſed Andrew Perne the Vicechancellor, to be the common Factor for the Univerſity. He was a Man meeteſt for the purpoſe, both for the Office that he bare, and alſo becauſe that by the teſtimony of Chriſtopherſon he was deemed to be the moſt Catholick of all others. This Supplication, confirmed by the conſent of all the Degrees of the Univerſity and ſigned with their Common Seal, the next day, which was the 13. of January, the Vicechancellor put up to the Commiſſioners. Note here, good Reader, what a feat of conveyance this was, to ſuborn the Univerſity under a colourable pretence to deſire this thing of them by way of Petition. As who ſhould ſay, if they had not done ſo, the other would never have gone about it of themſelves.

Andrew Perne Vicechancellor, made factor for the Univerſity in the caſe of M. Bucer and Phagius.

M. Chriſtopherſons teſtimony of Perne.

A Supplication put up to the Commiſſioners by the Univerſity.

Note this feat of conveyance.

But this gloſe was ſoon found out. For the Commiſſioners had given the Vicechancellor Inſtructions in writing before. But now peradventure they thought by this means to remove the envy of this Act from themſelves.

Thus the Vicechancellor came unto the Commiſſioners, according to the appointment made the day before, about ſeven of the clock in the morning. He had ſcarce declared the cauſe of his coming, but that he had not only obtained his ſute, but alſo even at the very ſame time received the Sentence of Condemnation, for taking up Bucer and Phagius, fair copied out by Ormanet Datary himſelf. This was to be confirmed by the conſent of the Degrees of the Univerſity. Whereupon a Solemn Convocation, called Congregatio Regentium & non Regentium, for the ſame purpoſe was appointed to be at nine of the Clock; where the Graduates being aſſembled together, the demand was propounded concerning the Condemnation of Bucer and Phagius, and the Grace asked, which was this: Pleaſeth it you that Martin Bucer, for the Hereſies now recited, and many other by him written, preached, and taught, wherein he died without repentance, and was buried in Chriſtian Burial, may be exhumate and taken up again? &c. After this Grace eſtſoons being granted, then was the Sentence of Condemnation, drawn by the Datary, openly read, and immediately another Grace asked, that the ſame might be Signed with the Common Seal. The which requeſt was very lightly and eaſily obtained. And it was no marvel.

The Sentence of Condemnation againſt Martin Bucer and Paulus Phagius, copied out by the Datary.

Grace asked in the Congregation for the taking up of M. Bucer.

For now after the death of King Edward, ſince the time that the Government of the Realm came to the hand of Queen Mary, all ſuch perſons being driven away as had rejected the Romiſh Religion (in whom well nigh alone reſted whatſoever Wit and Learning was in the whole Univerſity beſides) ſuch a ſort of Raſcals were put in their room, that all places now ſwarmed with unlearned and unnurtured Chaplains: To whom nothing was greater pleaſure, then to cauſe all Men to ſpeak ſlander and reproach of Bucer. There were divers yet left among them to ſpeak againſt their demands. But they (becauſe, as it commonly cometh to paſs, that Might overcometh Right) could nothing avail. For this is a common cuſtom in all ſuch matters and Ordinances, that look what the greater number decreeth, is publiſhed in the name of all: and that which the better part diſallowed, ſeemeth as though no Man at all diſallowed it.

The next day being the 14. of January, all the Viſitors (only Chriſtopher Son elect of Chicheſter, excepted) came to the Kings Colledge Where, firſt going into the Church, and there making their Prayers at the Greeſings, they ſo proceeded into the Stalls, there ſitting all the Maſs time, the company ſtanding in their Copes, and ſinging a Solemn Reſpond in honor of the Viſitors. After the Reſpond done, the Provoſt in the beſt Cope made to them his proteſtation, unto whom the Biſhop of Cheſter made Anſwer alſo in Latin, declaring that he could not perceive to what purpoſe his proteſtation was, notwithſtanding they would accept it and bear with him. Then went they to Maſs, which ended, the Catholick Viſitors approached up to the Altar, and took down the Sacrament, and ſearched the Pix, but firſt the two Biſhops cenſed the Sacrament.

January 14.

Then they went unto the Reveſtry, and opened the Chalices, Corporas Caſes, and Chryſmatory, and viewed all thoſe things. And ſo returning into the Provoſts Chamber, divided themſelves in Examination of the Provoſt, Viceprovoſt, and the reſt of the company. The ſame day Doctor Bacon Maſter of Gonvil-Hall, bade the Vicechancellor, D. Young, D. Harvy, Swineborne, Maptide, with others, home to dinner. Theſe Men immediately after dinner, cauſed the Common Seal of the Univerſity to be put to the foreſaid Inſtrument of Condemnation, according as was determined the day before by the general conſent of the Graduates of the Univerſity. And by and by after, they carried the ſame to the Commiſſioners to their Lodging. The which when they had received, foraſmuch as after more diligent peruſing thereof, it liked them not in all points, ſome things they raſed out, ſome they enterlined, otherſome they changed; ſo that in fine, they were fain to take the pain to ingroſs it new again.

The Sentence is ſigned with the Common Seal of the Univerſity.

The Sentence engroſſed new again.

To

January 15. To the ſigning whereof, a Congregation was eftſoons called of all the Graduates of the Univerſity againſt the next day, which there being read over, a new Grace again was asked and granted for ſetting the Seal. Then were the Graduates diſmiſſed, with commandment to reſort forthwith to S. Maries Church, whither the Commiſſioners alſo repaired. When they had taken their places, Doctor Harvy preſented to them before all the company, a new Commiſſion to make inqueſt upon Hereſie then newly ſent from the Cardinal, which was read immediately by Vincent of Noally, Ormanets Clerk. This done, Doctor Perne, who, as ye heard, was Factor for the Univerſity, exhibited to the Commiſſioners in the Name of the Univerſity the Sentence of the foreſaid Condemnation. The Copy and Tenour whereof, hereafter (God willing) ſhall follow. This Condemnation, being openly read, then Doctor Perne aforeſaid deſired to ſend out proceſs to cite Bucer and Phagius to appear, or any other that would take upon them to plead their cauſe, and to ſtand to the order of the Court againſt the next Monday: to the intent that when they had exhibited themſelves, the Court might the better determine what ought to be done to them by Order of Law.

D. Harvy preſenteth a mandate from the Cardinal.

D. Perne maketh petition that Bucer and Phagius may be cited to the Court.

The Commiſſioners condeſcended to his requeſt, and the next day proceſs went out to cite the offenders. This Citation Vincent of Noally their Common Notary, having firſt read it over before certain witneſſes appointed for the ſame purpoſe, cauſed to be fixed up in places convenient, to wit, upon S. Maries Church door, the door of the Common Schools, and the Croſs in the Market ſtead of the ſame Town. In this was ſpecified, that whoſoever would maintain Bucer and Phagius, or ſtand in defence of their Doctrine, ſhould at the eighth day of the ſame Month, ſtand forth before the L. Commiſſioners in Saint Maries Church, which was appointed the place of Judgment, and there every Man ſhould be ſufficiently heard what he could ſay. This commandment was ſet out with wany words.

M. Bucer and Phagius cited out of their graves to appear, or any other that would anſwer for them.

January 17. Witneſſes ſworn againſt M. Bucer.

Shortly after, the matter drew toward Judgment. Therefore the next day before the day limited, which was the xvij. of January, the Vicechancellor called to him to Peterhouſe (whereof he was Maſter) D. Young, D. Segiſwike, and with them Bullock, Taylor, Parker, and Redman, Whitlock, Mitch, and certain others. Theſe Men caſt their Heads together how they might bear witneſs againſt Bucer and Phagius, to convince them of Hereſie. For ſeeing the matter was brought in face of open Court, and becauſe it might ſo come to paſs, that ſome Patrons of their cauſe would come out, they thought it needful to have witneſſes to diſpoſe to depoſe of their Doctrine. What came of this their conſultation, it is not perfectly known.

January 18. The eighteenth day, the Vicechancellor, going to the Inquiſitors ſitting at the Kings Colledge, did put them in remembrance, that the ſame was the day, in the which, by their Proceſs ſent forth the xvj. day before, they had commanded to appear in S. Maries Church, ſuch as would take upon them to defend Bucer and Phagius by the Law. He deſired therefore that they would vouchſafe to ſit there, if perchance any Man would try the adventure of the Law. They lightly condeſcended thereunto. When the Vicechancellor had brought them thither, he exhibited unto them the Proceſs of the Citation which he had received of them to publiſh a little before, ſaying, that he had diligently executed whatſoever the contents of the ſame required. After that they had taken their places, and that no Man put forth himſelf to anſwer for the Offenders, the Judges call aſide Doctor Young, Doctor Segiſwike, Bullock, Taylor, Maptide, Hunter, Parker, Redman, above mentioned. Alſo Brown, Gogman, Rud, Johnſon, Mitch, Raven, and Carre, who had before written out the Burial of Bucer, with a ſingular commendation of him, and ſent it to Sir John Cheek Knight. Theſe Men taking firſt their Oath upon a Book, were commanded to bear witneſs againſt the Hereſies and Doctrine of Bucer and Phagius. The 22. day of the ſame Month was limited to this Jury to bring in their Verdict.

Other witneſſes ſworn againſt M. Bucer.

In the mean while, Ormanet and Doctor Watſon abode at home in their lodging to take the depoſition of them whom we ſhewed you before to have been called to Peterhouſe and to have communicated with the Vicechancellor as concerning that matter, whoſe Depoſitions (as I told you) never came to light. The Biſhop of Cheſter, and Doctor Cole this day viſited them of Katherine Hall, where, as farr as could be learned, no-nothing was done worthy of rehearſal.

Anno 1556.

A Relick given by Ormanet to Trinity Colledge.

As Ormanet the Popes Datary was ſitting at Trinity Colledge, John Dale one of the Queens Colledge came to him, whom he had commanded before to bring with him the Pix, wherein the Biſhop of Romes God of Bread is wont to be incloſed. For Ormanet told them he had a precious Jewel; the ſame was a linnen clout that the Pope had conſecrated with his own hands, which he promiſed to beſtow upon them for a gift. But Dale miſunderſtanding Ormanet, inſtead of the Pix brought a Chalice and a ſinging cake called the Hoſt, the which he had wrapped up and put in his Boſom. When he was come, Ormanet demanded if he had brought him the thing he ſent him for. To whom he anſwered, he had brought it. Then give it me, quoth he. Dale pulled out the Chalice, and the ſinging Cake. When Ormanet ſaw that, he ſtepped ſomewhat back as it had been in a wonder, calling him block-head, and little better then a mad man, demanding what he meant by thoſe things, ſaying; he willed him to bring none of that gear, and that he was unworthy to enjoy ſo high a benefit: yet notwithſtanding, foraſmuah as he had promiſed before to give it them, he would perform his promiſe. Whereupon with great reverence and ceremony, he pulled out the linnen cloth and laid it in the Chalice, and the Bread with it, commanding them both for the Holineſs of the thing, and alſo for the Author of it, to keep it among them with ſuch due reverence as belonged to ſo holy a Relique.

Ormanet in a pelting chafe with M. Dale.

About the ſame time the Commiſſioners had given commandment to the Maſters of the Colledges, that every Man ſhould put in writing what Books he had, with the Authors Names. And to the intent that every Man ſhould execute it without deceit, they took a corporal Oath of them. This commandment ſome executed exactly and diligently; otherſome, foraſmuch as they deemed it wrongfully, executed it ſlack enough.

A commandment for bringing in of Heretical Books.

We declare before that the xviij. day was limited for the day of Judgment. When the day came, and that neither Bucer nor Phagius would appear at their call in the Court, nor that any put forth himſelf to defend them; yet the courteous Commiſſioners would not proceed to Judgment, which nevertheleſs, for their contumacy, in abſenting themſelves, they might have done, conſidering how that day was peremptory. But theſe Men, being bent altogether to equity and mercy, had rather ſhew ſome favour, then to do the uttermoſt they might by the Law. Whereupon Vincent publiſhed the ſecond Proceſs, and ſet it up in the ſame places, as in manner before. The meaning thereof varied not much from the firſt, but that it put off the Judgment day unto the 26. of the ſame Month. Upon the which day the Vicechancellor was ſent for to their lodging, with whom they agreed concerning the order of publiſhing the Sentence. And becauſe there ſhould want no Solemnity in the matter, they commanded him further to warn the Major of the Town to be there at the day appointed with all his Burgeſſes, which the Vicechancellor did ſpeed with all readineſs.

Graciouſly conſidered.

January 26. This day (as I ſaid) was the twenty ſixth of January, which being now come, firſt all Degrees of the Mother Univerſity were aſſembled. And to fill up this Pageant, thither came alſo the Major and his Townſmen, and all met together in Saint Maries Church, to behold what there ſhould be determined upon theſe Men. After long attendance, at length the Commiſſioners came forth, and went up to a Scaffold that was ſomewhat higher then the reſidue, prepared for the ſame purpoſe. When they had taken their places, Doctor Perne the Vicechancellor, the Player of this Enterlude faſhioning his countenance with great gravity, reached to them the proceſs that was lately publiſhed, to cite them,

An high matter in a low Houſe.

ſaying

Anno 1556.

saying theſe words; I bring forth again (quoth he) to you right reverend Father, and Commiſſioners of the moſt reverend my Lord Cardinal Pool (painting out the reſt of his ſtile) this Citation executed according to the purport and effect of the ſame; omitting nothing for his part that might make to the commendation of this matter. When he had thus finiſhed his tale, by and by the Biſhop of Cheſter, after he had a little viewed the people, began in manner as followeth.

The Oration of Doctor Scot Biſhop of Cheſter, before the Condemnation of Bucer and Phagius.

The Oration of D. Scot Biſhop of Cheſter, before the pronouncing of the Sentence of Condemnation.

YE ſee (quoth he) how ſore the Univerſity preſſeth upon us, how earneſt interceſſion it maketh unto us, not only to denounce Bucer and Phagius, which theſe certain years paſt have ſpread moſt pernicious Doctrine among you, to be Hereticks (as they be indeed) but alſo that we will command their dead carkaſſes, which unto this day have obtained honourable burial among you, to be digged up, and as it is excellently ordained by the Canon Law, to be caſt into Fire, or whatſoever is more grievous then Fire, if any can be. For the Degrees of the Univerſity deal not ſlightly nor ſlackly with us in this caſe, but do ſo preſs upon us, and follow the ſute ſo earneſtly, that they ſcarce give us any reſpite of delay. And I aſſure you, albeit this caſe of it ſelf be ſuch, as that even the unworthineſs of thoſe perſons though there were no further cauſe, ought to induce us to the doing thereof, much the rather moved with theſe ſo wholeſom petitions; it is meet and convenient we ſhould grant it. For howſoever we of our ſelves are enclined to mercy in our hearts (then the which we proteſt there is nothing under the Sun to us more dear and acceptable) yet notwithſtanding the very Law riſeth up to revengement; ſo that the Common Salvation of you all, which the Law provideth for, muſt be preferred before the private charity of our minds. Neither ought any ſuch negligence to overtake us for our parts, that we, being ſcarce yet eſcaped out of the ſhipwrack of our former calamity, ſhould now ſuffer this unexpiable miſchief, to diſquiet any longer the Conſciences of the weak.

What diſſembling is here in theſe Pope Holy Catholicks.

Tyranny covered with the viſor of mercy.

Satan transforming himſelf into an Angel of light.

Moreover, it is but reaſon that we ſhould do ſomwhat at ſo earneſt intreatance and ſute of the Univerſity. I need not to ſpeak much of our ſelves. For if we had been deſirous to enterpriſe this matter, it had been lawful after the firſt Citation, to have proceeded to Judgment: but becauſe we were willing that their defendours ſhould be heard, and that the matter ſhould be denounced and tried by Law, we ſent out the ſecond proceſs.

O LordGod, as though this were the doing of the Univerſity, and not your own?

The Wolf pretendeth to be a Lamb.

If we had deſired revengement, we might have ſhewed cruelty upon them that are alive: of the which (alas the more pitty) there are too many that embrace this Doctrine. If we thirſted for Blood, it was not ſo to be ſought in withered Carkaſſes and dry Bones. Therefore ye may well perceive, it was no part of our wills that we now came hither; but partly induced at the intreaty of the Univerſity, partly moved with the unworthineſs of the caſe it ſelf: but eſpecially for the care and regard we have of your health and ſalvation, which we covet by all means to preſerve.

As though the Cardinal ſent you not down, before you came to the Univerſity.

For you your ſelves are the cauſe of this buſineſs: you gave occaſion of this confeſſion, among whom this day ought to be a notable example, to remain as a memorial to them that ſhall come after, as in that which ye may learn not only to ſhake off the filth which ye have taken of theſe perſons; but alſo to beware hereafter that ye fall no more ſo ſhameful as ye have done. But I truſt, God will defend you, and give you minds to keep your ſelves from it.

Bucer and Phagius falſly accuſed of Hypocriſie by falſe Hypocrites.

As concerning the parties themſelves, whoſe caſe now hangeth in Law, they bear about the Name of the Goſpel, whereas indeed they wrought nothing elſe then thevery and deceit. And ſo much the wickeder were they, in that they ſought to cover ſo ſhameful acts, with the cloak of ſo fair and holy a Name. Wherefore it is not to be doubted, but that God will puniſh this deſpite, of it ſelf wicked, to you pernicious, but the Authors thereof ſhameful and abominable.

But if God, as he is ſlow to wrath and vengeance, will wink at it for a time, yet notwithſtanding if we, upon whom the charge of the Lords Flock leaneth, ſhould permit ſo execrable crimes to eſcape unpuniſhed, we ſhould not live in quiet one hour.

When he had thus ſpoken, he recited the Sentence out of a ſcroll, and Condemned Bucer and Phagius of Hereſie; the form and Tenor of which Sentence, framed after the barbarous rude ſtile of that Church, thus followeth.

The Sentence of Condemnation againſt Martin Bucer, and Paulus Phagius.

The effect of Doctor Pernes Sermon againſt Martin Bucer.

Perns Sermon againſt Bucer.

OVer and beſides this Oration and Sentence of Dr. Scot, came in alſo Perne Vicechancellor, with his Sermon tending to the ſame effect, to the depraving of Maſter Bucer, taking for his theam the place of the 132. Pſalm, Behold how good and pleaſant a thing it is, &c.

Where beginning firſt with the commendation of concord, and of the mutual knitting together of the minds, he alledged, that it was not poſſible to hold together, unleſs the concord were derived out of the head, the which he made to be the Biſhop of Rome, and that it alſo reſted in the ſame.

After he had made a long proteſtation hereof he paſſed forth to Bucer, upon whom he made a ſhameful railing, ſaying, that his Doctrine gave occaſion of diviſion in the Common-Wealth, and that there was not ſo grievous a miſchief, which by his means had not been brought into the Realm.

Although all Men might perceive by the Books he had compiled, what manner of Doctrine it was; yet notwithſtanding (he ſaid) he knew it more perfectly himſelf, then any did, and that he had learned it apart at the Authors hand himſelf.

D. Perni accuſation againſt Martin Bucer.

For at ſuch time as they had communication ſecretly among themſelves, Bucer (ſaid he) would oftentimes wiſh he might be called by ſome other Name, then by the Name he had; for this purpoſe, as though knowing himſelf guilty of ſo grievous a crime, he might by this means eſcape unknown to the World, and avoid the talk that went among Men of him.

A foreHereſie noted of Dr. Perne.

Moreover, among other things he told how Bucer held opinion (which thing he ſhould confeſs to him his own ſelf) that God was the Author and wellſpring, not only of good, but alſo of evil; and that whatſoever was of that ſort flowed from him, as from the head-ſpring and maker thereof. The which Doctrine he upheld to be ſincere; howbeit, for offending divers Mens Conſciences, he durſt not put it into Mens heads.

Shameful railing of D. Perne againſt Martin Bucer.

Many other things he patched together of like purport and effect, as of the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, of the marriage of Prieſts, of divorcements and of ſhameful uſury alſo, as though he had deemed the ſame lawful to be uſed among Chriſtian people, with divers other of the like ſort.

In all which his allegations, conſidering how lewdly, without all ſhame, he lied upon Bucer (as his writings evidently declare) he did not ſo much hinder his Name with railing upon him, as win unto himſelf an inexpiable infamy, by forging ſo ſhameful leaſings upon ſo worthy a Man.

But what needeth witneſs to prove him a lyar? his own Conſcience ſhall make as much againſt him, as a number of Men.

It was reported for a truth, and that by his own familiar friends teſtified, that the ſaid Doctor Perne himſelf, either immediately after his Sermon, or elſe ſomwhat before he went to it, ſtriking himſelf one the breaſt, and in manner weeping, wiſhed at home at his houſe with all his heart, that God would grant his Soul might even then preſently depart and remain with Bucers. For he knew well enough that his Life was ſuch, that if any Mans Soul were worthy of Heaven, he thought his in eſpecial to be moſt worthy.

D. Perne ſpeaketh againſt his own Conſcience in railing againſt M. Bucer.

Whiles he was thus talking to the people, in the mean time the leaves of the Church doors were covered over with Verſes, in the which the young Men to ſhew their folly, which ſcarce knew him by ſight, blazed Bucers Name with moſt reproachful Poetry.

Verſes againſt M. Bucer and Phagius.

Theſe things being diſpatched, Perne (as though he had ſped his matter marvellouſly well) was for his labour, of curteſie bidden to dinner to Trinity Colledge by the Commiſſioners. Where, after the Table was taken up, they cauſed the Sentence of Condemnation to be copied out with all ſpeed: which being ſigned with the Biſhop of Cheſters Seal, the next day following was for a triumph ſent to London, with divers of thoſe Verſes and ſlanderous Libels.

The Sentence of condemnation ſent to London with the Commiſſioners Letters.

Beſides this, they ſent alſo their own Letters, wherein they both advertiſed the Cardinal how far they had proceeded in that matter, and alſo deſired his Grace, that he would cauſe to be ſent out of hand to Smith the Major of the Town, the Commandment, commonly called a Writ, for the burning of Hereticks. For unleſs he had the Queens Warrant to ſave him harmleſs, he would not have to do in the matter: and that which remained to be done in that caſe, could not be diſpatched till that Warrant came.

A Writ for burning of Hereticks.

Whiles this Purſivant went on his journey, they willed to be brought unto them the Books that they commanded before to be ſearched out. For they determined to throw them into the Fire with Bucer and Phagius.

About the ſame time Doctor Watſon taking occaſion upon the day, becauſe it was a high feaſt, in the which was wont to be celebrated the memorial of the Purification of the Bleſſed Virgin, made a Sermon to the people upon that Pſalm, We have received thy mercy (O Lord) in the midſt of thy Temple, &c. In the which Sermon he ſpake much reproach of Bucer and Phagius, and of their Doctrine.

Watſons Sermon upon Candlemas day.

He ſaid, that theſe men, and all the Hereticks of our time that were of the ſame opinion (the which for the moſt part, he ſaid, we budded out of Germany) among other things which they had perniciouſly put into mens heads, taught to caſt away all Ceremonies. Whereas notwithſtanding the Apoſtle himſelf commanded all things to be done in due order.

And upon that deed of the Bleſſed Virgin and Joſeph, which was done by them as upon that day, it was manifeſtly apparent, that they with our Saviour, being then a little Babe, obſerved theſe Rites and Ceremonies for Catholick Men to teach. For he ſaid, that they came to the Temple the ſame time with wax candles in their hands, after the manner of Proceſſion (as they term it) in good order with much reverence and devotion, and yet we were not aſhamed to laugh and mock at theſe things with the Hereticks and Schiſmaticks.

Mary and Joſeph went a proceſſion with wax candles, or elſe D. Watſon lieth falſe.

As he was telling his tale of Chriſt, Mary, and Joſeph, one of them that heard him, a pleaſant and merry conceited fellow, turning himſelf to him that ſtood next him; And if it be true (quoth he) that this Man Preacheth, which of them I pray you (if a Man might ſpur him a queſtion) bare the Croſs before them? for that might not be miſſing in ſuch Solemn Ceremonies. Not only this Man jeſted at the Preachers folly, but divers other alſo laughed at his manifeſt unſhamefaſtneſs, in Preaching theſe ſo vain and fooliſh Superſtitions.

A queſtion to be ſpurred to D. Watſon.

The ſudden ſwoon of Chriſtopherſon.

While he was thus talking to his Audience, John Chriſtopherſon elected Biſhop of Chicheſter, being ſtricken with a ſudden ſickneſs, fell down in a ſwoon among the preſs: and with much ado, being ſcarce able a good while to come to himſelf again, in the mean time babbled many things unadviſedly, and as though he had been out of his wits. Some thought it came upon this occaſion, becauſe he had been greatly accuſed before the Commiſſioners for miſ-ſpending and miſ-ordering the goods of the Colledge; and therefore was grieved with the matter, knowing that they had been offended with him, by that that Ormanet had cancelled before his face a Leaſe of his, by the which he had let to farm to his Brother in Law a certain Manor of that Colledge, becauſe the covenants ſeemed unreaſonable.

By this time was returned again the Purſivant; who (as we before told) was ſent to London with the Commiſſioners Letters, and brought with him a Warrant for the burning of theſe Men.

The day aſſigned for burning M. Bucer, and Paulus Phagius Bones.

Upon the receit whereof, they appointed the ſixth day of February for the accompliſhment of the matter. For it had hanged already a great while in hand.

Therefore when the ſaid day was come, the Commiſſioners ſent for the Vicechancellor, demanding of him in what caſe things ſtood, whether all things were in a readineſs for the accompliſhment of this buſineſs, or no. Underſtanding by him that all things were ready, they commanded the matter to be broached out of hand.

The taking of M. Bucer and Paulus Phagius.

The Vicechancellor therefore taking with him Marſhal the Common Notary, went firſt to St. Michaels Church where Phagius was buried. There he called forth Andrew Smith, Henry Sawyer, and Henry Adams, Men of the ſame Pariſh, and bound them with an Oath, to dig up Phagius Bones, and to bring them to the place of execution. Marſhall took their Oaths; receiving the like of Roger Smith and William Haſell the Town Sergeants, and of John Caper, Warden of the ſame Church, for doing the like with Bucer. Smith the Major of the Town, which ſhould be their executioner (for it was not lawful for them to intermeddle in caſes of Blood) commanded certain of his Townſ-Men to wait upon him in harneſs, by whom the dead Bodies were guarded; and being bound with Ropes, and laid upon Mens Shoulders (for they were incloſed in Cheſts, Bucer in the ſame that he was buried, and Phagius in a new) they were born into the midſt of the Market ſtead, with a great train of people following them.

The burning of M. Bucer and Paulus Phagius.

This place was prepared before, and a great poſt was ſet faſt in the ground to bind the Carkaſſes to, and a great heap of Wood was laid ready to burn them withal.

When they came thither, the Cheſts were ſet up on end with the dead Bodies in them, and faſtned on both ſides with Stakes, and bound to the poſt with a long Iron Chain, as if they had been alive. Fire being forthwith put to, as ſoon as it began to flame round about, a great ſort of Books that were condemned with them, were caſt into the ſame.

The talk of the Country folk of the burning of M. Bucer and Paulus Phagius.

There was that day gathered into the Town a great multitude of country folk (for it was Market day) who ſeeing Men born to execution, and learning by inquiry that they were dead before, partly deteſted and abhorred the extream cruelty of the Commiſſioners toward the rotten Carkaſſes, and partly laughed at their folly in making ſuch preparative. For what needeth any weapon, ſaid they? As though they were afraid that the dead Bodies, which felt them not, would do them ſome harm: Or to what purpoſe ſerveth that Chain wherewith they are tyed, ſince they might be burnt looſe without peril? for it was not to be feared that they would run away.

Thus, every Body that ſtood by found fault with the cruelneſs of the deed, either ſharply or elſe lightly, as every Mans mind gave him. There were very few that liked their doing therein.

The purpoſe of D. Watſons Sermon againſt Martin Bucer.

Watſons Sermon at the burning of Bucer and Phagius.

IN the mean time that they were a roſting in the Fire, Watſon went into the Pulpit in Saint Maries Church, and there before his Audience railed upon their Doctrine, as wicked and erroneous, ſaying, that it was the ground of all miſchief that had happened of a long time in the common-weal. For behold (ſaid he) as well the proſperity as the adverſity of theſe years that have enſued, and ye ſhall find that all things have chanced unluckily to them that have followed this new found faith; as contrarily all things have happened fortunately to them that have eſchewed it. What robbing and polling (quoth he) have we ſeen in this Realm, as long as Religion was defaced with Sects, the common treaſure (gathered for the maintenance of the whole publick weal) and the goods of the Realm ſhamefully ſpent in waſte for the maintenance of a few folks luſts, all good order broken, all diſcipline caſt aſide, Holidays appointed to the ſolemnizing of Ceremonies neglected; and that more is, the places themſelves beaten down, Fleſh and other kind of prohibited ſuſtenance eaten every where upon days forbidden, without remorſe of Conſcience, the Prieſts had in deriſion, the Maſs rayled upon, no honour done to the Sacraments of the Church; all eſtates and degrees given to ſuch a licentious liberty, without check, that all things may ſeem to draw to their utter ruin and decay.

Watſon ſlanderouſly depraveth the Doctrine of the Proteſtants.

And yet in the mean time, the Name of the Goſpel was pretended outwardly, as though that for it Men ought of duty to give credit to their erroneous opinions; whereas indeed there is nothing more diſcrepant, or more to the ſlander of Gods word then the ſame. For what other thing taught they to remain in that moſt Bleſſed and Myſtical Sacrament of the Body of our Lord, than bare unleavened Bread? And what elſe do the remnant of them teach unto this day? whereas Chriſt by expreſs words doth aſſure it to be his very Body. How perillous a Doctrine is that which concerneth the fatal and abſolute neceſſity of Predeſtination? And yet they ſet it out in ſuch wiſe, that they have left no choiſe at all in things. As who ſhould ſay, it skilled not what a Man purpoſed of any matter, ſince he had not the power to determine otherwiſe then the matter ſhould come to paſs. The which was the peculiar opinion of them, that made God the Author of evil, bringing Men through this perſwaſion into ſuch a careleſs ſecurity of the everlaſting eternity, that in the mean ſeaſon it made no matter either toward Salvation, or Damnation, what a Man did in this Life. Theſe errours (which were not even among the Heathen Men) were defended by them with great ſtoutneſs.

Theſe and many ſuch other things he ſlanderouſly and falſly alledged againſt Bucer, whoſe Doctrine (in ſuch ſort as he himſelf taught it) either he would not underſtand, or elſe he was minded to ſlander. And yet he was not ignorant, that Bucer taught none other things then the very ſame whereunto both he and Scot, in the Reign of King Edward the ſixth, had willingly aſſented, by ſubſcribing thereto with their own hands. While he talked in this wiſe before the people, many of them that had written Verſes before, did ſet up other new, in the which, like a ſort of Water Frogs, they ſpued out their venemous malice againſt Bucer and Phagius. This was the laſt Act of this Enterlude, and yet there remained a few things to be done, among the which was the reconciling of two Churches, of our Lady, and of St. Michael, which we declared to have been interdicted before.

Watſon and Scot had both ſubſcribed to the Doctrine of the Goſpel in the Reign of King Edward the ſixth.

The reconciling of the Churches that were interdicted.

This was done the next day following, by the aforeſaid Biſhop of Cheſter, with as much Ceremonial Solemnity as the Law required. But that impanate God, whom Bucers Carcaſs had chaled from thence, was not yet turned thither again; neither was it lawful for him to come there any more, unleſs he were brought thither with great Solemnity: As I ſuppoſe, during all the time of his abſence, he was entertained by the Commiſſioners at Trinity Colledge, and there continued as a ſojourner. For thither came all the Graduates of the Univerſity, the 8. of February of gentleneſs and curteſie, to bring him home again. Amongſt the which number, the Biſhop of Cheſter (worthy for his eſtate to come neareſt to him, becauſe he was a Biſhop) took and carried him clad in a long Rochet, and a large Tippet of Sarcenet about his neck; wherein he wrapped his Idol alſo. Ormanet Datary had given the ſame a little before to the Univerſity, for that and ſuch like purpoſes.

A Solemn Proceſſion of the Univerſity and of the Townſmen.

When this Idol ſhould return home, he went out the ſtraiteſt and neareſt way as other folks are wont to go, but he fetched a compaſs about the moſt part of the Town, and rored through ſo many of the ſtreets, that it was a large hour and more, ere he could find the way into this Church again. I believe the ancient Romans obſerved ſuch cuſtom not much unlike this in their Proceſſion, when they made Supplications at the Shrines of all their Gods. The order of which Proceſſion was this; The Maſters Regents went before, ſinging with a loud voice; Salve feſta dies, &c. Next them followed the Biſhop of Cheſter, about him went Ormanet and his fellow Commiſſioners, with the Maſters of the Colledges, bearing every Man a long Taper light in his hand. After whom, a little ſpace off, followed other Degrees of the Univerſity. Laſt behind came the Major and his Townſmen. Before them all went the Beadles, crying to ſuch as they met, that they ſhould bow themſelves humbly before the Hoſt: If any refuſed ſo to do, they threatned to ſend them forthwith to the Tolbooth. Their God being led with this pomp, and pacified with great ſacrificed Hoſts of Bucer and Phagius, at length ſetled himſelf again in his accuſtomed room.

The order of Proceſſion in Cambridge.

Scot of Cheſter Prayed with many words, that that day might be lucky and fortunate to himſelf, and to all that were preſent, and that from that day forward (now that Gods wrath was appeaſed, and all other things ſet in good order) all Men ſhould make themſelves conformable to peace and quietneſs, namely, in matters appertaining to Religion. After this, they beſtowed a few days in puniſhing and amercing ſuch as they thought had deſerved it. Some they ſuſpended from giving voices either to their own preferment, or to the preferment of any other. Some they forbade to have the charge of Pupils, leſt they ſhould infect the tender youth (being pliable, to take what print ſoever ſhould be laid upon them) with corrupt Doctrine and Hereſie, others they chaſtiſed wrongfully without any deſert, and many a one they puniſhed, contrary to all right and reaſon.

Anno 1557.

Certain of the Univerſity amerced and puniſhed.

The Decrees of the Inquiſitors.

Laſt of all they ſet forth certain Statutes, by the which they would have the Univerſity hereafter ordered. Wherein they enacted many things as concerning the election of their Officers of the Univerſity, of keeping and adminiſtring the Goods of the Univerſity, and of many other things. But eſpecially they handled the matter very circumſpectly for Religion. In the which they were ſo ſcrupulous, that they repleniſhed all things either with open Blaſphemy, or with ridiculous Superſtition. For they preſcribed at how many Maſſes every Man ſhould be day by day, and how many Pater noſters and Aves every Man ſhould ſay when he ſhould enter into the Church, and in his entrance, after what ſort he ſhould bow himſelf to the Altar, and how to the Maſter of the houſe, what he ſhould do there, and how long he ſhould tarry, how many, and what Prayers he ſhould ſay, what, and how he ſhould ſing, what meditations others ſhould uſe while the Prieſt is in his Memento, mumbling ſecretly to himſelf, what time of the Maſs a Man ſhould ſtand, and when he ſhould ſit down, when he ſhould make curteſie, when excluſively, when incluſively, and many other ſuperſtitious toyes they decreed, that it was a ſport then to behold their Superſtitions, and were tedious now to recite them.

Moreover theſe Maſters of good order, for faſhions ſake, ordained that every Man ſhould put on a Surpleſs, not torn nor worn, but clean, forbidding them in any wiſe to wipe their Noſes thereon.

Theſe things thus ſet at a ſtay, when the Commiſſioners were now ready to go their ways, the Univerſity for ſo great benefits (which ſhe ſhould not ſuffer to fall out of remembrance many years after) coveting to ſhew ſome token of curteſie towards them again, digniſied Ormanet and Cole with the degree of Doctorſhip for all the reſidue, ſaving Chriſtopherſon, who now, by reaſon he was elected Biſhop, preventing that degree, had received that order before. Thus at length were ſent away theſe peace-makers, that came to pacifie ſtrifes and quarrels, who through provoking every Man to accuſe one another, left ſuch gaps and breaches in Mens hearts at their departure, that to this day they could never be cloſed nor joyned together again.

Ormanet and Cole proceeded Doctors.

The departing of the Inquiſitors.

Theſe Commiſſioners, before they departed out of the Univerſity, gave commandment, that the Maſters of every Houſe ſhould copy out their Statutes, the which beſides common Ordinances, contained in them certain rules of private order, for every Houſe particularly. Swinborn (who as I ſaid, was Maſter of Clarehall) being demanded whether he would have thoſe things ingroſſed in Parchment or in Paper, anſwered, that it made no matter wherein they were written: For the Paper, or ſleighter thing that were of leſs continuance then Paper, would ſerve the turn well enough. For he ſaid, a ſlenderer thing then that would laſt a great deal longer then thoſe decrees ſhould ſtand in force. Neither was the Man deceived in his conjecture; for within two years after, God beholding us with mercy, called Queen Mary out of this life the 17. of November, Anno 1558. After whom her Sister ELIZABETH ſucceeding in the Kingdom, raiſed to life again the True Religion. Whereupon, as the Church of Chriſt began by little and little to flouriſh; ſo the memory of Bucer and Phagius (although their bones were burnt by Cardinal Pool) was reſtored again by this godly Qu. ELIZABETH, who gave then in Commiſſion to Matthew Parker then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and to Edmund Grindal then Biſhop of London, to Maſter Gualter Haddon and others: For the performance of which Commiſſion, the ſaid reverend Biſhops addreſſed their Letters to the Vicechancellour, &c.

The Oration of Mr. Acworth, Oratour of the Univerſity, at the reſtitution of Martin Bucer, and Paulus Phagius.

The Oration of Mr. Acworth.

I Am in doubt, whether I may intreat of the praiſe and commendation of ſo great a Clerk (for the celebrating whereof, this aſſembly and concourſe of yours is made this day) or of the vices and calamities, out of the which we be newly delivered, or of them both, conſidering the one cannot be mentioned without the other. In the which times ye felt ſo much anguiſh and ſorrow (my right dear Brethren) that if I ſhould repeat them, and bring them to remembrance again, I fear me, I ſhould not ſo much work a juſt hatred in us towards them, for the injuries received in them, as renew our old ſorrow and heavineſs. Again, men muſt needs account me unadviſed and fooliſh in my doing, if I ſhould think my ſelf able to make him which hath lived before our eyes in praiſe and eſtimation, more famous and notable by my Oration which he by his living and converſation hath oftentimes poliſhed. But the wickedneſs of the times, which endeavored to wipe clean out of Remembrance of Men the name that was ſo famous and renowned in every mans mouth, did much profit him. Inſomuch, that both in his life time all things redounded to his continual renown, and in eſpecial after his deceaſe, nothing could be deviſed more honorable, then with ſo ſolemn furniture and ceremonies, to have gone about to have hurt the memorial of ſuch a worthy Man, and yet could not bring to paſs the thing that was ſo ſore coveted; but rather brought that thing to paſs, which was chiefly ſought to be avoided. For the deſire that men have of the dead hath purchaſed to many men everlaſting fame, and hath not taken away immortality, but rather amplified and increaſed the fame. By means whereof it cometh to paſs, that he that will intreat of thoſe things that pertain to the praiſe of Bucer after his death, cannot chuſe but ſpeak of the crabbedneſs of the times paſt, upon the which riſeth a great increaſe and augmentation of his praiſe. But his life ſo excellently ſet forth, not onely by the writings of the Clerks, Cheeke and Carre, and by the lively voice of the right famous Doctor Haddon, uttered in this place to the great admiration of all the Hearers, when his Body ſhould be laid into his grave to be buried; and after his burial, by the godly and moſt holy Preachings of the right reverend Father in Chriſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury that now is, and of Dr. Redman, the which for the worthineſs and excellency of them, ought to ſtick longer in our minds unwritten, then many things that are penned and put in print; but alſo by the great aſſembly of all the degrees of the Univerſity the ſame day, in bringing him to his grave and the next day after by the induſtry of every man that was endued with any knowledge in the Greek or Latin tongues; of the which, there was no man but ſet up ſome Verſes, as witneſs of his juſt and unfained ſorrow upon the walls of the Church: that neither at that time any reverence or duty which is due to the dead departing out of this life, was then overſlipped, or now remaineth undone, that may ſeem to pertain either to the celebrating of the memorial of ſo holy or famous a perſon, or to the conſecrating of him to everlaſting memory. We at that time ſaw with our eyes this Univerſity flouriſhing by his inſtitutions, the love of ſincere Religion not onely ingendred, but alſo confirmed and ſtrengthened through his continual and daily preaching. Inſomuch, that at ſuch time as he was ſuddenly taken from us, there was ſcarce any man that for ſorrow could find in his heart to bear with the preſent ſtate of this life, but that either be wiſhed with all his heart to depart out of this life with Bucer into another, and by dying to follow him into immortality, or elſe endeavoured himſelf with weeping and ſighing to call him again, being diſpatched of all troubles, into the priſon of this Body, out of the which he is eſcaped, leſt he ſhould leave us as it were ſtanding in battel without a Captain, and he himſelf as one caſhiered, depart with his wages, or as one diſcharged out of the Camp, withdraw himſelf to the everlaſting quietneſs and tranquillity of the Soul. Therefore all men evidently declared at that time, both how ſore they took his death to heart, and alſo how hardly they could away with the miſture of ſuch a man. As long as the ardent love of his Religion (wherewith we were inflamed) flouriſhed, it wrought in our Hearts an incredible deſire of his preſence among us. But after the time that the godly man ceaſed to be any more in our ſight, and in our eyes, that ardent and burning love of Religion by little and little waxed cold in our minds, and according to the times that came after (which were both miſerable, and to our utter undoing) it began not by little and little to be darkened, but it altogether vaniſhed away, and turned into nothing. For we fell again into the troubleſomneſs of the Popiſh Doctrine; the old Rites and Cuſtoms of the Romiſh Church were reſtored again, not to the garniſhment and beautifying of the Chriſtian Religion (as they ſurmiſed) but to the utter defacing, violating, and defiling of the ſame. Death was ſet before the eyes of ſuch as perſevered in the Chriſtian Doctrine that they had learned before. They were baniſhed the Realm that would not apply themſelves to the time, and do as other men did: ſuch as remained, were enforced either to diſſemble, or to hide themſelves, and creep into corners, or elſe as it were by drinking of the charmed cup of Circe, to be turned and altered, not onely from the nature of Man into the nature of brute Beaſts, but (that far worſe and much more monſtrous is) from the likeneſs of God and his Angels, into the likeneſs of Devils. And all England was infected with this malady. But I would to God the corruption of thoſe times, which overwhelmed all the whole Realm, had not at leaſt wiſe yet pierced every part and member thereof. Of the which there was not one, but that (beſides the grief that it felt, with the reſidue of the Body, by reaſon of the ſickneſs and contagion ſpread into the whole) had ſome ſorrow and calamity peculiarly by it ſelf. And to omit the reſt (of the which to intreat, this place is not appointed, nor the time requireth ought to be ſpoken) this dwelling place of the Muſes (which we call the Univerſity) may be a ſufficient witneſs what we may judge of all the reſt of the Body. For certainly, my Brethren, the thing is not to be diſſembled, that cannot be hidden. We, applying our ſelves to thoſe moſt filthy times, have moſt ſhamefully yielded, like faint-hearted cowards, which had not the ſtomachs to ſuſtain the Adverſities of poverty, Baniſhment, and Death. Which in our living and converſation kept neither the conſtancy taught us by Philoſophy, nor yet the patience taught us by Holy Scripture, which have done all things at the commandment of others. And therefore that which the Poet (although in another ſenſe) hath trimly ſpoken, may well be thought to have been truly propheſied upon us:

The times and ſeaſons changed be:
And changed in the ſame are we.

Divers of them that were of a pure and ſincere judgment as concerning Religion, being driven from hence and diſtroubled, the reſt that remained taſted and felt of the inhumanity of them in whoſe hands the Authority of doing things here conſiſted; although to ſay the truth, I have uſed a gentler term then behoved. For it is not to be acounted inhumanity, but rather immanity and beaſtly cruelty: the which when they had ſpent all kinds of Torments and Puniſhments upon the quick, when they had cruelly taken from ſuch as conſtantly perſevered, life, from others riches, honours, and all hope of promotion, yet they could not be ſo ſatisfied, but that incenſed and ſtirred with a greater fury, it began to outrage even againſt the dead. Therefore whereas in every ſingular place was executed a ſingular kind of cruelty, inſomuch, that there was no kind of cruelneſs that could be deviſed, but it was put in ure in one place or other, this was proper or peculiar to Cambridge, to exerciſe the cruelty upon the dead, which in other places was extended but to the quick. Oxford burnt up the right reverend Fathers, Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer the noble witneſſes of the clear light of the Goſpel. Moreover, at London periſhed theſe two Lanterns of light, Rogers and Bradford: In whom it is hard to ſay, whether there were more force of eloquence and utterance in preaching, or more holineſs of life and converſation. Many other without number, both here and in other places were conſumed to aſhes for bearing record to the Truth. For what City is there that hath not flamed I ſay not with burning of houſes and buildings, but with burning of holy Bodies? But Cambridge, after there were no more left alive upon whom they might ſpue out their bitter poyſon, played the mad Bedlam againſt the dead. The dead men, whoſe living no man was able to find fault with, whoſe Doctrine no man was able to reprove, were by falſe ſlanderous Accuſers indicted, contrary to the Laws of God and man, ſued in the Law, condemned, their Sepulchres violated and broken up, their Carkaſſes pulled out and burnt with fire. A thing ſurely incredible, if we had not ſeen it with our eyes, and a thing that hath not lightly been heard of. But the hainouſneſs of this wicked act was ſpread abroad as a common talk in every mans mouth, and was blown and diſperſed through all Chriſtendom. Bucer by the excellency of his wit and Doctrine known to all men, of our Country-men in manner craved, of many others intreated and ſent for, to the intent he might inſtruct our Cambridge men in the ſincere Doctrine of the Chriſtian Religion, being ſpent with age, and his ſtrength uttterly decayed, forſook his own Country, refuſed not the tedioufneſs of that long journey, was not afraid to adventure himſelf upon the Sea, but had more regard of the dilating and amplifying of the Church of Chriſt, then of all other things. So in concluſion he came, every man received and welcomed him: afterward he lived in ſuch wiſe, as it might appear he came not hither for his own ſake, but for ours. For he ſought not to drive away the ſickneſs that he had taken by troubleſome travel of his long journey: and albeit his ſtrength were weakened and appalled, yet he regarded not the recovery of his health, but put himſelf to immoderate labour and intolerable pain, only to teach and inſtruct us. And yet toward this ſo noble and worthy a perſon, while he lived, were ſhewed all the tokens of humanity and gentleneſs, reverence and courteſie that could be; and when he was dead, the moſt horrible cruelty and ſpight that might be imagined. For what can be ſo commendable, as to grant unto the living, houſe and abiding place, and to the dead, burial? Or what is he that will find in his heart to give entertainment, and to cheriſh that perſon in his houſe with all kind of gentleneſs that he can deviſe, upon whom he could not vouchſafe to beſtow burial when he is dead? Again, what an inconſtancy is it, with great ſolemnity, and with much advancement and commendation of his vertues to bury a man honourably, and anon after to break up his Tomb, and pull him out ſpitefully, and wrongfully to ſlander him being dead, who during his life time alway deſerved praiſe? All theſe things have happened unto Bucer, who whilſt he lived had free acceſs into the moſt gorgeous buildings and ſtately palaces of the greateſt Princes, and when he was dead, could not be ſuffered to enjoy ſo much as his poor grave. Who being laid in the ground nobly to his eternal fame, was afterward, to his utter defacing, ſpitefully taken up and burned. The which things albeit they did no harm to the dead (for the dead carkaſſes feel not pain, neither doth the fame of godly perſons depend upon the report of vulgar People, and the light rumours of men, but upon the rightful cenſure and juſt judgment of God) yet it reproveth and extream cruelneſs and unſatiable deſire of revengment in them which offer ſuch utter wrong to the dead. Theſe perſons therefore whom they have pulled out of their graves and burned, I believe (if they had been alive) they would have caſt out of houſe and home, they would have driven out of all mens Company, and in the end with moſt cruel torments have torn them in pieces, being nevertheleſs Aliens, being ſtrangers, and being alſo fetched hither by us out of ſuch a Country, where they not only needed not to fear any puniſhment, but contrarywiſe were always had in much reputation, as well among the noble and honorable, as alſo among the Vulgar and common People. But yet how much more gentle then theſe men was Biſhop Gardiner, otherwiſe an earneſt defender of the Popiſh Doctrine? who againſt his own Country-men, let paſs no cruelty whereby he might extinguiſh with fire and ſword the light of the Goſpel: and yet he ſpared forraigners, becauſe the right of them is ſo holy, that there was never Nation ſo barbarous, that would violate the ſame. For when he had in his power the renowned Clerk Peter Martyr, then teaching at Oxford, he would not keep him to puniſh him, but (as I have heard reported) when he ſhould go his way, he gave him wherewith to bear his charges. So that the thing which he though he might of right do to his Country-men, he judged unlawful to do to ſtrangers. And whom the Law of God could not withhold from the wicked murdering of his own Country-men, him did the Law of man bridle from killing of ſtrangers, the which hath ever appeaſed all barbarous beaſtlineſs, and mitigated all cruelty. For it is a point of humanity for man and man to meet together, and one to come to another, though they be never ſo far ſeparated and ſet aſunder, both by Sea and by Land, without the which acceſs there can be no intercourſe of merchandiſe, there can be no conference of wits, which firſt of all ingendred learning, nor any commodity of ſociety long to continue. To repulſe them that come to us, and to prohibite them our Countries, is a point of inhumanity. Now to entertain them evil, that by our ſufferance dwell among us, and have increaſe of houſhold and houſhold-ſtuff, it is a point of wickedneſs. Wherefore this cruelty hath far ſurmounted the cruelty of all others, the which, to ſatisfie the unſatiable greedineſs thereof, drew to execution not only ſtrangers, brought hither at our intreatance and ſending for, but even the withered and rotten Carkaſſes digged out of their graves; to the intent that the immeaſurable thirſt which could not be quenched with ſhedding the Blood of them that were alive, might at the leaſt be ſatisfied in burning of dead mens Bones. Theſe (my Brethren) theſe, I ſay, are the juſt cauſes which have ſo ſore provoked the wrath of God againſt us, becauſe that in doing extream injury to the dead we have been prone and ready; but in putting the ſame away we have been ſlow and ſlack. For verily I believe (if I may have liberty to ſay freely what I think) (ye ſhall bear with me, if I chance to caſt forth any thing unadviſedly in the heat and haſty diſcourſe of my Oration) that even this place, in the which we have ſo oftentimes aſſembled, being defiled with that new kind of wickedneſs, ſuch as man never heard of before, is a let and hinderance unto us, when we call for the help of God, by means whereof our prayers are not accepted, which we make to appeaſe the Godhead, and to win him to be favourable unto us again.

Anno 1556.

The Blood of Abel ſhed by Cain, calleth and crieth from the earth that ſucked it up: likewiſe, the undeſerved burning of theſe Bodies, calleth upon Almighty God to puniſh us, and crieth, that not only the Authors of ſo great a wickedneſs, but alſo the miniſters thereof are unpure, the places defiled, in which theſe things were perpetrated, the Air infected which we take into our Bodies, to the intent that by ſundry diſeaſes and ſickneſſes we may receive puniſhment for ſo execrable wickedneſs. Look well about ye (my dear Brethren) and conſider with your ſelves the evils that are paſt? and ye ſhall ſee how they took their beginning at Bucers death, following one in anothers neck even unto this day. Firſt and formoſt, when we were even in the chiefeſt of our mourning, and ſcarcely yet comforted of our ſorrow for his death, the ſweating ſickneſs lighted upon us, the which paſſed ſwiftly thorow all England, and as it were in haſte diſpatched an innumerable company of men. Secondly, the untimely death of our moſt noble King Edward the ſixth (whoſe life in vertue ſurmounted the opinion of all men, and ſeemed worthy of immortality) happed contrary to mens expectation in that age, in which unleſs violence be uſed, few do die. The converſion of Religion, or rather the everſion and turning thereof into Papacy: The incurſion and domination of ſtrangers, under whoſe yoke our necks were almoſt ſubdued: The importunate cruelty of the Biſhops againſt the Chriſtians, which executed that wickedneſs, for making ſatisfaction whereof we are gathered together this day. Theſe are the things that enſued after his death; but after his burning enſued yet grievouſer things: Namely, new kinds of plagues, and contagious diſeaſes, unknown to the very Phyſicians, whereby either every mans health was impaired, or elſe they were brought to their graves, or elſe very hardly recovered. Bloody battels without victory, whereof the profit redounded to the enemy, and to us the ſlaughter with great loſs. The which things do evidently declare, that God is turned from us, and angry with us, and that he giveth no ear to our prayers, and that he is not moved with our cries and ſighs, but that he looketh that this our meeting and aſſembly ſhould be to this end, that foraſmuch as we have violated their Corps, we ſhould do them right again; ſo that the memorial of theſe moſt holy men may be commended unto poſterity unhurt and undefamed. Wherefore amend yet at length (my Brethren) which hitherto, by reaſon of the variableneſs and unconſtancy of the times, have been wavering and unſtedfaſt in your hearts; ſhew your ſelves cheerful and forward in making ſatisfaction for the injury you have done to the dead, whom with ſo great wickedneſs of late ye indammaged and defiled; not cenſing them with the perfumes of thoſe odours and ſpices now worn out of ure, and put to flight, but with a true and unfained repentance of the heart, and with prayer, to the intent that the heavenly Godhead, provoked by our doings to be our enemy, may by our humble ſubmiſſion be intreated to be favourable and agreeable to all our other requeſts.

When Acworth had made an end of his Oration, Mr. James Pilkington the Queens Reader of the Divinity Lecture, going up into the Pulpit made a Sermon upon the 112. Pſal. the beginning whereof is, Bleſſed is the man that feareth the Lord.

Where intending to prove, that the remembrance of the juſt man ſhall not periſh, and that Bucer is bleſſed, and that the ungodly ſhall fret at the ſight thereof, but yet that all their attempts ſhall be to no purpoſe, to the intent this ſaying may be verified, (I will curſe your bleſſings, and bleſs your curſings,) he took his beginning of his own perſon; That albeit he were both ready and willing to take that matter in hand, partly for the worthineſs of the matter it ſelf, and eſpecially for certain ſingular vertues of thoſe Perſons, for whom that Congregation was called, yet notwithſtanding, he ſaid, he was nothing meet to take that charge upon him.

For it were more reaſon, that he which before had done Bucer wrong, ſhould now make him amends for the diſpleaſure. As for his own part, he was ſo far from working any evil againſt Bucer, either in word or deed; that for their ſingular knowledge almoſt in all kind of learning, he imbraced both him and Phagius with all his heart. But yet he ſomewhat more favoured Bucer, as with whom he had more familiarity and acquaintance. In conſideration whereof, although that it was ſcarce convenient, that he at that time ſhould ſpeak, yet notwithſtanding he was contented for friendſhip and courteſie ſake, not to fail them in their buſineſs. Having made this Preface, he entred into the pith of the matter, wherein he blamed greatly the barbarous cruelty of the Court of Rome, ſo fiercely extended againſt the dead. He ſaid it was a more haynous matter then was to be born with, to have ſhewed ſuch extreme cruelneſs to them that were alive; but for any man to misbehave himſelf in ſuch wiſe toward the dead, was ſuch a thing as had not lightly been heard of: Saying that he affirmed this cuſtom of excommunicating and curſing of dead bones, to have come firſt from Rome. For Evagrius reporteth in his writings, that Eutychius was of the ſame opinion, induced by the example of Joſias, who ſlew the Prieſts of Baal, and burnt up the Bones of them that were dead, even upon the Altars. Whereas, before the time of Eutychius this kind of puniſhment was well near unknown, neither afterward uſurped of any man (that ever he heard of) until nine hundred years after Chriſt. In the latter times (the which how much the further they were from the Golden-age of the Apoſtles, ſo much the more they were corrupted) this kind of cruelneſs began to creep further. For it is manifeſtly known, that Stephen the ſixth Pope of Rome digged up Formoſus, his laſt Predeceſſor in that See, and ſpoiling him of his apparrel, buried him again in a lay-mans apparrel (as they call it) having firſt cut off and thrown into Tyber his two fingers, with which according to their accuſtomed manner, he was wont to bleſs and conſecrate. The which his unſpeakable tyranny uſed againſt Formoſus, within ſix years after, Sergius the third increaſed alſo againſt the ſame Formoſus. For taking up his dead Body, and ſetting it in a Popes Chair, he cauſed his Head to be ſmitten off, and his other three fingers to be cut from his hand, and his Body to be caſt into the River of Tyber, abrogating and diſannulling all his Decrees, which thing was never done by any man before that day. The cauſe why ſo great cruelty was exerciſed (by the report of Nauclerus) was this; Becauſe that Formoſus had been an adverſary to Stephen and Sergius when they ſued to be made Biſhops.

This kind of cruelty (unheard of before) the Popes awhile exerciſed one againſt another. But now, ere ever they had ſufficiently felt the ſmart thereof themſelves, they had turned the ſame upon their necks. Wherefore it was to be wiſhed, that ſeeing it began among them, it might have remained ſtill with the Authors thereof, and not have been ſpread over thence unto us. But ſuch is the nature of all evil, that it quickly paſſeth into example, for others to do the like. For about the year of the Lord 1400. John Wickliff was in like manner digged up, and burnt into aſhes, and thrown into a Brook that runneth by the Town where he was buried. Of the which ſelf-ſame ſawce taſted alſo William Tracy of Glouceſter, a man of a worſhipful houſe, becauſe he had written in his laſt will, that he ſhould be ſaved only by Faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and that there needed not the help of any man thereto, whether he were in Heaven or in Earth; and therefore bequeathed no Legacy to that purpoſe, as all other men were accuſtomed to do. This deed was done ſince we may remember, about the 22. year of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, in the year of our Lord, 1530.

Now ſeeing they extended ſuch cruelty to the dead, he ſaid it was an eaſie matter to conjecture what they would do to the living. Whereof we have had ſufficient trial by the examples of our own men, theſe few years paſt. And if we wonld take the pains to peruſe things done ſomewhat longer ago, we might find notable matters out of our own Chronicles. Howbeit, it was ſufficient for the manifeſt demonſtration of that matter, to declare the beaſtly butchery of the French King, executed upon the Waldenſes at Cabrier, and the places near thereabout, by his Captain Miner, about the year of our Lord, 1545. than the which there was never thing read of more cruelty done, no not even of the barbarous Pagans. And yet for all that, when divers had ſhewed their uttermoſt cruelty both againſt theſe and many others, they were ſo far from their purpoſe, in extinguiſhing the light of the Goſpel, which they endeavoured to ſuppreſs, that it increaſed daily more and more. The which thing Charles the fifth (then whom all Chriſtendom had not a more prudent Prince, nor the Church of Chriſt almoſt a ſorer Enemy) eaſily perceived; and therefore when he had in his hand Luther dead, and Melanchthon and Pomeran with certain other Preachers of the Goſpel alive, he not only determined not any thing extremely againſt them, nor violated their graves, but alſo intreating them gently, ſent them away, not ſo much as once forbidding them to publiſh openly the Doctrine that they profeſſed. For it is the nature of Chriſts Church, that the more that Tyrants ſpurn againſt it, the more it increaſeth and flouriſheth. A notable proof aſſuredly of the providence and pleaſure of God in ſowing the Goſpel, was that coming of the Bohemians unto us, to the intent to hear Wickliff, of whom we ſpake before, who at that time read openly at Oxford; and alſo the going of our men to the ſaid Bohemians when perſecution was raiſed againſt us. But much more notable was it, that we have ſeen come to paſs in theſe our days; that the Spaniards, ſent for into the Realm of purpoſe to ſuppreſs the Goſpel, as ſoon as they were returned home repleniſhed many parts of their Country with the ſame Truth of Religion, to the which before they were utter enemies. By the which examples it might evidently be perceived, that the Princes of this World labour in vain to overthrow it, conſidering how the mercy of God hath ſown it abroad, not only in thoſe Countries that we ſpake of, but alſo in France, Pole, Scotland, and almoſt all the reſt of Europe. For it is ſaid, that ſome parts of Italy (although it be under the Popes noſe) yet do they of late incline to the knowledge of the heavenly Truth: Wherefore ſufficient argument and proof might be taken by the ſucceſs and increaſement thereof, to make us believe that this Doctrine is ſent us from Heaven, unleſs we will wilfully be blinded. And if there were any that deſired to be perſwaded more at large in the matter, he might adviſedly conſider the voyage that the Emperour and the Pope with both their powers together, made joyntly againſt the Bohemians. In the which the Emperour took ſuch an unworthy repulſe of ſo ſmall a handful of his enemies, that he never almoſt in all his life took the like diſhonour in any place. Hereof alſo might be an eſpecial example of the death of Henry, King of France, who the ſame day that he had purpoſed to perſecute the Church of Chriſt, and to have burned certain of his Guard whom he had impriſoned for Religion, at whoſe execution he had promiſed to have been himſelf in proper perſon, in the midſt of his triumph at a Tourney, was wounded ſo ſore in the head with a Spear by one of his own Subjects, that ere it was long after he died. In the which behalf, the dreadful judgments of God were no leſs approved in our own Country-men. For one that was a notable ſlaughter-man of Chriſts Saints rotted alive, and ere ever he died, ſuch a rank ſavour ſteamed from all his Body, that none of his Friends were able to come at him, but they were ready to vomit. Another, being in utter deſpair well nigh of all health, howled out miſerably. The third ran out of his wits. And divers other that were enemies to the Church periſhed miſerably in the end. All the which things were moſt certain tokens of the favour and defence of the divine Majeſty towards his Church, and of his wrath and vengeance towards the Tyrants. And foraſmuch as he had made mention of the Bohemians, he ſaid it was a moſt apt example that was reported of their Captain Ziſca; who, when he ſhould die, willed his Body to be flayed, and of his skin to make a parchment to cover the head of a Drum. For it ſhould come to paſs, that when his enemies heard the ſound of it, they ſhould not be able to ſtand againſt them. The like counſel (he ſaid) he himſelf now gave them as concerning Bucer. That like as the Bohemians did with the Skin of Ziſca, the ſame ſhould they do with the Arguments and Doctrine of Bucer. For as ſoon as the Papiſts ſhould hear the noiſe of him, their gew-gaws would forthwith decay. For ſaving that they uſed violence to ſuch as withſtood them, their Doctrine contained nothing that might ſeem to any man (having but mean underſtanding in holy Scripture) to be grounded upon any reaſon. As for thoſe things that were done by them againſt ſuch as could not play the mad-men as well as they, ſome of them ſavoured of open force, and ſome of ridiculous fooliſhneſs. For what was this firſt of all? Was it not frivolous, that by the ſpace of three years together, Maſs ſhould be ſung in thoſe places where Bucer and Phagius reſted in the Lord, without any offence at all? and as ſoon as they took it to be an offence, ſtraitway to be an offence, if any were heard there? or that it ſhould not be as good then as it was before, as if that then upon the ſudden it had been a hainous matter to celebrate it in that place, and that the fault that was paſt ſhould be counted the grievouſer, becauſe it was done of longer time before. Moreover, this was a matter of none effect, that Bucer and Phagius only ſhould be digged up, as who ſhould ſay, that he only had embraced the Religion which they call Hereſie. It was well known how one of the Burgeſſes of the Town had been minded toward the Popiſh Religion. Who when he ſhould die, willed neither ringing of Bells, Diriges, nor any other ſuch kind of trifles to be done for him in his Anniverſary, as they term it, but rather that they ſhould go with inſtruments of muſick before the Mayor and Council of the City, to celebrate his memorial, and alſo that yearly a Sermon ſhould be made to the People bequeathing a piece of mony to the Preacher for his labour. Neither might he omit in that place to ſpeak of Ward the Painter, who albeit he were a man of no reputation, yet was he not to be deſpiſed for the Religion ſake which he diligently followed. Neither were divers other more to be paſſed over with ſilence, who were known of a certainty to have continued in the ſame Sect and to reſt in other Church-yards in Cambridge, and rather through the whole Realm, and yet defiled not their Maſſes at all. All the which perſons (foraſmuch as they were all of one Opinion) ought all to have been taken up, or elſe all to have been let lie with the ſame Religion; unleſs a man would grant, that it lieth in their power to make what they liſt lawful and unlawful at their own pleaſure. In the condemnation of Bucer and Phagius, to ſay the truth, they uſed too much cruelty, and too much violence. For howſoever it went with the Doctrine of Bucer, certainly they could find nothing whereof to accuſe Phagius, inaſmuch as he wrote nothing that came abroad, ſaving a few things that he had tranſlated out of the Hebrew and Caldee Tongues into Latin. After his coming into the Realm he never read, he never diſputed, he never preached, he never taught; for he deceaſed ſoon after, ſo that he could in that time give no occaſion for his Adverſaries to take hold on, whereby to accuſe him whom they never heard ſpeak. In that they hated Bucer ſo deadly, for the allowable marriage of the Clergy, it was their own malice conceived againſt him, and a very ſlander raiſed by themſelves. For he had for his defence in that matter (over and beſides other helps) the teſtimony of Pope Pius the ſecond, who in a certain place ſaith, that upon weighty conſiderations Prieſts Wives were taken from them, but for more weighty cauſes were to be reſtored again. And alſo the Statute of the Emperour, they call it the Interim, by the which it is enacted, that ſuch of the Clergy as were married, ſhould not be divorced from their Wives.

Stephen Gardiner of Wincheſter.

Anno 1557.

Fande ſometime Mayor of the Town.

Thus turning his ſtyle from this matter to the Univerſity, he reproved in few words their unfaithfulneſs towards theſe men. For if the Lord ſuffered not the Bones of the King of Edom, being a wicked man, to be taken up and burnt without revengment (as ſaith Amos) let us aſſure our ſelves he will not ſuffer ſo notable a wrong done to his godly Preachers unrevenged. Afterward, when he came to the condemnation (which we told you in the former action was pronounced by Perne the Vicechancellor, in the name of them all) being ſomewhat more moved at the matter, he admoniſhed them how much it ſtood them in hand, to uſe great circumſpectneſs, what they decreed upon any man by their voices, in admitting or rejecting any man to the promotions and degrees of the Univerſity. For that he which ſhould take his Authority from them, ſhould be a great prejudice to all the other multitude, which (for the Opinion that he had of their Doctrine, judgment, allowance, and knowledge) did think nothing but well of them. For it would come to paſs, that if they would beſtow their promotions upon none but meet perſons, and let the unmeet go as they come, both the Common-wealth ſhould receive much commodity and profit by them, and beſides that, they ſhould highly pleaſe God. But if they perſiſted to be negligent in doing thereof, they ſhould grievouſly endammage the common-weal, and worthily work their own ſhame and reproach. Over and beſides that, they ſhould greatly offend the Majeſty of God, whoſe commandment (not to bear falſe witneſs) they ſhould in ſo doing break and violate. In the mean while that he was ſpeaking theſe and many other things before his audience, many of the Univerſity, to ſet out and defend Bucer withal, beſet the walls of the Church and Church-porch on both ſides with Verſes; ſome in Latin, ſome in Greek, and ſome in Engliſh, in the which they made a manifeſt declaration how they were minded both toward Bucer and Phagius. Finally, when his Sermon was ended, they made common ſupplica-

Foraſmuch as mention hath been made of the death of the worthy and famous Clerk, Martin Bucer, and of the burning of his Bones after his death, it ſhall not be unfruitful, as the place here ſerveth, to induce the Teſtimony or Epitaph of Dr. Redman, which came not yet in print, upon the deceaſe of that man.

The deſpightful handling and madneſs of the Papiſts toward Peter Martyrs Wife at Oxford; taken up from her grave at the commandment of Cardinal Pool, and after buried in a dunghil.

AND becauſe the one Univerſity ſhould not mock the other, like cruelty was alſo declared upon the dead Body of Peter Martyrs Wife at Oxford, an honeſt, grave and ſober Matron, while ſhe lived, and of poor People always a great helper, as many that be dwelling there can right well teſtifie. In the year of our Lord 1552. ſhe departed this life; with great ſorrow of all thoſe needy perſons, whoſe neceſſities many times and often ſhe had liberally eaſed and relieved. Now when Brooks Biſhop of Glouceſter, Nicholas Ormanet Datary, Robert Morwen Preſident of Corpus Chriſti Colledge, Cole and Wright Doctors of the Civil Law, came thither as the Cardinals Viſitors, they among other things had in Commiſſion to take up this good Woman again out of her grave, and to conſume her Carkaſs with fire, not doubting but that ſhe was of the ſame Religion that her Husband had profeſſed before, when he read the Kings Lecture there. And to make a ſhew that they would do nothing diſorderly, they called all thoſe before them that had any acquaintance with her or her Husband. They miniſtred an Oath unto them, that they ſhould not conceal whatſoever was demanded. In fine, their anſwer was, that they knew not what Religion ſhe was of, by reaſon they underſtood not her language.

Commendation of Peter Martyrs Wife.

Jurates ſworn againſt Peter Martyrs Wife.

To be ſhort, after theſe Viſitors had ſped their buſineſs they came for, they gate them to the Cardinal again, certifying him that upon due inquiſition made, they could learn nothing upon which by the Law they might burn her. Notwithſtanding the Cardinal did not leave the matter ſo, but wrote down his Letters a good while after to Marſhall, then Dean of Frideſwides, that he ſhould dig her up, and lay her out of Chriſtian burial, becauſe ſhe was interred nigh unto St. Frideſwides Relicks, ſometime had in great reverence in that Colledge. Doctor Marſhall like a prety man, calling his Spades and Mattocks together in the Evening, when he was well whitled, cauſed her to be taken up and buried in a Dunghill.

Cardinal Pool earneſt in burning dead mens Bodies.

D. Marſhal Dean of Frideſwides.

Howbeit, when it pleaſed God under good Queen Elizabeth to give quietneſs to his Church, long time perſecuted with priſon and death, then Dr. Parker, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Edmund Grindall Biſhop of London, Richard Goodrick, with divers others her Majeſties high Commiſſioners in matters of Religion (nothing ignorant how far the Adverſaries of the Truth had tranſgreſſed the bounds of all humanity, in violating the Sepulchre or Grave of that good and vertuous Woman) willed certain of that Colledge, in which this uncourteous touch was attempted or done, to take her out of that unclean and diſhoneſt place where ſhe lay, and ſolemnly in the face of the whole Town to bury her again in a more decent and honeſt Monument. For though the Body being once dead, no great eſtimation were to be had, how or where the Bones were laid; yet was ſome reverence to be uſed toward her for Sex and Womanhood ſake. Beſides, to ſay the truth, it was great ſhame, that he which had travelled ſo far at King Edwards requeſt, from the place wherein he dwelt quietly and had taken ſo earneſt pains, being an Old man, in reading and ſetting forth the Truth all he could, with learning to teach and inſtruct, and ſo well deſerved of that Univerſity; ſhould with ſo ungentle a recompence of ingratitude be rewarded again, as to have his Wife that was a godly woman, a ſtranger, good to many, eſpecially to the poor, and hurtful to none, either in word or deed, without juſt deſerving, and beſide their own Law, not proceeding againſt her according to the order thereof, ſpitefully to be laid in a ſtinking Dung-hill.

Peter Martyrs wives Bones again reduced out of the Dung-hill, and laid in a decent Monument.

Great ingratitude ſhewed to Peter Martyr.

To all good natures the fact ſeemed odious, and of ſuch as be indued with humanity, utterly to be abhorred. Wherefore Mr. Calfield, then Sub-dean of the Colledge, diligently provided, that from Marſhals Dung-hill ſhe was reſtored and tranſlated to her proper place again, yea, and withal coupled her with Frideſwides Bones, that in caſe any Cardinal will be ſo mad hereafter to remove this Womans Bones again, it ſhall be hard for them to diſcern the Bones of her from the other. And to the intent the ſame might be notified to the minds of men the better, the next day after, which was Sunday, Mr. Rogerſon preached unto the People, in which Sermon by the way he declared the rough dealing of the Adverſaries, which were contented to practice their cruelty againſt the living, but that they muſt alſo rage againſt one that was dead, and had lain two years in her grave. God grant them once to ſee their own wickedneſs, Amen.

Mr. Jamil Calfield.

The Bones of Peter Martyrs Wife coupled with the Bones of S. Frideſwide.

The King upon Peter Martyrs Wives Bones.

And thus much touching the noble acts and ſtrangeneſs of this worthy Cardinal in both the Univerſities; whereunto it ſhall not be impertinent, here alſo conſequently to adjoyn and ſet forth to the eyes of the world the blind and bloody Articles ſet out by Cardinal Pool, to be inquired upon, within his Dioceſs of Canterbury whereby it may the better appear what yoaks and ſnares of fond and fruitleſs traditions were laid upon the poor flock of Chriſt, to intangle and oppreſs them with loſs of life and liberty. By the which, wiſe men have to ſee what godly fruits proceeded from that Catholick Church and See of Rome. In which, albeit thou ſeeſt (good Reader) ſome good Articles inſparſed withal, let that nothing move thee; for elſe how could ſuch Poyſon be miniſtred, but it muſt have ſome hony to reliſh the Readers taſt.

Here follow the Articles ſet forth by Cardinal Pool, to be enquired in his ordinary viſitation, within his Dioceſs of Canterbury.

33, Item whether any goods, plate, jewels, or poſſeſſions be taken away, or withholden from the ſaid Hoſpitals, and by whom.

A Hiſtory of ten Martyrs condemned and burned within the Dioceſs of Canterbury, for the Teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt, and Truth of his Goſpel.

MEntion was made a little before of the perſecution in Kent. Wherefore we declared, that 15. were in the Caſtle of Canterbury impriſoned and condemned for Gods Word. Of the which 15. moreover we ſhewed and declared 5. to be famiſhed unto death within the ſaid Caſtle, and buried by the high-way, about the beginning of November. The other ten, in the firſt month of the next year following, which was the year of our Lord, 1557. were committed unto the fire, and there conſumed to aſhes, by Thornton, called Biſhop or Suffragan of Dover, otherwiſe called Dick of Dover, and by Nicholas Harpsfield the Archdeacon of the ſaid Province. January 15. The martyrdom of ten burned in the Dioceſs of Canterbury.

The names of theſe ten godly and Chriſtian Martyrs be theſe: The Names of the Martyrs.

John Philpot of Tenterden.
William Waterer of Beddingden.
Stephen Kempe of Norgate.
William Hay of Hithe.
Thomas Hudſon of Salenge.
Matt. Bradbridge of Tenderden.
Thomas Stephens of Bedingden.
Nich. Final of Tenderden.
William Lowick of Cranbroke.
William Prowting of Thornham.

The martyrdom of Waterer, Hay, Hudſon, Kemp, W. Lowick, W. Prowting, at Canterbury, Anno 1557. January 15. The other four were burned at the ſame time. Two at Wye, and two at Aſhford.

Of theſe ten godly Martyrs of Chriſt, ſix were burned at Canterbury, about the 15. of January, that is, Kemp, Waterer, Prowting, Lowick, Hudſon, and Haie. Other two, that is, Stephens and Philpot, at Wye, about the ſame month. Other two, which were Final and Bradbridge, were burned both together at Aſhford, the 16th of the ſame.

Concerning their Articles read before.

What the ordinary Articles were, commonly objected to them of Canterbury Dioceſs, is before rehearſed, ſave only that to ſome of theſe, as to them that follow after, as the time of their perſecution did grow, ſo their Articles withal did increaſe to the number of two and twenty, containing ſuch like matter as ſeemed to the maintenance of the Romiſh See.

To theſe Articles what their anſwers were likewiſe, The cauſe of their martyrdom. needeth here no great rehearſal, ſeeing they all agreed together, though not in the ſame form of words, yet in much like effect of purpoſes: firſt granting the Church of Chriſt, and denying the Church of Rome, denying the ſeven Sacraments, refuſing the Maſs, and the hearing of Latin Service, praying to Saints, juſtification of Works, &c. And though they did all anſwer uniformly in ſome ſmaller things, as their learning ſerved them, yet in the moſt principal and chiefeſt matters they did not greatly diſcord, &c.

The

Examples how Kings and Princes, and the power of the world bend themſelves againſt Chriſt and his word, and yet could never prevail.

The next Month following, which was February, came out another bloody Commiſſion from the King and Queen, to kindle up the fire of perſecution, as though it were not hot enough already; the contents of which Commiſſion I thought here not to pretermit: not for lack of matter, whereof I have too much; but that the Reader may underſtand how Kings and Princes of this world, like as in the firſt perſecutions of the Primitive Church under Valerianus, Decius, Maximian, Diocleſian, Licinius, &c. ſo now alſo in theſe latter perillous days, have ſet out all their main force and power, with Laws, Policy, and Authority to the uttermoſt they could deviſe againſt Chriſt and his bleſſed Goſpel. And yet notwithſtanding all theſe Laws, Conſtitutions, Injunctions, and terrible Proclamations provided againſt Chriſt and his Goſpel, Chriſt yet ſtill continueth, his Goſpel flouriſheth, and Truth prevaileth; Kings and Emperors in their own purpoſes overthrown, their deviſes diſſolved, their Counſels confounded; as examples both of this and of all times and ages do make manifeſt. But now let us hear the intent of this Commiſſion, in Tenor as followeth.

A Bloody Commiſſion given forth by King Philip and Queen Mary, to perſecute the poor Members of Chriſt.

A terrible Proclamation of K. Philip and Q. Mary, againſt the poor ſervant & members of Chriſt.

Perſecutors.

Philip and Mary by the Grace of God King and Queen of England, &c. To the right reverend Father in God our right truſty and welbeloved Counſellor Thomas Biſhop of Ely, and to our right truſty and welbeloved William Windſore Knight, Lord Windſore, Edw. North Knight, Lord North, and to our truſty and welbeloved Counſellor, J. Bourn Knight, one of our chief Secretaries, J. Mordaunt Knight, Francis Engleſield Knight, Mr. of our Wards and Liveries, Edw. Walgrave Knight, Maſter of our great Wardrope, Nicholas Hare Knight, Maſter of the Rolls, and our high Court of Chancery, and to our truſty and welbeloved Thomas Pope Knight, Roger Cholmley Knight, Richard Rede Knight, Rowland Hill Knight, William Raſtal Sergeant at Law, Henry Cole Clerk, Dean of Pauls, William Roper and Ralph Cholmley, Eſquires, William Cook, Thomas Martin, John Story, and John Vaughan, Doctors of the Law, greeting.

The meaning of the Goſpellers falſly reported and ſlandered.

Foraſmuch as divers divelliſh and ſlanderous perſons have not onely invented, bruted and ſet forth divers falſe Rumors, Tales, and ſeditious Slanders againſt Us, but alſo have ſown divers Hereſies, and Heretical Opinions, and ſet forth divers ſeditious Books within this our Realm of England meaning thereby to ſtir up diviſion, ſtriſe, contention, and ſedition, not onely amongſt our loving Subjects, but alſo betwixt Us and our ſaid Subjects, with divers other outragious miſdemeanors, enormities, contempts, and offences, daily committed and done, to the diſquieting of Us and our People, We, minding the due puniſhment of ſuch offendors, and the repreſſing of ſuch like offences, enormities, and miſbehaviours from henceforth, having ſpecial truſt and confidence in your fidelities, wiſdoms and diſcretions, have authoriſed, appointed and aſſigned you to be our Commiſſioners, and by theſe preſents do give full Power and Authority unto you, and three of you, to enquire as well by the Oaths of twelve good and lawful men, as by witneſſes and all other means and politick ways you can deviſe, of all and ſingular Heretical Opinions, Lolardies, Heretical and Seditious Books, Concealments, Contempts, Conſpiracies, and all falſe Rumors, Tales, Seditious and Slanderous words or ſayings, raiſed, publiſhed, bruted, invented, or ſet forth againſt Us, or either of Us, or againſt the quiet governance and rule of our People and Subjects, by Books, Lies, Tales, or otherwiſe, in any County, Key, Bowing, or other place or places, within this our Realm of England or elſewhere, in any place or places beyond the Seas, and of the Bringers in, Utterers, Buyers, Sellers, Readers, Keepers, or Conveyers of any ſuch Letter, Books, Rumor and Tale, and of all and every their Coadjutors, Counſellors, Comforters, Procurers, Abettors, and Maintainers, giving unto you and three of you full Power and Authority by vertue hereof, to ſearch out and take into your hands and poſſeſſions, all manner of Heretical, and Seditious Books, Letters, and Writings, whereſoever they or any of them ſhall be found, as well in Printers Houſes and Shops, as elſewhere, willing you, and every of you to ſearch for the ſame in all places according to your diſcretions.

What watch is here to keep down Chriſt? but yet he will riſe.

Anno 1556.

And alſo to enquire, hear and determine all and ſingular Enormities, Diſturbances, Misbehaviours, and Negligences committed in any Church, Chappel, or other hallowed place within this Realm, and alſo for and concerning the taking away or withholding any Lands, Tenements, Goods, Ornaments, Stocks of Mony, or other things belonging to every of the ſame Churches and Chappels, and all Accounts and Reckonings concerning the ſame.

Enormities or miſbehaviours.

And alſo to enquire and ſearch out all ſuch perſons as obſtinately do refuſe to receive the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, to hear Maſs, or to come to their Pariſh Churches, or other convenient places appointed for Divine Service, and all ſuch as refuſe to go on Proceſſion, to take Holy Bread, or Holy Water, or otherwiſe do miſuſe themſelves in any Church or other hallowed place, whereſoever any of the ſame offences have been, or hereafter ſhall be committed within this our ſaid Realm.

Not coming to the Church-Service.

Neverthleſs, our will and pleaſure is, that when, and as often as any perſon or perſons, hereafter being called or convented before you, do obſtinately perſiſt, or ſtand in any manner of Hereſie, or Heretical Opinion, that then ye, or three of you do immediately take order, that the ſame perſon or perſons, ſo ſtanding or perſiſting, be delivered and committed to his Ordinary, there to be uſed according to the Spiritual and Eccleſiaſtical Laws.

Hereticks to be committed to their Ordinary.

And alſo we give unto you, or three of you, full Power and Authority, to enquire and ſearch out all Vagabonds, and Maſterleſs Men, Barettours, Quarrellors, and ſuſpect Perſons, abiding within our City of London, and ten miles compaſs of the ſame, and all aſſaults and affraies done and committed within the ſame City and compaſs.

Vagabond, or Maſterleſs Men.

And further to ſearch out all waſts, decays, and ruines of Churches, Chancels, Chapples, Parſonages and Vicarages in the Diocels of the ſame, being within this Realm, giving you and every of you full Power and Authority by vertue hereof to hear and determine the ſame, and all other offences and matters above ſpecified and rehearſed, according to your Wiſdoms, Conſciences, and Diſcretions, willing and commanding you or three of you, from time to time, to uſe and deviſe all ſuch politick ways and means, for the trial and ſearching out of the premiſſes, as by you or three of you ſhall be thought moſt expedient and neceſſary: and upon enquiry and due proof had, known, perceived and tried out, by the confeſſion of the parties, or by ſufficient witneſſes before you, or three of you, concerning the premiſſes or any part thereof, or by any other ways or means requiſite, to give and award ſuch puniſhment to the offendors, by fine, impriſonment or otherwiſe, and to take ſuch order for redreſs and reformation of the premiſſes, as to your wiſdoms, or three of you ſhall be thought meet and convenient.

Decay of Churches and Chapels.

Further willing and commanding you and every three of you, in caſe you ſhall find any perſon or perſons obſtinate or diſobedient, either in their appearance before you, or three of you at your calling or aſſignment, or elſe in not accompliſhing, or not obeying your Decrees, Orders and Commandments in any thing or things, touching the premiſſes or any part thereof, to commit the ſame perſon or perſons ſo offending to Ward, there to remain, till by you or three of you he be diſcharged or delivered, &c. And ſo forth with other ſuch like matter, as followeth, ſee in our firſt edition, pag. 1563.

Priſoning of the obſtinate.

The apprehenſion of two and twenty Priſoners ſent up together for Gods Word, to London, from Colcheſter.

After this bloody Proclamation or Commiſſion thus given out at London, which was February 8. the third and fourth years of the King and Queens Reign, theſe new Inquiſitors, eſpecially ſome of them began to ruffle, and to take upon them not a little; ſo that all quarters were full of perſecution, and Priſons almoſt full of Priſoners, namely, in the Dioceſs of Canterbury, whereof (by the leave of Chriſt) we will ſay more anon.

In the mean time, about the Town of Colcheſter, the wind of perſecution began fiercely to riſe; inſomuch that three and twenty together, Men and Women, were apprehended apprehended at one clap; of the which twenty three, one eſcaped: the other twenty two were driven up like a flock of Chriſtian Lambs to London, with two or three Leaders with them at moſt, ready to give their skins to be pluckt off for the Goſpels ſake. Notwithſtanding the Biſhops, afraid belike of the number, to put ſo many at once to Death, fought means to deliver them, and ſo they did, drawing out a very eaſie ſubmiſſion for them, or rather ſuffering them to draw it out themſelves; Notwithſtanding divers of them afterward were taken again and ſuffered, as hereafter ye ſhall hear (God willing) declared. Such as met them by the way coming up, ſaw them in the Fields ſcattering in ſuch ſort, as that they might eaſily have eſcaped away. And when they entred into the Towns, their Keepers called them again into aray, to go two and two together, having a band or line going between them, they holding the ſame in their hands, having another cord every one about his Arm, as though they were tied. And ſo were theſe fourteen Men and eight Women carried up to London, the People by the way praying to God for them, to give them ſtrength. At their entring into London, they were pinioned, and ſo came into the City, as the picture here ſhortly after following with their Names alſo ſubſcribed, doth deſcribe. But firſt let us declare concerning their taking and their Attachers, contained in the Commiſſaries Letter written to Boner; then, the Indenture made between the Commiſſioners and the Popiſh Commiſſary. The Letter of the Commiſſary is this.

Twenty two for Gods Word apprehended.

The aray and order of theſe 22. priſoners coming up to London.

The Letter of the Commiſſary called Jo. Kingſton Written to Biſhop Boner.

Lord of Oxford L. Darcy, H. Tyrel, Anthony Brown, W. Bendlowes, Edm. Tyrel, Rich. Weſton. Roger Appleton, Jo. Kingſton Commiſſary, perſecutors.

AFter my duty done in receiving and accompliſhing your Honourable and moſt loving Letters, dated the 7. of Auguſt: Be it known unto your Lordſhip, that the 28: of Auguſt, the Lord of Oxenford, Lord Darcy, H. Tyrel, A. Brown, W. Bendlows, E. Tyrel, Rich. Weſton, Roger Appleton, publiſhed their Commiſſion, to ſeiſe the Lands, Tenements and Goods of the Fugitives, ſo that the owners ſhould have neither uſe nor commodity thereof, but by Inventory remain in ſafe keeping, until the cauſe were determined.

And alſo there was likewiſe proclaimed the Queens Graces Warrant for the reſtitution of the Church Goods within Colcheſter and the hundreds thereabout, to the uſe of Gods Service. And then were called the Pariſhes particularly, and the Hereticks partly committed to my examination. And that divers perſons ſhould certifie me of the Ornaments of their Churches, betwixt this and the Juſtices next appearance, which ſhall be on Michaelmas even next. And the Pariſhes which had preſented at 2. ſeveral times, to have all Ornaments with other things in good order, were exonerated for ever, till they were warned again, and others to make their appearance from time to time. And thoſe names blotted in the Indenture, were indicted for Treaſon, Fugitives, or Diſobedients, and were put forth by Mr. Browns Commandment. And before the ſealing, my Lord Darcy ſaid unto me apart and Maſter Bendlows, that I ſhould have ſufficient time to ſend unto your Lordſhip, yea, if need were the Hereticks to remain in durance till I had an anſwer from you, yea till the Lord Legates Graces Commiſſioners come into the Country.

And Mr. Brown came unto my Lord Darcies Houſe and Parlour belonging unto Mr. Barnaby, before my ſaid Lord and all the Juſtices, and laid his hand on my Soulder, with a ſmiling Countenance, and deſired me to make his hearty Commendations to your good Lordſhip, and asked me if I would: and I ſaid, Yea, with a good will. Wherefore I was glad, and thought that I ſhould not have been charged with ſo ſudden carriage.

But after dinner, the Juſtices counſelled with the Bayliffs, and with the Jaylers, and then after took me unto them, and made collation of the Indentures, and ſealed them; and then Mr. Brown commanded me this afternoon; being the 30. of Auguſt, to go and receive my Priſoners by and by. And then I ſaid, it is an unreaſonable commandment, for that I have attended on you here theſe three days, and this Sunday early I have ſent home my men. Wherefore I deſire you to have a convenient time appointed, wherein I may know whether it will pleaſe my Lord my Maſter to ſend his Commiſſioners hither, or that I ſhall make carriage of them unto his Lordſhip. Then Mr. Brown; We are certified, that the Council have written to your Maſter, to make ſpeed, and to rid theſe priſoners out of hand: therefore go receive your priſoners in haſt. Then I: Sir, I ſhall receive them within theſe ten days. Then Mr. Brown: The limitation lieth in us, and not in you, wherefore get you hence.

Mr. Brown a hot and haſty Juſtice in perſecuting Gods People.

Sir, ye have indicted and delivered me by this Indenture, whoſe Faith or Opinions I knew not, truſting that ye will grant me a time to examine them, leſt I ſhould puniſh the Catholicks: Well, ſaid Mr. Brown, for that cauſe ye ſhall have time betwixt this and Wendeſday. And I ſay unto you Mr. Bailiffs, if he do not receive them at your Hands on Wedneſday, ſet open your Door, and let them go.

Then I: My Lord, and Maſters all, I Promiſe to Diſcharge the Town and Countrey of theſe Hereticks, within ten days. Then my Lord Darcy ſaid; Commiſſary, we do and muſt all agree in one. Wherefore do ye receive them on or before Wedneſday.

Then I: My Lord, the laſt I carried, I was going betwixt the Caſtle and Saint Katherines Chappel, two hours and a half, and in great preaſe and danger: Wherefore this may be to deſire your Lordſhip, to give in commandment unto my Mr. Sayer, Bailiff, here preſent, to aid me thorow his liberties, not onely with Men and Weapons, but that the Town-clerk may be ready there with his Book to write the Names of the moſt buſy Perſons, and this upon three hours warning, all which both my Lord and Mr. Brown commanded.

What ado is here with the Butchers to bring the poor Lambs to the Shambles?

The 31. of Auguſt, William Goodwin of Muchbirch Husbandman, this bringer, and Tho. Alſey of Copford your Lordſhips apparator of your Conſiſtory in Colcheſter, covenanted with me, that they ſhould hire two other Men at the leaſt, whereof one ſhould be a Bow-man, to come to me the next day about two of the clock at afternoon, ſo that I might recite this bargain before Mr. Archdeacon, and pay the Money, that is, 46. Shillings 8 pence. Wherefore they ſhould then go forth with me unto Colcheſter, and on Wedneſday before three of the clock in the morning receive there at my hand within the Caſtle and Mote-hall, fourteen Men and eight Women, ready bound with gyves and hemp, and drive, carry, or lead and feed with meat and drink, as Hereticks ought to be found continually, unto ſuch time that the ſaid William and Thomas, ſhall cauſe the ſaid two and twenty Perſons to be delivered unto my Lord of Londons Officers, and within the ſafe keeping of my ſaid Lord, and then to bring unto me again the ſaid gyves, with a perfect token of or from my ſaid Lord, and then this covenant is void, or elſe, &c.

Thomas Alſey of Copford Apparator to B. Boner.

Twenty two poor priſoners in bonds for Chriſt and his word.

Maſter Bendlows ſaid unto me in my Lord of Oxenfords Chamber at the Kings Head, after I had ſaid Maſs before the Lords, that on the morrow after Holy Rood day, when we ſhall meet at Chelmesford for the Diviſion of theſe Lands, I think Mr. Archdeacon, you, and Mr. Smith, ſhall be fain to ride with certain of the Jury to thoſe portions and manors in your part of Eſſex, and in like caſe divide your ſelves, to tread and view the ground with the Queſt or elſe I think they will not labour the matter, and ſo do you ſay unto Mr. Archdeacon.

Alice the Wife of William Walley of Colcheſter, hath ſubmitted here ſelf, abjured her Erroneous Opinions, asked abſolution, promiſed to do her ſolemn penance in her Pariſh Church at S. Peters on Sunday next, and to continue a Catholick and a faithful Woman, as long as God ſhall ſend her life. And for theſe Covenants, her Huſband ſtandeth bound in five pounds. Which Alice is one of the nine Women of this your Indenture; and ſhe is big with Child. Wherefore ſhe remaineth at home, and this done in the preſence of the Bailiffs, Aldermen, and Town-clerk. And for that Mr. Brown was certified, there was no Curate at Lexdon, he enquired who was the former. The anſwer was made, Sir Francis Jobſon. Who is the Parſon? They of the Queſt-men anſwered, Sir Roger Gloſſlow. When was he with you? Not theſe fourteen years. How is your Cure ſerved? Now and then.

Alice Walley big with Child, one of the nine Women promiſeth to recant.

A Cure well ſerved.

Who

Who is the Patron? My Lord of Arundel. And within ſhort time after, Sir Francis Jobſon came with great courteſie unto my Lord Darcies place. And of all Gentlemen about us, I ſaw no more come in: Sir Robert Smith Prieſt, ſometime Canon of Bridlington, now Curate of Appledoore in the Wild of Kent, came to Colcheſter the 28. day of Auguſt, with his wife big with Child, of late divorced, taken on ſuſpicion, examined of the Lords, and Mr. Brown told me that they have received Letters from the Council for the attachment of certain perſons, and eſpecially of one Prieſt, whoſe name is Pullen (but his right name is Smith) doubting this Prieſt to be the ſaid Pullen, although neither he nor his wife would confeſs the ſame.

Mr. Pullen laid for.

Wherefore he lieth ſtill in Priſon, but ſurely this is not Pullen. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip to have in remembrance, that the houſholders might be compelled to bring every man his own wife to her own ſeat in the Church in time of Divine Service, it would profit much. And alſo there be yet ſtanding Hoſpitals, and other of like foundation about Colcheſter, which I have not known to appear at any viſitation, as the Maſters and Lazars of Mary-Magdalen in Colcheſter, the Proctor of St. Katherines Chappel in Colcheſter, the Hoſpital or Breadhouſe of the foundation of the Lord H. Harney in Laremarny, the Hoſpital and Beadman of little Horkſley. Thus preſuming of your Lordſhips goodneſs, I am more than bold ever to trouble you with this worldly buſineſs, beſeeching Almighty God to ſend your honourable Lordſhip a condign reward.

Anno 1557

From Eaſtthorp this preſent 30. day of Auguſt.

We found a Letter touching the marriage of Prieſts in the hands of the foreſaid Sir Robert Smith. Alſo I deſired Mr. Brown, the doer of all things, to require the Audience to bring in their unlawful Writings and Books; Who asked me, if I had proclaimed the Proclamation. I ſaid, Yea. Then he ſaid openly upon the Bench, that they ſhould be proclaimed every quarter once. And then take the Conſtables and Officers, and they alone take and puniſh the offendors accordingly.

Mr. Brown doer of all things.

By your poor Beadman, John

Kingſton, Prieſt.

The xxii. aforeſaid priſoners thus ſent from Colcheſter to London, were brought at length to Biſhop Boner. As touching the order and manner of their coming and bringing, the ſaid Boner himſelf writeth to Cardinal Pool, as you ſhall hear.

A Letter of Bp. Boner to Cardinal Pool.

B. Boners Letter to Cardinal Pool, concerning the priſoners aforeſaid.

MAy it pleaſe your good Grace with my moſt humble obedience, reverence, and duty, to underſtand, that going to London upon Thurſday laſt, and thinking to be troubled with Mr. Germaines matter onely, and ſuch other common matters as are accuſtomed, enough to weary a right ſtrong Body, I had the day following to comfort my ſtomach withal, Letters from Colcheſter, that either that day, or the day following, I ſhould have ſent thence 22. Hereticks, indicted before the Commiſſioners, and indeed ſo I had, and compelled to bear their charges as I did of the other, which both ſtood me above twenty Nobles, a ſum of money that I thought full evil beſtowed. And theſe Hereticks, notwithſtanding they had honeſt Catholick Keepers to conduct and bring them up to me, and in all the way from Colcheſter to Stradford of the Bowe did go quietly, and obediently, yet coming to Stratford they began to take heart of grace, and to do as pleaſed themſelves, for they began to have their guard, which generally increaſed till they came to Algate, where they were lodged Friday night.

And albeit I took order that the ſaid Hereticks ſhould be with me very early on Saturday morning, to the intent they might quietly come and be examined by me; yet it was between ten and eleven of the clock before they would come, and no way would they take, but thorow Cheapſide, ſo that they were brought to my houſe with about a thouſand perſons. Which thing I took very ſtrange, and ſpake to Sir John Greſſam then being with me, to tell the Mayor and the Sheriffs that this thing was not well ſuffered in the City. Theſe naughty Hereticks all the way they came thorow Cheapſide, both exhorted the People to their part, and had much comfort è promiſcua plebe, and being entred into my houſe, and talked withal, they ſhewed themſelves deſperate, and very obſtinate; yet I uſed all the honeſt means I could, both of my ſelf and other, to have won them, cauſing divers learned men to talk with them; and finding nothing in them but pride and wilfulneſs, I thought to have had them all higher to Fulham, and here to give Sentence againſt them: Nevertheleſs, perceiving by my laſt doing that your Grace was offended, I thought it my duty before I any thing further proceeded herein, to advertiſe firſt your Grace hereof, and know your good pleaſure, which I beſeech your Grace I may do by this truſty bearer. And thus moſt humbly I take my leave of your good Grace, beſeeching Almighty God always to preſerve the ſame. At Fulham, poſtridie Nativ. 1556.

Your Graces moſt bounden Bedeſman and Servant, Edmund Boner.

B. Boners cruelty ſomewhat ſtayed by the Cardinal.

By this Letter of Biſhop Boner to the Cardinal, is to be underſtood, what good will was in this Biſhop to have the Blood of theſe men, and to have paſt with ſentence of condemnation againſt them, had not the Cardinal ſomewhat (as it ſeemed) ſtayed his fervent headineſs. Concerning the which Cardinal, although it cannot be denied by his Acts and writings, but that he was a profeſſed enemy, and no otherwiſe to be reputed but for a Papiſt: yet again it is to be ſuppoſed, that he was none of the Bloody and cruel ſort of Papiſts, as may appear, not onely by ſtaying the rage of this Biſhop, but alſo by the ſolicitous writing, and long Letters written to Cranmer, alſo by the complaints of certain Papiſts accuſing him to the Pope, to be a bearer with the Hereticks, and by the Popes Letters ſent to him upon the ſame, calling him up to Rome, and ſetting Frier Peto in his place, had not Queen Mary by ſpecial intreaty, kept him out of the Popes danger. All which Letters I have (if need be) to ſhew: and beſides alſo, that it is thought of him that toward his latter end a little before his coming from Rome to England, he began ſomewhat to favour the doctrine of Luther, and was no leſs ſuſpected at Rome: Yea, and furthermore, did there at Rome convert a certain learned Spaniard from Papiſm to Luther's ſide; notwithſtanding the pomp and glory of the world afterward carried him away to play the Papiſt thus as he did. But of this Cardinal enough.

Card. Pool half ſuſpected for a Lutheran at Rome.

Card. Pool a Papiſt, but no Bloody Papiſt.

To return now to this godly company again, firſt how they were brought up in bands to London, ye have heard: Alſo how Boner was about to have read the ſentence of death upon them, and how he was ſtayed by the Cardinal, ye underſtand. As touching their confeſſion, which they articled up in writing, it were too tedious to recite the whole at length. Briefly touching the Article of the Lords Supper (for the which they were chiefly troubled) thus they wrote, as here followeth.

The Supper of the Lord.

Their opinion & judgment of the Lords Supper.

WHereas Chriſt at his laſt Supper, took Bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave it to his Diſciples, and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my Body. And likewiſe took the cup and thanked, &c. We do underſtand it to be a figurative ſpeech, as the moſt manner of his language was in parables and dark ſentences that they which are carnally minded, ſhould ſee with their eyes, and not perceive, and hear with their ears, and not underſtand, ſignifying this, that as he did break the Bread among them, being but one loaf, and they all were partakers thereof, ſo we through his Body, in that it was broken, and offered upon the Croſs for us, are all partakers thereof, and his Blood cleanſeth us from all our ſins, and hath pacified Gods wrath towards us, and made the attonement between God and us, if we walk henceforth in the light, even as he is the true light.

Chriſts language to ſpeak in parables.

The cauſe why the Bread and cup was given in the Supper.

And in that he ſaid further, Do this in remembrance of me, it is a memorial and token of the ſuffering and death of Jeſus Chriſt: and he commanded it for this cauſe, that the Congregation of Chriſt ſhould come together to ſhew his death, and to thank and laud him for all his benefits, and magnifie his Holy Name, and ſo to break the Bread, and drink the Wine, in Remembrance that Chriſt had given his Body, and ſhed his Blood for us.

Thus you may well perceive, though Chriſt called the Bread his Body, and the Wine his Blood, yet it followeth not, that the ſubſtance of his Body ſhould be in the Bread and Wine; as divers places in Scripture are ſpoken by Chriſt and the Apoſtles in like phraſe of ſpeech, as in John 15. I am the true vine. Alſo in John 10. I am the Door. And as it is written in the 9. to the Hebr. and in Exod. 24. how Moſes took the Blood of the calves, and ſprinkled both the book and all the People, ſaying, This is the Blood of the covenant or Teſtament. And alſo in the 5. Chapter of Ezek. how the Lord ſaid unto him concerning the third part of his hair, ſaying, This is Jeruſalem &c.

How the Scriptures ought to be examined.

Thus we ſee the Scriptures how they are ſpoken in figures, and ought to be ſpiritually examined, and not as they would have us to ſay, that the Bodily preſence of Chriſt is in the Bread, which is a Blaſphemous underſtanding of the godly word, and is contrary to all Holy Scriptures. Alſo we do ſee that great Idolatry is ſprung out of the Carnal underſtanding of the Words of Chriſt, This is my Body, and yet daily ſpringeth, to the great Diſhonour of God; ſo that men worſhip a piece of Bread for God, yea, and hold that to be their maker.

Idolatry in worſhipping the Sacramental Bread and wine.

After this confeſſion of their faith and doctrine being written and exhibited, they alſo deviſed a Letter withal, in manner of a ſhort ſupplication, or rather an admonition to the Judges and Commiſſioners, requiring that juſtice juſtice and Judgment, after the rule of Gods word, might be miniſtred unto them. The Copy of which their Letter I thought here alſo to ſhew unto the Reader in form as followeth.

A Letter or Supplication of the Priſoners to the Judges.

A Letter of requeſt of the Priſoners to the Judges.

TO the right honorable audience, before whom theſe our ſimple Writings, and the Confeſſion of our Faith ſhall come to be heard or ſeen, we poor Priſoners being faſt in bonds upon the trial of our Faith, which we offer to be tried by the Scriptures, pray moſt heartily, that foraſmuch as God hath given you power and ſtrength over us as concerning our Bodies, under whom we ſubmit our ſelves as obedient ſubjects in all things due, ye being Officers and Rulers of the People, may execute true Judgment, keep the Laws of Righteouſneſs, govern the People according to right, and hear the poor and helpleſs in Truth, and defend their cauſe.

God for his Son Jeſus Chriſts ſake, give you the wiſdom and underſtanding of Solomon, David, Ezekias, Moſes, with divers other moſt vertuous Rulers, by whoſe wiſdom and moſt godly underſtanding, the People were juſtly ruled and governed in the fear of God, all wickedneſs was by them overthrown and beaten down and all godlineſs and vertue did flouriſh and ſpring. O God which art the moſt higheſt, the Creator and maker of all things, and of all men both great and ſmall, and careſt for all alike, which doſt try all mens works and imaginations, before whoſe judgment ſeat ſhall come both high and low, rich and poor; we moſt humbly beſeech thee to put into our Rulers hearts the pure love and fear of thy Name, that even as they themſelves would be judged, and as they ſhall make anſwer before thee, ſo they may hear our cauſes, judge with mercy, and read over theſe our requeſts and confeſſions of our Faith, with deliberation and a godly judgment.

And if any thing here ſeemeth to your honourable audience to be erroneous or diſagreeing to the Scripture, if it ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhips to hear us patiently, which do offer our ſelves to the Scriptures, thereby to make anſwer, and to be tried, in ſo doing we poor ſubjects being in much captivity and bondage are moſt bound to pray for your noble eſtate and long preſervation.

The requeſt of theſe men being ſo juſt, and their Doctrine ſo ſound, yet all this could not prevail with the Biſhop and other Judges, but that Sentence ſhould have proceeded againſt them incontinent, had not the goodneſs of the Lord better provided for his Servants, then the Biſhop had intended. For as they were now under the edge of the Ax, ready to be condemned by Sentence, it was thought otherwiſe by the Cardinal, and ſome other wiſer heads; fearing belike, leſt by the death of ſo many together, ſome diſturbance might riſe peradventure among the People; and ſo it was decreed among themſelves, that rather they ſhould make ſome ſubmiſſion or confeſſion, ſuch as they would themſelves, and ſo be ſent home again, as they were indeed; howbeit divers of them afterward were apprehended and put to death. But in the mean ſpace as touching their ſubmiſſion which they made, this it was, as in form here followeth.

The ſubmiſſion or Confeſſion of theſe aforeſaid Priſoners.

An eaſie ſubmiſſion of the Priſoners.

BEcauſe our Saviour Chriſt at his laſt Supper took Bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave it unto his Diſciples, and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my Body which is given for you, this do in remembrance of me; Therefore according to the words of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, we do believe in the Sacrament to be Chriſts Body. And likewiſe he took the Cup, gave thanks, and gave it to his Diſciples, and ſaid, This is my Blood of the New Teſtament which is ſhed for many.

Therefore likewiſe we do believe that it is the Blood of Chriſt, according as Chriſts Church doth miniſter the ſame. Unto the which Catholick Church of Chriſt we do in this like as in all other matters ſubmit our ſelves, promiſing therein to live as it becometh good Chriſtian men, and here in this Realm to uſe our ſelves, as it becometh faithful Subjects unto our moſt gracious King and Queen, and to all other Superiours both ſpiritual and temporal, according to our bounden duties. Anno 1557.

The names of them which ſubſcribed to this ſubmiſſion, were theſe, John Atkin, Alyn Symſon, Richard George, Thomas Firefanne, Willam Munt, Richard Foly, Richard Gratwicke, Thomas Winſley, Richard Rothe, Richard Clark Stephen Glover, Robert Colman, Thomas Merſe, William Bongeor, Robert Bercock, Margaret Hide, Elyn Euring, Chriſtian Pepper, Margaret Feld, Alice Munt, Joan Winſly, Cyſly Warren, Roſe Alyn, Ann Whitelocke, George Barker, John Saxby, Thomas Locker, Alice Locker.

A Story of five other godly Martyrs, burned at one Fire in Smithfield, the Twelfth day of April.

TO proceed further in this Story of perſecuted Martyrs, next in order follow five other burned at London in Smithfield in the foreſaid year of the Lord 1557. April 12. whoſe names were theſe:

Thomas Loſeby.	Margaret Hide,	Five Martyrs.
Henry Ramſey.	and
Thomas Thirtel.	Agnes Stanley.

Who being, ſome by the Lord Rich, ſome by other Juſtices of Peace, and Conſtables (their own Neighbours) at the firſt accuſed, and apprehended for not coming to their Pariſh Churches, were in the end ſent unto Boner Biſhop of London, and by his commandment the 27. day of January were examined before Dr. Darbiſhire, then Chancellor to the ſaid Biſhop, upon the former general Articles mentioned. Touching theſe Articles, read before.

Anſwers to the Articles

WHoſe Anſwers thereunto were, that as they confeſſed there was one true and Catholick Church, whereof they ſtedfaſtly believed, and thought the Church of Rome to be no part or member: ſo in the ſame Church they believed there were but two Sacraments, that is to ſay, Baptiſm, and the Supper of the Lord. Howbeit ſome of them attributed the title and honour of a Sacrament, to the holy eſtate of Matrimony, which undoubtedly was done rather of ſimple ignorance then of any wilful opinion, and are thereof to be adjudged as before is admoniſhed. Their anſwers to the Articles. Two Sacraments only.

Moreover, they acknowledged themſelves to be baptized into the Faith of that true Church, as in the third Article is ſpecified. And here in reading as well of theſe Articles, as alſo of thereſt, mark I beſeech you the craftie ſubtilty of theſe Catholick Companions, who intermixing certain points of Faith, and of the true Church with the idolatrous and ſuperſtitious maumetry of their Romiſh Synagogue, cauſe the poor and ſimple People, for lack of knowledge, oftentimes to fall into their crafty nets.

For after they have made them grant a true Church with the Sacraments of the ſame, though not in ſuch number as they would have them, and alſo that they were chriſtened into the Faith thereof, that is, in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, they craftily now in the other their objections, deſcending as it were from the Faith of the Trinity, unto their idolatrous Maſs and other ſuperſtitious Ceremonies, would make them grant, that now in denying thereof they have ſevered themſelves from the Faith of the true Church, whereunto they were baptized; which is moſt falſe. For though the true light of Gods Goſpel and holy Word, was marvellouſly darkened, and in a manner utterly extinguiſhed: yet the true Faith of the Trinity, by the merciful providence of God, was ſtill preſerved, and into the Faith thereof were we baptized, and not into the belief and profeſſion of their horrible Idolatry and vain Ceremonies. Craſty dealing of the Papiſts. Simple ignorance deceived.

Theſe things not throughly weighed by theſe poor, yet faithful, and true members of Chriſt, cauſed ſome of them ignorantly to grant, that when they came to the years of diſcretion, and underſtood the light of the Goſpel, they did ſeparate themſelves from the Faith of the Church, meaning none other but only to ſeparate themſelves themſelves from the admitting or allowing of ſuch their Popiſh and Erroneous Traſh as they now had defiled the Church of Chriſt withall, and not from their Faith received in Baptiſm, which in expreſs words in their Anſwers to the other Articles they conſtantly affirmed, declaring the Maſs and Sacrament of the Altar, to be moſt wicked Blaſphemy againſt Chriſt Jeſus, and contrary to the Truth of his Goſpel, and therefore utterly they refuſed to aſſent unto and to be reconciled again thereunto.

Anno 1556.

They which ſeparate themſelves from certain traſh brought into the Church, do not ſeparate themſelves from the Church.

Theſe anſwers in effect of them thus taken by the ſaid Chancellor, they were for that time diſmiſſed; but the Biſhop, taking the matter into his own Hands, the ſixt day of March, propounded unto them certain other new Articles: the copy whereof followeth.

Other Articles objected by Boner, Biſhop of London, againſt Thomas Loſeby, Henry Ramſey, Thomas Thirtell, Margaret Hide, and Agnes Stanley, the ſixth day of March, being the ſecond time of the Examination.

Other new Articles propounded to them by B. Boner

1 FIrſt, that thou haſt thought, believed, and ſpoken, within ſome part of the City and Dioceſs of London, that the Faith, Religion, and Eccleſiaſtical Service here obſerved and kept, as it is in the Realm of England,

Maſs and ſeven Sacraments.

is not a true and a laudable Faith, Religion, and Service, eſpecially concerning the Maſs, and the ſeven Sacraments, nor is agreeable to Gods Word and Teſtament, and that thou canſt not find in thy Heart without murmuring, grudging, or ſcruple to receive and uſe it, and to conform thy ſelf unto it, as other Subjects of this Realm cuſtomably have done and do.

Engliſh Service.

2 Item, that thou haſt thought, &c. that the Engliſh Service ſet forth in the time of K. Edward the ſixth, here in this Realm of England, was and is good and godly, and Catholick in all points, and that it alone ought here in this Realm to be received, uſed, and practiſed, and none other.

Coming to Church.

3 Item, likewiſe thou haſt thought, &c. that thou art not bound to come to thy Pariſh Church, and there to be preſent, and hear Mattins, Maſs, Evenſong, and other Divine Service, ſung or ſaid there.

4 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that thou art not bound to come to Proceſſion to the Church, upon days and times appointed, and to go in the ſame with others of the Pariſh ſinging or ſaying then the accuſtomed Prayers uſed in the Church, nor to bear a Taper or Candle on Candelmas day, nor take Aſhes upon Aſhwedneſday, nor bear Palmes upon Palme Sunday, nor to creep to the Croſs upon days accuſtomed, nor to receive and kiſs the pax at Maſs time, nor to receive Holy Water or Holy Bread, nor to accept and allow the Ceremonies and Uſages of the Church, after the Manner and Faſhion, as they are uſed in this Realm.

Aſhes, Palmes, creeping to the Croſs, Holy Bread, Holy Water, &c.

Confeſſion.

5 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that thou art not bound at any time to confeſs thy Sins to any Prieſt, and to receive Abſolution at his Hands, as Gods Miniſter, nor to receive at any time the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, eſpecially as it is uſed in this Church of England.

6 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that in matters of Religion and Faith, thou muſt follow and believe thine own Conſcience onely and not give credit to the Determination and common Order of the Catholick Church, and the See of Rome, nor to any member thereof.

Abſolute neceſſity.

7 Item thou haſt thought, &c. that all things do chance of an abſolute and preciſe meer Neceſſity, ſo that whether Man do well or evil, he could not chooſe but do ſo, and that therefore no Man hath any free will at all.

Chriſtening of Infants.

8 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that the Faſhion and Manner of Chriſtening of Infants, is not agreeable to Gods Word, and that none can be Effectually Baptized, and thereby ſaved, except he have years of Diſcretion to believe himſelf, and ſo willingly accept or refuſe Baptiſm at his Pleaſure.

Praying for the dead.

9 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that Prayers to Saints, or Prayers for the Dead, are not availeable, and not allowable by Gods Word, or profitable in any wiſe, and that the Souls departed do ſtraightways go to Heaven or Hell, or elſe do ſleep till the day of doom, ſo that there is no place of Purgation at all.

10 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that all ſuch as in the time of King Henry the 8. or in the time of Queen Mary in England, have been burned as Hereticks were no Hereticks at all, but faithful and good Chriſtian People; eſpecially Barnes, Garret, Jerome, Frith, Rogers, Hooper, Cardmaker, Latimer, Taylor, Bradford, Philpot, Cranmer, Ridley, and ſuch like, and that thou didſt and doſt allow, like, and appove all their Opinions, and doſt miſlike their Condemnations and Burnings.

Martyrs that ſuffered.

11 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that faſting, and prayers uſed in this Church of England, and the appointing of days for faſting, and the abſtaining from fleſh upon faſting days, and eſpecially in the time of Lent, is not laudable or allowable by Gods Word, but is Hypocriſie and Fooliſhneſs: and that Men ought to have liberty to eat at all times all kinds of meat.

Faſting days

12 Item, thou haſt taught, &c. that the Sacrament of the Altar is an Idol, and to reſerve and keep it, or to honor it, is plain Idolatry and Superſtition: and likewiſe of the Maſs and Elevation of the Sacrament.

Sacrament of the Altar

13 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that thou or any elſe, converſted before an Eccleſiaſtical Judge concerning matters of Belief and Faith, are not, nor is bound to make anſwer at all, eſpecially under an Oath upon a Book.

Taking of an Oath.

Their Anſwers to the Articles before objected.

THeir Anſwers to theſe Objections were, that as touching the firſt, ſecond, third, fourth, fifth, ninth, tenth, and twelfth, they generally granted unto, ſaving that they denied the Souls of the departed to ſleep till the day of Judgment, as is mentioned in the ninth Article.

Their Anſwers to the Articles before objected.

And as concerning the ſixth Objection, they thought themſelves bound to believe the True Catholick Church, ſo farr forth as the ſame doth inſtruct them according to Gods Holy Word, but not to follow the Determinations of the Erroneous and Babylonical Church of Rome.

As for the ſeventh, eighth, and thirteenth, they utterly denied, that ever they were of any ſuch abſurd Opinions as are contained therein, but they granted that Man of himſelf without the help and aſſiſtance of Gods Holy Spirit, hath no power to do any good thing acceptable in Gods ſight.

True faſting

To the eleventh they ſaid, that true faſting and prayer, uſed according to Gods Word, are allowable and available in his ſight, and that by the ſame word every faithful Man may eat all meats at all times, with thankſgiving to God for the ſame.

After this, the firſt day of April, they were again convented before the Biſhop in his Palace at London, where little appeareth to be done, except it were to know whether they would ſtand to their Anſwers, and whether they would recant or no. But when they refuſed to recant and deny the received and Infallible Truth, the Biſhop cauſed them to be brought into the open Conſiſtory, the third day of the ſame Month of April, in the forenoon, where firſt underſtanding by them their immutable conſtancy and ſtedfaſtneſs, he demanded particularly of every one what they had to ſay, why he ſhould not pronounce the Sentence of Condemnation.

Tho. Loſeby's words to the Biſhop.

To whom Thomas Loſeby firſt anſwered, God give me Grace and Strength to ſtand againſt you, and your Sentence, and alſo againſt your Law, which is a devouring Law, for it devoureth the flock of Chriſt. And I perceive there is no way with me but Death, except I would conſent to your devouring Law, and believe in that Idol the Maſs.

Tho. Thirtel words to Boner.

Next unto him anſwered Thomas Thirtel, ſaying, My Lord, I ſay thus, if you make me an Heretick, then you make Chriſt and all the twelve Apoſtles Hereticks: for I am in the true Faith and right Belief, and I will ſtand in it, for I know full well I ſhall have eternal Life therefore.

Henry Ramſeys words to Boner.

The Biſhop then asked the like queſtion of Henry Ramſey: who ſaid again, My Lord, will you have me to go from the Truth that I am in? I ſay unto you, that my Opinions be the very Truth, which I will ſtand unto, and not go from them: and I ſay unto you further, that there are two Churches upon the Earth, and we (meaning himſelf and other True Martyrs and Profeſſors of Chriſt) be of the True Church, and ye be not.

Margaret Hides words to Boner.

Unto this queſtion next anſwered Margaret Hide, ſaying, My Lord, you have no cauſe to give Sentence againſt me. for I am in the True Faith and Opinion, and will never forſake it; and I do wiſh that I were more ſtrong in it then I am.

Agnes Stanleys words to Boner.

Laſt of all anſwered Agnes Stanley, and ſaid, I had rather every hair of my head were burned, if it were never ſo much worth, then that I will forſake my Faith and Opinion, which is the True Faith.

The time being now ſpent, they were commanded to appear again at afternoon in the ſame place: which Commandment being obeyed, the Biſhop firſt called for Loſeby, and after his accuſtomed manner willed his Articles and Anſwers to be read: in reading thereof, when mention was made of the Sacrament of the Altar, the Biſhop with his Colleagues put off their Caps. Whereat Loſeby ſaid, My Lord, ſeeing you put off your Cap, I will put on my Cap, and therewithal did put on his Cap. And after, the Biſhop continuing in his accuſtomable Perſwaſions, Loſeby again ſaid unto him, My Lord, I truſt I have the Spirit of Truth, which you deteſt and abhor, for the Wiſdom of God is Fooliſhneſs unto you. Whereupon the Biſhop pronounced the Sentence of Condemnation againſt him. And delivering him unto the Sheriff, called for Margaret Hide, with whom he uſed the like order of Exhortations.

Loſebys words to Boner.

Sentence given againſt Loſeby.

The words of Margaret Hide to the Biſhop.

To whom notwithſtanding ſhe ſaid, I will not depart from my ſayings till I be burned: and my Lord (quoth ſhe) I would ſee you inſtruct me with ſome part of Gods Word, and not to give me Inſtructions of the Holy Bread and Holy Water, for it is no part of the Scripture. But he, being neither himſelf, nor any of his, able rightly to accompliſh her requeſt, to make ſhort work, uſed his final Reaſon of Convincement, which was the Sentence of Condemnation. And therefore leaving her off, called for another, viz. Agnes Stanley, who upon the Biſhops like perſwaſions made this Anſwer.

Anno 1557.

The words of Agnes Stanley to the Biſhop.

My Lord, where you ſay I am an Heretick, I am none; neither yet will I believe you, nor any Man that is wiſe will believe as you do. And as for theſe that ye ſay be burnt for Hereſie, I believe are True Martyrs before God: therefore I will not goe from my Opinion and Faith as long as I live.

The words of Tho. Thirtell to the Biſhop.

Her talk thus ended, ſhe received the like reward that the other had. And the Biſhop then turning his tale and manner of enticement unto Thomas Thirtell, received of him likewiſe this final anſwer, My Lord, I will not hold with your Idolatrous ways, as you do: for I ſay, the Maſs is Idolatry, and will ſtick to my Faith and Belief, ſo long as the Breath is in my Body. Upon which words he was alſo Condemned as an Heretick.

Tho. Thirtell Condemned.

The anſwer & Condemnation of Hen. Ramſey.

Laſt of all, was Henry Ramſey demanded if he would (as the reſt) ſtand unto his anſwers, or elſe recanting the ſame, come home again, and be a member of their Church. Whereunto he anſwered, I will not go from my Religion and Belief as long as I live; and my Lord (quoth he) your Doctrine is naught, for it is not agreeable to Gods Word.

The burning of five Martyrs in Smithfield.

The Martyrdom of Tho. Loſeby, Henry Ramſey, Tho. Thirtell, Margaret Hide Agnes Stanley in Smithfield, Anno 1557. April. 12.

After theſe words, the Biſhop (to conclude) pronouncing the Sentence of Condemnation againſt him and the reſt (as ye have heard) charged the Sheriffs of London with them: who being thereunto commanded, the twelfth day of the ſame month of April, brought them into Smithfield, where all together in one fire, moſt joyfully and conſtantly they ended their temporal Lives, receiving therefore the Life eternal.

Three burned in Saint Georges-fields in Southwark.

May. W. Morant, Ste. Gratwick one King, Martyrs.

After theſe moreover in the Month of May followed three other that ſuffered in St. Georges-field in Southwark, William Morant, Stephen Gratwick, with one King.

The ſtrange dealing of the Biſhops with Stephen Gratwick, Martyr.

Among other Hiſtories of the perſecuted and condemned Saints of God, I find the Condemnation of none more ſtrange nor unlawfull then of this Stephen Gratwick: who firſt was condemned by the Biſhop of Wincheſter and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, which were not his Ordinaries.

Secondly, when he did appeal from theſe incompetent Judges to his right Ordinary, his appeal could not be admitted.

Thirdly, when they had no other ſhift to colour their inordinate Proceedings withal, they ſuborned one of the Prieſts to come in for a counterfait and a falſe Ordinary, and ſit upon him.

Fourthly, being openly convinced and overturned in his own Arguments, yet the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter Dr. White, neither would yield to the force of truth, nor ſuffer any of the Audience aſſiſtant once to ſay, God ſtrengthen him.

Fifthly, as they brought in a falſe Ordinary to ſit upon him; ſo they pretended falſe Articles againſt him which were no part of his Examinations, but of their deviſing, to have his Blood.

Sixthly

Anno 1557.

Sixthly and lastly, having no other ground nor just matters against him, but only for saying these words; That which I said, I have said, they read the sentence of death upon him.

And this was the dealing of these men, which needs will be reputed for Catholick Fathers of the Spiritualty, Succeeders of the Apostles, Disciples of Christ, pillars of the holy Church, and leaders of the People. Of whose doings and proceedings, how agreeable they are to the example of Christ and his Apostles, I leave to discuss, referring the judgment hereof to them, which know the Institution of Christs Religion and Doctrine.

Now least peradventure the disordered misrule of these Christmas Lords, will not be credited upon the simple narration of the story, ye shall hear the whole discourse of this process registred by the hand of the Martyr himself, who as he could tell best what was done; so I am sure would not testifie otherwise then the Truth was, according as you shall hear by his own declaration here following.

The inordinate handling of St. Gratwick written and testified by his own record.

The declaration of Stephen Gratwick concerning his own Story and Condemnation.

The Story and Examination of St. Gratwick Martyr, under the B. of Winchester and Rochester, &c.

Upon the 25. day of May, in the year of our Lord, 1557. I Stephen Gratwick came before the Bishop of Winchester, Dr. White, into St. Georges Church in Southwark at 8. of the Clock in the morning, and then he called me before him, and said unto me.

B. Winch. Stephen Gratwick, how standeth the matter with thee now? Art thou contented to revoke thy Heresies, the which thou hast maintained and defended here within my Dioces, oftentimes before me; and also upon Sunday last ye stood up in the face of the whole Church maintaining your Heresies, so that yon have offended within the liberty of my Dioces: and now I being your Ordinary you must answer to me directly, whether you will revoke them ornot; the which I have here in writing, and if so be that you will not revoke them, then I will excommunicate you, and therefore note well what you do, for now I read here the Articles against you.

And so when he had ended, he bade me answer unto them.

Grat. My Lord, these Articles which you have here objected against me, are not mine, but of your own making. For I never had any of mine Examinations written at any time, and therefore these be the Objections that you lay against me as snare to get my Blood.

St. Gratwick appealeth from the B. of Win. to his own Ordinary.

Wherefore I desire your lawful favour, to allow my lawful appeal unto mine Ordinary: for I have nothing to do with you. And whereas you do burden me, that I have offended within your Dioces, it is nothing so: for I have not enterprised either to preach or teach within your Dioces, but was apprehended by mine own Bishop and sent Prisoner into your Dioces, by the consent of the Council and mine own Ordinary, and therefore I so being in your Dioces, you have no cause to let my lawful appeal.

The B of Rochester cometh.

Catholick conveyance among these Bishops.

And with that there came the Bishop of Rochester, and was received at the Bishop of Winchesters hands with much gladness, according, to their determinate purpose before invented. And so followed the Archdeacon of Canterbury. And then the Bishop again start up as a man half ravished of his wits for joy, embracing him with many gentle words, and said, that he was very glad of his coming, making ignorant thereof, as he thought it should appear to me. Then said Winchester.

St. Gratwick not of Roch. Dioces.

B. Winch. Sir, I am very glad of your coming. For here I have one before me, who hath appealed unto you being his Ordinary. Then said the Archdeacon of Canterbury.

Arch. Can. I know this man very well. He hath been divers times before me. And then I answered and said:

Gratw. My Lord, I am not of his Dioces, not by five miles: for his Dioces reacheth on that part but to the Clifts of Lewes, and I dwelled at Bright Hempston, five miles beyond, in the Dioces of the Bishop of Chichester; and therefore I am not of his Dioces.

Then the Bishop of Winchester, the Bishop of Rochester, and the Archdeacon of Canterbury, cast their heads together, and laughed: and then they said, my Ordinary would be here by and by, and so they sent forth for a counterfeit instead of mine Ordinary, and then I saw them laugh, and spake unto them and said:

The Bishops counterfeit a false Ordinary against St. Gratwick.

Grat. Why do ye laugh? are ye confederate together for my Blood, and therein triumph? you have more cause to look weightily upon the matter: for I stand here before you upon life and death. But you declare your selves what you are: for you are lapped in Lambs apparel, but I would to God ye had Coats according to your assembly here, which is Scarlet Gowns, for I do here perceive you are bent to have my Blood.

See what care these men have of poor mens Blood.

And then came rushing in that counterfeited Bishop, who was the hired Servant to deliver me into the hands of the High Priest; and the Bishop hearing him come, with hast inquired of his man, who was there: and he said, My Lord of Chichester. Then the Bishop with hast rose up and said.

Here cometh in the vice in the play.

Winch. Ye are most heartily welcom, and required him to sit down; and then said the Bishop of Winchester to me, Lo here is your Ordinary, What have you now to say unto him?

Grat. I have nothing to say unto him. If he have nothing to say unto me, I pray you let me depart. Then answered my Counterfeit Ordinary and said, Counterf. Here you stand before my Lords and me in trial of your Faith, and if you bring the Truth, we shall by compulsion give place unto you, as it is to be proved by the Word. And your Doctrine to be heard and embraced for a Truth.

Grat. Then I demanded of him whether he meant by Authority, or by the judgment of the Spirit of God in his members.

And he answered me, by Authority as well as by the Spirit.

Christ bringing the Truth could not be heard of the Scribes and Pharisees.

Grat. Then I said. Now will I turn your own argument upon you: for Christ came before the High Priests, Scribes, and Pharisees, bringing the Truth with him, being the very Truth himself, which Truth cannot lie, yet both he and his Truth was condemned, and took no place with them: And also the Apostles, and all the Martyrs that died since Christ: therefore I turn your own Argument upon you, answer it if you can.

Counterf. Then he with a great heat of choler, said unto the Bishop of Winchester, Object some Articles against him, for he is obstinate, and would fain get out of our hands, therefore hold him to some particular: so that other answer could I not have of his Argument.

Objections of the Bishops own making.

Winch. Then the Bishop of Winchester began to read his Objections of his own making against me, and bade me answer unto them. And I said:

Grat. No, except you would set the Law apart, because I see you are mindful of my Blood.

Winch. Now you may see he will not answer to these, but as he hath aforesaid. Then spake the Counterfeit Ordinary again, and said.

Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

Counterf. My Lord, ask him what he saith to the Sacrament of the Altar. Then the Bishop asked me, as my Counterfeit Ordinary required him.

Grat. My Lord, I do believe that in the Sacrament of the Supper of the Lord truly ministred in both kinds, according to the institution of Christ, unto the worthy Receiver, he eateth mystically by faith the Body and Blood of Christ. Then I asked him if it were not the Truth. And he said, Yes. Then said I, Bear witness of the Truth.

The Sacrament of the Altar no Sacrament.

Winch. Then the Bishop of Winchester, whose head being subtilest to gather upon my words, said, my Lord, see you not how he creepeth away with his Heresies, and covereth them privily? Note how he here separateth the Sacrament of the Altar from the Supper of the Lord, meaning it not to be the true Sacrament, and also how he condemneth our ministration in one kind, and alloweth that the unworthy receiver doth not Eat and Drink the Body and Blood of Christ; which be sore matters truly weighed, being covered very craftily with his subtile shifts and sophistry, but he shall answer directly or ever he depart.

The wicked eat not the Body of the Lord.

Grat. My Lord, that is but your gathering of my words, for you before confessed the same sayings to be the Truth, and this you catch at me, and fain would have a vantage for my Blood: but seeing you judge me not to mean the Sacrament of the Altar, now come to the probation of the same Sacrament, and prove it to be the true Sacrament, and I am with you; or else if you can prove your Church to be the true Church, I am also with you.

But then he called to memory the last probation of the Church and Sacraments, how he before was driven to forsake the Scriptures, and to shew me by good reason how they might minister the Sacrament in one kind: and his reason was this, Like as a man or woman dyeth on a sudden, and so when we have given him the Body of Christ, in the mean time the party dieth, and so he eateth the Body of Christ, and not drinketh his Blood. And this was his simple shift in the proving of their Sacraments: so that he was now half abashed to begin that matter again.

The Bishop of Winchester's reason to prove the Sacrament in one kind.

But yet a little shift he brought in, and said:

Winch. What sayst thou by the administration of the Priests every day for themselves, and they minister in both kinds?

To that I answered, you have two administations, for I am sure at Easter you minister but in one kind, and therefore it is not according to the Institution of Christ, but after your own imaginations.

Winch. Why, then what saist thou to these words, Take, Eat, this is my Body. These are the words of Christ. Wilt thou deny them?

Grat. My Lord, they are the words of Scripture, I affirm them, and not deny them.

Rochester. Why, then thou dost confess in the Sacrament of the Altar to be a Real presence, the self same Body that was born of the Virgin Mary, and is ascended up into Heaven.

Grat. My Lord, what do you now mean? do you not also mean a visible Body? for it cannot be, but of necessity, if it be a Real presence, and a Material Body, it must be a visible Body also.

Winch. Nay, I say unto thee, it is a Real presence, and a Material Body, and an Invisible Body too.

The Catholicks make a fantastical Body in the Sacrament.

Grat. My Lord, then it must needs be a Fantasttical Body, for if it should be a Material and Invisible as you affirm, then it must needs be a Fantastical Body, : for it is apparent, that Christs humane Body was visible and seen.

Winch. Then the Bishop brake out and said, when didst thou see him? I pray thee tell me.

Grat. To that I answered and said, a simple argument it is; Because our corporal eyes cannot comprehend Christ, doth it prove or follow, that he is invisible, because we cannot see him?

Winch. And with that the Bishop began to wax weary of his Argument, and removed his talk to Judas in eating the Sacrament, and said, He eat him wholly, as the Apostles did.

Grat. And then I asked him, if he meant Christs flesh and Blood, the which he speaketh of in the sixth of John and saith, He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my Blood, hath eternal life in me.

Winch. To that he answered and said, Yea.

If the wicked do eat the Body of Christ, they must needs be saved: and if Infants eat him not, they must be condemned by the Popes Doctrine.

Grat. Then said I, of necessity Judas must needs be saved, because he did eat the flesh, and drink the Blood of Christ, as you have affirmed, and also all the ungodly that die without repentance, because they have eaten your Sacrament, which you say is the flesh and Blood of Christ: therefore of necessity they shall receive the benefit thereof, that is, eternal life. Which is a great absurdity to grant, and then of necessity it must follow, that all that eat not, and drink not of your Sacrament, shall finally perish and be damned; for Christ saith, Except ye eat my flesh, and drink my Blood, you can have no life in you. And you have aforesaid that of your Sacrament, which you say is the same flesh and Blood that Christ, speaketh of: and here I prove, that all Children then that die under age to receive the Sacrament, by your own Argument must be damned, which is horrible blasphemy to speak. Now here I turn your own Argument upon you, answer it if you can.

Winch. My Lord, do you not see what deceitful Arguments he bringeth in here against us, mingled with sophistry, and keepeth himself in vantage, so that we can get no hold upon him? But I say unto thee, thou perverse Heretick, I see now, thou art a perverse Fellow. I had a better Opinion of thee, but now I see we lose our time about thee, yet I answer thee, St. Paul doth open the sixth of John plainly, if thou wilt see: for he saith, They eat Christs Body, and drink his Blood unworthily, and that was the cause of their damnation.

Anno 1557.

Falsehood in alledging the Scriptures.

Grat. My Lord, take heed ye do not add unto the Text, for he that addeth unto the Text, is accursed of God, and I am sure here you have brought more then Paul hath spoken: for he saith not, because they have eaten his Body and drank his Blood unworthily; but St Paul saith, Whosoever shall eat of this Bread, and drink of the Cup unworthily, shall be guilty of the Body and Blood of Christ. Note my Lord, he saith not as you have affirmed, but clean contrary. And with that they were all in a great rage.

The Bishops failed of their purpose, and are in a rage.

Winch. And the Bishop of Winchester said, I belied the Text.

Grat. And then I called for the Text.

Winch. And he said, I asked thee even now if thou understoodst Latin, and thou saidst, whether I can or no, the People shall bear witness in English.

Grat. And so I called again for the Testament, whether it were Latin or English for the trial of the Text.

Winch. And then when the Bishop of Winchester saw that I cared not whether of the translations I had, he stood up, thinking to beguile some simple man that had a Book there, and bade him that had an English Testament to bring it in, that he might get some hold at him that should bring a Testament: but God disappointed him thereof, and so he flew away from his matter, and began to rail upon me, and said my subtile Arguments should not serve: for if I would not answer directly, I should nevertheless be excommunicated. For (said he) I see a mad Toy in thine head; thou glorieſt much in thy talk, and thinkest now the People are come about thee, that thou shalt incourage them with thy constant Heretical Opinion. For the last day when thou wast before me upon Sunday in St. Mary Overies Church, thou there reprovedst my Sermon, and hadst a thousand by thee at the least, to bid God strengthen thee: but now let me see him here that dare open his mouth to bid God strengthen thee; he shall die the death that thou shalt die.

No English Testament durst be brought.

The Bishop of Winch. reproved of Gratwick in his Sermon.

The Bishop of Winch. threatneth them that pray to God to strengthen Gratwick.

Grat. To that I answered, My Lord, I know your cruelty doth extend more largely then your pity. Good experience so I have to say, for you keep men in Prison a year or two, taking their Books from them, permitting them not so much as a Testament to look upon for their Souls comfort, the which all men ought to have: and so you intreat them more like brute Beasts then Christian men.

The cruelty of Catholicks upon Christian Prisoners.

Winch. No Sir, we will use you as we will use the Child: for if the Child will hurt himself with the knife, we will keep the knife from him. So because you will damn your Souls with the word, therefore you shall not have it.

A popish Similitude well applied.

Grat. My Lord, a simple Argument you bring to maintain and cover your fault. Are you not ashamed to make the word the cause of our damnation? I never knew any man but only you that did not affirm our sins to be the cause of our damnation, and not the word as you say: and therefore if your Argument be good, then this is good also; Because that some men do abuse drink, therefore the benefit of drink should be taken from all men, or any other such like good gift.

Winch. overthrown in his own Similitude.

Winch. My Lords, here we lose much time, for this Fellow is perverse, speaking nothing but sophistry and perverse Questions: so that we can get no advantage upon him.

Then spake my Counterfeit Ordinary, as one half asleep all this while; yet somewhat with haſt when he was awaked he began to tell his tale, and said:

Counterf. Read these Articles against him once more, and if he will not answer them, take him upon his first words; That which I said, that I have said.

Winch. Then the Bishop of Winchester began to read them again.

Grat.

Anno 1557

Grat. But I said unto him, I would not answer them, because they were none of mine Examinations, but Objections of their own making, because they would have my Blood. But yet I said, if they would set the Law apart, I would talk my Conscience freely to them.

Counterf. Then my Counterfeit Ordinary began to speak again, charging me with the saying of St. Peter, that I should render account of such hope as was in me.

Grat. So can I do, and, yet I shall not please you, for here I now render my hope as St. Peter willeth me: I believe only in Jesus Christ to have my salvation in him, by him, and through him; but I perceive you would have me render my Faith in such sort, as you may have my Blood and therfore you bring good Scriptures and evil apply them.

These Catholicks will not be contented with confessing of Christ only.

Winch. Why, this Fellow is perverted, and we shall get no more at his hands then we have already; therefore let us pronounce Sentence against him, for we do but lose our time.

Grat. Nay good my Lord, seeing you will needs have my Blood, let me say a little more for my self.

The railing Sermon of Winch. against good men.

Upon Sunday last, when I was before you, you preached this which was a truth, and agreeable to the Doctrine of the Apostle St. James, and said, If any man think himself a religious man, and in the mean time seduce his Tongue or his heart, the same mans Religion is a vain Religion; and so my Lord, you standing there in the Pulpit, in the mean time seduced your Tongue to slander us poor Prisoners being there present in Iron bonds, burdening us with the Sect of Arrians, and with the Sect of Herodians, and with the Sect of Anabaptists, and with the Sect of Sacramentaries, and with the Sect of Pelagians.

Winch. preacheth against himself.

True Christians not suffered to purge themselves.

And when we stood up to purge our selves thereof, you said you would cut out our Tongues, and cause us to be pulled out of the Church by violence. But there you gave your self a shrewd blow, for your Tongue in the mean time slandered your neighbour. For I, my Lord, will give my life against all these Heresies, the which you there burdened us withal, even as I will give my life against that wherein I now stand before you. And with that he was raging angry, and caught my Condemnation, and said.

He meaneth against the Real presence.

Winch. Thou wilt grant here no more, but this word, that I have said, I have said: and here I gather matter enough to condemn thee, for this is a confirmation of all that thou hast heretofore said.

Grat. Then I answered, If you can prove that ever any of mine Examinations were written, it were enough: but you have nothing against me, but Objections of your own making.

Winch. Have at thee now. If thou wilt not yield, I will pronounce Sentence against thee, and so he proceeded forth onward apace, cursing and banning in Latin; so that I told him, If the People might hear it in English, they would think you an uncharitable Bishop.

Winch. condemneth S. Gratwick, and why.

S. Gratwick condemned against order, both of temporal and Spiritual Law

Grat. And then I said, stay my Lord, and note what you do: for you have neither temporal Law nor spiritual here against me in any cause.

Then stepped forth a Gentleman, and said unto my Lord, Take heed what ye do: for he doth here say, that you have no title nor cause why you should condemn him.

Then the Bishop looked about him again, and asked me if I would recant.

I asked him, whereof I should recant.

Then said the Bishop. Are you there? Nay then I know what I have to do: and so he proceeded forth in reading my Condemnation. And there was another Gentleman which began to snap and snatch at me: and then said I, I would God I had known this ere ever I had come from home, I would surely have put on breeches, and not had my Skin thus torn. And all this while the Bishop read forth still.

At last his Chaplains cried, Stop, stop, my Lord: for now he will recant. And then the Bishop asked me again.

S. Gratwick constant in Christ and his death.

And I answered and said, My Lord, my Faith is grounded more stedfastly, then to change in a moment, it is no process of time can alter me, unless my Faith were as the waves of the Sea: and so the Bishop made an end, and delivered me into the hands of the Sheriff, to be carried Prisoner to the Marshalsey again. And when I was condemned, I desired God with a loud voyce, that he would not lay my Blood to their charge, if it were his good will, and so then they refused my prayer, and sent me away. Then I began to talk as I went, and they cried, Cut out his Tongue, or stop his mouth: and so I was brought to the Marshalsey, and lapped in Iron bands. Therefore I pray unto God that they unto whom this present writing shall come, may take example by my death and souldier-fare. So be it.

Gratwick after his condemnation prayeth for his enemies.

By me Stephen Gratwick, condemned for Gods everlasting Truth.

S. Gratwick to the reader.

HEre for want of time, I have left out many matters, because the Lord hath hastned the time, so that I have written but the briefness of the matter in probation of Faith, and the reward of Faith, the which the Bishop of Rochester, and I debated upon; the which matter I would have been very glad to have set down in writing.

Also much more talk there was, that the Bishop of Winchester and I had concerning my worldly friends and personal Estate: for he plaied Satan with me, he carried me up to the mountains and there told me, my learning was good, and my eloquence, and also my knowledge, save that I did abuse it, said he; and then he fell to praising of my person, that it was comly, and worthy to serve a Prince. Thus Satan flattered with me, to make me answer unto such Objections as he would lay against me, that I might fall into his Dioces.

Winch. attempteth S. Gratwick with flattering and praising.

Thus Stephen Gratwick this Christian Martyr, being wrongfully condemned by the Bishop of Winchester (as ye have heard) was burned with W. Moraunt, and one King, in St. Georges-field, about the latter end of May.

Seven godly Martyrs, five Women and two Men burned at Maidstone for the Word of Truth, and professing the sincere Religion of Christ.

June 18.

I Shewed a little before, how after the universal Proclamation was sent and set forth by the King and Queen in the month of February last, the storm of Persecution began in all places to rise (whereof some part also is declared before:) but yet in no place more then in the Country and Dioces of Canterbury, by reason of certain the aforesaid Inquisitors, being now armed with Authority, but especially by reason of Richard Thornton Suffragan of Dover, and the Archdeacon of Cant. who of their own nature were so furious and fiery against the harmless flock of Christ, that there was no need of any Proclamation to stir up the Coals of their burning cruelty, by reason whereof many a godly Saint lyeth slain under the Altar; as in divers places of this Book well may appear.

R. Thornton. Nich. Harpsfield, persecutors.

And now to return to the said Dioces of Canterbury again, in the next month following, being the month of June, 18. day of the same, were seven Christian and true faithful Martyrs of Christ burned at Maidstone, whose names here follow:

Joan Bradbridge of Staplehurst.
Walter Appleby of Maidstone.
Petronil his Wife.
Edmund Allin of Frytenden.
Katherine his Wife.
John Mannings Wife of Maidstone.
Elizabeth a blind Maiden.

The names of the Martyrs.

As concerning the general Articles commonly objected to them in the publick Consistory, and the order of their Condemnation, it differeth not much from the usual manner expressed before, neither did their answers in effect much differ from the other that suffered under the same Ordinary in the foresaid Dioces of Canterbury.

Now as touching their Answers and manner of apprehension, and their private conflicts with the Adversaries, I find no great matter coming to my hands, save only of Edmund Allin some intimation is given me, how his troubles came, what was his cauſe and anſwers before the Juſtices, as here conſequently ye ſhall underſtand.

The Examination of Edmund Allin.

The ſtory of Edmund Allin, with his trouble and examination before Sir John Baker.

THis Allin was a Milner, of the Pariſh of Frytenden in Kent, and in a dear year, when as many poor People were like to Starve, he fed them, and ſold his Corn better cheap by half then others did; and did not that onely, but alſo fed them with the Food of Life, reading to them the Scriptures, and Interpreting them. This being known to the Popiſh Prieſts thereabout dwelling, by the procurement of them, namely, of John Tailor Parſon of Frytenden, and Thomas Henden Parſon of Staplehurſt, he was eſtſoons complained of to the Juſtices, and brought before Sir John Baker Knight; who firſt ſending for them, committed both him and his Wife to Ward, but not long after they were let out, I know not how, and ſo went over unto Calice. Where after that he had continued a certain ſpace, he began to be troubled in Conſcience, and there meeting with one John Webbe, of the ſame Pariſh of Frytenden (who was likewiſe fled from the Tyranny of Sir John Baker, and Parſon Tailor) ſaid unto him, that he could not be in quiet there, whatſoever the cauſe was; for God (ſaid he) had ſomething to do for him in England: and thus ſhortly he returned home again to the Pariſh of Frytenden, where was a cruel Prieſt, there Parſon, called John Tailor.

Edmund Allin went to Calice.

Edmund Allin returneth again from Calice, and is apprehended.

This Parſon Tailor, being informed by his Brother Sexton, that Edmund Allin the Milner and his Wife were returned, and were not at Maſs time in the Church; as he was the ſame time in the midſt of his Maſs, upon a Sunday, a little before the Elevation (as they term it) even almoſt at the lifting up of his Romiſh God, he turned him to the People in a great Rage, and commanded them with all ſpeed to go unto their Houſe, and apprehend them, and he would come to them with as much haſte as might be poſſible. Which promiſe he well performed. For he had not ſo ſoon made an end of Ite, miſſa eſt, and the Veſtments off his Back, but by and by he was at the Houſe, and there laying hand of the ſaid Allin, cauſed him again to be brought to Sir John Baker, with a grievous complaint of his exhorting and reading the Scriptures to the People, and ſo was he and his Wife ſent to Maidſtone Priſon. Witneſſed by Richard Fletcher Vicar of Crambroke, and John Webbe of Frytenden.

Mark what a holy Maſs ſaying was here, and what a charitable Religion is this.

Witneſſes to the ſtory.

They were not ſo ſoon in Priſon, but Mr. Baker Immediately ſent unto their Houſe certain of his Men, John Dove, Thomas Beſt, Thomas Linley, Percivall Barber, with the aforeſaid John Tailor Parſon of Frytenden, and Thomas Henden Parſon of Staplehurſt, to take an Inventory of all the Goods that were in the houſe. Where they found in the bedſtraw a caſket locked with a padlock and ſo cutting the wiſt thereof, opened it, and found therein a ſackcloth bag of mony, containing the ſum of thirteen or fourteen pound, partly in gold, and partly in ſilver. Which mony after they had told, and put in the bag again, like good carvers for themſelves, they carried it away with them.

John Dove, Tho. Beſt, Tho. Linſey, Percival. Barber. perſecutors.

Beſides alſo they found there certain Books, as Pſalters, Bibles, and other writings. All which Books with the mony, were delivered to the foreſaid Prieſt Thomas Henden, Parſon of Staplehurſt, and after in the Reign of this Queen, Anno 5. Reg. Eliz. ab. was by right Law recovered from him again, as in records remaineth to be ſeen.

Tho. Henden Prieſt perſecutor.

Thus good Edmund Allin and his Wife, being maliciouſly accuſed, wrongfully impriſoned, and cruelly ſpoiled and robbed of all their goods, were brought (as is aforeſaid) before Sir John Baker the Juſtice, to be examined; who taunting and reviling him without all mercy and pity, asked him if thoſe were the Fruits of his Goſpel, to have Conventicles to gather People together, to make Conſpiracies to ſow Sedition and Rebellion; and thus he began with him to reaſon.

The talk or reaſoning between Sir John Baker, Collins his Chaplain, and Edmund Allin.

The examination of Edm. Allin before Sir John Baker.

BAker. Who gave thee Authority to Preach and interpret? Art thou a Prieſt? Art thou admitted thereunto? Let me ſee thy Licence.

Mart. Collins. Sir John Bakers Schoolmaſter ſaid, ſurely he is an arrant Heretick, and worthy to be burned.

Anno 1557.

Allin. And it may pleaſe your honour to give me leave to anſwer in the cauſe of my Faith, I am perſwaded that God hath given me this Authority, as he hath given to all other Chriſtians. Why are we called Chriſtians, if we do not follow Chriſt, if we do not read his Law, if we do not Interpret it to others that have not ſo much underſtanding? Is not Chriſt our Father? ſhall not the Son follow the Fathers Steps? is not Chriſt our Maſter? and ſhall the Scholar be inhibited to learn and Preach his Precepts? is not Chriſt our Redeemer? and ſhall not we praiſe his name, and ſerve him that hath redeemed us from Sin and Damnation? Did not Chriſt being but twelve years of age diſpute with the Doctors, and interpret the Prophet Iſaiah? and yet notwithſtanding he was neither of the Tribe of Levi, which were Prieſts, but of the Royal Tribe of Juda, neither had taken any outward Prieſthood; wherefore if we be Chriſtians, we muſt do the ſame.

Private reading or expounding of the Scriptures forbidden to no man.

Luke 4.

Collins. And it ſhall like your Honour, what a Knave is this, that compareth himſelf with Chriſt?

Baker. Let him alone, he will pump out anon an infinite heap of Hereſies. Haſt thou any more to ſay for thy ſelf?

Allin. Yea that I have. Adam was Licenced of God, and Abraham was Commanded to Teach his Children and poſterity, and ſo David Teacheth in divers Pſalms: and Solomon alſo Preached to the People, as the Book of the Preacher proveth very well, where he Teacheth that there is no immortal felicity in this life, but in the next. And Noah taught them that were diſobedient in his days, and therefore is called the eighth Preacher of Righteouſneſs, in the ſecond Epiſtle of Peter. Alſo in the 11 of Numbers, where Moſes had choſen ſeventy Elders to help him to Teach and Rule the reſt, Eldad and Medad Preached in the tents, wherefore Joſhua being offended, complained to Moſes, that Eldad and Medad did Preach without Licence. To whom Moſes anſwered, and wiſhed that all the People could do the like. What ſhould I be long? moſt of the Prieſts were not of the Tribe of Levi and Aaron.

Preaching without licence in the Old Teſtament.

Col. Theſe are Authorities of the Old Teſtament, and therefore abrogated; but thou art a fool, and knoweſt no School points. Is not the Law divided into the Law Ceremonial, Moral, and Judicial?

Allin. I grant that the Ceremonies ceaſed when Chriſt came, as St. Paul proveth to the Hebrews, and to the Coloſſians, where he ſaith, Let no man judge you in any part of the Sabbath day, new Moon, or other Ceremonies, which are figures of things to come: for Chriſt is the Body.

Coloſ. 2.

Col. And are not the Judicials abrogated by Chriſt?

Allin. They are confirmed both by Chriſt in the fifth of Matthew, and by Paul in the 1. Epiſtle to Timoth. 4. The Law, ſaith he, is not ſet forth for the vertuous and godly, but for Men-ſlayers, perjured, Adulterers, and ſuch like.

Col. * Thou art an Heretick. Wilt thou call the Judicials of Moſes again? wilt thou have Adultery puniſhed with Death? Diſobedient Children to their Parents to be ſtoned? Wilt thou have Legem talionis? But thou art an Aſſe. Why ſhould I ſpeak Latine to thee thou Erroneous Rebel? ſhall we now ſmite out eye for eye, tooth for tooth? thou art worthy to have thy teeth and tongue plucked out.

* Albeit the poſitive law of Moſes Judicials do not bind the Gentiles with the ſame neceſſity abſolutely to every condition, as it did the Jews, to whom it was peculiarly given: yet may the Gentiles borrow out of the ſame law ſuch things that ſhall be expedient for their regiment, neither can they borrow any laws better then out of Moſes.

Allin. If we had that Law, we ſhould neither have Diſobedient Children, neither Adulterers, neither falſe witneſs bearers, neither ruffians.

Baker. Maſter Collins, let us return to our firſt matter. Why didſt thou Teach the People, whom thou ſaidſt didſt feed both bodily and ſpiritually, being no Prieſt?

Allin. Becauſe that we are all Kings to Rule our affections, Prieſts to Preach out the vertues and Word of God, as Peter writeth, and lively ſtones to give light to other. For as out of Flint ſtones cometh forth that, that is able to ſet all the world on fire; ſo out of Chriſtians ſhould ſpring the beams of the Goſpel, which ſhould inflame all the world. If we muſt give a reckoning of our Faith to every Man, and now to you demanding it, then muſt we ſtudy

Anno 1557.

In time of publick corruption, and in want of true teachers it is not forbidden to any man to teach.

ſtudy the Scriptures, and practiſe them. What availeth it a man to have meat, and will eat none; and apparrel, and will wear none; or to have an occupation, and to teach none; or to be a Lawyer, and utter none? Shall every Artificer be ſuffered, yea and commended to practiſe his faculty and ſcience, and the Chriſtian forbidden to exercile his? Doth not every Lawyer practiſe his Law? Is not every Chriſtian a follower of Chriſt? Shall Ignorance, which is condemned in all Sciences, be practiſed of Chriſtians? Doth not Saint Paul forbid any mans Spirit to be quenched? Doth he prohibite any man that hath any of theſe gifts, which he repeateth, 1. Cor. 14. to practiſe the ſame? Onely he forbiddeth Women, but no Man. The Jews never forbade any. Read the Acts of the Apoſtles. And the reſtraint was made by Gregory the ninth Pope of that name, as I heard one, a learned Man, Preach in King Edwards days.

Pope Gregory the ninth firſt reſtrained lay-men to teach and inſtruct others in Scriptures.

Collins. This villaine (and it like you Honour) is mad. By my Prieſthood, I believe that he will ſay, that a Prieſt hath no more Authority then another man. Doth not a Prieſt bind and looſe?

Sin bindeth, repentance looſeth, God forgiveth, man exhorteth. How man remitteth ſin, or retaineth.

Allin. No, my ſin bindeth me, and my repentance looſeth. God forgiveth ſin onely, and no Prieſt. For every Chriſtian, when he ſinneth, bindeth himſelf, and when he repenteth, looſeth himſelf. And if any other be looſed from his ſin by my Exhortation, I am ſaid to looſe him; and if he perſevere in ſin, notwithſtanding my Exhortation, I am ſaid to bind him, although it is God that bindeth and looſeth, and giveth the increaſe. Therefore ſaith Chriſt, Matth. 18. Whereſoever two or three are gathered together in my Name, there am I in the midſt of them, & whoſeſoever ſins they forgive they are forgiven; & they retain, they are retained. Neither hath the Pope any Keyes ſave the Keys of Errour; for the Key that openeth the lock to Gods Myſteries and to Salvation, is the Key of Faith and Repentance. And as I have heard learned men reaſon, Saint Auſtine and Origen, with other are of this opinion. Then they reviled him, and laid him in the Stocks all the night. Wherewith certain that were better minded, being offended with ſuch Extremity, willed Allin to keep his Conſcience to himſelf, and to follow Barucks Counſel in the ſixth chapter. Whereforé when ye ſee the multitude of people worſhipping them, behind and before ſay ye in your hearts, O Lord, it is thou that ought onely to be worſhipped.

The Popes Keyes be the Keyes of Error.

Wherewith he was perſwaded to go to hear Maſs the next day, and ſuddenly before the facring went out, and conſidered in the Church-yard with himſelf, that ſuch a little cake between the Prieſts fingers could not be Chriſt, nor a material Body, neither to have Soul, Life, Sinews, Bones, Fleſh, Legs, Head, Arms, nor Breaſt, and lamented that he was ſeduced by the Place of Baruck, which his Conſcience gave him to be no Scripture, or elſe to have another meaning: and after this he was brought again before Sir John Baker, who asked why he did refuſe to worſhip the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar.

Allin brought again before Sir John Baker.

Talk of the Sacrament.

Allin. It is an Idol.

Col. It is Gods Body.

Allin. It is not.

Col. By the Maſs it is.

Allin. It is Bread.

Col. How proveſt thou that?

Allin. When Chriſt ſate at his ſupper, and gave them Bread to Eat.

Col. Bread, knave?

Allin. Yea Bread, which you call Chriſts Body. Sate he ſtill at the table, or was he both in their Mouths, and at the table? If he were in their Mouths, and at the table, then had he two Bodies, or elſe had a Fantaſtical Body; which is an abſurdity to ſay it.

This Papiſt granteth that Chriſt had a glorified body at his Supper.

Baker. Chriſts Body was glorified, and might be in more places then one.

Allin. Then he had more Bodys then one, by your own placing of him.

Col. Thou Ignorant Aſs, the Schoolmen ſay, that a glorified Body may be every where.

Allin. If his Body was not glorified til it roſe again, then was it not glorified at his laſt ſupper; and therefore was not at the table, and in their Mouths by your own reaſon.

Col. A glorified Body occupieth no place.

Allin. That which occupieth no place, is neither God, nor any thing elſe: but Chriſts Body, ſay you, occupieth no place; therefore it is neither God, nor any thing elſe. If it be nothing, then is your Religion nothing. If it be God, then have we four in one Trinity, which is the perſon of the Father, the perſon of the Son, the perſon of the Holy Ghoſt, the humane nature of Chriſt. If Chriſt be nothing, which you muſt needs confeſs, if he occupieth no place, then is our ſtudy in vain, our Faith fruſtrate, and our hope without reward.

The Papiſts make four perſons in one Trinity.

Col. This Rebel will believe nothing but Scripture. How knoweſt thou that it is the Scripture but by the Church? and ſo ſaith St. Auſtin.

How the Scripture is known to be Scripture.

Allin. I cannot tell what St. Auſtin ſaith, but I am perſwaded, that it is Scripture by divers Arguments: Firſt, that the Law worketh in me my condemnation. The Law telleth me that of my ſelf I am damned; and this damnation, Mr. Collins, you muſt find in your ſelf, or elſe you ſhall never come to repentance. For as this grief and ſorrow of Conſcience, without Faith, is deſperation; ſo is a glorious and Romiſh Faith, without the lamentation of a mans Sins, Preſumption.

The ſecond is the Goſpel, which is the Power and Spirit of God. This Spirit (ſaith S. Paul) certified my Spirit, that I am the Son of God, and that theſe are the Scriptures.

The third are the wonderful Works of God, which cauſe me to believe that there is a God; though we glorifie him not as God, Rom. 1. The Sun, the Moon, the Stars and other his works (as David diſcourſeth in Pſal 19.) declare that there is a God, and that theſe are the Scriptures becauſe that they teach nothing elſe but God and his Power, Majeſty, and Might; and becauſe the Scripture teacheth nothing diſſonant from this preſcription of nature. And fourthly, becauſe that the Word of God gave Authority to the Church in Paradiſe, ſaying, that the ſeed of the Woman ſhould break down the Serpents Head. This ſeed is the Goſpel; this is all the Scriptures, and by this we are aſſured of eternal life; and theſe words, The ſeed of the Woman ſhall break the Serpents Head, gave Authority to the Church, and not the Church to the Word.

Baker. I heard ſay, that you ſpake againſt Prieſts and Biſhops.

The revenues of Biſhops and Prelates in England.

Allin. I ſpake for them; for now they have ſo much living, and eſpecially Biſhops, Archdeacons, and Deans, that they neither can nor will teach Gods Word. If they had a hundred pounds a piece, then would they apply their ſtudy; now they cannot for their affairs.

Col. Who will then ſet his Children to ſchool?

Allin. Where there is now one ſet to ſchool for that end, there would be fourty, becauſe that one Biſhops living divided into thirty, or fourty parts, would find ſo many as well learned men as the Biſhops be now, who have all this living, neither had Peter or Paul any ſuch revenue.

Baker. Let us diſpatch him; he will marr all.

Col. If every man had a hundred pounds, as he ſaith, it would make more learned Men.

Baker. But our Biſhops would be angry, if that they knew it.

Allin. It were for a Common-wealth to have ſuch Biſhopricks divided, for the further increaſe of learning.

Baker. What ſayſt thou to the Sacrament?

Allin. As I ſaid before.

Baker. Away with him. And thus was he carried to Priſon, and afterward burned. And thus much touching the particular ſtory of Edmund Allin and his Wife. Who with the five other Martyrs above named, being ſeven, to wit, five Women and two Men, were altogether burned at Maidſtone, the year and Month aforementioned, and the 18. day of the ſame Month.

The Martyrdom of five Women and two Men at Maidſtone. Anno 1557. June 18.

Another ſtory of like cruelty, ſhewed upon other ſeven Martyrs, burnt at Canterbury, three Men, and four Women.

June 19. The ſtory of 7 other Martyrs.

AMong ſuch infinite ſeas of Troubles in theſe moſt dangerous days, who can withhold himſelf from bitter tears, to ſee the madding rage of theſe pretenſed Catholicks, who being never ſatiſfied with Blood to maintain their their carnal Kingdom, preſume ſo highly to violate the preciſe Law of Gods Commandments, in ſlaying the ſimple poor Lambs of the glorious Congregation of Jeſus Chriſt, and that for the true Teſtimony of a good Conſcience, in confeſſing the immaculate Goſpel of their Salvation? What Heart will not lament the murdering miſchief of theſe Men? who for want of work do ſo wrack their tine on ſilly poor Women, whoſe weak imbecillity the more ſtrength it lacketh by natural imperfection, the more it ought to be helped, or at leaſt pitied, and not oppreſſed of Men that be ſtronger, and eſpecially of Prieſts that ſhould be charitable.

Unmerciful cruelty of the Catholicks againſt poor Women.

But bleſſed be the Lord Omnipotent, who ſupernaturally hath indued from above ſuch weak Creatures with ſuch manly ſtomach and fortitude, ſo conſtantly to withſtand the uttermoſt extremity of theſe pitileſs perſecutors: as he did before ſtrengthen the Mother of the ſeven Sons in the Macchabees, and as he hath done ſince with divers and ſundry other godly Women in theſe our later days, partly before mentioned, and partly to be mentioned hereafter, as here preſently may appear by the Martyrdom of ſeven hereunder following, of the which were four Women and three Men, burnt together at Canterbury the 30. of the ſaid Month of June: in the year aforeſaid, whoſe Names are theſe:

John Fiſhcock. — Bradbridges Widow.
Nicholas White. — Wilſons Wife.
Nicholas Pardue. — Bendens Wife.
Barbara Final, Widow.

This Bradbridges Wife was thought to be with Child.

As it were too tedious exactly and particularly to proſecute the ſeveral ſtory of every one of theſe godly Martyrs; ſo I cannot paſs over untouched the cruel and unchriſtian handling of Alice Benden during her Impriſonment, according as I have received by the faithful Relation of them which beſt were acquainted with her, and partly alſo ſome doers in the matter, being her own natural Brethren. The ſtory is thus.

Roger and Tho. Hall, two godly Brethren of Alice Benden

The order of the Impriſonment and tragical handling of Alice Benden, Wife of Edward Benden of the Pariſh of Staplehurſt, in the County of Kent, for the Teſtimony of Chriſts Goſpel.

The Impriſonment of Alice Benden, and manner of her handling. Mr. Roberts of Crambrok perſecutor.

FIrſt Alice Benden was brought before one Mr. Roberts of Crambroke, in ſaid County, the 14. day of October, in the year of our Lord, 1556. of whom ſhe was demanded why ſhe would not go to the Church. And ſhe anſwered, that ſhe could not ſo do with a good and clear Conſcience, becauſe there was much Idolatry committed againſt the glory of God. For the which with many mocks and taunts ſhe was ſent to Priſon, where ſhe lay fourteen days. For on the 20. day of October her Husband required his neighbours, the wealthy Men of Staplehurſt, to write to the Biſhop of Dover, who had the Chief Government of the tyrannical ſword in Kent for thoſe days, which they did, deſiring him to ſend her home.

Alice Benden imprisoned for not coming to the Church.

Alice Benden delivered by ſute of her neighbours.

Wherefore the Biſhop called her before him, and asked her if ſhe would go home, and go to the Church. Whereunto ſhe anſwered; If I would have ſo done, I need not to have come hither. Then wilt thou go home, and be ſhriven of thy Pariſh Prieſt? And ſhe ſaid, No, that would ſhe not.

Well, ſaid he, go thy ways home, and go to the Church when thou wilt. Whereunto ſhe anſwered nothing. But a Prieſt that ſtood by, ſaid; She ſaith, ſhe will my Lord. Wherefore he let her go, and ſhe came forthwith home.

The Huſband procureth the trouble and impriſonment of his Wife.

On the Saturday following, her Husband willed her to go to the Church; which ſhe both then and elſe when refuſed to do. Wherefore on the Sunday fourteen days after, he going to the Church, came into the company of divers Inhabitants of the ſame Pariſh; among whom, through his fond talk and behaviour, he procured her to be ſent to Sir John Gilford, who commanded her to Priſon again: yea, and the more to utter his own ſhame, they ſaid her Husband took money of the Conſtable to carry her to priſon, the price of his Wives Blood, meaning indeed to carry her to Priſon himſelf. But ſhe having much more care of his honeſt and good report, then he had regard (as it is eaſie to ſee) of his own infamy, and no leſs aſhamed of his ſo rude and unnatural doings, choſe rather to commit her ſelf willingly into the hands of her enemies, then that the world ſhould witneſs againſt her Husband of ſo facinorous a fact. Wherefore ſhe went to the Conſtable, deſiring him to go with her. But he anſwered that he could not ſo do, but granted her his Boy to go with her, with whom ſhe went to Priſon, namely, the Caſtle of Canterbury, according to the Commandment given. Anno 1557.

Sir J. Gilford commandeth Alice Benden to the Caſtle of Canterbury.

The ſpare diet of Alice Benden and Potkin wife in Canterbury Caſtle

Where this one thing is worthy to be noted, that while ſhe was in this Priſon, ſhe practiſed with a Priſonfellow of hers, the Wife of one Potkin, to live both of them with two pence half-penny a day, to try thereby how well they could ſuſtain penury and hunger, before they were put to it. For they had heard, that when they ſhould be removed from thence to the Biſhops Priſon, there livings ſhould be but three farthings a piece a day, and did indeed both ſo live for fourteen days ere ſhe was from thence removed.

The 22. day of January following, her Husband went again to the Biſhop, deſiring him to deliver his Wife out of Priſon: but he ſaid ſhe was an obſtinate Heretick, and would not be reformed; and therefore ſaid that he could not deliver her.

The Husband complaineth of his wives Brother Roger Hall.

Then ſaid he; My Lord, ſhe hath a Brother, whoſe Name is Roger Hall, that reſorteth unto her. If your Lordſhip could keep him from her, ſhe would turn; for he comforteth her, giveth her mony, and perſwadeth her not to return or relent.

Alice Benden removed from the Biſhops priſon.

This occaſion was not ſo ſoon given, but it was as quickly taken, and as cruelly put in execution. For the Biſhop commanding her upon the ſame to a Priſon called Mondays hole, there alſo he gave a ſtrait charge, that if at any time her Brother came, he ſhould be taken and apprehended.

The Biſhops priſon deſcribed.

This priſon was within a Court where the Prebends Chambers were, being a vault beneath the ground, and being before the Window incloſed with a pale, of height, by eſtimation, four foot and a half, and diſtant from the ſame three foot, ſo that ſhe looking from beneath, might onely ſee ſuch as ſtood at the pale. After this, her Brother ſought often for her, with no leſs danger of life then diligence. But for the unknown ſituation of the place, it being alſo but rarely uſed for a Priſon, and the matter as cloſy kept, as it was ſecretly done, he could never come to underſtand of her being there, until through Gods merciful will and unſearchable providence, he coming thither very rathe in the morning, her Keeper being then gone to the Church to ring (for he was a Bellringer) chanced to hear her voice, as ſhe powred out unto God her ſorrowful complaints, ſaying the Pſalms of David:

Example of Gods merciful providence in relieving his Saints.

and there could he no otherwiſe relieve her, but by putting money in a Loaf of Bread, and ſticking the ſame on a Pole, and ſo reached it unto her; for neither with Meat nor Drink he could ſuſtain her. And this was five weeks after her coming thither. All the which time no creature was known to come at her, more then her Keeper.

Alice Benden kept in the Biſhops priſon nine weeks with Bread and water.

Her lying in that Priſon was onely upon a little ſhort ſtraw between a pair of Stocks and a ſtone wall; being allowed three farthings a day, that is, half penny Bread, and a farthing Drink, neither could ſhe get any more for her Money. Wherefore ſhe deſired to have her whole allowance in Bread, and uſed water for her Drink. Thus did ſhe lie nine weeks. During all which time ſhe never changed her apparel; whereby ſhe became at the laſt a moſt pitious and loathſome Creature to behold.

The affliction of Alice Benden at her firſt coming to priſon.

After firſt coming into this place, ſhe did grievouſly bewail with a great ſorrow and lamentation, and reaſoned with her ſelf; why her Lord God did with his ſo heavy juſtice ſuffer her to be ſequeſtred from her loving fellows into ſo extreme miſery.

Alice Benden receiveth comfort of the Lord in the midſt of her miſeries.

In theſe dolorous mournings did ſhe continue, till on a night as ſhe was in her ſorrowful ſupplications, rehearſing this verſe of the Pſalm; Why art thou ſo heavy O my Soul? And again, The Right Hand of the moſt high can change all: ſhe received comfort in the midſt of her miſeries, and after that continued very joyful until her delivery from the ſame.

Alice Benden called before the Biſhop.

About the 25. day of March, in the year of our Lord, 1557. ſhe was called before the Biſhop, who demanded of her, whether ſhe would now go home, and to the Church or no, promiſing her great favour, if ſhe would be reformed and do as they did.

To

Anno. 1557.

The anſwer of Alice Benden to the Biſhop.

Alice Benden from the Biſhops Priſon ſent to Weſtgate.

Alice Benden condemned and ſent to the Caſtle in Canterbury.

To whom ſhe anſwered, I am throughly perſwaded by the great extremity, that you have already ſhewed me, that you are not of God, neither can your doings be godly; and I ſee, ſaith ſhe, that you ſeek my utter deſtruction, ſhewing how lame ſhe then was of cold taken, and for lack of food, while ſhe lay in that painful Priſon; whereby ſhe was not able to move her ſelf without great pain.

Then did the Biſhop deliver her from that filthy hole, and ſent her to Weſtgate, where after ſhe had been changed, and for a while been clean kept, her Skin did wholly ſo pill and ſcale off, as if ſhe had been with ſome mortal venom poyſoned. Here ſhe continued till the latter end of April. At which time they called her before them, and with others condemned her, committing her then to the Priſon called the Caſtle. Where ſhe continued till the ſlaughter-day, which was the nineteenth day of June, when by terrible fire they took away her life.

When ſhe was at the Stake, ſhe caſt her Handkerchief unto one John Banks, requiring him to keep the ſame in memory of her, and from about her middle ſhe took a white Lace, which ſhe gave to the Keeper, deſiring him to give the ſame to her Brother Roger Hall, and to tell him that it was the laſt band that ſhe was bound with, except the Chain. A ſhilling alſo of Philip and Mary ſhe took forth, which her Father had bowed and ſent her when ſhe was firſt ſent to Priſon, deſiring that her ſaid Brother ſhould with obedient ſalutations render the ſame to her Father again, and ſhew him that it was the firſt piece of mony that he ſent her after her troubles began, which (as ſhe proteſted) ſhe had kept, and now ſent him to do him to underſtand, that ſhe never lacked mony while ſhe was in Priſon.

With this Alice Benden were burned alſo the reſidue of the other bleſſed Martyrs above named, being ſeven in number. Who being brought to the place where they ſhould ſuffer for the Lords cauſe at Canterbury, undreſſed themſelves joyfully to the fire; and being ready thereto, they all (like the communion of Saints) kneeled down, and made their humble prayers unto the Lord, with ſuch zeal and affection, as even the enemies of the Croſs of Chriſt could not but like it. When they had made invocation together, they roſe and went to the Stake, where being compaſſed with horrible flames of fire, they yielded their Souls and lives glorioufly into the hand of the Lord.

The burning of ſeven Martyrs at Canterbury.

The Martyrdom of three Men and four women at Canterbury. Anno 1557. June 19.

This Bradbridges Wife, when ſhe was condemned of the Biſhop to be burned, had two Children named Patience and Charity. Who then ſaid to the Biſhop, that if he would needs burn her, yet he truſted, that he would take and keep Patience and Charity, meaning her two Children. Nay, quoth the Biſhop, by the Faith of my Body, I will meddle with neither of them both.

The Biſhop will neither keep Patience nor Charity.

The Troubles and Examinations of Matthew Plaiſe.

Matthew Plaiſe.

UNto theſe holy Martyrs of Kent above ſpecified, whereof ſeven ſuffered at Maidſtone, and ſeven at Canterbury, I thought not unmeet here alſo to be adjoyned the Examination of Matthew Plaiſe, a Weaver of the ſame County of Kent, and a faithful Chriſtian. Who being apprehended and impriſoned likewiſe for the teſtimony of a good Conſcience, in the Caſtle of Canterbury, was brought to Examination before the Biſhop of Dover, and Harpſfield the Archdeacon, as here is to be read and ſeen.

The Examination and Anſwers of Matthew Plaiſe, Weaver, of the Pariſh of Stone, in the County of Kent, before Thornton Biſhop of Dover, Harpſfield Archdeacon, Collins Commiſſary, and other Inquiſitors Anno 1557.

Examination of Matthew Plaiſe, before the Biſhop of Dover, Harpſfield Archdeacon, and Collins Commiſſary, &c.

FIrſt, when I came before the Biſhop, he asked me whether I were not of that Dioceſs, and where I dwelt; for that was my firſt Article.

Anſ. I anſwered, I was of the Pariſh of Stone in Kent, and ſubject unto the King and Queen of England.

Biſhop. Then he ſaid, I was indited by twelve men at Aſhford, at the Seſſions, for Hereſie.

Anſ. I ſaid, that was ſooner ſaid then proved.

Biſh. Then he ſaid, it was the Truth that he had ſpoken to me, for he had whereby to prove.

Anſ. Then I deſired him to let me hear it, and I would anſwer to it.

Biſh. But he ſaid he would not do ſo, but I ſhould anſwer to my Article, yea or nay.

Anſ. I ſaid, he could not; for I was not at Aſhford, and therefore he had nothing to lay to my charge. But now I perceive you go about to lay a net to have my Blood.

Arch. After many words betwixt the Biſhop and me, the Archdeacon ſaid; Peace, peace, we do not deſire thy Blood, but we are glad to hear that thou art no Heretick, with many flattering words, and ſaid, yet I was ſuſpected ſuſpected of Hereſie; and if I would be content to confeſs how I did believe as concerning thoſe Articles, they would gladly teach me.

Anno 1557.

Anſ. But I ſaid, I do not think ſo, for I talked with one of your Doctors, and after long talk, he would needs know how I did believe in the Sacrament, and I recited unto him the Text, and becauſe I would not make unto him an expoſition, he would teach me nothing: yet I prayed him for my learning to write his mind; and if it were the truth, I would believe him; and this I did deſire him for the love of God, but it would not be.

Arch. Then ſaid he, it was not ſo, he durſt ſwear upon a Book.

Anſ. I ſaid, it would be ſo proved.

Arch. Then he ſtood up with a long proceſs, and ſaid, he would tell me the truth, and was ſure that the ſame Doctor did believe as he did.

Anſ. I asked him how he knew that, ſeeing St. Paul doth ſay, that no man knoweth what is in man, but the ſpirit which dwelleth in him: but if you wiſt what Chriſt meant by theſe words, I require mercy and not ſacrifice, Matth. 12. you would not kill Innocents.

Biſhop. The Biſhop began with me again, and charged me in the King and Queens Name, and the Lord Cardinals, to anſwer yea or nay to the Articles that followed.

Anſ. Then I commanded in his Name that ſhould come in flaming fire with his mighty Angels to render vengeance to the diſobedient, and to all thoſe that believed not the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which ſhould be puniſhed with everlaſting damnation, that he ſhould ſpeak nothing but the truth grounded upon Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and then I would anſwer him, or elſe not.

Biſh. Then he was very angry, and ſaid, If I would not anſwer, he would condemn me indeed, unleſs I would anſwer every Article.

Anſ. Well, ſaid I, if you do, you ſhall be guilty of my Blood, and prove your ſelf a Murtherer.

Archd. Then the Archdeacon took the Articles in his hand, and read the ſecond Article, which was, that I was a Chriſtian man, and did believe in their Mother the Catholick Church, and the determination thereof.

The Catholick Church.

Anſ. I ſaid, I was a Chriſtian man indeed, and therefore they had nothing againſt me.

Archd. Then ſaid he, what ſaiſt thou to the Catholick Church, which hath ſo long continued, except it were nine or ten years, that this Hereſie hath ſprung up here in this Realm?

Anſ. I ſaid, no man can accuſe me of any thing ſpoken againſt the Catholick Church of Chriſt.

Biſh. Then ſaid the Biſhop, doſt thou not believe the Creed?

Anſ. Yes verily, I believe my Creed, and all that is written in the Teſtament of Chriſt, with the reſt of the Scriptures.

Biſhop. Then, ſaith he, thou doſt confeſs that there is a Catholick Church, I am glad of that; but tell me, is the King and Queen of that Church, or no?

The Article of the King and Queen is no Article of his Catholick Church.

Anſ. Well, ſaid I, now I perceive, you go about to be both mine Accuſer and alſo my Judge, contrary to all right. I confeſs Chriſt hath a Church upon Earth, which is built upon the Apoſtles and Prophets, Chriſt being the Head thereof, and as touching the King and Queen, I anſwer, I have nothing to do with any mans Faith but mine own: neither came I hither to judge; for I judge not my ſelf, but the Lord muſt judge me.

And yet he ſaid before that he went not about to ſeek his Blood.

Biſh. Then ſaid he: Is there no part of that Church here in England?

Anſ. Well, I perceive you would fain have ſomething to lay to my charge. I will tell you where. Chriſt ſaith, Where two or three be gathered together in his name, there is he in the midſt among them.

Then the Arch-deacon ſtood up with his mocks, to put me out of countenance, and ſaid to the People, that I had no wit, but that I thought all they were deceived ſo long time, and that half a dozen of us ſhould have the Truth in a corner, and that all they ſhould be deceived, with ſuch like taunts and mocks; but would not ſuffer me to ſpeak one word.

Judgment without truth.

Arch. Then he read the Article of the Sacrament, and ſaid, I did deny the Real preſence to be in the Sacrament after it was once conſecrated, and that I ſaid, Chriſts Body was in Heaven, and no where elſe, and that the Bread was nothing but a ſign, token, or remembrance.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, you have to ſhew where and what my words were, and hereof we talked a great while.

Biſh. At the laſt the Biſhop was ſo angry, that he charged me in the Kings, Queens, and Cardinals name before the Mayor and his Brethren, taking them to witneſs, if I did not ſay yea or nay, he would condemn me.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, ſeeing you have nothing to accuſe me of, wherefore ſhould I ſo anſwer?

Archd. Then the Archdeacon ſaid, I was guilty; and ſaid I was like a thief at the Bar, which would not confeſs his fault, becauſe his Accuſers were not preſent; with a great many words, and would not let me open my mouth againſt him.

Anſ. Then I ſaw whereabout they went, granting to anſwer them by the word, or elſe I think they would have condemned me for holding of my peace; and this was my beginning, I believe that Chriſt took Bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave it to his Diſciples, and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my Body which is given for you, this do in remembrance of me.

Mat. Thew confeſſeth his mind of the Sacrament.

Arch. Doſt thou believe that Chriſt meant even as he ſaid?

Anſ. I ſaid, Chriſt was no diſſembler, but he ſpake the very truth.

Archd. Thou haſt very well ſaid, we will make the beſt of thy words. Then he praiſed me with many words, going about to prove it his Body real and ſubſtantial, and ſaid, Chriſt called himſelf Bread: and this to prove, when Chriſt ſaid, This is my Body, the Bread was his Body, ſaid he, indeed, real and ſubſtantial, not ſo long and ſo big as it hung on the Croſs, as the Capernaites did think; but we eat it, as mans weak nature can eat Chriſt. Therefore when he had ſaid, This is my Body, the Bread was his Body in very deed.

Capernaical Doctrine.

Anſ. Then I asked him, what Chriſt meant by theſe words, Which is given for you?

Arch. He ſaid, Chriſt ſpake that by the Bread alſo; but it was not written in Matthew, but Luke had thoſe words.

Anſ. Then I asked him, if Chriſts Body were made of Bread, whether that was given for our redemption, or whether the Bread was crucified for us, or not?

Arch. Then he ſaid, No, by St. Mary, I ſay not ſo.

Anſ. You have ſaid the truth indeed, and even as I believe.

Arch. Then he ſtood up with a great many of words, and ſaid, that I did think it but bare Bread ſtill, as other Bread is; but he was ſure Chriſt called it his Body, and then it was his Body indeed; for he would believe Chriſt.

Chriſt called it his Body: Ergo, he made it his Body. It followeth not: For a thing may be called, and yet no nature changed.

Anſ. When he had ſpoken his pleaſure by me, thinking to have condemned me by their Law, I ſaid, he had not judged right of me, for I had not ſo ſpoken, but did believe the words of Chriſt as well as he, and as much as he could prove by the Word.

Arch. Then he would hear what I did ſay it was.

Anſ. I ſaid, I did believe it was that he gave them.

Arch. Then he asked me, what was that he gave them.

Anſ. I ſaid, that which he brake.

Arch. Then he asked me, what was that he brake?

Anſ. I ſaid, that he took.

Arch. What was it that he did take?

Anſ. I ſaid, the Text ſaith, he took Bread.

Arch. Well then, thou ſaiſt it was but Bread that his Diſciples did eat, by thy reaſon.

Anſ. Thus much, I ſay, Look what he gave them, they did eat it indeed.

Arch. Why, then was not that his Body that they did eat?

Anſ. It was that which he brake.

Arch. Well, ſaid he, I perceive thy meaning well enough; for thou doſt think it is but Bread ſtill, and that he was not able to make it his Body.

Anſ. That is your expoſition upon my mind.

Arch. Then ſaid he, what didſt thou receive when thou didſt receive laſt?

Anſw.

Ann. 1557.

Anſw. I ſaid, I do believe, that I did eat Chriſts fleſh, and drink his blood. For he ſaith. My fleſh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.

Arch. Then he ſaid, I had well anſwered, thinking to have had ſome advantage at my hand, and prayed me to tell him, how I did eat his fleſh and drink his blood.

Anſ. Then he ſaid, I muſt anſwer you by the word which Chriſt ſaith; He that eateth my fleſh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.

Arch. Then he faced out the matter with Sophiſtry, and ſaid I did eat Chriſt, as that Church was in his eye, with many ſuch mocks, but would not let me anſwer one word.

Commiſſ. Then the Commiſſary did ask me, if I did not remember St. Paul, which did rebuke the Corinths for their evil behaviour, and becauſe they made no difference of the Lords Body, and brought in to prove his matter, how he called himſelf Bread in the ſixth of John. So Paul ſaith; So oft as ye eat of this Bread (meaning Chriſts Body) unworthily, ye eat and drink your own damnation, becauſe ye make no difference of the Lords Body. For thus ſaith Chriſt, The bread that I will give you is my fleſh. Now it is no Bread, but it is his Fleſh. And thus he alledged every Scripture falſe, to make up the matter.

False alledging of Scriptures.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, I did believe the words of St. Paul very well, even as he had ſpoken them. For thus he ſaith, He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation, becauſe he maketh no difference of the Lords Body.

Commiſſ. What is the cauſe that he eateth his own damnation?

Anſ. I ſaid, St. Paul declareth it plainly with theſe words, If ye had judged your ſelves, ye ſhould not have been judged of the Lord.

They ſaid, that Chriſt called it his Body, but they ſaid, that it was his Body.

Arch. Then the Archdeacon ſaid, he marvelled why I would not ſay, that he called the Bread his Body, ſeeing Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer, with many other, ſaid he, called it his Body.

Anſ. I ſaid, you have condemned them as Hereticks, and you would have me ſay with them, becauſe you would kill me.

Arch. Then he ſaid, In that they ſaid it was his Body, they did ſay the truth.

Anſ. I asked wherefore they were killed, ſeeing they ſaid the Truth.

Biſh. Then ſaid the Biſhop, that he had all their Anſwers, and that they did not believe as they ſaid. For they ſaid, Chriſt called it his Body, but it was not his natural Body: but thou ſhalt anſwer me by and by, whether it be his Body or not, or elſe I will anger thee.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, I had anſwered him by the Word already, and did believe it alſo; therefore if he did condemn me for that, my Life was not dear unto me, and I was ſure he ſhould not ſcape unpuniſhed: for God will be revenged upon ſuch Murderers.

Arch. Then the Archdeacon intreated me to be ruled by him, and take mercy while it was offered; for if I were condemned, I muſt needs be burned. Yet he would not ſay but my Soul might be ſaved; with many more words, and deſired me that I would believe him, for he would ſpeak the truth: beginning how Chriſt fed five thouſand People with four Loaves, and how he turned the Water into Wine, even ſo Chriſt took Bread and bleſt it, and when he had done, he brake it and ſaid, This is my Body, and then he commanded them to eat it: and therefore it muſt needs be his Body.

Anſ. Then I deſired him to ſpeak the Text right, or elſe I would not believe him.

Arch. Then he ſtood up, and put off his Cap, and thanked me for teaching of him, and ſaid, I was a ſtubborn Fellow, and took ſcorn to be be taught.

Anſ. I ſaid, I ought to hold him accurſed, if he taught Doctrine contrary to Chriſt and his Apoſtles.

Then he asked me, whether I did believe that Chriſt did give that he took, or not?

Comparison between ſtrowing Moſes Rod and the Breaking Chriſts Body, not like.

Anſw. I ſaid, I do believe as much as can be proved by the Scripture, and more I will not believe.

Arch. Then he began with Moſes Rod, how God commanded him to lay it down, and it was turned into a Serpent. Seeing that this was by Moſes being but a man, how much more Chriſt being both God and Man took one thing, and gave to his Diſciples another?

Anſ. I ſaid, his compariſon was nothing like, for Moſes Rod when it was laid down, he ſaw that it was turned into a very Serpent indeed; but in this Sacrament no man can ſee either quality or yet quantity to be changed.

Biſh. Then ſaid the Biſhop, that mine Opinion and Faith was like unto the Capernaites.

The Opinion of the Papiſts much like to the Capernaites.

Anſ. I ſaid, theirs was more like their Opinion than mine.

Arch. The Archdeacon asked me, whether Chriſt took not one thing, and gave another?

Anſ. I ſaid, look what he brake he gave unto them, and bade them eat; and other anſwer I will make none, contrary to the Word.

Arch. Then he ſaid, he marvelled why I would not believe them, ſeeing this learning had continued this fifteen hundred years; neither yet did ſay, as other had before, how Chriſt did call it his Body.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, when Cranmer, which was here Biſhop, was in authority, he ſaid, that he did hold the truth, and commanded us to believe him, and he hath given his life for his Opinion, and would you have me to believe you, becauſe you ſay, that you hold the Truth? and that which makes me believe chiefly, is the Scripture, which I am ſure is the Truth indeed.

Biſh. The Biſhop ſaid, he had ſpoken the truth, and that I would not believe.

Anſ. I ſaid, if he did not now ſpeak the truth, I was ſure he had ſpoken the truth; for he had preached before Doctrine clean contrary unto this.

Then were the reſt of my Articles read; which I anſwered, and in every Article he had up this Breaden God. And they ſent for a Candle-light, and I thought they would have condemned me, but God would not ſuffer their cruel hearts to have their pleaſure that time: bleſſed be his Name for evermore, Amen.

Arch. Then the Archdeacon was angry, and began to chide with me, becauſe I would not deſire a day of the Biſhop, and ſaid, I was a naughty ſtubborn Fellow, and ſaid, it had been my duty to have deſired him to have been good to me, that I might have a day.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, I have ſpoken the truth; and therefore I would ask him no day, except he would give me a day of his own mind.

Commiſ. Then ſaid the Commiſſary, Doſt thou not think that thou maiſt be deceived, ſeeing he may be deceived that hath gone to ſtudy all the days of his life?

Anſ. I ſaid, Yea, I might be deceived in that I was a man; but I was ſure Gods Word could not be deceived.

Commiſ. Then he prayed me to be content, and confeſſed that I might learn, and ſaid, they would be glad to teach me.

Anſ. And I ſaid, I would be as glad to learn as any man. And thus they roſe up and went away, ſaying nothing.

What became of this Matthew Plaiſe after, whether he died in Priſon, or was executed, or delivered, I have as yet no certain knowledge.

The Hiſtory of Ten true godly Diſciples and Martyrs of Chriſt, burnt together in one Fire at Lewes, Anno 1557. June 22.

IN the Town of Lewes were Ten faithful Servants of God put in one fire, the 22. day of June, whoſe Names follow: June 22.

1. Richard Woodman.
2. George Stevens.
3. W. Mainard.
4. Alexander Hoſman, his Servant.
5. Thomaſin a Wood, Mainard's Maid.
6. Margery Moris.
7. James Moris, her Son.
8. Denis Burgis.
9. Aſhdons Wife.
10. Groves Wife.

Ten godly Martyrs.

Of the which number Richard Woodman was the firſt. Concerning whoſe apprehenſion, firſt by his Enemies, and of his deliverance out of Biſhop Boners hands, then of his ſecond taking again by the procurement of his his Father, Brother, Kinsfolks, and Friends, alſo of his ſundry Examinations and couragious Anſwers before the Biſhops: and laſtly of his Condemnation, and of his Letters ſent to his faithful Friends, here followeth to be declared by his own words and relation reported. Which Richard Woodman, by his occupation was an Iron-maker dwelling in the Pariſh of Warbleton, in the County of Suſſex, and Dioceſs of Chicheſter of the age of thirty years and ſomewhat more. The occaſion of his firſt apprehenſion was this:

Fairebanke Preaching contrary to him ſelf.

There was one Fairebanke, who ſometimes had been a married Prieſt, and ſerved the Cure of Warebleton, where he had often perſwaded the People not to credit any other Doctrine, but that which he then preached, taught and ſet forth in King Edwards days. And afterward in the beginning of Queen Maries Reign, the ſaid Fairebanke, turning head to tail, preached clean contrary to that which he had before taught.

Whereupon Richard Woodman, hearing him in the Church of Warbleton ſo to preach contrary to himſelf, admoniſhed him of his inconſtancy, how before time he had taught them one thing, and now another, and deſired him to teach them the Truth. For the which words he was apprehended, and brought before Maſter John Aſhbornham, Maſter Tonſton, and Maſter Culpepper, and Maſter Roberts, Juſtices of Peace in the County of Suſſex, and by them committed to the Kings Bench, where he continued from June, the ſpace almoſt of a year and half; and from thence was transferred by Doctor Story into Boners Colehouſe, where he remained the ſpace of a month before he came to Examination.

Juſtices of Suſſex, troublers of R. Woodman, and what were their names.

R. Woodman delivered out of his firſt trouble.

R. Woodman again apprehended, and by whoſe means.

At length, the ſame day when Maſter Philpot was burned, which was the 18. of December, he with four other Priſoners was delivered and ſet at liberty by Boner himſelf. Notwithſtanding, ſhortly after he was ſought for again, and at laſt found out and taken by means of his Father, Brother, and certain other his acquainted Friends, and ſo was ſent up again to London to Biſhop Boner, where he remained in the Colehouſe eight weeks. He was there ſix times examined, and twenty ſix times before, ſo that his Examinations were in all thirty two, from his firſt apprehenſion to his condemnation. Touching the whole diſcourſe whereof, forſomuch as the matter is ſomething ſtrange, and will peradventure ſcarce find credit upon my narration, with them which deny all things that like them not to believe, ye ſhall hear himſelf ſpeak and teſtifie both of the manner of his Troubles, and alſo his own Examinations by himſelf recorded, in order as followeth.

32. Examinations of R. Woodman.

A true Certificate written by Richard Woodman, of his taking, and how he was brought to the Sheriffs the 15. of March. 1556. and how long he was in Priſon and how he was there uſed, till he was brought before the Biſhop of Chicheſter at Black-Friers in London, with the order of his Examinations following after the ſame.

The Certificate of R. Woodman concerning the truth of his own ſtory and trouble.

GEntle Reader, here you ſhall perceive how the Scriptures be partly fulfilled on me, being one of the leaſt of his poor Lambs. Firſt, you ſhall underſtand, that ſince I was delivered out of the Biſhop of Londons hands, which was in the year of our Lord 1555. and the ſame day that Mr. Philpot was burned, which was the 18. of December, I lay in his Cole-houſe eight Weeks lacking but one day: and before that I was a year and a half almoſt in the King's Bench after my firſt apprehenſion, for reproving a Preacher in the Pulpit, in the pariſh of Warbleton, where I dwelt. Wherfore I was at two Seſſions before I was ſent to Priſon, and carried to two more Seſſions while I was in Priſon, twice before the Biſhop of Chicheſter, and five times before the Commiſſioners; and then ſent to Londons Cole-houſe, and many times called before him, as it appeareth by my Examinations which I have wrote, the which Examinations the Biſhop of Chicheſter now hath, for they were found in my houſe when I was taken, wherein is contained all the talk which I had before them aforenamed. Alſo there be in London that had Copies of the ſame of me, when I was in the Cole-houſe.

The firſt apprehenſion of R. Woodman.

And it pleaſed God to deliver me with 4. more out of the Butchers hands, requiring nothing elſe of us but that we ſhould be honeſt men, and members of the true Catholick Church that was builded upon the Prophets and Apoſtles, Chriſt being the head of the true Church, the which all we affirmed that we were members of the true Church, and purpoſed by Gods help therein to die. And hereupon we were delivered; but he willed us many times to ſpeak good of him. And no doubt he was worthy to be praiſed, becauſe he had been ſo faithful an aid in his Maſter the Devils buſineſs. For he had burnt good Maſter Philpot the ſame morning, in whoſe Blood his heart was ſo drunken (as I ſuppoſed) that he could not tell what he did, as it appeared to us both before and after. For but two days before, he promiſed us that we ſhould be condemned that ſame day that we were delivered, yea, and the morrow after that he had delivered us, he ſought for ſome of us again, yea and that earneſtly. He waxed dry after his great drunkenneſs, wherefore he is like to have Blood to drink in Hell as he is worthy, if he repent it not with ſpeed. The Lord turn all their hearts, if it be his will.

Anno 1556.

R. Woodman delivered out of Boners hands with four more. What the Biſhop required at their delivirance.

Biſhop Boner Blood thirſty.

This have I written, chiefly to certifie all People how we were delivered, becauſe many carnal Goſpellers and Papiſts have ſaid, that it was preſcribed that we ſhould be ſo delivered, becauſe they think that God is ſubject to man, and not man to God. For if they did, they would not blaſpheme him as they do, or if they thought they ſhould give account for it. Have not many of them read how God delivered Iſrael out of Egypt? Daniel out of the Lions Den? Sydrach, Miſaach, and Abednago, out of the burning Oven? with divers other ſuch like examples; yea, God is the ſame God that he was then. He is no older, nor leſs in power, as ſome count him in wondring at his works. Now to the matter.

Woodman purgeth himſelf of falſe ſlander.

After I was delivered, the Papiſts ſaid that I had conſented to them, whereof they made themſelves glad; the which was the leaſt part of my thought (I praiſe God therefore) as they well perceived and knew the contrary within a while. For I went from Pariſh to Pariſh, and talked with them, to the number of 13. or 14. and that of the chiefeſt in all the Country; and I angred them ſo, that they with the Commiſſioners complained on me to my Lord Chamberlain that was then to the Queen, Sir John Gage, ſhewing him that I baptized Children, and married Folks, with many ſuch lies, to bring me into their hands again. Then the Commiſſioners ſent out certain Citations to bring me to the Court. My Lord Chamberlain had directed out four or five Warrants for me, that if I had come there, I ſhould have been attached and ſent to Priſon ſtraight-way. Which was not Gods will; for I had warning of their laying await for me, and came not there, but ſent my deputy and he brought me word that the Bayliffs waited for me there, but they miſt of their prey for that time, whereupon they were diſpleaſed.

Falſe ſurmiſes againſt R. Woodman.

Woodman complained of to Sir John Gage, Lord Chamberlain.

Warrants ſent out to attach Woodman.

L. Chamberlain ſendeth to take Woodman at his Plough.

Then within three days after, my Lord ſent three of his men to take me, whoſe names were Deane, Jeffrey, and Frances. I being at plough with my Folks, right in the way as they were coming to my houſe, leaſt miſtruſting them of all other, came to them and ſpake to them, asking them how they did. And they ſaid, they arreſted me in the King and Queens Name, and that I muſt go with them to their Maſter the Lord Chamberlain. Which words made my fleſh to tremble and quake, becauſe of that ſudden. But I anſwered them, that I would go with them. Yet I deſired them, that they would go to my Houſe with me, that I might break my Faſt, and put on ſome other gear, and they ſaid, I ſhould. Then I remembred my ſelf, ſaying in my heart; Why am I thus affraid? they can lay no evil to my charge. If they kill me for well doing, I may think my ſelf happy. I remembred how I was contented gladly before to die in that quarrel, and ſo had continued ever ſince; and ſhould I now fear to die? God forbid, that I ſhould; for then were all my labour in vain.

Woodman arreſted.

Fear coming upon Woodman at his firſt taking.

Woodman comforted in his Spirit after his fear.

So by and by I was perſwaded, I praiſe God conſidering it was but the frailty of my fleſh, which was loth to forgo my Wife and Children, and goods: for I ſaw nothing but preſent death before mine eyes. And as ſoon as I was perſwaded in my mind to die, I had regard of nothing in this world, but was as merry and glad, and joyful, I praiſe God, as ever I was. This battle laſted laſted not a quarter of an hour; but it was ſharper than death it ſelf for the time, I dare ſay.

Anno 1557.

Woodman asketh for their Warrant.

So when I had my breakfaſt, I deſired them to ſhew me their Warrant, thinking thereby I ſhould have ſeen wherefore I was arreſted, to the intent I might the better anſwer for my ſelf, when I came before their Maſter. And one of them anſwered, they had not their Warrant there. Which words made me aſtonied, and it was put in my mind by God, that I need not go with them, unleſs they had their Warrant. Then ſaid I to them, That is marvel that you will come to take a man without a Warrant. It ſeemeth to me, that you come of your own mind to get thank of your Maſter; for indeed I heard ſay (ſaid I) that there was four or five Warrants out for me, but they were called in again, becauſe I had certified my Lord and the Commiſſary, by a Letter that I had ſent to the Commiſſary's Court, that I was not faulty in that they laid to my charge, which was for baptizing of Children, and marrying of Folks: the which I never did; for I was never Miniſter appointed to do any ſuch thing: wherefore ſet your hearts at reſt, I will not go with you (ſaid I) unleſs you will carry me by force, and if you will do ſo, at your own adventures. And ſo I roſe from the board, and ſtepped into my Chamber, meaning to go from them if I could poſſible, ſeeing God had made the way ſo open for me. I meant to play Peters part with them, but God would not it ſhould be ſo, but ſent a fear amongſt them, that as ſoon as I was gone into my Chamber, e're ever I could come out again, they were gone out of my Houſe.

How God worketh for his Servants.

The unorderly doings of the Papiſts in attaching men without any Warrant.

Woodman refuſeth to go with them, unleſs they ſhew their Warrant.

When I ſaw that, I knew it was Gods doing, to ſet me at libert y once again. Yet I was compelled to ſpeak to them, and ſaid, If you have a Warrant, I deſire you for Gods ſake to ſhew it me, and I will go with you with all my heart: if not, I deſire you to depart in Gods Peace and the Kings: for ſurely I will not go with you without the order of the Law; for I have been too ſimple in ſuch things already. For before I was ſent to Priſon firſt, I went to the Juſtices to two Seſſions, without any Warrant or Commandment, but had word by one of their men, and I went juſtly to them, and they ſent me to Priſon, and kept me there almoſt a year and three quarters, without all right or equity, as it is openly known, not hearing my cauſe gently, debated. And it ſeemeth ſtrange to me, that I ſhould be thus evil handled; and therefore I will go to none of them all henceforth, without the extremity of the Law.

Gods great work, how the Perſecutors which came to take Woodman went away without him.

Then one of them anſwered me, and ſaid, We have not the Warrant here, but it is at home at my Houſe; the worſt is, you can but make us fetch it. Then I ſaid, Fetch it if you will; but if you come in my Houſe before you have it, at your own adventure be it. So I ſhut my door, and went my way out at the other door. So they got help to watch my Houſe, whilſt one of them fetcht the Conſtable and many more, thinking to have had me in my Houſe, and to have taken me in my Houſe, and carried me away with a licence; but I was gone before, as God would have it. Notwithſtanding they ſought every corner of my Houſe, but could not prevail. I miſtruſted they would ſearch it again that night, and kept me abroad; and indeed there came ſeven of his men and the Conſtable, and ſearched my Houſe.

Woodman eſcaped the hands of his takers.

Woodmans houſe again ſearched for him.

And when they ſaw that they could not meet with me, they were ready to rent their Coats, that I had eſcaped them ſo, knowing they ſhould have ſuch a check of their Maſter. When I heard that they had ſought ſo for me again, I perceiving that they were greedy of their prey, came home, and my Wife told me all things.

Then I ſuppoſed that they would lay all the Country for me, and the Sea-coaſt, becauſe I ſhould not go over, and then I thought that they would not miſtruſt that I would dare be nigh home. So I told my Wife, that I would make my lodging in a Wood not paſt a ſlight ſhot from my Houſe, as I did indeed, even under a Tree, and there had my Bible, my Pen, and mine Ink, and other neceſſaries, and there continued ſix or ſeven weeks, my Wife bringing me meat daily as I had need. Yea, I thought my ſelf bleſſed of God, that I was counted worthy to lye in the Woods for the Name of Chriſt. Then there came word into the Country, that I was ſeen and ſpoken to in Flanders; whereupon they left laying in wait for me: for they had laid all the Country for me, and the Sea-coaſt from Portſmouth to Dover, even as God put in my mind they would.

Woodman lodged ſix weeks in a wood.

All the Country and Sea-coaſt laid for Woodman.

So when all was huſht, I went abroad among our Friends and Brethren, and at length I went beyond the Sea both into Flanders and in France; but I thought every day ſeven year or ever I were at home again. So I came home again as ſoon as it was poſſible. I was there but three weeks, but as ſoon as I was come home, and it was once known among Baal's Prieſts, they could not abide it, but procured out Warrants againſt me, cauſing my Houſe to be ſearched ſometimes twice in a week. This continued from S. James tide to the firſt Sunday in Lent. Otherwhile I went privily, otherwhile openly, otherwhile I went from home a fortnight or three weeks, otherwhiles I was at home a month or five weeks together, living there moſt commonly and openly, doing ſuch works as I had to do; and yet all mine enemies could lay no hands on me, till the hour was full come: and then by the voice of the Country, and by manifeſt proofs, mine one Brother, as concerning the fleſh, delivered me into their hands, by that he knew that I was at home.

Woodman delivered by his own brother into his enemies hands.

For my Father and he had as much of my goods in their hands, as I might have 56 l. for by the year clear, and thereunto prayed. It was a Lordſhip and an Honor, and half an Honor that I had delivered into their hands to pay my debts, and the reſt to remain to my Wife and Children. But they had reported that it would not pay my debts; which grieved me ſore. For it was 200 l. better than the debts came to. Which cauſed me to ſpeak to ſome of my Friends, that they would ſpeak to them to come to ſome reckoning with me, and to take all ſuch mony again of me as they were charged with, and to deliver me ſuch Writings and Writs as they had of mine again, or to whom I would appoint them.

Auri ſacra fames, quid non mortalia cogis pectora? Virgil.

So it was agreed betwixt my Father and me, that I ſhould have it again, and the day was appointed that the reckoning ſhould be made and ſent to me that ſame day that I was taken; my Brother ſuppoſing that I ſhould have put him out of moſt of all his occupying, that he was in: for it was all mine in a manner that he occupied, as all the Country can, and do well know. Whereon (as it is reported) he told one Cardillar, my next Neighbour, and he told ſome of Mr. Gages men, or to Mr. Gage himſelf: and ſo he ſent to his Brother, and his Brother ſent twelve of his men (he being Sheriff) in the night before I was taken, and lay in the Buſhes not far from my Houſe, till about 9. of the clock, even the hour that was appointed amongſt themſelves; for about the ſame time they thought to have had me within my Houſe.

Brother bewraieth the Brother.

They had taken a Man of mine, and two of my Children that were abroad in the Land, and kept them with them till their hour was appointed to come in; and then a little Girl, one of my Children, ſaw them come together, and came running in, and cried, Mother, Mother, yonder cometh twenty men. I ſitting in my Bed, and making of Shoo-thongs, heard the words, and ſuſpected ſtreightway that I was betrayed, I ſtir'd out of my Bed and whipt on my Hoſe, thinking to have gone out of the doors or ever they had been come. My Wife being amazed at the Childs words, looked out at the door, and they were hard by. Then ſhe clapped to the door, and barred it faſt, even as I came out of my Chamber into the Hall, and ſo barred the other: So the Houſe was beſet round ſtreightway, and they bade open the doors, or elſe they would break them in pieces. Then I had no ſhift, but either I muſt ſhew my ſelf openly, or make ſome other remedy.

Woodmans houſe again beſet and ſearched.

So there was a place in my Houſe that was never found, which was at the leaſt, I dare ſay, twenty times, and ſometimes almoſt of twenty men ſearched at once, both by night and by day. Into which place I went: And as ſoon as I was in, my Wife opened the door, whereby incontinent they came, and asked for me; and ſhe ſaid I was not at home. Then they asked her wherefore ſhe ſhut the door, if I were not at home. She ſaid, becauſe ſhe had been made afraid divers times with ſuch as came to ſearch us; and therefore ſhe ſhut the door. For it is reported (ſaith ſhe) that whoſoever can take my Husband, ſhall hang him or burn him ſtreightway; and therefore I doubt they will ſerve me or my Children ſo; for I think they may do ſo

Woodman put to his ſhifts.

The part of a truſty wife to her huſband.

unto us as well as to him, she said. Well; said they, we know he is in the House, and we must search it, for we be the Sheriffs men; let us have a Candle. It is told us, there be many secret places in your House. So she lighted a Candle, and they sought up and down in every corner that they could find, and had given over, and many of them were gone out of my House into the Church-yard, and there talking with my Father, and with some that he had brought with him.

This belike was his brother.

Now when they could not find me, one of them went to him that gave them word that I was at home, and said, we cannot find him. Then he asked them whether they had sought over a window that was in the Hall (as it was known afterward) for that same place I had told him of my self. For many times when I came home, I would send for him to bear me company; yet as it chanced, I had not told him the way into it. Then they began to search anew. One looked up over the window, and spied a little Loft, with three or four Chests, and the way went in betwixt two of the Chests, but there could no man perceive it. Then he asked my wife which was the way into it. Here is a place that we have not sought yet. When she thought they would see it by one means or other, she said, the way was into it out of a Chamber they were in even now. So she sent them up, and cried, Away, away. Then I knew there was no remedy, but made the best shift for my self that I could. The place was boarded over, and fast nailed, and if I had come out that way that I went in, I must needs come amongst them all in the Hall: Then I had no shift, but set my shoulders to the boards that were nailed to the Rafters to keep out the rain, and brake them in pieces, which made a great noise, and they that were in the other Chamber, seeking for the way into it, heard the noise, and looked out of a window, and spied me, and made an out-cry. But yet I got out, and leaped down, having no shoes on.

Woodman at length, after long seeking, found out.

So I took down a Lane that was full of sharp sinders, and they came running after, with a great cry, with their Swords drawn, crying, Strike him, strike him. Which words made me look back, and there was never a one nigh me by an hundred foot: and that was but one, for all the rest were a great way behind. And I turned about hastily to go my way, and stepped upon a sharp sinder with one foot, and saving of it, I stepped into a great miry hole, and fell down withal, and e're ever I could arise and get away, he was come in with me. His name is Parker the wild, as he is counted in all Sussex. But if I had had on my shoes, they had been like to have gone away errandless, if there had been five hundred more, if I had caught the plain ground once, to the which I had not a stones cast: But it was not Gods will; for if it had, I should have escaped from them all, if there had been ten thousand of them.

Parker in Sussex a bloody Persecutor of Woodman.

Then they took me and led me home again to put on my shoes, and such gear as I had need of. Then said John Fauconer, Now your Master hath deceived you. You said, you were an Angel, and if you had been an Angel, why did you not flee away from us? Then said I, what be they that ever heard me say that I was an Angel? It is not the first lye by a thousand that they have made of me. Angels were never begotten of men, nor born of women; but if they had said, they had heard me say, that I do trust I am a Saint, they had not said amiss. What, do you think to be a Saint? Yea that I do, and am already in Gods sight, I trust in God; for he that is not a Saint in Gods sight already, is a Devil. Therefore he that thinketh scorn to be a Saint, let him be a Devil. And with that word they had brought me to mine own door; where met with me my Father, and willed me to remember my self.

Woodman taken of his enemies. John Fauconer a blasphemous Persecutor.

Every true Christian man is a Saint in Gods sight.

To whom I answered, I praise God, I am well remembred whereabout I go. This way was appointed of God for me to be delivered into the hands of mine enemies, but wo unto him by whom I am betrayed. It had been good for that man, that he had never been born, if he repent not with speed. The Scriptures are now fulfilled on me; For the father shall be against the son, and the brother shall deliver the brother to death, as it is this day come to pass. Then said one, He doth accuse his father; a good child indeed. I accuse him not, but say my mind; for there was no man knew me at home, but my father, my brother, and one more, the which I dare say would not hurt me for all the good in this Town.

Woodman betrayed either by his own father, or by his own brother.

Anno 1557.

There was one George Beching that married one of my sisters, and he thought that I had meant him, that he had betrayed me; and he said, Brother, I would you should not think that I was the cause of your taking. To whom I answered, that I meant him not; I meant one that was nearer of my blood than he was. Then said one of Lause, that I had been a Gospeller, and stood from them when I was brought to a Sessions to Lause, and he said, I thought you would have been an honest man when you were at Lause, and I offered Hussey the Sheriff to be bound for you, that you should go home to your wife, and come to him again. Then I remembred what he was, and said, Be you the Pewterer? And he said, Yea. Then said I; It is happened to you according to the true Proverb, as saith S. Peter, The dog is turned to his vomit again, and the sow that is washed, to wallow in the mire; and the end of all such will be worse than the beginning. Then his mouth was stopped, so that he had nothing to say.

George Beching brother in law to Woodman.

A Pewterer of Lause a turncoat.

All this while I stood at my door without; for they would not let me go in. So I put on my shoes and my cloaths, then they put on an harness about my arms made of a dogs slip, which rejoyced my heart, that I was counted worthy to be bound for the Name of God. So I took my leave of my wife and children, my father, and other of my friends, never thinking to see them more in this world. For it was so thought of all the Country, that I should not live six days after my taking; for they had so reported. But yet I knew it was not as they would, unless God would grant it, I know what God can do; but what he will do, I know not: but I am sure he will work all things for the best for them that love and fear him. So we drank and went our way, and came to Firle about three of the clock. And thus much touching the causes and effect of the troubles of Richard Woodman. Now let us see his Examinations, which follow in this order.

Woodman rejoyceth to be bound for the name of Christ.

Woodman taketh his leave of his wife and children.

The name of this place so far as we could gather by the copy was Firle.

The first Examination of Richard Woodman, before Dr. Christopherson Bishop of Chichester, Dr. Story, Dr. Cooke, and others.

FIrst, you shall understand, that I was sent from the Sheriffs to London, the 12. day of April, in the year of our Lord 1557. and afterward upon the 14. day of the same Month I was brought before the Bishop of Chichester, and Dr. Story, and Dr. Cooke. So the Sheriffs men delivered my Warrant and me to the Bishop. Then the Bishop asked me what my name was. My name (quoth I) is Richard Woodman.

Rich. Woodman brough before the B. of Chichester, Dr. Story, and Dr. Cooke.

Chich. I am sorry for you, and so are all the worshipful men of your Country. For it hath been reported to me, that you have been a man of good estimation of all the Country, amongst the poor and rich, till now of late. Wherefore look well upon your self, your wife and children, your father, and other of your friends, and be ruled. Think not your self wiser then all the Realm. Be informed, and you shall have their favours all, as much us ever you had.

Wood. You have charged me with many things wherein I have never offended: as, if you will give me leave, I will shew you.

Chich. Yes, I pray you say your mind.

Wood. If it please you, you have charged me as though I made my self wiser than all the Realm; God doth know, I stand to learn of every man that will or can teach me the truth: And whereas you say, I have been well esteemed both of the poor and rich, God doth know, I know not that I have given any just offence, either to rich or poor. And as for my wife and children, God doth know how I love them in him, and my life also. My life, my wife, and my children are all in Gods hands, and I have them all as I had them not, I trust according to S. Pauls words. But if I had ten thousand pounds of gold, I had rather forego it all, then them, if I might be in choice, and not displease God.

R. Woodman preferreth the Kingdom of Christ before life, or wife, and all worldly respects.

Chich. The Sheriff took pains to come to me of love, he said, which he bare to you, as to himself; and said you were desirous to speak with me.

Wood. I thought it meet to appeal to mine Ordinary. For they go about to shed my blood unrighteously. For they have laid many unjust things to my charge.

Woodman appealed to his Ordinary.

Where-

Anno 1557.

Wherfore I thought it meet to appeal to you, that if you can find any fault in me meet to be reformed by Gods Word, I ſtand to be reformed; and likewiſe if my blood ſhall be ſhed unrighteouſly, that it might be required at your hands, becauſe you have taken upon you to be the Phyſician of our Country.

Story. Is not this a perverſe Fellow, to lay to your charge, that his blood ſhall be required at your hands? Thinkeſt thou that thou ſhalt be put to death unjuſtly, that thy blood ſhould be required? No, if he ſhould condemn an hundred ſuch Hereticks as thou art: I helped to rid a good ſort of you. And I promiſe thee, I will help to rid thee too, the beſt that I can.

Dr. Story a great ſpiller of blood by his own confeſſion.

Wood. Then I would have anſwered him, but the Biſhop deſired us both to give him place.

Chich. Well, Neighbour Woodman, I call you Neighbour, becauſe ye be one of my Dioceſs; and you are ſent to me, that I ſhould give you ſpiritual counſel: for I am your ſpiritual Paſtour. Therefore hear what I ſhall ſay to you.

Wood. Firſt, I deſire you to hear me a few words. You have ſaid, you will give me ſpiritual counſel. Be you ſure that you have the Spirit of God?

The Papiſts in doubt whether they have the Spirit of God.

Chich. No, I am not ſure of that.

Wood. No? be you not ſure of that?

Chich. No, by S. Mary, I dare not be ſo bold to ſay ſo; I doubt of that.

Wood. Then you be like the Waves of the Sea, as ſaith S. James, that be toſſed about with the wind, and be unſtable in all your ways, and can look for no good thing at the Lords hand: Yea, ye are neither hot nor cold, and therefore God will ſpue you out of his mouth, as ſaith S. John. Then they were in a great fury, eſpecially Dr. Story, ſaying:

Dr. Story in a fury.

Story. What a perverſe Fellow is this? He hath the Devil within him, and is mad. He is worſe than the Devil. Now I perceive that it is true that is reported by thee, and it is the pride of all ſuch Hereticks to boaſt themſelves.

Chich. Yea ſurely, he is ſent to me to learn, and taketh upon him to teach me.

Wood. I ſeeing their blindneſs and blaſphemy, it made my heart melt, and mine eyes guſh out with tears, ſaying; The Jews ſaid to Chriſt, he had the Devil, and was mad, as you have ſaid here by me. But I know the Servant is not above his Maſter. And God forbid, that I ſhould learn of him that confeſſeth that he hath not the Spirit of God.

Chich. Why, do you think that you have the Spirit of God?

Wood. I believe verily that I have the Spirit of God.

Chich. You boaſt more than ever Paul did, or any of the Apoſtles, the which is great preſumption.

He is no true Chriſtian that hath not the Spirit of God.

Wood. I boaſt not in my ſelf, but in the gift of God, as Paul did; for he ſaid, he believed verily that he had the Spirit of God, making thereof no doubts, in 1 Cor. 7.

Chich. It is not ſo, you bely the Text.

Wood. If it be not ſo, let me be burned to morrow.

Story. Thou ſhalt not be burned to morrow, but thou ſhalt be burned within theſe ſix days, I promiſe thee.

Chich. If it be ſo, it is wrong tranſlated, as it is in a thouſand places more.

Whether Paul was ſure to receive the Spirit of Chriſt.

Wood. Then one looked in a Latin Teſtament, and another in a Greek Teſtament, and they ſaid it was in them both that Paul ſuppoſed that he had the Spirit of God, but he was not ſure.

Chich. Even ſo I hope and ſuppoſe that I have the Spirit of God, but I am not ſure.

Wood. If that place be wrong tranſlated, and ſo many places of the Bible as you ſay, then I may ſay with Chriſt; it cannot be avoided, but offences muſt be given; but woe unto them by whom they come. I may ſay woe unto falſe Tranſlators: For curſed are they that add or take away. But take you heed that you bely not the Tranſlators. I believe they had the fear of God more before their eyes than you report of them. And yet if that place be wrong tranſlated, I can prove by places enough, that Paul had the Spirit of God, as I my ſelf, and all Gods Elect have.

Chich. How prove you that?

Wood. No man can believe that Jeſus is the Lord; but by the Holy Ghoſt, firſt to the Corinthians the ſeventh Chapter. I do believe that Jeſus Chriſt is my Redeemer, and that I ſhall be ſaved from all my ſins by his death and bloodſhedding, as Paul and all the Apoſtles did, and as all faithful people ought to do, which no man can do without the Spirit of God. And as there is no damnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus; ſo is there no ſalvation to them that are not in Chriſt Jeſus. For he that hath not the Spirit of Chriſt, is none of his, but is a Caſt-away, as he ſaith in the ſame Text. And again, We have not received the ſpirit of bondage, to fear any more, but we have received the ſpirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba Father. The ſame Spirit certifieth our ſpirits, that we are the Sons of God. Here are proofs enough, that Paul was ſure that he had the Spirit of God. Alſo S. John ſaith, He that believeth not that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is an Antichriſt, and denieth both the Father and the Son: which is ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which ſhall never be forgiven in this world, nor in the world to come. Beſide all this, He that believeth in God, dwelleth in God, and God in him. So it is impoſſible to believe in God, unleſs God dwell in us. Oh good God! what more injury can be done unto thee, then to miſtruſt that we have received thy holy Spirit by thy gift? Thus may all men ſee their blindneſs, and whoſe Servants they be, as they do declare themſelves, both by their words and deeds.

Rom. 8. Rom. 8. Gal 4. 2 Tim 4 6.

The Papiſts bewray their own blindneſs.

Story. Oh my Lord, what an Heretick is this ſame? Why hear you him? Send him to Priſon to his Fellows in the Marſhalſey, and they ſhall be diſpatched within theſe twelve days.

Wood. When I heard him ſay ſo, I rejoyced greatly in my heart, deſiring God, if it were his will, to keep him in that mind. For I looked ſurely to have gone to the Biſhop of London's Colehouſe, or Lollards Tower, yea, I thought my ſelf happy, if I might have gone to Lollards Tower: but it pleaſed God to put in the hearts of them to ſend me to the Marſhalſey amongſt our Brethren and my old Priſon-Fellows: So merciful hath God dealt with me in eaſing of my burden, that I looked for. So when they perceived that I feared not Impriſonment, but rather rejoyced, as they well perceived: Then ſaid the Biſhop, Methinks he is not afraid of the Priſon.

Rich. Woodman glad to go to the Marſhalſey.

Wood. No, I praiſe the living God.

Story. This is an Heretick indeed. He hath the right terms of all Hereticks; the living God, I pray you be there dead Gods, that you ſay the living God?

The living God is a point of Hereſie among the Catholicks.

Wood. Be you angry with me, becauſe I ſpeak the words which are written in the Bible?

Story. Bibble babble, bibble babble. What ſpeakeſt thou of the Bible? There is no ſuch word written in all the Bible.

Story ſcorneth at the holy Bible.

Wood. Then I am much to blame, if it be not ſo written; Behold, for the offences that you have done, you ſhall be carried away captive by Nebuchodonoſor to Babylon, and there ye ſhall be ſeven Generations: and when you be there, you ſhall ſee Gods of gold, of ſilver, of wood, and of ſtone, born before you and behind you upon mens ſhoulders, to caſt out a fear among the Heathen. When you ſhall ſee all theſe abominations, then ſay in your heart: It is the living God that ought to be worſhipped. Here I prove my ſaying true, both that there is a living God, and that there be dead gods. Alſo David ſaith in the Pſalms; My ſoul hath a deſire and longing to enter into the Courts of the Lord: My heart and my fleſh rejoyce in the living God; with divers other places that I could recite. Wherefore I marvel that you rebuke me for ſpeaking the truth.

Baruch 6.

Dr. Story ſet to School in the Scriptures.

Chich. I do not deny but it is written, and is the truth, and I know it as well as you; but ſuch is the ſpeech of all Hereticks.

If the living God in heaven do make an heretick, what maketh them the dead god on the Altar? Stories rule to know an heretick, that is a true Chriſtian.

Story. My Lord, I will tell you how you ſhall know an Heretick by his words, becauſe I have been more uſed to them than you have been; that is, they will ſay (the Lord) and (we praiſe God) and (the living God.) By theſe words you ſhall know an Heretick.

Wood. All theſe words are written for our learning, and we are commanded of the Prophets to uſe them daily, as this; The Lords Name be praiſed from the riſing up of the Sun, unto the going down of the same. Also, as many as fear the Lord, say always, the Lord be praised.

Anno 1557.

When Dr. Story cannot confute them by learning, he confuteth them by imprisonment.

Story. My Lord, send him to Prison, you shall do no good with him. I will go to Church, and leave you here. This is an old Heretick. Wast thou never before me e're now?

Wood. Yes forsooth, that I have.

Story. Yea, I trow so; and I sent thee to the Bishop of London, and he released thee, and thou promisedst him to be an honest man, and that thou wouldst be of the true Catholick Church, which thou hast not fulfilled.

Wood. I promised him nothing but I have fulfilled it. No man shall be able to prove the contrary.

Story. Well, it will be tried well enough. My Lord, I will take my leave, I fear me you shall do this man no good.

No, but if he should say, The Sacrament of the Altar worshipped might be he, then he were a perfect Catholick. The Lord, heretical: Our Lord, Catholick with the Papists.

Chich. I would not have you to use such speeches as you do, as the Lord be praised, and the living God, with such like words. Can you not say as well, Our Lord, or our God, as otherwise?

Wood. I marvel why you should reprove me therefore, seeing they be the words of God. I do not refuse to say our God, or our Lord, when I talk of the Scripture where it is written. If I should, it must follow, that I denied the words of God, and must needs be an Heretick; but I do not. Wherefore, I marvel what you mean to find fault therein. It seemeth to me, that you mistrust that I believe not as you do.

Chich. Yea, that is my meaning indeed.

Wood. I believe in the living God, if you do not so, then our beliefs be not alike indeed. But if it please you to examin me upon any particular matter, now, or at any other time, I will make you answer thereto by Gods help.

Fallacia æquivoci. He that erreth from the Church, which Church erreth not in the right Faith, his Faith cannot be good indeed.

Chich. Though you believe in God, I can prove you believe not as you ought to do, as I can shew you by your hand writing. You have denied the Catholick Church. Wherefore he that erreth from the Church, it cannot be said that his Faith is good. Wherefore be ruled by the Church, from the which ye have erred. I can shew you perillous things of your writing, if it should be known, but ye shall not be hurt for me, if you will come to any good order. But I promise you I would not for three thousand pounds some had so much against me, as I can shew against you of your own hand writing, which you cannot deny.

Wood. I will not deny my hand by Gods help. For I know well, I have written nothing at any time but the truth. There may be things written against me, reporting it to be mine, and yet be not: but my hand cannot well be counterfeited, there be enough that know my hand.

Chich. Do you know it your self if you see it?

Wood. Yea, that I do. Then he arose and fetcht a great bundle of Writings, and opened them, and bade me come see. I looked on them, and it was my hand indeed.

Woodman charged with his own writings.

Chich. How say you, is it not your own writing?

Wood. Yes surely it is.

Chich. How say you to this, is not this your hand also?

Wood. I looked, and it was. And I said, Yes verily is it.

Chich. Well, you know what it meaneth I dare say.

Wood. Yea, I know it very well; here is a great deal, the which I had thought had been in my House, but I thank God that it is here: for in this you shall try whether it be true or not. For in this is contained all the talk that was betwixt the Commissioners and me, when I was before them five times, and also before the Bishop of London divers times: and I am sure, neither you nor they shall find any words false therein written: and I think the Sheriffs men, when they searched my House for me, when I was taken, found this, and carried it with them, but I never knew it before now. But I am not sorry for it, but am rather glad: For herein you may see all the wrong that I received at their hands, and how long I was in Prison, and how I was tossed up and down, and how I was delivered at length, and by this you may try whether it be so or not. I dare say they that found it, and they that brought it to you, had thought it would have turned me to displeasure; but in very deed all things work for the best to them that fear God.

Rich. Woodman five times before the Commissioners.

Chich. Indeed, I find no great fault in this; but here is perillous gear, here is sedition. This was set up upon the Church door, you know it well enough.

Rich. Woodmans child, being baptized by the Midwife, was brought out of the house by the Papists, and confirmed in the Church.

Wood. Indeed I wrote it to the Priest, and to others that took upon them to fetch my Child out of my House without my leave, and used it at their pleasure, when they knew it was baptized already, as they were well certified before. Wherefore my Conscience compelled me to shew them my mind in writing, wherein is contained nothing but the Scriptures of God, rebuking them for their folly.

Chich. Yea, but it is terribly meant, and uncharitably. It is such gear coupled together I promise you, as I never saw the like. But I promise you, I will make the best of it. And I protest before God, I would you should do as well as mine own soul and body. Be contented to be reformed. God hath done his part on you. Cast not your self away. Remember your Wife and Children, and the Poor that lack your occupying. Mean to follow your Vocation. Remember you are not called to be a Teacher nor a Preacher. S. Paul saith, Let every man walk wherein he is called, and therein abide. Remember you are called to another Vocation, for Gods sake walk therein. It is not your Office to do as you have done. You might do as much good by the report of worshipful men, as any man might do in all the Country by your example, and if you would follow the Laws of the Catholick Church, it would be an occasion to bring a great many into the true Church, that are out, as you are.

Dr. Christopherson Bp. of Chichester beginneth with fair words to perswade Woodman from his doctrine.

Wood. I would not that you should say, that I am out of the Church of God, for I am not, but do allow the Church of God according to his Word. Yea, if I were abroad, if I could win any into the true Church, that be out, by any means that I could use, I would be very glad. For God knoweth I love, all people as my self. And where you say I have been a Preacher, it is not so. I never took any such thing upon me, as it is well known. But as for teaching I cannot deny: for it becometh every man to teach and instruct his Houshold in the fear of God, and all other (as far as he can) that desire it of him. And whereas you have blamed me for reading the Scripture, and leaving my Vocation (as you say) I left not my Vocation in reading the Scripture. For I trust I followed my Vocation the better therefore. And the greatest cause that I was compelled to read the Scriptures, was, becaus the Preachers and Teachers were so changeable.

Woodman not out of the Church.

A man may teach, though he be no Priest. Reading the Scripture letteth no man to walk in his vocation, but rather doth further him.

Chich. No? did you not preach at a Fair?

Wood. No surely, but it was so reported. I was at a Fair indeed. Whiles I was in Prison, I had leave of the Council to go home to pay my Debts, and then I went to a Fair to sell Cattle, and there met with me divers poor men that I had set awork, and of love asked me how I did, and how I could away with Imprisonment. And I shewed them how God had dealt with me, and how he would deal with all them that put their trust in him; and this they called preaching. And since that it hath been reported that I have baptized Children, and married Folks, the which I never did; for I was never Minister. Wherefore if I had so done, I had done contrary to the order of the Apostles, as God forbid I should.

Lies and slanders.

Chich. I am well apaid, if you be faultless in those things: for I have heard say the contrary.

Wood. I have shewed you the truth, and that no man living shall be able to prove the contrary.

Chich. You said you do not disallow the true Catholick Church.

Wood. No, that I do not.

Woodman disalloweth not the Catholick Church.

Chich. Why do you not then go to the Church? You come not there, it is informed me.

Wood. I trust I am in the true Church every day. But to tell you the truth, I come not at the Church where the most do resort. For if I should, I should offend, and be offended. For at the last time that I was there I offended many, and was offended my self. Wherefore for Conscience sake I would not come there. For I was sent to Prison for my coming there, and now I am sent to you for biding thence. So they will not be pleased any way with me, for they seek my life. Wherefore look you to it, for I am now in your hands, and you ought to be an house of defence againſt mine Enemies. For if you ſuffer them to kill me, my blood ſhall be required at your hands. If you can find any juſt cauſe in me worthy of death by Gods Word, you may condemn me your ſelf, and not offend God: wherefore look to it, the matter is weighty, deliver me not into their hands, and think ſo to be diſcharged.

The Biſhop charged with his office.

Chich. I tell you truth, I can do little in the matter. For I have not full Authority as yet of mine Office: but I will ſend for you and talk with you, if I wiſt I ſhould do you any good.

Wood. I would be glad to talk with you, and to ſhew you my mind in any thing that you ſhall demand of me, now, or at any other time.

The Biſhop biddeth Woodman to dinner.

Chich. So then he deſired the Sheriffs men to tarry dinner with him; that this man (ſaid he) may dine with me alſo: for it is poſſible that he may have no great ſtore of meat whither he ſhall go.

Wood. So we tarried dinner with him, and had no further talk, neither how to prove where the true Church of God is, nor of the Sacraments, nor of any other thing pertaining to me-ward, not for the ſpace of two hours or more: but he entred in talk with me, how I underſtood many Scriptures, and for Biſhops and Prieſts marriages, and whether Paul had a Wife or not. To whom I anſwered; It is a thing that I have little to do with, as concerning marriages: but I am very well content to talk with you in the matter, as far as my poor learning will ſerve. So when he had talked with me of divers Scriptures, he liked my talk well. He asked me how I ſaid by S. Paul, whether he were married or not? To whom I anſwered, I can prove by the Scriptures that he was never married.

Talk between Rich. Woodman and the Bp. about Prieſts marriage.

Chich. How prove you that?

Paul, if he were not married, yet he had power to marry as well as other had.

Wood. I will prove it well enough by Gods help. But yet I will prove that Paul might have had a Wife, as well as the other Apoſtles had.

Chich. Why, had the Apoſtles Wives?

1 Cor. 9.

Wood. Yes, all, ſaving Paul and Barnabas, as I underſtand it. For theſe are Pauls words in the firſt to the Corinthians, the ninth Chapter. Am I not an Apoſtle? am I not free? have I not ſeen Jeſus Chriſt? Are not ye my work in the Lord? And if I be not an Apoſtle to others, yet to you I am an Apoſtle: For you are the ſeal of my Apoſtleſhip in the Lord. Mine anſwer to them that ask me, is this; Have we not power to eat and to drink? either have we not power to lead about a ſiſter to wife, as well as the other Apoſtles have, and as the Brethren of the Lord? Either have not Barnabas and I power thus to do? So this Text proveth, that Paul and Barnabas were unmarried. But Paul declareth that the reſt had wives, and that they had power likewiſe ſo to have, but they found no need thereof. But Paul declareth in the ſeventh Chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, that he that hath no power over his own fleſh, may marry: For it is better to marry then to burn. Wherefore to avoid Fornication (ſaith he) let every man have his wife. He ſaith, Let every man have his wife, and every woman her husband. By this place of Scripture I underſtand, that Biſhops and Prieſts may have wives, becauſe they are men, rather than burn, or commit Fornication. But I think verily, he that can abſtain, having power of his own will, doth beſt; but if he marrieth, he ſinneth not.

1 Cor. 7.

Prieſts ought to have wives rather then to burn, by S. Pauls doctrine.

So then he debated the Scriptures with me divers ways, that a Biſhop or a Prieſt ought not to have a wife: but I proved by divers Scriptures both in the old Law and in the new, that women were at firſt made for the help of men, the which was ſpoken generally to all men. Wherefore (ſaid I) every man may have a woman, and ſin not, in honeſt Matrimony, as well Biſhops and Deacons, as other men, which you call Prieſts, if they be true Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, and of that Order that Biſhops and Deacons were in Pauls time. For Paul declareth to Timothy, firſt and the third, That a Biſhop ſhould have the husband of one wife, and how they ſhould be honeſtly apparelled, and how they ſhould bring up their Children, and likewiſe the Deacons. This (ſaid I) proveth more plainly, that both Biſhops and Deacons had wives in the Apoſtles time, the which he could not deny. But then he alledged, that no Biſhop nor Prieſt might take a wife, after he had taken upon him that office, but if he had a wife before he took the office, tried meet for the purpoſe for his life and for his learning, he might keep his wife, and bring up his Children according to S. Pauls meaning to Timothy, or elſe might they have no wives.

Gen. 2. 1 Tim. 3. Biſhops and Deacons were married in the Apoſtles time.

Papiſts hold, that Biſhops and Deacons having wives before, might keep them ſtill: but not having before, might not afterward marry.

Then ſaid I, I think Pauls meaning in that place, was, that a man that hath had two wives might not be made a Biſhop nor a Deacon, if he had never ſo much learning. But that place maketh not that a Biſhop or a Deacon may not marry after they be made Biſhops and Deacons. For I am ſure that Paul was in the State of a Biſhop, when he ſaid, He had power to lead about a ſiſter to wife, as well as the other Apoſtles had. Here Paul declareth, that it was in his power to have a wife, after he had the office of a Biſhop, which was not in his power, if he had been forbidden of God.

Paul confeſſeth himſelf after his Apoſtleſhip to have power to marry.

Thus have I ſhewed you my mind in this behalf, both of Paul, and alſo for the Marriages of Biſhops and Prieſts, as I underſtand the Scriptures. Howbeit, it is a thing the which I have little to do withal: but as you required me to ſay my mind in that matter, ſo I have done.

Chich. Marry, I am glad that you have ſaid as you have done. Many do affirm boldly, that Paul had a wife, and yet cannot prove whether he had or had not, by the Scriptures: but you have ſaid very well. I am glad that ye are contented to be ruled by Gods Word. And if you will be contented likewiſe in other matters, no doubt you ſhall do well: therefore gentle goodman Woodman be ruled. God hath given you a good wit. I proteſt before God, I would you ſhould do as well as mine own ſoul and my body, and ſo would (I dare ſay) all the worſhipful men in the Country, as they have reported to me.

The Biſhops fair words to Rich. Woodman.

Wood. Why, my Lord, I take God to record (whom I truſt to ſerve) that I would be as glad to live in reſt and peace, as any man in all the World, if I might. And I ſtand to learn, and am contented to be reformed of any thing that I hold, if it can be proved that it be not agreeable to Gods Word. And the truth is ſo, I have talked with a dozen Prieſts at the leaſt, ſince I was delivered out of Priſon, of certain matters, and they have not been able to certifie me in any thing that I have asked them: and therefore they have complained on me to the Sheriff, and Juſtices, making tales and lies on me, to turn me to diſpleaſure, as much as in them lieth. I promiſe you, there be as many unlearned Prieſts in your Dioceſs, as in any one Dioceſs in England I think; the more it is to be lamented.

Rich. Woodman complained of by unlearned Prieſts which could not certifie him in matters of Religion.

Chich. I promiſe you, I do much lament it my ſelf: for I hear ſay no leſs, but it is true that you ſay. I would I could remedy it, but I cannot: but I will do the beſt that I can, when I come into the Country, and I will be glad to talk with you ſome other time, when I am ſomewhat better at eaſe. You ſee I am very tender now, as I have been this half year and more. Come to dinner; our dinner is ready. I cauſed you not to tarry for any great chear that you ſhall have, nor would I you ſhould think that I go about to win you with my meat. But you be welcome with all my heart. Come ſit down.

A Biſhop like dinner without any talk of Scriptures.

Wood. I thanked him, and went to dinner; and there dined with him, a Merchant man, one of the Sheriffs men, and I, and no more, and we had good chear, God be praiſed therefore. We had no talk of the Scriptures all the dinner while: but when dinner was done, the Biſhop ſaid, Chich. Now call Mr. Stories man. For the Commiſſioners have committed you to Priſon: but I will ſend for you or ever it be long, and I pray God I may do you good. I would be very glad of it.

Dr. Story a man without reaſon.

Wood. If it pleaſe you to ſend for me, I would be very glad to talk with you, for I like your talk well. And then if it pleaſe your Lordſhip to examin me upon any particular matter, I will ſhew you my mind therein, by Gods grace, without diſſimulation. But I pray you let me have nothing to do with Mr. Story, for he is a man without reaſon, me think.

Chich. Well, or ever you go, how ſay you to the ſeven Sacraments? Let me hear what you ſay to them, that I may be the willinger to ſend for you again.

Seven Sacraments denied.

Wood. I know not ſeven Sacraments.

Chich. Then what ſhall I talk with you? How many do you know?

Two only Sacraments.

Wood. I know but two; one the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the other the Supper of the Lord. But if you can juſtly prove by Gods Word, that there be more then two, I ſtand to be reformed.

Chich. If I prove not ſeven by Gods Word, then believe me not: and ſo he bade me farewel.

Then the Sheriffs two men, and one of Dr. Stories men, carried me to Dr. Cooks Houſe, which Dr. Cook commanded them to carry me to the Sheriffs Priſon in Southwark, ſaying, he ſhall be called before us again ſhortly and all his fellows, and we ſhall diſpatch them for troubling the Country any more.

Rich. Woodman carried to the Marſhalſey.

And ſo I was brought to the Marſhalſey, where I now am merry (God be praiſed therefore) looking for judgment of my fleſh: for they intend to diſpatch me ſhortly, if God will give them leave: but God hath their hearts in his hands, and they can do nothing to me, but as God will give them leave. Wherefore I commit my cauſe to God only, and I am ſure there ſhall not one hair of my head periſh without my heavenly Fathers will, although I bide never ſo much trouble. Job periſhed not for all his trouble, although God gave the Devil leave to trouble and try him divers and many ways, as God hath ſuffered his Members to trouble and try me divers and many ways, I praiſe God. They ſhall as little prevail againſt my Faith (I have no miſtruſt) as the Devil prevailed againſt Job, whatſoever they do with my Goods, Life, or Body. For he that kept Job in all his trouble, neither ſlumbreth nor ſleepeth, but keepeth me, and all his elect, that whether we live or dye, it ſhall be to the praiſe and glory of God. For if we live, we live at the Lords will, and if we dye, we dye to the Lords will: ſo, whether we live or dye, we are the Lords, bleſſed be his Name therefore.

Luke 22. The Devils members Perſecutors of the Chriſtians.

Job. Pſal. 121. Rom 14.

Rich. Woodman to the faithful brethren.

Wherefore, dear Brethren and Siſters, to whom this my writing ſhall come, be of good chear, and fear not what man can do unto you. For they can but kill the body: but fear him that hath power to kill both body and ſoul. And yet once again I bid you be of good chear. For the Sheriff, with divers other Gentlemen and Prieſts, whilſt I was at the Sheriffs Houſe, ſaid to me, that all the Hereticks in the Country hung on me, as the People did in times paſt upon S. Auguſtine or S. Ambroſe, or ſuch like. Wherefore ſaid they, look well on it, you have a great thing to anſwer for. To the which I anſwered; I pray God lay nothing more to my charge, than he will do for Hereſie, as I am ſure he will not. For he hath ſet my ſins as far from me, as it is from the Eaſt to the Weſt: ſo that I am ſure they ſhall never come near to me any more. Yea, and that they call Hereſie, we ſerve God withal. And I am ſure there is no man nor woman that hangeth on me, but on God. But yet that is their imaginations and thoughts, that if they might win me to them, they ſhould win a great many likewiſe: and thinking to kill me, if they cannot win me, as I truſt in God, and am ſure they ſhall never by Gods grace, if it were poſſible for them to kill me ten times. For I am ſo linked to Chriſt in a chain by Faith, that it is unpoſſible for men to looſe us aſunder, neither for life nor death, I praiſe my Lord God therefore. And no doubt their full intent and purpoſe is to kill me, thinking thereby to make other afraid. Which death of my Body were beſt of all for me, if God were ſo pleaſed. But if I may live for the comfort of other, his name be praiſed therefore. I know what he can do; but what he will do I know not. But if death be offered me, ſo that I cannot refuſe it without diſpleaſing of God, I truſt in God I ſhall not offend my Brethren in receiving of death, but ſhall be rather an occaſion of the ſtrengthening of their Faith, by chooſing and receiving of it, and that with joy. For as Chriſt hath given his life for us, ſo ought we to give our lives for the defence of the Goſpel, and comfort of our Bretbren. And whereas the Biſhop ſaith, he will prove ſeven Sacraments, be you out of doubt he ſhall never be able to do it, no more than he hath proved other Arguments with me already.

Pſal. 103

Thoſe that fear God hang not on man.

The inſeparable knot of love between Chriſt and his Members.

Chriſtians ought to give their lives for defence of the Goſpel, if they be thereto called.

Thus fare ye well, from the Marſhalſey, where I now am, as a Sheep appointed to be ſlain, God be praiſed therefore.

The ſecond Examination of Richard Woodman before the Biſhop of Chicheſter, two of his Chaplains; and Dr. Story at the laſt came to us, the twenty ſeventh day of April.

The ſecond Examination of Rich. Woodman, before Dr. Chriſtopherſon, Bp. of Chicheſter, Dr. Story, &c.

FIrſt, I was ſent for to the Marſhalſey by Dr. Story, and was carried to his Houſe beſides S. Nicholas Shambles; and when I had ſpoken to him, he ſent me to the Biſhop of Chicheſter, and ſaid he would come to him his ſelf ſtreightway: and when we were in the Biſhops Hall, we had not tarried long, but the Biſhop ſent for me: and when I came before him, I did my duty to him as much as I could.

Chich. Then ſaid the Biſhop, You be welcome; how do you now?

Wood. Well, I praiſe God, thanking your Lordſhip for the gentle talk that you had with me at my laſt departing from you.

Chich. Well, goodman Woodman, I have ſent for you of love and good will, that I bear to you, to talk with you, and I would have you to tell me your mind in few words. For indeed the laſt time that I talked with you, our talk was ſo long, that I fell into a great drought thereby, and have been the worſe in my body ever ſince. Wherefore I pray you ſhew me your mind briefly in thoſe particular matters that I ſhall demand of you, according to your promiſe that you made when you were with me the laſt time! How ſay you, will you?

Wood. Yea forſooth, I will anſwer to any thing that you ſhall demand of me (by Gods help) as well as I can.

Chich. How ſay you by the ſeven Sacraments? for there we left off, and there we will begin again. You ſaid then there were but two. How ſay you now to it? will you deny all ſaving two?

Proving of ſeven Sacraments.

Wood. I ſay now, as I ſaid then. You ſaid, there be ſeven Sacraments; and I ſaid, I knew but two: but if you could approve ſeven by Gods Word, when I came before you again, I muſt needs grant them. And you ſaid, if you could not prove them by Gods Word, I ſhould not believe them: and now I am come to ſee how well you can prove them. Herewith he was moved and all his Chaplains.

Chich. By God and my troth, I ween he thinketh I cannot prove them. How ſay you to the Sacrament of Matrimony?

Dr. Chriſtopherſon Bp. of Chicheſter reproved for ſwearing.

Wood. Why, my Lord, S. Paul ſaith to Timothy, A Biſhop ſhould be faultleſs, and you uſe much ſwearing; which is a great fault in a Biſhop, of all other, that ſhould be an example to the Flock. Then he and his Prelats were in a great rage with me, becauſe I reproved him for his ſwearing.

Chich. What, I perceive this man is worſe then he was the laſt day: what, he taketh upon him to teach me to ſpeak, as though I could not tell what I had to do?

Prieſt. So me thinketh, my Lord, he is a ſtout fellow indeed, as we have ſeen.

Swearing not to be born with.

Wood. Yea, I am ſtout, becauſe I do that I am commanded. I dare not for my life hold my peace: for I ſhould bear your ſin, the which I will not do for any of you all, I tell you plainly.

Chich. Where find you that you are commanded to reprove me?

Wood. If thou ſee thy Brother ſin, reprove him: if he repent, thou haſt won thy Brother. But you repent it not, me thinketh, but rather go about to maintain the ſame. Chriſt ſaith, He that breaketh one of the leaſt of my Commandments, and teacheth men ſo, ſhall be called leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven; and you go about to teach men ſo, ſo far as I ſee.

Prieſt. Why my Lord, this man is paſt cure. I ſee no hope in him.

Chich. No, ſo me thinketh. I will never talk with him more. Go call Mr. Story; let him do with him what he will. He hath been with his Fellows in the Marſhalſey, and now he is worſe than he was before. I had ſome hope in him the other day, but now I ſee none.

Chriſtopherſon becauſe he was reproved for ſwearing, giveth him over to Dr. Story.

Wood. No, I praiſe God, my Faith hangeth upon no men, but upon God.

Prieſt.

Anno 1557.

Priest. Nay, my Lord, I think he is not the worſe for them: but I fear me they be the worſe for him. I know this Man of old, before mine old Lord.

Wood. Well my Lord, look well to it: will you deliver me to other Men, to ſhed my Blood, and ſo think to waſh your hands of me, as Pilate did by Chriſt? Nay, you cannot be ſo diſcharged.

Chich. I have nothing to do with you: but of my gentleneſs I have ſent for you, becauſe you ſaid, you would declare your mind in any particular matter I would demand of you.

Wood. Why, I do not deny but I will do ſo, if you do demand it of me. But you go about to deliver me to other to kill me: and I know that there is none that hath to do with me but you.

Chich. I am not conſecrated yet: wherefore my Lord Cardinal may examine you, and condemn you, or my Lord of London: for you are now in his Dioceſs.

Christopherſon not yet conſecrated, refuſeth to take the examination of Woodman.

Wood. Yea my Lord, is the matter even ſo? Then I perceive whereabout you go. Nay, I will talk no more with you then, if you be at that point. Ask me what you will: but I will ſhew you nothing of my mind. I promiſe you I will not anſwer in particular matters, and ſo you to accuſe me to other, and they to kill me.

Chich. I go not about to kill you, but would be glad to hear your mind in the Sacraments, and if you underſtand them not aright, I would be glad with all my heart to ſhew you my mind how I underſtand them. For I would you ſhould do as well as mine own ſelf.

Wood. If you would talk with me to do me good, I would be content to hear you, and ſhew you my mind; otherwiſe I would be loath.

Whether Matrimony be a Sacrament.

Chich. Nay, I will promiſe you, if I can do you no good, I will do you no harm: for if I meant to do you harm, I would lay your own hand-writing againſt you, but I will not: wherefore be in no doubt of me. How ſay you to the Sacrament of Matrimony? is it a Sacrament or no? How think you by it?

Wood. I think it is an Holy Inſtitution ordained of God in Paradiſe, and ſo to continue to the Worlds end.

Chich. Lo, now you ſhall ſee how you be deceived in that, as you be in all the reſt. Come hither. You can read Latin I am ſure.

Wood. Yea I can read Latin, but I underſtand very little.

Ephes. 5.

Chich. Come to me, you ſhall ſee that Paul calleth it a Holy Sacrament. For theſe be the words, For this cauſe ſhall a Man leave Father and Mother, and ſhall be joyned to his Wife: and two ſhall be made one Fleſh: This is a great Sacrament.

S. Pauls words be theſe: This Myſtery is great, &c.

Wood. I remember ſuch a ſaying, but Saint Paul calleth it not a Sacrament. But he ſaith, It is a great myſtery.

Chich. Where ſaith he ſo?

Wood. I am not ſure in what Text it is, but I am ſure theſe be St. Pauls words, and that he calleth it not a Sacrament in all his writings.

Chich What, the laſt day ye were full of Scriptures; here it is written, and there it is written? What, we can rehearſe the Scriptures as well as you. Wherefore, if we be ſure it is written, it is no great matter for the place. Come hither, I will ſhew you the place, I think, that you mean.

In the Greek Text St. Paul calleth it myſterium. What is a Myſtery, and what difference there is between a Myſtery and a Sacrament.

Wood. I looked, and it was written Sacramentum. I know it is a great Myſtery, in the Engliſh Tranſlation.

Chich. I permit it to be a Myſtery. What it is a Myſtery?

Wood. A Myſtery is (I take it) unſeen: for he ſaith, he ſpeaketh betwixt Chriſt and the Congregation: So the great Myſtery that he ſpeaketh of, I take to be the Faith of them that be married, which is hid in Chriſt, the which we ſee not, but Chriſt. But the deed which is in the Congregation, which is the outward marriage we ſee, but the inward marriage of the heart we ſee not. Wherefore Paul calleth it a Myſtery. And therefore if it be a Sacrament, it is inviſible to us: it is not ſeen, as other Sacraments be.

Chich. Nay, I tell you it is a viſible Sacrament, ſeen as the other be: for is not the marriage ſeen? is not the Man and Woman ſeen?

Wood. My Lord, I pray? you what is a Sacrament.

Chich. It is the ſign of a Holy thing.

Wood. Me thinks you have certified me very well. There need not be a ſign of a holy thing, where the holy thing is it ſelf. Then his Chaplains would have interrupted me, but I deſired my Lord I might ſay out my mind in the matter. So with much ado he bade me ſay what I could.

Argumentum.

A thing ſignified and a thing ſignifying cannot be at one time, in reſpect of it ſelf, in one Subject.

Matrimony is an holy thing it ſelf, ſignified.

Ergo, Matrimony cannot be a Sacrament ſignifying anything.

There need not to be a ſign of a thing, where the thing is it ſelf. Matrimony is an holy thing it ſelf, and is ended outwardly, and need no more ſigns but themſelves: Wherefore it cannot be a Sacrament as other be.

The Hoſe in an Hoſiers ſtall may be a ſign, ſignifying more Hoſe to be within; but it is not ſignifying ſign of it ſelf. Neither again is every ſign of another thing to be called a Sacrament.

Chich. Lo, how much you ſpeak againſt your ſelf. And for an example, I come by an Hoſier, and there hangeth a pair of Hoſe, the which be Hoſe, and be a ſign of Hoſe that be to ſell within.

Prieſt. How ſay you to this? Now my Lord hath hit you home indeed.

Wood. He hath hit me perilouſly, I tell you, with Sophiſtry to blind mine eyes withal. I marvel you be not all aſhamed of it. I can anſwer that to all your ſhames, if I might be juſtly heard; I tell you plainly.

Prieſt. What, you be angry me thinks.

Chicheſter proveth Matrimony to be a Sacrament by a pair of Hoſe.

Wood. I am not angry, but I am earneſt, I tell you, to ſee your blindneſs and folly. I talked of the Scriptures that be written, and it is Gods word, to prove my matter true by, and you will prove your matter true by a pair of Hoſe. And as well can you prove it by that, as by Gods Word.

Prieſt. Why, is there nothing true, but that is written in the Bible?

Wood. Saint Paul ſaith to the Galathians the firſt Chapter, If an Angel come from Heaven and preach any other Doctrine then may be proved by Gods Word, hold him accurſed: and ſo do I, I tell you plainly.

Letters written in the Book, ſpeaking properly, be one thing: the Teſtament and word of God is another thing.

Prieſt. Here is a Teſtament in my hand, if I hurl him in the Fire and burn him, have I burned Gods Word, or not? I will buy a new one for xvi. pence.

Wood. I ſay, you have burned Gods Word, and I believe, he that will burn a Teſtament willingly, would burn God himſelf, if he were here, if he could: for he and his word are all one.

And yet by uſe of ſpeech the Book of the Teſtament is called the Teſtament, as Bread and Wine be called the Body and Blood of the Lord.

Then they made a great laughing at it.

Wood. Laugh on, quoth I. Your laughing will be turned to weeping, and all ſuch joy will be turned to mourning, if you repent it not with ſpeed.

Chich. Then the Biſhop began to cloak the Prieſts folly, ſaying, Why, if my Counting houſe were full of Books, and if my houſe ſhould be on Fire by chance, and ſo burned, were Gods Word burned?

Wood. No, my Lord, becauſe they were burned againſt your will: but yet if you ſhould burn them willingly, or think it well, and not be ſorry for it, you burn Gods Word as well as he. For he that is not ſorry for a ſhrewd turn, doth allow it to be good.

Heb. 13.

Chich. Follow your Vocation; you have a little learning. We have an Altar, whereof you may not eat. What meaneth Saint Paul thereby?

Wood. There is no Man ſo fooliſh to eat Stones I trow.

Chich. What Mockers and Scorners be you, to ſay no Man will be ſo fooliſh to eat Stones? it is a plain mock.

Wood. Why, my Lord, you ſaid I had no learning, nor knowledge, nor underſtanding. Wherefore it becometh you to make things more plain to me, and not to ask me ſuch dark queſtions, and yet blame me too; me think it is too much.

Chicheſt. I dare ſay, you know what it meaneth well enough. The moſt fool in my houſe will underſtand my meaning better then you do.

Wood. There ſtood ſome of his Men not far off, talking together beſide a Window. He called one of them by his Name.

Chich.

Chich. Come hither. I ſay to thee, thou ſhalt not eat of this Table. What do I mean thereby?

The Biſhop of Chicheſter rightly anſwered of his Man according to his queſtion.

The Man. Forſooth, my Lord, you would not have me eat of this Table, laying his hand thereupon. With this anſwer he made all them in the houſe to fall on laughing, and I could not hold it in, but burſt out with laughter, and ſaid.

Wood. He hath expounded the matter almoſt as well as I.

Chich. he meaneth well enough, if you would underſtand him.

Anſwer me again, to make it more plain. I ſay to thee, thou ſhalt not eat of this Table. What mean I thereby?

The Man. Forſooth you would not have me eat this Table.

Wood. Theſe words made them all laugh: Wherewith the Biſhop was almoſt angry, becauſe the anſwer proved no better, and ſaid.

Chich. He meaneth that I would not have him eat any of the meat that is ſet upon this Table. How ſaiſt thou, doſt thou not mean ſo?

The Man. Yes forſooth my Lord, that was my meaning indeed.

Wood. Yea, my Lord, now you have told him what you mean, he can ſay ſo too: and ſo could I have done (as little wit as I have) if you had ſaid, Paul meant that no Man might eat of that which was offered upon the Altar, but the Prieſts.

Chich. Yea, I perceive you underſtand the meaning of Paul well enough, but that you liſt to cavil with me.

Wood. Why my Lord, do you thing I underſtand ſuch dark places of the Scripture, without learning? you ſaid even now, I had no knowledge nor learning, wherefore I anſwered you, as you judged of me.

Sacrament of the Altar.

Chich. Well, let this matter paſs, and let us turn to the principal again. How ſay you by the Sacrament of the Altar?

Wood. You mean the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

Chich. I mean the Sacrament of the Altar, and ſo I ſay.

Wood. You mean Chriſt to be the Altar, do you not?

Chich. I mean the Sacrament of the Altar in the Church. What, is it ſo ſtrange to you?

The Altar how it is to be taken and where it is.

Wood. It is ſtrange to me indeed, if you mean the Altar of ſtone.

Chich. It is that Altar that I mean.

Wood. I underſtand not the Altar ſo.

Chich. No, I think ſo indeed: and that is the cauſe that you be deceived. I pray you, how do you underſtand the Altar then?

Wood. If you will give me leave till I have done, I will ſhew you how I underſtand the Altar, and where it is.

Chich. Yes, you ſhall have leave to ſay your mind, as much as you will.

Wood. It is written, Matth. 18. That whereſoever two or three be gathered together in Chriſts Name, there is he in the midſt among them: and whatſoever they ask the Father upon Earth, it ſhall be granted them in Heaven. Agreeing to the fifth of Matth. ſaying, When thou comeſt to offer thy gift at the Altar, and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee, leave there thy offering, and go firſt and be reconciled to thy brother, and then offer thy gift. The Prieſts would have interrupted me, but the Biſhop bade them let me alone.

Matth. 5.

Chicheſter. You ſhall hear a pretty concluſion anon.

Chriſt the true and only Altar.

Wood. I pray yet let me make an end, and then find fault with me if you can. Now to the matter. In theſe two places of Scripture, I prove that Chriſt is the true Altar, whereon every Chriſtian Man and Woman ought to come and offer their gifts. Firſt, whereſoever the people are gathered together in Chriſts Name, there is he in the midſt; and where he is, there is the Altar, ſo that we may be bold to come and offer our gift, if we be in love and charity: if we be not, we muſt leave there our offering, and go firſt and be reconciled to our Brother, and agree with him quickly, and ſo forth, and then come and offer the gift. Some will ſay, how ſhall I agree with my adverſary, when he is not nigh by a hundred miles? may I not pray till I have ſpoken with him? To all ſuch I anſwered; if thou preſume to pray among the Faithful, wiſhing any evil to any Man, Woman, or Child, thou askeſt vengeance upon thy ſelf. For no ſuch asketh any thing elſe of the Lord in his Prayer. Wherefore agree with thy adverſary, that is, make thy Life agreeable to Gods Word. Say in thy heart without diſſimulation, that thou askeſt God and all the World forgiveneſs from the bottom of thy heart, intending never to offend them any more. Then all ſuch may be bold to come and offer their gift, their Prayer on the Altar, where the people of God be gathered together. Thus have I ſhewed you my mind, both of the Altar, and of the offering, as I underſtand it.

The place of Matth. 5. expounded.

Chich. Do you underſtand the offering and the Altar ſo? I never heard any Man underſtand it ſo, no not Luther the great Heretick, that was condemned by a General Council, and his picture burned.

Wood. If he were an Heretick, I think he underſtood it not ſo indeed: but I am ſure all Chriſtians ought to underſtand it ſo.

Chich. Oh what vain glory is in you, as though you underſtood all things, and other Men nothing? Hear me; I will ſhew you the true underſtanding, both of the Altar, and the offering on the Altar. We have an Altar (ſaid Paul, Heb. 13. that ye may not eat of. Meaning thereby, that no Man might eat of that which was offered on the Altar, but the Prieſt. For in Pauls time all the living that the Prieſt had, the people came and offered it on the Altar, Money or other things: and when the people came to offer it, and then remembred that they had any thing againſt their Brother, then they left their offering upon the Altar, and went and were reconciled to their Brother; and they came again and offered their gift, and the Prieſt had it. This is the true underſtanding of the place that you have rehearſed: wherefore you be deceived.

Wood. My Lord, that was the uſe in the Old Law. Chriſt was the end of that. But indeed I perceive by Pauls words, the Sacrifice was offered in Pauls time: yet that maketh not that was well done, but he rebuked it. Wherefore, it ſeemeth to me that you be deceived.

The Catholicks will not have the word to judge.

Chich. Who ſhall be Judges betwixt us in this matter?

Wood. The 12. of John declareth who ſhall be Judge in the laſt day.

Chich. You mean the Word ſhall judge the Word. How can that be?

Wood. Saint Peter ſaith, The Scripture hath no private interpretation: But one Scripture muſt be underſtood by other.

Chich. You will underſtand it one way, and I will underſtand it another way: and who ſhall be Judges betwixt us then?

Woodman referreth himſelf to the true Church.

Wood. The true Church of God is able to diſcuſs all doubts: to whom I refer it.

Chich. I am glad you ſay ſo, if you will ſay ſo indeed.

Wood. My Lord, I never meant otherwiſe.

Chich. The Church of God doth allow the Sacrament of the Altar.

Wood. What do you offer now upon the Altar?

Doctrine prejudicial to Chriſts paſſion to ſay, that the Sacrament of the Altar doth paciſie the Wrath of God.

Chich. We offer up in the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, the Body of Chriſt to paciſie the Wrath of God the Father; and therewith they put off their capps all to the abominable Idol.

The Catholicks make themſelves Prieſts, not after the order of Aaron, but of Melchiſedech.

Wood. Saint Paul ſaith to the Hebrews, in the tenth Chapter, We are ſanctified by offering of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt upon the Croſs once for all: and every Prieſt is daily miniſtring, and oftentimes offereth one manner of offering, which can never take away Sins; and that is the offering that you uſe to offer. As far as I can ſee, you be Prieſts after the order of Aaron, that offered up Sacrifice for their own Sins, and the Sins of the people.

Chich. Nay, Aarons Sacrifice was with Blood which ſignifieth the death of Chriſt, the which was ended upon the Croſs by his Blood-ſhedding: but we are Prieſts

Anno 1557.

Anno 1557.

Priests after the order of Melchisedech, the which offereth Bread to the King in remembrance, and signifieth the giving of Christs Body in Bread and Wine at the last Supper, the which he gave to his Disciples, and commanded it to be used to the end of the World. This is the Sacrifice that we offer, according to his word.

Wood. Me think you have made the matter very plain to me, that as Christ was the end of all Sacrifices, so was he the beginning of the Sacraments, willing them to be used in the remembrance of him, to the Worlds end.

The Catholicks make the Sacrament both a sign signifying, and the thing it self signified.

Chich. What in remembrance of him, and not himself, as his word saith, Take, eat, this is my Body? It is not the sign only, but the thing it self. How say you? It it not his Body, after the words be spoken by the Priest? How say you? go briefly to work, for I cannot long tarry with you.

Wood. My Lord, if you will answer me to one Sacrament, I will answer you to another.

Chich. Yes I am very well content with that.

Whether the words only make the Sacrament of Baptism, without the Child there to be Baptized.

Wood. If you say the words of Baptism over the Water, and there be no Child there, is there true Baptism?

Chich. No, there must be the Water, the Word and the Child, and then it is Baptism.

Wood. Very well. Then if a Child be Baptized in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, it is not truly Baptized.

Chich. No: the Child must be Baptized in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and the Holy Ghost, or else it is not truly Baptized.

Wood. Then there may be nothing added, nor taken away from the Sacraments: may there?

Chich. No, said the Bishop.

Wood. Now my Lord, I will answer to you, if it please you.

Chich. Well, how say you, Take, eat, this is my Body: is it not Christs Body, as soon as the words be said?

Wood. My Lord, I will answer you by your own words, that you answered me, which is true: the Water, the Word, and the Child, all these together make Baptism; the Bread, Wine, and the Word make the Sacrament; and the Eater, eating in true Faith, maketh it his Body. Here I prove it is not Christs Body, but to the faithful receiver. For he said, Take, eat, this is my Body.

The word, Water and Child make Baptism: So the word, Bread, and the Receiver, make the Sacrament of the Lords Body.

He called it not his Body before eating, but after eating. And S. Augustine saith, Crede & manducasti, Believe and thou hast eaten. And Saint John saith, He that believeth in God, dwelleth in God, and God in him: Wherefore it is impossible to dwell in God, and to eat his Body, without a true Faith.

The Faith of the Receiver maketh it the Body.

Priest. Then the Faith of the receiver maketh it his Body, and not his word, by your saying. I pray you what did Judas eat?

Wood. Judas did eat the Sacrament of Christ, and the Devil with all.

Priest. He eat the Body of Christ unworthily, as S. Paul saith.

Wood. Nay, St. Paul saith no such thing. He speaketh not of eating of his Body unworthily, but of the Sacrament unworthily. For he saith, Whosoever eateth of this Bread, and drinketh of this cup unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own Damnation, because he maketh no difference of the Lords Body: and not because he eateth the Lords Body. If Judas had eat Christs Body, it must needs follow, that Judas is saved. For Christ saith in the sixth of John, Whosoever eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Blood, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up again at the last day.

If Judas did eat the Body of Christ, then must he be saved.

Priest. My Lord, this Man is an interpreter after his own mind.

The true confession of Rich. Woodman touching the Sacrament.

Chich. I see it is but folly to talk with you: it is but lost labour. How say you? Do you not believe that after the words be said, there remaineth neither Bread nor Wine, but the very Body of Christ really? make me a plain answer, for I will talk no more with you.

Wood. I will make you a direct answer, how I believe of the true Sacrament. I do believe, that if I come to receive the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ truly ministred, believing that Christ was born for me, and that he suffered death for me, and that I shall be saved from my Sins by his Blood-shedding, and so receive the Sacrament in that remembrance, then I believe I do receive wholly Christ, God and Man, mystically by Faith: this is my belief.

Chich. Why, then it is no Body without Faith Gods word is of no force as you count it?

Wood. My Lord, I have told you my mind without dissimulation, and more you get not of me, without you will talk with me by the Scriptures: and if you will do so, I will begin a new with you, and prove it more plainly three or four manner of ways, that you shall not say nay to that I have said, your self.

Then they made a great laughing, and said, This is an Heretick indeed, it is time he were burned. Which words moved my Spirit, and I said to them, Judge not, lest you be judged. For as you judge me, you shall be judged your selves. For that you call Heresie, I serve God truly with, as you all shall well know, when you shall be in Hell, and have Blood to drink, and shall be compelled to say for pain, This was the Man that we jested on, and whose talk we thought foolishness, and his end to be without honor: but now we may see how he is counted among the Saints of God, and we are punished. These words shall you say, being in Hell, if you repent not with speed, if you consent to the shedding of my Blood: wherefore look to it, I give you Counsel. Sap. 5.

Priest. What? you be angry, me thinks, Now I will say more to you, then I thought to have done. You were at Baxill a twelvemonth agone, and sent for the Parson and talked with him in the Churchyard, and would not go into the Church: for you said, it was the Idols Temple. Yea I was with mine old Lord, when he came to the Kings Bench to you, and you said many stout words to him.

Woodman. That I said, I said: and where you said I was angry, I take God to my Record, I am not, but am zealous in the truth, and speak out of the Spirit of God with chearfulness. The zeal of Gods Spirit in R. Woodman.

Priest. The Spirit of God? hough, hough, hough: think you that you have the Spirit of God?

Woodman. I believe surely that I have the Spirit of God, I praise God therefore: and you be deceivers, mockers, and scorners before God, and be the Children of Hell, all the sort of you, as far as I can see. And therewith came in Doctor Story, pointing at me with his finger, speaking to the Bishop in Latin, saying at the length.

Story. I can say nothing to him, but he is an Heretick. I have heard you talk this hour and a half, and can hear no reasonableness in him. Doctor Story cometh in.

Wood. Judge not, lest you be judged: for as you judge, you shall be judged your self.

Story. What, be you a Preaching? you shall Preach at a Stake shortly with your fellows. My Lord, trouble your self no more with him.

With these words, one brought word that the Abbot of Westminster was come to dine with the Bishop, and many other Gentlemen and Women. Then there was rushing away with speed to meet him. Then said Doctor Story to my Keeper.

Story. Carry him to the Marshalsee again, and let him keep close, and let no Body come to speak with him. Doctor Story commandeth R. Woodman again to the Marshalsee.

Wood. And so they departed. Then one of the Priests began to flatter with me, and said, For Gods sake remember your self. God hath given you a good wit: You have read the Scriptures well, and have born them well in memory. It were great pity you should do amiss.

Wood. What a flatterer be you, to say my wit is good, and that I have read the Scriptures well? and but even now you said I was an Heretick and despised me. If I be an Heretick, I can have no good wit as you have confessed. But I think your own Conscience doth accuse you. God give you Grace to repent, if it be his will.

Priest. I call it a good wit, because you are expert in all questions.

Wood.

Wood. You may call it a wicked wit, if it agree not with Gods Word. then one cried, Away, away, here come ſtrangers. So we departed, and I came again to the Marſhalſey with my Keeper.

The third Examination of Richard Woodman (copied with his own hand) before Doctor Langdale, Parſon of Buxted in Suſſex, and Chaplain to my Lord Mountague, and M. James Gage, at my Lord Mountagues Houſe, beſides S. Mary Overies in Southwark, the 12. day of May Anno 1557.

The third examination of R. Woodman, before D. Langdale, and M. James Gage, May 12.

THe twelfth day of May the Marſhal came to the Marſhalſey, and ſent for me to ſpeak with him. When I came before him, and had done my duty, he asked my Name, and what Countryman I was; I ſhewed him both. Then he asked me when I was abroad in the City. To whom I anſwered, if it ſhall pleaſe your Maſterſhip I was abroad in the City on Monday was ſevennight.

Marſhal. What made you abroad?

Wood. The Biſhop of Chicheſter ſent for me to talk with me at home at his houſe beſide St. Nicholas Shambles.

Marſh. Were you abroad no otherwiſe then ſo?

Wood. No forſooth: I was never abroad ſince I was ſent hither, but then. For I have nothing to do abroad, unleſs they ſend for me.

False lies and lewd reports.

Marſh. This is a marvellous matter. I promiſe you I was not ſo rebuked theſe ſeven years, as I was for you within theſe three days. It is reported that you were abroad in the City at certain Taverns, and ſpake ſeditious words both in the Taverns and Streets as you went.

Wood. Sir, the truth is, I was in never a Houſe or Tavern, whiles I was abroad, but in the Biſhops Houſe, as my Keeper can, and will (I am ſure) teſtifie: nor did I ever talk with any Man in the Streets as I came, but with my Keeper, ſaving with one Man indeed, of the Pariſh of Framfield in Suſſex, where Mr. James Gage dwelleth. His Name is Robert Smith, being one of my moſt enemies; who ſtood in a wain as we came by, and was unloading of Cheeſe (me thought) but a little way from the Marſhalſey. Indeed I bade him God ſpeed, and asked him how he did: and he ſaid, well he thanked me: and he asked me, how I did: and I ſaid, well, I praiſe God; and that was all the talk that we had: and theſe words were ſpoken as I came by him. I promiſe you, Sir, I ſtood not ſtill while I ſpake them, as my Keeper can tell: and I think theſe words were not ſeditious words, but might be ſpoken well enough (I think) or elſe it were very ſtrait.

Woodman warned to appear.

Marſh. Then is it to be thought, that that Man reported otherwiſe then it was. I am glad it is as you ſay. Well, make you ready: for you muſt go forth ſtraightway, where you ſhall be examined of that and of other things, where you ſhall anſwer for your ſelf. Go make haſte, for I will tarry till you be ready.

Woodman taketh his leave of his fellows.

Wood. So I departed from him, and went to my Priſon fellows, and took my leave of them, deſiring them to pray for me, for I thought verily to come no more to them. For I ſuppoſed I ſhould have gone before the Council, becauſe the Marſhal ſaid, he would tarry for me himſelf: and eſpecially becauſe he ſaid, it was reported that I had ſpoken ſeditious words, it made me think it is poſſible that there may be ſome falſe things imagined upon me, to bring me to my end. I remember what Chriſt ſaid, The Servant is not above his Lord. Seeing the Jews brought falſe witneſs againſt Chriſt, I thought they would do much more, or at the leaſt do ſo to me, if God would ſuffer them, which made me caſt the worſt. But I was, and am ſure (I praiſe my Lord God) that all the World is not able to accuſe me juſtly of any ſuch thing. Which thing conſidered, made me merry and joyful: and I was ſurely certified, that they could do no more againſt me, then God would give them leave. And ſo I bade my Priſon Fellows farewel, and went into the Porters Lodge to the Marſhal, and he delivered me to one of his own Men, and to one of my Lord Mountagues Men, and bade me go with them: and they carried me to my L. Mountagues place in Southwark, not far from S. Mary Overies, and brought me into a Chamber in my L. Mountagues Houſe; and there was one D. Langdale, Chaplain to my Lord. My Keepers ſaid to the Doctor, This is the Man that we went for.

Woodman delivered to one of the Lord Mountagues Men.

Anno 1557.

Lang. Is your Name Woodman?

Wood. Yea forſooth, that is my Name.

Lang. Then he began with a great circumſtance, and ſaid, I am ſorry for you, that you will not be ruled, but ſtand ſo much in your own conceit, diſpleaſing your Father and other, judging that all the Realm doth evil, ſave a few that do as you do: with many ſuch words, which be too long to rehearſe; but I will declare the ſubſtance of them.

Religion eſteemed by Anceſtors and Grandfathers, and by Place.

Lang. What think you of them that died long agone, your Grandfather, with their Fathers before them? You judge them to be damned, and all other that uſe the ſame that they did throughout all Chriſtendom, unleſs it be in Germany and here in England a few years, and in Denmark; and yet they are returneed again. Thus we are ſure this is the truth, and I would you ſhould do well. Your Father is an honeſt Man, and one of my Pariſh, and hath wept to me divers times, becauſe you would not be ruled: and he loveth you well, and ſo doth all the Country, both rich and poor, if it were not for thoſe evil opinions that you hold; with many ſuch like tales of Robin Hood.

Wood. I pray you give me leave to ſpeak a few words to you.

Lang. Yes, ſay your mind.

Wood. You have told a great tale and a long, as it were againſt me (as you think) ſaying, I hold this and that; I judge my Father and my Grandfather, and almoſt all the World, without it be a few that be of our Sect. But I judge no Man. But the 12. of John declareth, who it is that judgeth, and ſhall judge in the laſt day. The Father ſhall not bear the Sons offences, nor the Son the Fathers offences: but that Soul that ſinneth ſhall dye, as ſaith the Prophet. And again, we may not follow a multitude to do evil, as ſaith the Prophet: for they moſt go the wrong way. And Chriſt ſaith in the 12. of Luke, that his flock is a little flock. Here be places enow to diſcharge me, although I do not as the moſt do. But can any Man ſay that I do not as I ought to do: where be my accuſers?

Multitude not to be followed in doing evil.

To do as moſt Men do, and to do as a Man ought to do, are two things.

Lang. What, you be full of Scriptures me think, and call your accuſers, as though you were affraid to utter your mind to me. But I would have you not be afraid to talk with me. For I mean no more hurt to you, then I do to my ſelf, I take God to be my record.

Hard truſting any Man in this World.

Wood. I cannot tell, It is hard truſting of fair words. When a Man cannot truſt his Father nor Brother, nor other that have been his familiar friends, but they deceive him, a Man may lawfully follow the example of Chriſt towards them that he never ſaw before, ſaying, Be as wiſe as Serpents, and as innocent as Doves. Beware of Men, for they go about to betray you. And it maketh me to ſuſpect you much, becauſe you blame me for anſwering with the Scriptures. It maketh me to doubt that you would take vantage of me, if I ſhould ſpeak mine own words. Wherefore I will take as good heed as I can, becauſe I have been deceived already by them I truſted moſt. Wherefore blame me not though I anſwer circumſpectly. It ſhall not be ſaid, by Gods help, that I will run wilfully into mine enemies hands, and yet I praiſe God, my Life is not dear to my ſelf, but it is dear with God: Wherefore I will do the uttermoſt that I can to keep it.

Woodman blamed for anſwering with Scriptures.

D. Langdales talk with R. Woodman, upon what occaſion, and by whoſe procurement.

Lang. You be affraid where no fear is, for I was deſired of Maſter Sheriff and his Brother, and of other of your friends, to talk with you, and they told me that you were deſirous to talk with me, and now ye make the matter as though you had nothing to do with me, and as though you were ſent to Priſon for nothing: for your call for your accuſers, as though there were no Man to accuſe you. But if there were no Man to accuſe you, your own hand writing did accuſe you enough, that you ſet upon the Church door (if you be remembred) and other Letters that you let fall abroad, ſome at one place and ſome at another. Wherefore you need not to call for your accuſers. Your own hand will accuſe you enough, I warrant you; it is kept ſafe enough. I would not for two hundred pounds there were ſo much againſt me.

Woodman charged with his own hand writing.

Wood.

Anno 1557.

Wood. I will not deny mine own hand, by Gods help. For it cannot be lightly counterfeited. I do not deny but I wrote a Letter to the Prieſt and other of the Pariſh, declaring to them their folly and preſumption, to come into my Houſe without my love or leave, and fet out my Child, and uſe it at their pleaſures. Which moved me to write my mind to them: and becauſe I could not tell how to convey it to them, I ſet it on the Church door. Which Letter my Lord of Chicheſter hath: for he ſhewed it me when I was before him: wherein is contained nothing but the very Scriptures, to their reproach. Let it be laid before me when you or he will, I will anſwer to it by the help of God, to all their ſhames that I wrote it to. And as for any other Letters, I wrote none, as you ſaid I did, neither had I wrote that, if they had done like honeſt neighbours. Wherefore if they be offended with me for that, I will anſwer them with Chriſts words, in the 18. of Matthew, Woe unto themſelves, becauſe they gave me the occaſion.

R Woodmans writing ſet upon the Church door, upon what occaſion.

And whereas you ſaid, I was deſirous to ſpeak with you, and that Maſter Sheriff and his Brother, and other of my friends willed you to talk with me, and that I fare now as though I had nothing to do with you, and as though I were ſent to priſon for nothing: the truth is, I know no more wherefore I am ſent to Priſon, then the leaſt Child in this Town knoweth. And as for me, I deſired not Maſter Sheriff to ſpeak with you: but indeed he deſired me that I would ſpeak with you, and utter my Faith to you. For he ſuppoſed that I did not believe well, and he reported you to be learned. But I refuſed to talk with you at the firſt. For I remembred not that you were the Parſon at Buxted: wherefore, I ſaid to him, I would not utter my Faith to any but to the Biſhop. I ſaid, he is mine Ordinary: wherefore I appeal unto him. I am commanded by Saint Peter in the firſt Epiſtle, the third Chapter, to render account of my hope that I have in God, to him that hath Authority: wherefore I will talk with none in that matter, but with him. Wherefore ſend me to him, if you will, or elſe there ſhall no Man know my Faith I tell you plainly.

Woodman required of M. Sheriff and other his friends to talk with D. Langdale. D. Langdale Parſon of Buxſted, where Woodmans Father dwelt.

Woodmans friends deſirous to hear him and Doctor Langdale talk together.

Theſe words then made the Sheriff angry, and he went his way: and when he was gone from me, I remembred that it was you that he would have me to talk with, and then I remembred that I had made a promiſe to my Father and goodman Day of Vefield, not paſt a fortnight before I was taken, that whenſoever you came into the Country, I would ſpeak with you by Gods help, becauſe they praiſed you ſo much, that ye were learned, and they would fain hear us talk.

So all theſe things called to remembrance, I deſired my Keeper, which was the Sheriffs Man, to ſhew his Maſter, that I would fain ſpeak with him: for I had remembred things that were not in my mind before, when I ſpake to him. So he went to his Maſter, and ſhewed him the matter, and he came to me; and then I told him my mind, and what promiſe I had made: and he ſaid, he would ſend for you on the morrow, as he did, and the meſſenger brought word you could not come; you Preached before the Queen, he ſaid. Whereupon the Sheriff came up himſelf, and ſpake to the Biſhop that he ſhould come down, but he was ſick. So when he came home again, he ſent me to the Biſhop, and I have talked with him twice already, and I am ſure he can find no fault in me, if he ſay juſtly: and yet I know not wherefore I was ſent to Priſon. For I was not guilty of that which was laid to my charge, that I had Baptized Children, the which I never did, as God knoweth: wherefore I had wrong to be thus handled.

This Biſhop was D. Chriſtopherſon. Woodman ſent to Priſon, not knowing wherefore.

D. Lang. Indeed it hath been reported, that you have Chriſtned Children; and that you Chriſtned your own Child: but ſince I heard ſay, you would not have the Child Chriſtned, which is a damnable way, if you deny Baptiſm: and they ſaid, your Child was not Chriſtned in a fortnight or three weeks after it was born, and the chiefeſt of the Pariſh were fained to fetch it out of your Houſe againſt your will. Wherefore you wrote railing words againſt the Prieſt and them for their good will: the which declareth that you allow not Baptizing of Children. And if the Child had died, it had been damned, becauſe it was not Chriſtned, and you ſhould have been damned: becauſe you were the let thereof.

R. Woodmans falſly ſlandered for denying Baptizing of Children.

Wood. What abominable lies have you told? Be you not aſhamed to ſpeak ſuch words as you have done? Firſt you ſay, I Chriſtned mine own Child, and by and by you ſaid, I denied Baptizing of Children, and that my Child was a fortnight or three weeks old ere it was Baptized. What abominable lies be theſe? I neither Baptized my Child my ſelf, neither held againſt the Baptizing of it, but did moſt gladly allow it: for it was Baptized as ſoon as it was born, and I was glad thereof; therefore you be to blame to report ſo of me.

Lang. I pray you, who Baptized it? ſome unthrift of your providing.

Wood. Nay ſurely, the Midwife Baptized it.

Lan. But it was your mind that it ſhould be ſo.

Wood. Nay ſure; I was not nigh home by almoſt 20. miles, nor heard that my Wife was brought to bed four days after the Child was Chriſtned. But it was not like to live: and therefore the Midwife Baptized it.

Woodmans Child Baptized by the Midwife. Woodman falſly belied. D. Langdale too curious an Inquiſitor.

Lang. Would you have had it to Church to have been Chriſtned, if it had not been Chriſtned?

Wood. That is no matter what I would have done. I am ſure you cannot deny but it is ſufficiently done, if the Midwife do it; and I hold not againſt the doing of it, neither did I it my ſelf, as you ſaid I did.

Lang. Wherefore were you diſpleaſed with them that ſet it to Church?

Wood. Firſt tell me whether the Child were not truly Baptized by the Midwife?

Lang. Yes, it was truly Baptized, if ſhe Baptized it in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt.

Wood. Yes, that I am ſure ſhe did, and you grant that was ſufficient: and the cauſe that I blamed them for, was becauſe they did more to it then need was, by your own ſaying. Yea, they ſet it out of my Houſe without my leave: the which was not well done.

Woodman troubled without juſt cauſe.

Lang. They had it to Church to confirm that was done.

Wood. Yea, but that was more then needs. But God forgive them, if it be his will. But let that matter paſs. But I would you ſhould not ſay, that I hold againſt Baptizing of Children: For I do not, I take God to record; but do allow it to be moſt neceſſary, if it be truly uſed. But me thought you ſpake words even now that were uncomly to be ſpoken; if a Child dye, and be not Baptized, it is damned. How think you? be all damned that receive not the outward ſign of Baptiſm?

Lang. Yea, that they be.

Wood. How prove you that?

Lang. Go ſaith Chriſt, and Baptize in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, and he that believeth, and is Baptized, ſhall be ſaved: and he that believeth not ſhall be damned. Theſe be the words of Chriſt, which are my warrant.

All Children be damned by D. Langdale, which dye without Baptiſm.

Wood. Then by your ſaying, Baptiſm bringeth Faith, and all that be Baptized in the Water ſhall be ſaved: ſhall they? how ſay you?

Lang. Yea, that they ſhall: if they dye before they come to diſcretion, they ſhall be ſaved every one of them; and all that be not Baptized ſhall be damned every one of them.

All Children being Baptized by D. Langdale ſhall be ſaved.

Wood. Then my Spirit was moved with him to reprove him ſharply, becauſe I had manifeſt Scriptures freſh in my mind againſt his ſaying. Then ſaid I:

O Lord God! how dare you ſpeak ſuch Blaſphemy againſt God and his Word, as you do? how dare you for your life take upon you to Preach, and teach the people, and underſtand not what you ſay? For I proteſt before God you underſtand not the Scriptures, but as far as natural reaſon can comprehend. For if you did, you would be aſhamed to ſpeak as you do.

R. Woodman chargeth D. Langdale with ignorance in the Scriptures.

Lang. Wherein have I ſpoken amiſs; take heed, you have a toy in your head will make you deſpair: I dare ſay you cannot tell what you ſay. Wherefore reprove you me as you do?

Wood. Becauſe you Blaſpheme God: and as for deſpairing, take heed to your ſelf. For I cannot ſee but you be out of your wit already: and as for me, I praiſe God, I can tell what I ſay, and what you have ſaid: the which ſhall turn to your ſhame, if you will talk by the Scriptures with me.

So,

So, when he perceived that I spake earnestly and challenged him to talk by the Word, his colour began to change, and his Flesh began to tremble and quake. And I said:

Prove your sayings true, if you can: for I will prove them false by Gods help. You said, All Children, or other that be not Baptized with Water, shall be damned. I dare not say so for all the good in the World. And you brought in the saying of Christ for your Warrant. In the 16. of Mark it is written, Whoso believeth, and is Baptized, shall be saved: which words be very true: and whoso believeth not, shall be damned. Which words be very true also. He saith, He that believeth not, shall be damned. Yea, Saint John saith, He that believeth not, is condemned already, because he believeth not. But neither of these two Scriptures, nor any other Scripture in all the New Testament saith, That he that is not Baptized shall be damned, or is damned already. But if he believe not, he shall be damned, and is damned already, as is aforesaid. Then he would have interrupted me, and would have laid to my charge, that I was an Anabaptist. But I would give him no place to speak, but said:

Let me make an end, and then say what you can. You shall have as much to do, by Gods help, with this matter, as ever you had to answer thing in your life. You know (I am sure) it is no manners to pluck a tale out of a Mans Mouth, nor is it the order of reasoning, as you know that better then I can tell you. Then D. Langdale bade me say on.

Faith, not Baptism saveth. Not lack of Baptism, but lack of Faith condemneth.

Woodman. My saying was, that they that believe not shall be damned, and be damned already. But I dare not say for all the goods under Heaven, that all they that receive no material Baptism by the Water shall be damned, as you have said: yet I would you should not gather of these words, that I deny Baptism, as you were about to lay to my charge, ere ever I had half told out my tale. But I would not have you, nor any Man so rash in Judgment, to condemn the thing that they are not able to prove by the word, and to make it seem to the simple, that the outward washing of the water were the cause of Faith.

Lang. Why, is it not so? will you deny it? How say you? Will you deny it? I say, the Child hath no Faith before it is Baptized: and therefore the Baptizing bringeth the Faith. How say you to it? Make me a plain answer to this question.

Baptizing of Water is not the cause of Faith. The Catholicks do hold the contrary.

Woodman. Now I perceive you go about nothing else, but to take vantage of my words. But by Gods help, I will answer you so, that you shall well see your sayings untrue. And yet I will not speak mine own words, but the words of the Holy Ghost, out of the Mouth of the Prophets and Apostles: and then ask them whether they will deny it.

A Catholick paradox.

You said, that Faith cometh by Baptism, had by the use of material water. I must be so bold to ask you where Jacob was Baptised before he had Faith. Saint Paul saith in the ninth Chapter to the Romans, Ere ever the Children were born, ere ever they had done either good or bad, that the purpose of God, which is by election, might stand, not by the reason of works, but by the Grace of the caller, the elder shall serve the younger. Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated. How think you, had this Child Faith or ever he were born, or no? answer to this if you can.

The purpose of Gods election standeth by Grace, and not by reason of works.

Lang. What: you speak of the old Law. Jacob was not Christened, but circumcised. I speak of Baptism, and you are gone from Baptizing to the time of circumcision: answer me to the Baptizing. And me think by your talk, you deny Original sin, and free will, by the words that you brought in of Saint Paul.

D. Langdale's Argument. Children dying without Baptism may be saved. Ergo Children have no original sin.

For if Children can be saved without Baptism, then it must needs follow, that Children have no Original sin, the which is put away in the Baptizing. But I think you know not what Original sin is, nor free will neither, Me think by your talk.

Wood. Yes, I praise God (I think) I can tell them all better then you can, me think even by your words. First I pray you what Free will hath Man to do good of himself? tell me this first, and then I will answer to all other your questions that you have objected against me.

Lang. I say, that all Men have as much Free will now, as Adam had before his fall. Anno 1557.

Wood. I pray you how prove you that?

Absurd Doctrine.

Lang. Thus I prove it, that as sin entred into the World, and by the means of one that sinned all Men became sinners, the which was by Adam: so by the obedience of one Man, righteousness came upon all Men that had sinned, and set them as free as they were before the fall, the which was by Jesus Christ, Rom. 5.

Answer. The righteousness by Jesus Christ cometh upon all Men, not in taking away imperfections of nature, but in not imputing the imperfections of Man to damnation.

Woodman. Oh Lord, what an overthrow have you given your self here in Original sin, and yet cannot see it? For in proving that we have Free will, you have denied quite Original sin. For here you have declared that we be set as free by the death of Christ, as Adam was before his fall, and I am sure that Adam had no Original sin before his fall. If we be as free now as he was then, I marvel wherefore Paul complained thrice to God, to take away the sting of it, God making him answer, and saying, My Grace is sufficient for thee.

Original sin. We are made free by the death of Christ not from falling, but from damnation due by the Law for our falling.

These words with divers other, prove Original sin in us; but not that it shall hurt Gods elect people, but that his Grace is sufficient for all his. But you say in one place, it is not without Baptism; and in another place, you put it away quite by the death of Christ; and in very deed you have spoken truer in the matter then you are aware of. For all that believe in Christ are Baptized in the Blood of Christ that he shed on the Cross, and in the water that he swet for pain, and putting away of our sins at his death. And yet I say with David in the 51. Psal. In sin was I born, and in sin hath my Mother conceived me: but in no such sin that shall be imputed, because I am born of God by Faith, as Saint John saith, John 3. Therefore I am blessed, as saith the Prophet, Psal. 23. Because the Lord imputeth not my sin, and not because I have no sin; but because God hath not imputed my sins. Not of our own deserving, but of his free mercy he hath saved us. Where is now your Free will become that you speak of? If we have free will, then our Salvation cometh of our own selves, and not of God; the which is a great Blasphemy against God and his word.

Perfect Doctrine.

For S. James saith, James 1. Every good gift and every perfect gift cometh from above, from the Father of light, with whom is no variableness, neither is he changed into darkness. Of his own will he begat us. For the wind bloweth where it listeth, and we hear the sound thereof, as saith Saint John, Chap. 3. but we cannot tell from whence it cometh, neither whither it goeth: Even so is it with every one that is born of God. For Saint Paul saith, Phil. 2. It is God that worketh in us the will, and also the deed, even of good will. Seeing then that every good and perfect gift cometh from above and lighteneth upon whom it pleaseth God, and that he worketh in us both the will and the deed; me think all the rest of our own will is little worth, or nought at all, unless it be wickedness. So me think here be places enow to prove that a Man hath no free will to do good of himself, with a hundred places more that I could recite, if time did serve. And as for Original sin, I think I have declared my mind therein, how it remaineth in Man; which you cannot deny, unless you deny the word of God. Now, if you will suffer me, I will prove my saying of Jacob and Esau, that I brought in to prove that Faith was before Baptism, and you refused it, because (you said) Jacob was not Baptized. If you will give me leave, you shall see what I can say therein: for me think you think my talk long. this I said, because I saw he was sore offended at my sayings.

Adam free-will nothing. Faith was before Baptism.

Lang. Say what you can. For it availeth me to say nothing to you. For I was desired to send for you, to teach you, and there will no words of mine take place in you: but you go about to reprove me. Say what you will, for me.

D. Langdale seemeth to be put to silence.

Wood. I take not upon me to teach you, but to answer to such things as you lay to my charge: and I speak not mine own mind, but the mind of the Holy Ghost, written by the Prophets and Apostles. Will you give me leave to answer briefly in that matter, that you may report to other what I hold? And he said he was contented. But I think it was for nothing but to have caught vantage of my words.

Wood.

Anno 1557.

Children dying without baptiſm are not therefore damned, ſpeaking abſolutely. Children bear not the offences of their Fathers.

Wood. Firſt, If you be remembred, you ſaid, that if my Child had died without Baptiſm, if I had been the cauſe that it had not been baptized, the Child ſhould have been damned, and I too. How ſay you?

Lang. Yea that you ſhould.

VVood. That is moſt untrue. For the Prophet ſaith, The Father ſhall not bear the Childs offences, nor the Child the Fathers offences: but the Soul that ſinneth ſhall die. What could the Child have done withal, if it had died without Baptiſm? the Child could not do withal. How ſay you unto this? And I am ſure, that which I brought in, in the old Law, to prove that Faith is before Baptiſm, is not diſagreeable unto the word. For Circumciſion was a Figure of Baptiſm. And that I may bring to prove Baptiſm by, as well as S. Peter did: for he brought in Noahs Flood, which was a long time before Jacob and Eſau, to prove Baptiſm, ſaying, VVhile the Ark was a preparing, wherein few (that is to ſay) eight Souls were ſaved by water, like as Baptiſm alſo now ſaveth us, not in putting away of the filth of the fleſh, but there is a good Conſcience conſenting to God.

1 Pet. 3.

Gen. 6.

Here Peter proveth, that Water had not ſaved Noah and the other ſeven, no more than it ſaved all the reſt, if it had not been for their Faith, which Faith now ſaveth us; not in putting away of the filthy ſoil of the fleſh, by the waſhing of the water, but by a good Conſcience conſenting unto God.

But you ſaid, If they be baptized with the water, if they dye before they come to the years of diſcretion, they be all ſaved: the which S. Peter is clean againſt, unleſs you grant that Children have Faith before they be baptized.

Now I ask you what conſent of Conſcience the Children have, being Infants. For you ſay, they believe not before they be baptized: Ergo, then they conſent not to be baptized, becauſe they believe not. And by this it followeth, that none ſhall be ſaved, although they be baptized. I would fain ſee how you can anſwer this.

Lang. You are the moſt perverſe man that ever I knew. You wot not what you ſay. The Children are baptized in their * Godfathers and Godmothers Faith, and that is the good Conſcience that S. Peter ſpeaketh of: and the Chriſtning is the keeping of the Law, that S. Paul ſpeaketh of, ſaying, Neither is Circumciſion, any thing worth, nor Uncircumciſion any thing worth, but keeping of the Law is all together. Like as the Circumciſion was the keeping of the old Law, ſo is Baptiſm the keeping of the new Law.

* Nay rather in the faith of their Parents. Neither is it the faith of the Godfathers and Godmothers that ſanctifieth the Child, but their diligence may help him in ſeeing him Catechiſed.

VVood. Ah, me-thought if you would talk with me, you ſhould be fain to bring in the old Law to maintain your ſayings by (for all that you refuſed it) when I brought it in. But yet it ſerveth not for your purpoſe, ſo much as you think for. For here you have confeſſed, that neither Circumciſion availeth, nor Uncircumciſion; the which you your ſelf have coupled with Baptiſm, proving that none of them both prevaileth, but keeping of the Law is all together: the which Law is kept (you ſay) by the outward ſigns; the which is nothing ſo: for Abraham believed God, and that was counted to him for righteouſneſs, and this was before he was circumciſed. So the Children believe before they be either circumciſed or baptized, according to my firſt ſaying of Jacob and Eſau, Jacob I loved, but Eſau I hated. Theſe words declare, that Jacob had faith in his Mothers Womb. And John Baptiſt was ſanctified in his Mothers Womb, and therefore it was counted to them for righteouſneſs: and I am ſure, if they had died before they had either received Circumciſion or Baptiſm as concerning the outward deed, they ſhould have been ſaved. For Gods gifts and callings are ſuch, that he cannot repent him of them. But by your ſaying he doth both repent and change. For you ſay, keeping of the outward Law is all together. But a bad excuſe is as good as none at all. And where you ſaid, the Children be baptized in their Godfathers and Godmothers Faith, they being all unbelievers, in what Faith is that Child baptized then? in none at all, by your own ſaying. Which words made him ſtamp and ſtare.

Lang. What? then you would count that there were very few Believers, if there be not one of three that believeth. You enter into judgment againſt the People. Belike you think there be none that believe well, unleſs they be of your mind. Indeed then Chriſts Flock were a very little Flock.

VVood. Indeed theſe be Chriſts words in the twelfth of Luke, the which we may ſee to be very true. Yea, you ſaid, if there were not one amongſt three, that were very few. But there is not one amongſt three hundred, for any thing that I can ſee. For if there were, there would not be ſo many that would ſeek their Neighbours Goods and Lives as there be.

Lang. Is the Flock of Chriſt ſuch a little Flock as you ſpeak of? You may call it a great Flock. How many be there of them, can you tell me?

VVood. A pretty queſtion, I promiſe you, it is that you ask me: as though I did make my ſelf equal with God.

No, no, you ſhall catch no ſuch vantage of my words, nor do I know how many there be. But I will tell you as nigh as I can. For therefore you look. I am ſure that I ſhould enter into judgment.

Lang. Yea, I pray you tell me as much as you can, ſeeing you be ſo cunning.

Gods election ſtandeth not by the moſt part, but by the feweſt.

VVood. You ſhall ſee my judgment in it by and by. Firſt the Prophet ſaith, Follow not a multitude to do evil, for they muſt go the wrong way. For the moſt go the wrong way. There is one point to know them.

Then Chriſt ſaith in the ſeventh of Matthew, Broad is the way, and wide is the gate that leadeth into deſtruction, and many there be that go in thereat: and ſtrait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. And in the twelfth of Luke, it is written (which words were ſpoken of Chriſt) Come you little Flock, it is my Fathers will to give you a Kingdom. The third point is this, in the third of Mark and ſecond of Matthew, You (ſaith Chriſt) ſhall know the Tree by the fruits. A good Tree bringeth forth good fruits, and a bad Tree bringeth forth bad fruits. So by Fruits I know them: For every Tree that bringeth not forth good Fruits, muſt be hewen down, and caſt into the fire (into Hell I think Chriſt meant) and your fruits declare that you be one of them. Thus have I proved four ways, that the People that ſhall be ſaved is but a ſmall Company in compariſon of the reſt. But if that be not enough, for the proof thereof, I have twenty ways more to prove it by, and you were never the nearer of your purpoſe.

Four Arguments proving Chriſts flock to be a ſmall number.

Lang. What a naughty man are you? you would make the patienteſt man in the World angry with you. I think your talk is nothing but pride and vain-glory, with frumps, and mocks, and deſpiſing and judging of men. It was time ſuch a Fellow were taken indeed. Such a one is enough to trouble a whole Country. I think he is bleſt of God that took you: for you are not meet to be in a Commonwealth.

Dr. Langdale raileth againſt Woodman without cauſe.

VVood. With divers other ſuch like words that I cannot recite, they came out ſo thick, with ſtamping and ſtaring and chafing, as though he had been out of his wit. I held my peace, until he had made an end of his Tormentors talk, and then I ſpake.

Wherein have I ſaid amiſs? or have I not anſwered you unto every queſtion that you have demanded of me? What fault can you find in one word that I have ſaid? I dare ſay you can find none. I marvel why you take on thus againſt me, having no cauſe ſo to do.

Lang. No, no, you have not anſwered me to Original ſin, you deny Original ſin.

VVood. With theſe words came in at the door Mr. James Gage: and I think he ſtood at the door a good while before he came in, and that Dr. Langdale ſaw him: for his face was to the door-ward, and my face was from it.

Mr. James Gage entreth talk with Woodman.

Gage. Ah VVoodman, me-think Mr. Doctor and you cannot agree.

VVood. Yes Sir, me-think we agree very well.

Lang. Without doubt, Sir, he is the naughtieſt man that ever I talked with in all my life: for he will have his own way in all things.

Gage. VVoodman leave that pride. Do not truſt too much to your own wit. Hearken to this man, this is a Learned man, I tell you. He is known to be learned. For else he should not be allowed to preach before the Queens Majesty: and I dare say, he will tell thee nothing, nor will thee to do any thing, but that he will do himself: and I dare say, he will not go to the Devil to bring thee thither. How say you Mr. Doctor? Thou mightest think us mad, if we would hurt our selves to hurt thee. No I promise thee, my Brother, neither I, nor any Gentleman in the Country, I think of my Conscience, but would thou shouldest do as well as their own Bodies and Souls, as a great many of them have said to thy face whilst thou wast at my Brothers, and which thou canst not deny.

Wood. Sir, I can say none otherwise but I was gently intreated at your Brothers, both with meat and drink and gentle words, both of you and him, and divers other Gentlemen: and I am sure neither you nor they can say, that you found me unreasonable at any time. For I said, I was contented to learn of them that were able to teach me, and so I am, as God knoweth: and here Mr. Doctor (I think) can say no otherwise; for I dare say he can find no fault in the talk that we have had.

Dr. Langdale complaineth to Mr. Gage of Woodman causeless. Woodman falsly belied.

Lang. No marry, I can find nothing else in you. I promise you, Mr. Gage, if you had been here, you would have said so your self. He took me up indeed, and said, he marvelled how I durst preach. For he said, I understood not the Scripture, but as far as Natural Reason comprehended: as though he understood all, and I nothing. With divers other such like words he made a great complaint to him on me, and said to Mr. James Gage, he would make you believe that I could find no fault in him. Yes, I wis: he denieth Original sin.

Gage. Yea; doth he so? by S. Mary that is a great matter: Woodman, leave that pride. That pride will come to naught. Can ye live without sin?

Wood. Sir, now I perceive he will soon lye on me behind my back, when he will not stick to lye before my face.

Dr. Langdale denieth Original sin, yet accuseth Woodman for the which he is culpable himself.

He saith, I denied Original sin; and it was he himself, as I will let you be Judge in the matter. For as he went about to prove, that man hath Free-will, he said, we were set as free by the Death of Christ, as Adam was before his fall: which words prove plainly, that we have no Original sin: And I took him withal, and said, Had Adam Original sin before his fall? and then he could not tell what to say, but cavilled with words, and said he meant not so: and therefore I marvel he is not ashamed to make such lies to my face. These words made them both astonied.

Gage. Mr. Doctor, he said even now you could find no fault in all his talk. I will bid you ask him a question, and I will warrant you, you will find fault enough. I pray you ask him, how he believeth in the Sacrament of the Altar. I think he will make but a bad account thereof.

Wood. Yes, I will make account good enough of that, by Gods help.

Lang. Well, how say you to the Sacrament of the Altar?

Wood. I say, I know no such Sacrament, unless Christ be the Altar that you mean.

Gage. Lo, I told you, you should soon find fault in him, if you came to that point with him. You should have begun with that first, and never have talked with him about other things. What? know you not the Sacrament of the Altar?

Woodman knoweth no Sacrament of the Altar, unless they take Christ to be the Altar.

Wood. No sure, I know no such, unless Christ be the Altar that you mean; for Christ is the Altar of all goodness. And if you mean Christ to be the Altar of the Sacrament you speak of, you shall soon hear my mind and belief therein.

Lang. Well, we mean Christ to be the Altar. Say your mind, and go briefly to work; for I think it almost dinner time.

Gage. I pray you go roundly to work, that you may make an end before dinner.

Woodmans judgment of the Sacrament.

Wood. Yes, you shall soon hear my mind therein, by Gods help. I do believe, that whensoever I come to receive the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, being truly ministred according to Christs institution, I believing that Christ was born of the Virgin Mary, and that he was crucified on the Cross, and shed his blood for the remission of my sins, and so take and eat the Sacrament of Bread and Wine in that remembrance, that then I do receive whole Christ, God and Man, mystically by Faith. This is my belief of the Sacrament, the which no man is able to disprove. Anno 1557.

Gage. By S. Mary, I can find no fault in this. Now say you Mr. Doctor?

Dr. Langdale seeketh a knot in a rush.

Lang. Sir, you see not so much as I do. For he goeth craftily to work, I tell you as I have heard. For though he hath granted that the faithful receiver receiveth the Body of Christ, God and Man, yet he hath not granted that it is the Body of Christ before it be received, as you shall see by and by, I warrant you, by his own words. How say you? Is it the Body of Christ as soon as the words be spoken by the Priest, or not? for these words will try him more than all the rest.

Whether the Sacrament be the Body of Christ before it be received.

Wood. Doth the Word say that it is his Body before it is received? if it do, I will say so too.

Gage. Why? then we shall agree well enough, if you will be tried by the Word.

Wood. Yes forsooth, that I will; God forbid else.

Gage. Why? the Word saith it is his Body before it is eaten.

Wood. Those words would I fain hear; but I am sure they be not in the Bible.

Lang. No? that you shall see by and by (Mr. Gage, quoth he) and turned to the 22. of Luke, and there he read, When supper was done, Christ took bread, gave, thanks, and brake it, and gave to his Disciples, and said; Take, eat, this is my Body: Then they spake both at once Here he saith it is his Body.

Luke 22. Eating goeth before the words of Consecrating.

Wood. Mr. Gage, I do not deny but he called it his Body, but not before eating, as I said before. Wherefore I pray you mark the words. Christ said, Take, eat: I pray you Sir mark these words that he said, Take and eat, and then he said, it was his Body. So you see, eating goeth before. For he said, Eat, this is my Body. So according to the very word, I do believe it is his Body. Which words made them both astonied.

Dr. Langdale driven to his shifts.

Lang. Why, then by your saying, Judas eat not the Body of Christ. How say you? Did he not?

Wood. Nay, I ask you. Did he?

Lang. I ask you.

Wood. And I ask you.

Lang. And I ask you.

Wood. Marry I ask you. And I bid you answer if you dare for your life. For whatsoever you answer, unless you say as I have said, you will damn your own Soul. For Mr. Gage, I protest before God, I would you should do as well as mine own Soul and Body; and it lamenteth my heart to see how you be deceived with them; they be deceivers all the sort of them. He cannot answer to this, but either he must prove Judas to be saved, or else he must prove that it is no Body before it be received in Faith, as you shall well perceive, by Gods help, if he dare answer the question.

Gage. Yes, I dare say he dareth. What? you need not to threaten him so.

Wood. Then let him answer if he can.

Then he said he knew what I would say to him; therefore he was much in doubt to answer the question.

Lang. Mr. Gage, I will tell you in your ear what words he will answer me, or ever I speak to him.

Dr. Langdale afraid to answer to R. Woodman.

Wood. Then he told Mr. Gage a tale in his ear, and said:

Lang. I have told Mr. Gage what you will say.

Gage. Yea, and I will speak the truth for both parties.

The Catholicks hold that Judas did eat the Body of Christ.

Wood. Well, how say you? Did Judas eat the Body of Christ, or not?

Argument. Whosoever eateth the flesh of Christ, hath everlasting life, John 6. Judas did eat the flesh of Christ: Ergo, Judas hath everlasting life.

Lang. Yea, I say Judas did eat the Body of Christ.

Wood. Then it must needs follow, that Judas hath everlasting life. For Christ saith in the sixth of John, Whoso eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Blood, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day. If Judas did eat Christs Body, I am sure you cannot deny but that he did both eat his Flesh, and drink his Blood, and then is Judas saved by Christs own words. Therefore now you are compelled to say that it was not

Anno 1557.

not Christs Body, or else that Judas is saved.

Gage. Surely these be the very words that Master Doctor told me in mine ear, that you would say to him.

Wood. Well; let us see how well he can avoid this Argument.

Lang. Judas is damned, and yet he eat the Body of Christ; but he eat it unworthily: and therefore he is damned.

Wood. Where find you that Judas did eat the Body of Christ unworthily?

1 Cor. 11. Lang. They be Saint Pauls words, 1 Cor. Chap. 11.

Saint Pauls words misalledged by D. Langdale. Wood. Master Gage, I desire you for Gods sake mark my words well what I say. If Saint Paul speak any such words there, or in any other place; if there be any such words written in all the whole Bible, that ever any Man eat the Body of Christ unworthily, then say that I am the falsest Man that ever you heard speak with Tongue. But indeed, these be the words of Saint Paul, Whoso eateth of this Bread, and drinketh of this cup unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation, because he maketh no difference of the Lords Body; that is, because he presumeth to eat the Sacrament of the Lords Body without Faith, making no difference betwixt the Sacrament and other Bread and Drink. And that is Saint Pauls meaning, and not that any Man doth or can eat the Body of Christ * unworthily. For whosoever eateth the Body of Christ, hath everlasting life, as is aforesaid in the sixth of John; with these words one came for them to dinner in all hast.

Making no difference betwixt the Lords Body expounded.

* Christ speaketh of eating his Flesh simply, without any determination of unworthiness: that is, simply whosoever believeth in Christ, he shall be saved, neither is any unworthiness in believing in Christ.

Gage. I am sorry, I would fain hear more of this talk, but we shall have another day well enough.

Lang. Nay, Master Gage, I will never talk with him more; for he is the unreasonablest Man that ever I talked with in all my life.

Wood. Then Master Gage put off his cap, and desired him that he would not refuse to talk with me, and that it might not be grievous to him. For he said, we will seek all the means possible to make him an honest Man, and to keep him from burning, if we could. For if my Brother and I had not been, he had been burned ere this time. Then there was great curtesie betwixt them.

Note well the working of this Mans charity; to do for a Man more at request, then for any compassion of the party.

Lang. Sir, for your sake, and for my Master your Brothers sake, and for his Fathers sake, and other of his friends sakes, that have spoken to me many times with weeping tears, I will do the best to him that I can; but for no love nor favour that I bear to him, I tell you truth.

Gage. Woodman, you hear what Master Doctor saith: When will you come again?

Wood. Even when you will send for me: For I am a Prisoner, and cannot come when I would. Or if I should desire to come, it will cost me Money, and I have none to give: but if you send for me, it shall cost me none.

Gage. Well, I will send for you on Friday or Saturday, at the farthest; for to morrow I must ride forth of Town, and I would fain hear your talk.

Wood. Sir, I would be very glad you should hear our talk alway, and I trust in God you shall hear me say nothing, but the Word of God shall be my Warrant. So Mr. Gage took his leave, and went his way to his lodging, which was right in my way as I went unto Prisonward again; and when he came without my Lord Mountagues gates, there we met with one Hood of Bursted, a Smith. Then said Master Gage:

Gage. Woodman, I had forgot one thing, that Hood hath brought me in remembrance of as soon as I saw him; for he heard when the tale was told me.

Gage. Hood, did not you hear when Smith of Framfield told me that he saw Woodman abroad in the City at liberty.

Hood. Yea forsooth that I did.

Gage. Yea surely, and I was very glad, for I had well hoped you had been conformable. But I heard otherwise afterward again, that you had leave of the Keeper to go abroad and speak openly in the Streets, as you went up and down.

Lewd tales and false lies raised upon Woodman. Wood. Indeed so the Marshal told me to day. But indeed I was never abroad since I came to Prison, but when I was sent for; and indeed the same time I was abroad with my Keeper, coming from the Bishop, and as I was coming, even not far from the Marshalsey, I saw Goodman Smith stand in a Wain unloding of Cheese, and I asked him how he did, even as I went by, and never stayed for the matter, and thereupon it did rise. So I departed from them, with my Keeper to the Marshalsey again, where I now am merry, I praise God therefore, as a sheep appointed to be slain.

The Fourth Examination of Richard Woodman, had before the Bishop of Winchester, the Bishop of Rochester, and a certain Doctor, with divers other Priests and Gentlemen, the 25. day of May, Anno 1557.

Woodman.

The fourth Examination of R. Woodman before the B. of Winchester, &c.

I Was set from the Marshalsey to the said Bishops and Priests, sitting in St. Georges Church in Southwark, by one of the Marshals Men and one of the Sheriffs Men. When I came before them, and had done my duty to them as nigh as I could, then said the Bishop of Winchester.

Winch. What is your Name?

Wood. My Name is Richard Woodman forsooth.

Winchester. Ah Woodman, you were taken and apprehended for Heresie about three years agone, and were sent to Prison in the Kings Bench, and there remained a long time. Mine old Lord of Chichester, being a learned famous Man, well known in this Realm of England, and almost throughout all Christendom, I think came to Prison to you, and there, and at other places, called you before him divers times, travelling and perswading with you many times (because he was your Ordinary) to pluck you from your Heresies that you held, but he could by no means advertise you.

The old Bishop of Chichester was Doctor Day.

Whereupon you were delivered to the Commissioners, and they could do no good with you neither. Then they sent you unto my Lord of London. My Lord of London calling you before him divers times, labour was made unto him of your friends, that you might be released. My Lord having a good hope in you, that you would become an honest Man, because he had heard so of you in times past, yea and you your self promising him, that you would go home and recant your Heresies that you held, delivered you; sending also a Letter of your recantation to the Commissary, that he should see it done. But as soon as you were out of his hands, you were as bad as ever you were, and would never fulfil your promise, but have hid your self in the woods, bushes, dens, and caves, and thus have you continued ever since, till it was now of late. Then the Sheriff of that shire (being a worshipful Man) hearing thereof, sent certain of his Men, and took you in a wood, and so carried you to his House. I cannot tell his Name. What is your Sheriffs Name?

Untrue. For Bishop Boner delivered him of his own accord to the burning of Bishop upon other causes.

False and untrue.

Wood. Forsooth, his Name is Sir Edward Gage.

Winchester. Well, you were apprehended for Heresie, and being at Master Gages three weeks or more, ye were gently intreated there; he and other Gentlemen perswading with you divers times, little prevailed.

Sir Edward Gage Sheriff of Sussex.

Then you appealed to the Bishop of Chichester that now is. The Sheriff like a worshipful Man, sent you to him, and he hath travelled with you, and other also, and can do no good with you, whereupon we have sent for you.

Wood. Then I spake to him. For I thought he would be long, before he would make an end. I thought he was a year in telling of those lies that he had told there against me already. Yea, I kept silence from good words, but it was great pain and grief unto me (as David said.)

At length the Fire was so kindled within my heart, that I could not chuse but speak with my Tongue; for I feared lest any of the company should have departed or ever I had answered to his lies, and so the Gospel to have been slandered by my long silence keeping. So I spake, I praise God therefore, and said; my Lord, I pray you let me now answer for my self, for it is time.

Winch. I permit you to answer to these things that I have said.

Wood. I thank God therefore. And I think my self happy (as Paul said, when he was brought before King Agrippa) that I may this day answer for my self. My Lord, I promise you there is never a word of your sayings true that you have alledged against me.

Winch. I cannot tell, but thus it is reported of you. As for me, I never did ſee you before this day; but I am ſure it is not all lies that I have ſaid, as you report.

Wood. Yes, my Lord, there is never a true word of that you have ſaid. And further, where you ſaid you never ſaw me before this day, you have both heard me, and ſeen me, I dare ſay, before this day.

Winch. I think I heard you indeed on Sunday, where you plaid the malapart Fellow; but I cannot tell that I ſaw you. But I pray you, were you not taken in the woods by the Sheriffs men?

Wood. No ſure, I was taken beſides my Houſe, I being in my Houſe when they came, wherefore that is not true.

Winch. Were not you at the Sheriffs three weeks?

Wood. Yes that I was, a Month juſt, and was gently intreated of him, I can ſay no otherwiſe; for I had meat and drink enough, and fair words.

Winch. Ah, I am well apaid; it is not all lies then, as it chanced. For I ſpake but of three weeks, and you confeſs a Month your ſelf.

Wood. Yet your tale is never the truer for that. For you ſaid, I was there three weeks for Hereſie, the which is not ſo. For I was not apprehended for Hereſie at the firſt, neither did mine old Lord of Chicheſter travel with me to pull me from Hereſie, as you ſaid; for I held none then, neither do I now, as God knoweth, neither was I ſent to the Commiſſioners, nor to the Biſhop of London for Hereſie, neither was I delivered to him for any ſuch thing, nor promiſed him to recant, as you ſaid I did. Wherefore I marvel you be not aſhamed to tell ſo many lies, being a Biſhop, that ſhould be an enſample to other.

Winchester ſwift in judging.

Winch. Lo, what an arrogant Heretick this ſame is. He will deny God; for he that denieth his own hand, denieth God.

Wood. My Lord, judge not leſt you be judged your ſelf. For as you have judged me, you ſhall be judged, if you repent not. And if I have ſet my hand to any Recantation, let it be ſeen to my ſhame, before this Audience: For I will never deny mine own hand, by Gods help.

R. Woodman cleareth himſelf of Recantation.

Winch. It is not here now, but I think it will be had well enough; but if it cannot be found, by whom will you be tried?

Wood. Even by my Lord of London; for he dealt like a good man with me in that matter that I was ſent to Priſon for. For it was upon the breach of a Statute, as Maſter Sheriff here can tell: For he was Sheriff then, as he is now, and can tell how I was toſſed up and down from Seſſions to Seſſions; and becauſe I would not conſent that I had offended therein, they ſent me to Priſon again.

The honeſt dealing of Bp. Boner with Woodman herein.

This was Dr. Day.

Then my Lord of Chicheſter being mine Ordinary, and I being his Tenant, came to me, to perſwade with me that I ſhould have conſented to them, and to find my ſelf in fault, where I was in none. To the which I would not agree, but I deſired him that he would ſee me releaſed of my wrong; but he ſaid he could not, but willed me or my Friends to ſpeak to the Commiſſioners for me, becauſe it was a Temporal matter: and when I came before them, they ſent me to my Lord of London, and my Lord of London was certified by the hands of almoſt thirty men, both Eſquires, Gentlemen and Yeomen, the chiefeſt in all the Country where I dwelt, that I had not offended in the matter that I was ſent to Priſon for. Whereupon he delivered me, not willing me to recant Hereſies, for I held none (as God knoweth) neither do I now: nor do I know wherefore I was ſent to Priſon, no more then any man here knoweth; for I was taken away from my work.

The cauſe and manner how Woodman was delivered by Bp. Boner.

Winch. No? wherefore appealed you then to my Lord of Chicheſter, if it were not for Hereſie?

Wherefore Woodman appealed to his Ordinary.

Wood. Becauſe there was laid to my charge that I had baptized Children, and married Folks, the which I never did, for I was no where Miniſter. Wherefore I appealed to mine Ordinary, to purge my ſelf thereof, as I have. Wherefore if any man have any thing againſt me, let them ſpeak; for I came not hither to accuſe my ſelf, neither will I.

Winch. Maſter Sheriff, can you tell upon what breach of Statute he was ſent to Priſon firſt?

The Sheriff. Yea forſooth, my Lord, that I can.

Wood. My Lord, if you will give me leave, I will ſhew you the whole matter.

Anno 1557.

Winch. Nay, Maſter Sheriff, I pray you tell the matter, ſeeing you know it.

The Sheriff. My Lord, it was for ſpeaking to a Curate in the Pulpit, as I remember.

The cauſe why Woodman was firſt apprehended.

Winch. Ah, like enough, that he would not ſtick to prove a Curate. For did you not ſee how he faſhioned himſelf to ſpeak to me in the Pulpit on Sunday? he played the malapart fellow with me; and therefore it was no great marvel though he played that part with another.

Rich. Woodman and his fellow Priſoners falſly accuſed and belied of the Biſhop of Winchester in the Pulpit.

Wood. Why, you will not blame me for that, I am ſure. For we ſpake for no other cauſe, but to purge our ſelves of thoſe Hereſies that you laid to our charge. For theſe were your words; Good people, theſe men that be brought before us, being here, deny Chriſt to be God, and the Holy Ghoſt to be God, (pointing to us with your left hand) the which might ſeem to the whole Audience, that you meant us all. Wherefore to clear our ſelves thereof, we ſpake, and ſaid we held no ſuch thing. And you ſaid you would cut out our Tongues. But I am ſure you have no ſuch Law.

Winch. Yes that we have, if you blaſpheme, and as it chanced, I found ſuch amongſt you.

Wood. Indeed after we ſpake, you declared who they were, but not before; for you ſpake generally. Wherefore we blaſphemed not, but purged our ſelves.

Speaking to the Curate in the Pulpit made Hereſie.

Winch. But I pray you, how can you purge your ſelf for ſpeaking to the Curate, that it is not Hereſie?

Woodman cleareth himſelf from breach of the Statute.

Wood. Forſooth theſe be the words of the Statute; Whoſoever doth interrupt any Preacher or Preachers, lawfully authorized by the Queens Majeſty, or by any other lawful Ordinary, that all ſuch ſhall ſuffer three Months impriſonment, and furthermore be brought to the Quarter Seſſions, there (being ſorry for the ſame) to be releaſed upon his good abearing one whole year. But I had not ſo offended as it was well proved: For he that I ſpake to was not lawfully authorized, nor had put away his wife. Wherefore it was not lawful for him to preach by your own Law; and therefore I brake not the Statute, though I ſpake to him.

Note the pretty ſhift of this Catholick Prelate.

Winch. I am glad, I perceive this man ſpeaketh againſt Prieſts marriages; he is not contented with Prieſts that have wives. He is an honeſter man than I took him for, Maſter Sheriff, have him away. I am glad he loveth not Prieſts marriages.

Wood. Then I would have anſwered to his ſayings, but he would in no wiſe hear me, but bade the Sheriff have me away. So the Sheriff took me by the hand, and plucked me away, and would not let me ſpeak, but going out of the Chancel door, I ſaid; I would ſhew him the whole matter, if he would have given me leave, but ſeeing he will not, if he will let me go ſo, they ſhall ſee whether I will not go home to my wife and children, and keep them, as my bounden duty is, by the help of God. So I was ſent to the Marſhalſey again, where I now am merry, I praiſe God therefore, as a Sheep appointed to be ſlain.

Moreover, I was credibly informed by one of our Brethren that heard our talk, that the Biſhop ſaid when I was gone, that they would take me whilſt I was ſomewhat good. Which words ſeemed to many of the people that were there, that I ſpake againſt Prieſts marriages, but I did not, but did only anſwer to ſuch queſtions as he asked me, as you ſhall perceive well by the words, if you mark them, which words were theſe:

Woodman falſly taken to ſpeak againſt Prieſts marriage.

How can you purge your ſelf from Hereſie, for talking to the Curate in the Pulpit, and not offend the Statute, ſaid the Biſhop? meaning thereby, I think, to have taken vantage of my words; but it was not Gods will that he ſhould at that time. For I anſwered him by the words of the Statute, which words be as hereafter followeth, (that is) Whoſoever doth interrupt any Preacher or Preachers, lawfully authorized by the Queens Majeſty, or by any other lawful Ordinary, that all ſuch ſhall ſuffer three Months impriſonment. But I proved that this man was not lawfully authorized to preach (by their own Law) becauſe he had not put away his wife. For their Law is, that no Prieſt may ſay Maſs, nor preach with the Maſs, but he muſt firſt be

Anno 1557.

be ſeparated from his wife. That is, becauſe honeſt marriages be good and commendable, and theirs naught and abominable; therefore they cannot dwell together.

A Prieſt keeping his wife, yet would needs fall again with Papiſtry.

Now I give you all to underſtand, that I did not reprove this Prieſt, becauſe he had a wife, but becauſe he taught falſe Doctrine, which grieved my ſoul, becauſe he had been a fervent Preacher againſt the Maſs, and all the Idolatry thereof, ſeven years before, and then came and held with it again; for the which cauſe I reproved him in the Pulpit. And the words that I ſpake to him, are written in divers of my Examinations at my firſt impriſonment for that ſame. But in very deed, I knew not of the Statute when I reproved him. But becauſe I was ſent to Priſon upon the breach of it, I bought a Statute Book, and when I had peruſed it, I perceived I had not offended by their own Law; and therefore ſtill when I was called to anſwer, I anſwered them with their own law. But yet they kept me in Priſon a year and almoſt three quarters or ever I was releaſed. I was at mine anſwer for that eighteen times. If any think I do not allow Biſhops and Prieſts marriages, let them look in my firſt Examination before the Biſhop of Chichester that now is, during this my impriſonment, and there they ſhall find what I have ſaid in the matter. The truth is, I looked to be condemned with my brother that ſame day: But we may all ſee that they can do nothing but as God will permit them to do. But when the time is full come, I truſt in God I ſhall run that joyful race that my brethren have done. Thus I commit you all into the hands of God, who is the preſerver, defender, and keeper of all his Elect for evermore, Amen.

R. Woodman ſaving himſelf from his enemies by their own Law.

The fifth Examination of Richard Woodman, had before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the Archdeacon of Canterbury, Dr. Langdale, with a fat headed Prieſt, and others, whoſe names I know not, with certain alſo of the Commiſſioners, at S. Mary Overies Church in Southwark, in the preſence of three hundred people at the leaſt, the 15th day of June, Anno 1557.

The fifth Examination of Rich. Woodman before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and divers others. June 15. Anno 1557.

Wincheſter. WOodman, you were before us the laſt day, and would not be known in any wiſe that you were ſent to Priſon for Hereſie, and called for your Accuſers, and ſtood ſtoutly in defending of your ſelf, and in your departing I had thought you had ſpoken againſt Prieſts marriages, thinking by your words we ſhould have found you an honeſt man, and conformable, when we had called you before us again. You told ſuch a fair tale for your ſelf, as though you had been free from all that was laid to your charge. For you ſaid it was all lies that I told againſt you; but ſince I have proved the contrary, as here is your own hand to ſhew. By the which I have proved, that you reproved not the Prieſt for lacking of Authority, and becauſe he had not put away his wife, but becauſe you liked not his preaching. For indeed I took it, that you reproved him becauſe he was not lawfully authorized, but I have proved the contrary ſince.

Wood. I told you not that I did either reprove him for lack of Authority, or becauſe I liked not his preaching, but I told you wherefore I was firſt ſent to Priſon. For you ſaid I was ſent to Priſon for Hereſie, and made a long tale againſt me. And indeed I told you that there was never a word of your ſayings true, but was all lies, as it was indeed. For I never was ſent to Priſon for Hereſie, neither held I any then, nor do now, I take Heaven and Earth to witneſs; but I told you I was ſent to Priſon upon the breach of a Statute, which was for ſpeaking to a Prieſt in the Pulpit, and for that cauſe the Juſtices of that Country had thought I had offended the Statute, and called me before them, and would have had me to have been bound to my good abearing, and becauſe I refuſed it, they ſent me to Priſon. And theſe be the words of the Statute, as I told you the laſt day. If any man do interrupt any Preacher or Preachers, lawfully authoriſed by the Queens Majeſty, or by any other lawful Ordinary, that then every party that ſo offendeth, ſhall ſuffer three months impriſonment, and furthermore be brought to the Quarter Seſſions, and there being ſorry for the ſame, and alſo bound for his good abearing one whole year, to be releaſed, or elſe to remain to Priſon again.

No breach of the Statute, & why.

And when I was in Priſon, I bought a Statute Book, which when I had peruſed over, I found by the words thereof that I had not offended, becauſe he was not lawfully authoriſed, as the Biſhop of London was certified by the hands almoſt of thirty men, both Eſquires, Gentlemen, and Yeomen, the chiefeſt in all that Country. For he had not put away his wife, and therefore the Statute took no place on me, as I told you the other day. Wherefore my Lord of London, ſeeing me have ſo much wrong, did like a good man to me in that matter, and releaſed me. Now when I had told you this matter, you bade the Sheriff have me away; You ſaid you were glad I held againſt Prieſts marriages, becauſe I anſwered to the queſtion you asked me.

The Prieſt ſcanneth upon the meaning of Woodman.

The fat Prieſt. My Lord, do you not hear what he ſaith by my Lord of London? He ſaith he is a good man in that he releaſed him, but he meaneth that he is good in nothing elſe.

Wood. What? can you tell what I mean? let every man ſay as he findeth; he did juſtly to me in that matter. I ſay, if he be not good in any thing elſe, as you ſay, he ſhall anſwer for it, and not I; for I have nothing to do with other mens matters.

See how nearly theſe men ſeek matter againſt him, whereby to trap him.

Winch. Well, how ſay you? how liked you his preaching? I pray you tell us.

Wood. That is no matter how I liked it. Howſoever I liked it, I offended not the Statute. Wherefore you have nothing to ſay to me for that I am ſure.

Winch. Well, how like you this then? Here is your own hand writing. I am ſure you will not deny it. Will you look on it?

Wood. It is mine own handy work indeed, the which by Gods help I will never deny, nor ever did yet, I praiſe God therefore.

Winch. And here is good gear I tell you. I pray you hearken well to it; theſe be the words before the Commiſſioners. How ſay you? Do not you believe as ſoon as the words be ſpoken by the Prieſt, that there remaineth neither Bread nor Wine, but only the very Body of Chriſt, both fleſh and blood, as he was born of the Virgin Mary? theſe were the words of the Commiſſioners.

Luke 22. Woodman charged with his anſwers before the Commiſſioners at his laſt Examination.

And then thou ſaidſt, thou durſt not ſay otherwiſe than the Scripture ſaith. I cannot find (ſay you) that it is the Body of Chriſt before it is received by Faith, bringing in the 22. of Luke, ſaying, Chriſt ſaid, Take, eat, this is my Body. So I cannot prove it is his Body before it be eaten. Then ſaid the Commiſſioners, Did not Judas eat Chriſts Body? And if you can prove that Judas is ſaved (ſaid you) I muſt grant that he eat his Body. For Chriſt ſaith in the ſixth of John, Whoſo eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day; which words prove, ſaid you, that if Judas eat the Body of Chriſt, he muſt needs be ſaved. How ſay you now? Did Judas eat the Body of Chriſt, or not?

Dr. White B. of Wincheſter, bent to have the blood of Woodman.

Wood. Then I perceived he went about nothing but to catch words of me in his Dioceſs, to condemn me with. Though I ſhould confound him never ſo much, I perceived that he was fully bent thereto. To whom I anſwered and ſaid:

I will anſwer you to no ſuch thing, for I am none of your Dioceſs; wherefore I will not anſwer to you.

Winch. Thou art within my Dioceſs, and thou haſt offended within my Dioceſs; and therefore I will have to do with thee.

R. Woodman appealeth from the B. of Wincheſter to his Ordinary.

Wood. Have to do with me if you will; but I will have nothing to do with you, I tell you plainly. For though I be now in your Dioceſs, I have not offended in your Dioceſs; if I have, ſhew me wherein.

Winch. Marry here is thine own hand writing, the which thou affirmedſt in my Dioceſs.

Wood. I do not deny but it is mine own hand writing; but that proveth never the more that I have offended in your Dioceſs: for that doth but declare what talk there was betwixt the Commiſſioners and me, the which you have nothing to do withal.

Winch. No? hold him a Book, and thou ſhalt ſwear whether thou holdeſt it now, or not, and whether thou wroteſt it not in my Dioceſs, as I think thou didſt; Lay thy hand on the Book.

Woodman refuſeth to ſwear or anſwer before VVinchester, being nor his Ordinary.

Wood. I will not be ſworn for you; for I am not of your Dioceſs; and therefore you have nothing to do with me. And as for the writing of the ſame, I never wrote word of it in your Dioceſs.

Lang. No, did you not? my Lord, let me ſee; I will find where you wrote it.

Wood. Then he took it and looked on it, and anon he found that I was ſent for out of the Kings Bench, to come before the Commiſſioners.

Lang. My Lord, here you may ſee it was in the Kings Bench, the which is in your Dioceſs.

Wood. Although I were fetcht out of the Kings Bench, that proveth not that I wrote it there, nor did I, I promiſe you truly.

The fat Prieſt. Where wrote you it then?

Wood. Nay, I owe you not ſo much ſervice as to tell you; find it out as well as you can: For I perceive you go about to ſhed my blood.

Winch. It is no great matter where it was written; it is here, and he denieth not but he wrote it. You ſhall hear more of it. Here the Commiſſioners asked you, whether Judas did eat any more than bare Bread, and you anſwered, that he eat more than bare Bread.

VVoodman in a great burning of Conſcience, for fear leſt he had granted too much to the Commiſſioners before, ſaying, that Judas did eat more then bare bread.

Whereupon they ſent you away back to the Kings Bench again, and asked you not what more, for the which cauſe (as you have written here) you had a Hell burning in your Conſcience. For you had thought they would have ſent a Diſcharge to the Kings Bench, and ſo let me go (ſaid you) and regiſter my name in their Books, that I had granted that Judas did eat the Body of Chriſt, and ſo the Goſpel ſhould have been ſlandered by me. For the which Cauſe I was in ſuch caſe, I could ſcantly eat, drink, or ſleep for that ſpace, as all my Priſon-fellows can teſtifie. If all you, I ſay, that go to the Church of Satan, and there hear the deteſtable Doctrine, that they ſpit and ſpue out in their Churches and Pulpits, to the great diſhonour of God, if all you, I ſay, that come there, had ſuch a Hell burning in your Conſcience for the time, as I had till I came before them again, and had uttered my Conſcience more plainly, I dare ſay you would come there no more. All this is your writing; is it not? How ſay you?

Wood. I do not deny but it was mine own deed.

Winch. And I pray you, where is there ſuch ſpitting and ſpuing out of falſe Doctrine as you ſpeak of?

Wood. In the Synagogue of Satan, where God is diſhonoured with falſe Doctrine.

Winch. And I pray you, where is one of them?

Wood. Nay, that judge your ſelf; I came not hither to be a Judge.

Winch. Well, here you have affirmed, that Judas (your Maſter) eat more than Bread; but yet he eat not the Body of Chriſt, as you have declared by your words. For, you had a Hell burning in your Conſcience, becauſe you were in doubt, that the Commiſſioners underſtood by your words, that Judas had eaten the Body of Chriſt, becauſe you ſaid, he eat more than bare Bread. Therefore thou hadſt a great ſort of Devils in thee; for if Hell be many Devils: and therefore the Devil and Judas is thy Maſter, by thine own words.

Wood. Nay, I defie Judas and the Devil, and his Servants; for they be your Maſters, and you ſerve them, for any thing that I can ſee, I tell you truth.

The Biſhops Argument.

The Devil is Maſter in Hell.
VVoodman felt a burning Hell in his Conſcience: Ergo, the Devil was VVoodmans Maſter.

Winch. Nay, they be thy Maſters. For the Devil is Maſter where Hell is, and thou ſaidſt thou hadſt a burning Hell in thee. I pray thee tell me, how thou canſt avoid it, but that the Devil was in thee by thine own ſaying?

Anſwer.

Hell is taken in Scripture two wayes; either for the place where damned ſpirits and ſouls be tormented for ever out of this life: or elſe for Gods correction and anguiſh of the ſoul in this life, which ſometime is felt ſo ſharp, that it is reſembled to Hell it ſelf: As where we read, The Lord bringeth to Hell, and bringeth out again, &c. Tob. 13. The pains of Hell have found me, &c. Pſal. 114.

Wood. The Hell that I had, was the loving correction of God toward me, to call me to Repentance, that I ſhould not offend God and his People in leaving things ſo dark, as I left that. For the which cauſe my Conſcience bare me record, I had not done well, as at all times I have felt the ſting of it, when I have broken the Commandments of God by any means, as all Gods People do, I dare ſay, and it is the loving kindneſs of God towards them, to drive them to repentance. But it is to be thought, that your Conſcience is never troubled, how wickedly ſoever you do. For if it were, it ſhould not be ſo ſtrange to you as you make it, which declareth plainly whoſe Servant you be.

Anno 1557.

Winch. What a naughty fellow is this? This is ſuch a perverſe Villain as I never talked with in all my life. Hold him a Book, I will make him ſwear, to anſwer directly to ſuch things as I will demand of him; and if he will not anſwer, I will condemn him.

Wood. Call you me a Fellow? I am ſuch a Fellow, I tell you, that will drive you all to Hell, if you conſent to the ſhedding of my blood, and you ſhall have blood to drink, as ſaith S. John in his Revelation, the ninth Chapter, and being in Hell, you ſhall be compelled to ſay for pain of Conſcience; This is the man that we have had in deriſion, and thought his life madneſs, and his end to be without honour; but now we may ſee how he is counted among the Saints of God, and we are puniſhed. This ſhall you ſee in Hell, if you repent it not, if you do condemn me. This you ſhall find in the fifth Chapter of the Book of Wiſdom: and therefore take heed what you do, I give you counſel.

Winch. Wiſdom? What ſpeakeſt thou of Wiſdom? thou never hadſt it; for thou art as very a fool as ever I heard ſpeak.

Wood. Do you not know, that the fooliſh things of this world muſt confound the wiſe things? Wherefore it grieveth me not to be called a fool at your hands. 1 Cor. 15

Winch. Nay, thou art none of thoſe fools; thou art an obſtinate fool, and an Heretick. Lay hand on the Book, and anſwer to ſuch things as I will lay againſt thee.

VVoodman again refuſeth to ſwear or anſwer before the Biſhop, being not his Ordinary.

Wood. I will lay hand on the Book for none of you all. You be not my Biſhop; and therefore I will have nothing to do with you.

Winch. I will have to do with you. This man is without Law, he careth not for the King nor Queen, I dare ſay; for he will not obey their Laws. Let me ſee the Kings Commiſſion. I will ſee whether he will obey that, or not.

Wood. I would you loved the King and Queens Majeſty no worſe than I do, if it pleaſed God: You would not do as you do then.

Winch. Hold him a Book, he is a rank Heretick. Thou ſhalt anſwer to ſuch things as I will demand of thee.

Wood. I take Heaven and Earth to record I am no Heretick, neither can I tell wherefore I am brought to Priſon, no more then any man here can tell, and therewith I looked round about on the People, and ſaid to the Biſhop, If you have any juſt cauſe againſt me worthy of death, lay it againſt me, and let me have it; for I refuſe not to dye (I praiſe God) for the Truths ſake, if I had ten lives. If you have no cauſe, let me go home, I pray you, to my Wife and Children to ſee them kept, and other poor Folk that I would ſet awork by the help of God. I have ſet on work an hundred perſons ere this, all the year together, and was unjuſtly taken from them; but God forgive them that did it, if it be his will.

A charitable Commandment of a Catholick Prelate under pain of Excommuniation. No man to ſay, God ſtrengthen him.

Winch. Do you not ſee how he looketh about for help? But I would ſee any man ſhew thee a chearful countenance, and eſpecially you that be of my Dioceſs. If any of you bid God ſtrengthen him, or take him by the hand, or embrace him, or ſhew him a chearful countenance, you ſhall be excommunicated, and ſhall not be received in again, till you have done open Penance; and therefore beware of it.

Wood. I look for no help of men, for God is on my ſide, I praiſe him therefore; and therefore I need not to care who be againſt me, neither do I care.

Then they cried, Away with him, and bring us another. So I was carried again to the Marſhalſey, where I am now merry (I praiſe God therefore) as a Sheep appointed to be ſlain. But for lack of time, I have left out much of our talk; but this is the chiefeſt of it.

The

Anno 1557.

The ſixth and laſt Examination of Richard Woodman, written and copied with his own hand.

BE it known unto all Men by this preſent writing, that I Richard Woodman, ſometime of the Pariſh of Warbleton, in the County of Suſſex, was condemned for Gods everlaſting truth, Anno 1557. July 16. by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, in the Church of Saint Mary Overies in Southwark, there ſitting with him the ſame time the Biſhop of Chicheſter, the Archdeacon of Canterbury, D. Langdale, M. Roper, with a fat headed Prieſt, I cannot tell his Name. All theſe conſented to the ſhedding of my Blood, upon this occaſion, as hereafter followeth.

I affirmed, that Judas received the Sacrament with a ſop and the Devil withal; and becauſe I would not be ſworn upon a Book, to anſwer directly to ſuch Articles as he would declare to me; and becauſe I would not believe that there remained neither Bread nor Wine after the words of Conſecration, and that the Body of Chriſt could not be received of any but of the Faithful: For theſe Articles I was Condemned, as hereafter ſhall follow more at large, by the help of God.

The ſixth Examination of Rich. Woodman before the B. of Wincheſter, and diverſother, in the Church of S. Mary Overies.

FIrſt, the Biſhop ſaid when I came before him:

Wincheſter. You were before us on Monday laſt paſt; and there you affirmed certain Hereſies. How ſay you now? Do you hold them ſtill, or will you revoke them?

Wood. I held no Hereſies then, neither do I now, as the Lord knoweth.

Winch. No? did you not affirm, that Judas received Bread? which is an Hereſie, unleſs you tell what more then Bread.

VVood. Is it Hereſie to ſay, Judas received no more then Bread? I ſaid he received more then bare Bread for he received the ſame Sacrament that was prepared to ſhew forth the Lords death, and becauſe he preſumed to eat without Faith, he eat the Devil withal, as the words of Chriſt declare; after he eat the Sop, the Devil entred into him, as you cannot deny.

VVinch. Hold him a Book. I will have you anſwer directly, whether Judas did eat the Body of Chriſt or no.

R. Woodman again refuſeth Winch. to be his Judge.

VVood. I will anſwer no more, for I am not of your Diocеſs; wherefore I will have nothing to do with you.

VVinch. No, you be in my Dioceſs, and you be of my Dioceſs, becauſe you have offended in my Dioceſs.

VVood. I am not of your Dioceſs, although I am in your Dioceſs; and I was brought into your Dioceſs againſt my will: and I have not offended in your Dioceſs, if I have, tell me wherein.

Truth taken for Hereſie.

VVincheſt. Here in your own hand writing, the which is Hereſie. Theſe be the words: I cannot find, ſay you, that it is the Body of Chriſt to any, before it is received in Faith. How ſay you? is not this your own hand-writing?

VVood. Yea, I do not deny but it is mine own hand-writing; but when, or where was it written, or where were the words ſpoken?

M. Roper Commiſſioner, and witneſs againſt VVoodman.

Before the Commiſſioners, and here is one of them; Maſter Roper, the words were ſpoken before you. Were they not?

Roper. Yes indeed that they were, VVoodman, I am ſure you will not deny them; for you have written the words even as you ſpake them.

VVoodman. No Sir, indeed I will not deny but that I ſpake them, and I am glad that you have ſeen it. For you may ſee by that whether I lye, or not.

VVoodmans hand-writing brought in againſt him.

Roper. Indeed the words be written word by word as ye ſpake them.

VVincheſter. Well, here you affirm, that it is your own deed. How ſay you now? will you be ſorry for it, and become an honeſt Man?

VVood. My Lord, I truſt no Man can ſay, but that I am an honeſt Man; and as for that, I marvel that you will lay it to my charge, knowing that my Lord of London diſcharged me of all matters that were laid againſt me, when I was releaſed of him.

VVoodman firſt releaſed, and yet called to account again againſt all good order.

VVinch. You were releaſed, and it might fortune, it was not laid to your charge then; therefore we lay it to your charge now, becauſe you be ſuſpected to be an Hereticke: and we may call you before us, and examine you upon your Faith upon ſuſpicion.

VVood. Indeed St. Peter willeth me to render account of my hope that I have in God, and I am contented ſo to do, if it pleaſe my Biſhop to hear me.

Chich. Yes I pray you let us hear it.

VVood. I do believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and of Earth, and of all things viſible and inviſible, and in one Lord Jeſus Chriſt my Saviour, very God, and very Man. I believe in God the Holy Ghoſt, the comforter of all Gods elect people, and that he is equal with the Father and the Son. I believe the true Catholick Church, and all the Sacraments that belong thereto. Thus have I rendred account of my hope that I have of my Salvation.

Sacrament of the Altar.

VVinch. And how believe you in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar? And with that word they all put off their Caps to that abominable Idol.

VVood. I pray you be contented, for I will not anſwer to any more queſtions; for I perceive you go about to ſhed my Blood.

VVoodman made an Anabaptiſt, becauſe he will not ſwear before him that is not his Ordinary.

VVinch. No? hold him a Book. If he refuſe to ſwear, he is an Anabaptiſt, and ſhall be Excommunicated.

VVoodman. I will not ſwear for you, Excommunicate me if you will. For you be not meet to take an Oath; for you laid Hereſies to my my charge in yonder Pulpit, the which you are not able to prove; wherefore you be not meet to take an Oath of any Man. And as for me, I am not of your Dioceſs, nor will have any thing to do with you.

VVinch. I will have to do with thee, and I ſay thou art a ſtrong Heretick.

All truth is Hereſie with theſe Men.

VVood. Yea, all truth is Hereſie with you; but I am content to ſhew you my mind, how I believe on the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, without flattering. For that you look for, I am ſure. But I will meddle no further, but what I hold my ſelf of it. I will not meddle of any other Mans belief on it.

N. Harpſ. Why? I am ſure all Mens Faith ought to be alike.

VVood. Yea, I grant you ſo, that all true Chriſtians Faith ought to be alike. But I will anſwer for my ſelf.

N. Harpſ. Well, let us hear what you ſay to it.

VVoodmans confeſſion of the Sacrament.

Wood. I do believe, that when I come to receive the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, if it be truly miniſtred according to Chriſts Inſtitution, I coming in Faith, as I truſt in God I will whenſoever I come to receive it, I believing that Chriſt was born for me, and that he ſuffered death for the remiſſion of my Sins, and that I ſhall be ſaved by his death and Blood-ſhedding, and to receive the Sacrament of Bread and Wine in that remembrance, that then I do receive whole Chriſt, God and Man, myſtically by Faith, this is my belief on the Sacrament.

Myſtically.

Then they ſpake all at once, ſaying myſtically by Faith?

The fat Prieſt. What a fool art thou, myſtically by Faith? thou canſt not tell what myſtical is.

VVood. If I be a fool, ſo take me: But God hath choſen ſuch fools of this World to confound ſuch wiſe things as you are.

1 Cor. 1.

The fat Prieſt. I pray thee what is myſtically?

VVood. I take myſtically to be the Faith that is in us, that the World ſeeth not, but God only.

What is myſtically.

VVincheſter. He cannot tell what he ſaith. Anſwer to the Sacrament of the Altar, whether it be not the Body of Chriſt before it be received, and whether it be not the Body of Chriſt to whomſoever receiveth it? Tell me, or elſe I will Excommunicate thee.

VVoodman again appealeth to his Ordinary.

VVood. I have ſaid as much as I will ſay? Excommunicate me if you will. I am none of your Dioceſs. The Biſhop of Chicheſter is mine Ordinary. Let him do it, if you will needs have my Blood, that it may be required at his hands.

M. Chriſtopherſon Biſh. of Chicheſter. his Ordinary, not yet conſecrated.

Chich. I am not Conſecrated yet, I told you when you were with me.

VVood. No indeed, your Kine bring forth nothing but Cow-Calves, as it chanceth now; meaning thereby he had not his Buls from Rome.

VVoodman for his fervent ſpeech rebuked.

Then they were all in a great rage with me, and called me all to naught, and ſaid I was out of my wits, becauſe I ſpake fervently to every Mans queſtion; all the which I cannot remember, but I ſaid:

So Feſtus ſaid to Paul, when he ſpake the words

of

of ſobernes and truth out of the Spirit of God, as I do. But as you have judged me, you be your ſelves. You will go to Hell all the ſort of you, if you condemn me, if you repent it not with ſpeed.

Wood. Then my Keeper, and the Sheriffs deputy Fuller, rebuked me, becauſe I ſpake ſo ſharply to them. And I ſaid, I pray you let me alone; I muſt anſwer for my Life.

Then there was much ado that I ſhould keep ſilence, and ſo I held my peace. Then ſpake the Biſhop of Wincheſter and the Archdeacon of Canterbury, ſaying; We go not about to condemn thee, but go about to ſave thy Soul, if thou wilt be ruled, and do as we would have thee.

Wood. To ſave my Soul? nay, you cannot ſave my Soul. My Soul is ſaved already. I praiſe God therefore. There can no Man ſave my Soul, but Jeſus Chriſt; and he it is that hath ſaved my Soul, before the Foundation of the World was laid.

This fat Prieſt well ſeen in the Scriptures.

The fat Prieſt. What an Hereſie is that my Lord? here is an Hereſie. He ſaith his Soul was ſaved before the Foundations of the World were laid. Thou canſt not tell what thou ſayeſt. Was thy Soul ſaved before it was?

Wood. Yes, I praiſe God, I can tell what I ſay, and I ſay the truth. Look in the firſt of the Epheſians, and there you ſhall find it, where Paul ſaith, Epheſians 1. Bleſſed be God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which hath bleſſed us with all manner of ſpiritual bleſſings in Heavenly things, by Chriſt, according as he hath choſen us in himſelf before the Foundation of the World was laid, that we ſhould be holy and without blame before him, through love, and thereto were we predeſtinated.

Jeſus Chriſt only Saviour of Mans Soul, and not Man.

These be the words of Paul, and I believe they be moſt true. And therefore it is my Faith, in and by Jeſus Chriſt, that ſaveth, and not you, or any Man elſe.

The fat Prieſt. What? Faith without works? St. James ſaith, Faith without works is dead, and we have free will to do good works.

Good works not diſallowed.

Wood. I would not that any of you ſhould think, that I diſallow good works. For a good Faith cannot be without good works. Yet not of our ſelves, but it is the gift of God, as ſaith St. Paul to the Philippians, the ſecond Chapter, It is God that worketh in us both the will and alſo the deed, even of good will.

Phil. 2.

The Archdeacon of Canterbury made Ordinary by the Cardinal to examine R. Woodman.

Winch. Make an end; anſwer to me. Here is your Ordinary, the Archdeacon of Canterbury; he is made your Ordinary by my Lord Cardinal, and he hath authority to examine you of your Faith upon a Book, to anſwer to ſuch Articles as he will lay to you. And I pray you refuſe it not: for the danger is great if you do. Wherefore we deſire you to ſhew your ſelf a Subject in this matter.

Then they ſpake all, and ſaid; Loe, my Lord deſireth you gently to anſwer to him, and ſo we do all. For if you refuſe to take an Oath, he may excommunicate you. For my Lord Cardinal may put whom he will in the Biſhops Office, until he is conſecrated.

Wood. I know not ſo much. If you will give me time to learn the truth of it (if I can prove it to be as you ſay) I will tell you my mind in any thing that he ſhall demand of me, without any flattering.

Prieſt. My Lord and all we tell thee it is true; and therefore anſwer to him.

R. Woodman challengeth his Judges to be all turn-coats and changlings.

Wood. I will believe none of you all, for you be turn-coats and changelings, and be wavering minded, as ſaith St. James; you be neither hot nor cold, as ſaith S. John, therefore God will ſpue you out of his Mouth. Wherefore I can believe none of you all, I tell you truth.

Winch. What? be we turn-coats and changelings, what meaneſt thou by that?

Wood. I mean, that in King Edwards time you taught the Doctrine that was ſet forth then, every one of you, and now you teach the contrary; and therefore I call you turn-coats and changelings, as I may well enough. Which words made the moſt part of them to quake.

Winch. Nay, not all as it chanced.

Wood. No? I pray where were you then?

Winch. I was in the Tower, as the Lieutenant will bear me record.

Wood. If you were in the Tower, it was not therefore, I dare ſay, it was for ſome other matter.

Then they all took heart of Grace, and ſaid; My Lord, he cometh to examine you, we think if he will not anſwer to the Articles, you were beſt to Excommunicate him. Anno 1557.

Wincheſter. He is the naughtieſt varlet Heretick that ever I knew. I will read the Sentence againſt him.

The free ſpeech of the Biſhops and Prieſts.

Wood. Then they ſpake all at once, and I anſwered them as faſt as I could. But I cannot remember it all, the words came out ſo thick, I ſpared them not, I praiſe God therefore; for I ſpake freely.

Then they that ſtood by rebuked me, and ſaid; You cannot tell to whom you ſpeak I think.

Wood. No? Think you ſo? they be but Men. I am ſure I have ſpoken to as good as they be, and better then they will ever be, for any thing that I can ſee, if they repent not with ſpeed.

Winceſt. Give ear; for I will read Sentence againſt you.

Winchester about to read the Sentence.

Wood. Will you ſo? wherefore will you? you have no juſt cauſe to Excommunicate me; and therefore if you do condemn me, you will be condemned in Hell, if you repent not: and I praiſe God, I am not affraid to dye for Gods ſake, if I had a hundred lives.

Winceſter. For Gods ſake? nay, for the devils ſake. Thou ſayſt thou art not affraid to dye; No more was Judas that hanged himſelf, as thou wilt kill thy ſelf wilfully, becauſe thou wilt not be ruled.

Woodman. Nay, I defie the Devil, Judas and all their members. And Judas Fleſh was not affraid, but his Spirit and Conſcience was affraid, and therefore deſpaired and hung himſelf. But I praiſe God, I feel no lothſomneſs in my Fleſh to dye, but a joyful Conſcience, and a willing mind thereto. Wherefore my Fleſh is ſubdued to it, I praiſe God; and therefore I am not affraid of death.

Chich. Woodman, for Gods ſake be ruled. You know what you ſaid to me at my Houſe. I could ſay more, if I would.

Read in the firſt Examination of Woodman, pag. 2176. in the ſecond edition.

Wood. Say what you can; the moſt fault that you found in me was, becauſe I praiſed the living God, and becauſe I ſaid, I praiſe God, and the Lord; which you ought to be aſhamed of, if you have any Grace; for I told you where the words were written.

Winceſt. Well, how ſay you? will you confeſs that Judas received the Body of Chriſt unworthily? tell me plainly.

No Man can receive the Body of Chriſt unworthily.

Wood. My Lord, if you, or any of you all can prove before all this audience, in all the Bible, that any Man ever eat the Body of Chriſt unworthily, then I will be with you in all things that you will demand of me; of the which matter I deſire all this people to be witneſs.

Prieſt. Will you ſo? that we ſhall agree well enough. St. Paul ſaith ſo.

Wood. I pray you where ſaith he ſo? rehearſe the words.

Prieſt. In the 11. of the firſt to the Corinthians he ſaith; Whoſo eateth of this Bread, and drinketh of this cup unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation, becauſe he maketh no difference of the Lords Body.

The place of S. Paul. 1. Cor. 11. expounded.

Wood. Do theſe words prove that Judas eat the Body of Chriſt unworthily? I pray you let me ſee them. They were contented. Then ſaid I, theſe be the words even that you ſaid: Good people hearken well to them. Whoſo eateth of this Bread and drinketh of this Cup unworthily: He ſaith not, Whoſo eateth of this Body unworthily, or drinketh of this Blood unworthily: But he ſaith; Whoſo eateth of this Bread, and drinketh of this Cup unworthily (which is the Sacrament) eateth and drinketh his own damnation, becauſe he maketh no difference between the Sacrament which repreſenteth the Lords Body, and other Bread and drink. Here (good people) you may all ſee they are not able to prove their ſayings true. Wherefore I cannot believe them in any thing that they do.

What it meaneth to make no difference of the Lords Body.

Winch. Thou art a rank Heretick indeed. Art thou an expounder? Now I will read Sentence againſt thee.

Woodman. Judge not leſt you be judged. For as you have judged me, you be your ſelf. Then he read the Sentence. Why, ſaid I; Will you read the Sentence againſt me, and cannot tell wherefore?

Winceſter readeth Sentence againſt Woodman, and cannot tell wherefore.

Winch. Thou art an Heretick, and therefore thou ſhalt be Excommunicated.

Wood.

Anno 1557.

Wood. I am no Heretick, I take Heaven and Earth to witneſs, I defie all Hereticks; and if you condemn me, you will be damned, if you repent not. But God give you Grace to repent all, if it be his will; and ſo he read forth the Sentence in Latin, but what he ſaid, God knoweth, and not I. God be judge between them and me. When he had done, I would have talked my mind to them, but they cried; Away, away with him. So I was carried to the Marſhalſey again, where I am, and ſhall be as long as it ſhall pleaſe God; and I praiſe God moſt heartily, that ever he hath elected, and predeſtinated me to come to ſo high dignity, as to bear rebuke for his Names ſake; his Name be praiſed therefore, for ever and ever; Amen.

R. Woodman condemned and carried to the Marſhalſey, being not ſuffered to ſpeak.

And thus you have the Examinations of this Bleſſed Woodman, or rather Goodman; wherein may appear as well the great Grace and Wiſdom of God in that Man, as alſo the groſs ignorance and barbarous cruelty of his adverſaries, eſpecially of Doctor White Biſhop of Wincheſter. Now followeth likewiſe the effect of his Letter.

A Godly Letter of Richard Woodman, written to a Chriſtian Woman, Miſtreſs Roberts of Hawkhurſt.

GRace, Mercy, and Peace from God the Father, and from his Son our alone Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, by the operation and working of the Holy Ghoſt, be multiplied plentiouſly upon you dear Siſter Roberts, that you may the more joyfully bear the Croſs of Chriſt that ye are under, unto the end, to your only comfort and conſolation, and to all our Brethren and Siſters that are round about you, both now and ever, Amen.

In my moſt humble wiſe I commend me unto you, and to all our Brethren and Siſters in thoſe parts, that love our Lord unfainedly, certifying you, that I and all my Brethren with me are merry and joyful, we praiſe God therefore, looking daily to be diſſolved from theſe our mortal Bodies, according to the good pleaſure of our Heavenly Father, praiſing God alſo for your conſtancy, and gentle benevolence, that you have ſhewed unto Gods elect people, in this troubleſom time of perſecution, which may be a ſure pledge and token of Gods good will and favour towards you, and to all other that hear thereof. For bleſſed are the merciful, for they ſhall obtain mercy. Wherefore the fruits declare alway what the tree is. For a good Man or Woman, out of the good treaſure of their heart, bring forth good things.

Matth. 24.

Wherefore (dear Siſter) it is not as many affirm in theſe days (the more is to be lamented) that ſay God asketh but a Mans heart; which is the greateſt injury that can be deviſed againſt God and his Word. For St. James ſaith; Shew me thy Faith by thy deeds, and I will ſhew thee my Faith by my deeds, ſaying; the Devils have Faith, and tremble for fear, and yet ſhall be but Devils ſtill, becauſe their minds were never to do good. Let us not therefore be like them, but let our Faith be made manifeſt to the whole World by our deeds, and in the midſt of a crooked and perverſe nation, as St. Paul ſaith, let our light ſhine as in a dark place.

God asketh more then the Heart only.

James 2.

Phil. 2.

Oh dear hearts, now is the Goſpel of God overwhelmed with many black and troubleſom clouds of perſecution, for the which cauſe very few go about to have their eyes made clear by the true light of the Goſpel, for fear of looſing of their treaſures of this World, which are but vain, and ſhall periſh.

Matth. 7.

Let not us therefore be like unto them which light their candle, and put it under a buſhel; but let us ſet our candle upon a candleſtick, that it may give light unto all them that are in the Houſe: that is to ſay, let all the people of the houſhold of God ſee our good works, in ſuffering all things patiently that ſhall be laid upon us for the Goſpels ſake, if it be death it ſelf. For Chriſt died for us, leaving us an Example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps; and as he hath given his life for us, ſo ought we to give our lives for the defence of the Goſpel, to the comfort of our Brethren.

How is it then that ſome will ſay, that their Faith is good, and yet they do all the deeds of Antichriſt the Devil, and be not aſhamed to alledge certain Scriptures to maintain their wickedneſs? Saint Paul ſaith; To believe with the heart juſtifieth, and to confeſs with the mouth maketh a Man ſafe. Oh good God, here may all Men ſee, that no Man or Woman can have a true Faith, unleſs they have deeds alſo; and he that doubteth, is like the waves of the Sea toſſed about of the wind, and can look for no good thing at the Lords hands. May not a Man judge all ſuch to be like thoſe which St. John ſpeaketh of, that be neither hot nor cold; and therefore God will (he ſaith) ſpue them out of his Mouth? If we judge evil of ſuch, have not they given us occaſion? had it not been better for them to have had a Milſtone tied about their necks, and to have been caſt into the Sea, then they ſhould give ſuch offences to Gods elect people in condemning them as they do, in going to the Synagogues of Satan, and there to receive the mark of the Beaſt, in that they ſee and hear God Blaſphemed there, and hold their peace? Doth not that declare to the whole World, that they allow their doings to be good? and theſe do not only defile themſelves, but alſo be an occaſion to confirm the Papiſts in their Papiſtry, and ſo be an occaſion of our weak Brothers falling, the which will be all required at their hands; which will be too heavy a burden for them to bear, if they repent it not with ſpeed. For they that know their Maſters will, and do it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes. Oh, do not we perceive, that now is the acceptable time that Chriſt ſpeaketh of? yea even now is the Axe put to the roots of the trees, ſo that every tree that bringeth not forth good fruits now, muſt be hewen down, and caſt into the Fire.

Yea our Maſter hath delivered his talents unto us, God give us Grace to occupie them well, that at his coming he may receive his own with vantage. Yea, now is the Lord come to ſee if there be any fruit upon his trees; ſo that if the Lord come and find none, he will ſerve us as he did the wild figg-tree, that is, never fruit ſhall grow on him more; Alſo, if we go to meet the Bridegroom without oyl in our Lamps, and ſhould go to buy, the doubt is, we ſhould be ſerved as were the fooliſh Virgins; that was, God ſaid to them, depart, I know you not. Or if we ſhould make excuſes to come to the Feaſt, other ſhall be bidden in our rooms; If we occupy not our Talents well, they ſhall be taken from us and given to other, and all ſuch unprofitable ſervants ſhall be caſt into Priſon in Hell, where ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

Oh good God! what a ſort of fearful ſayings are here contained? what Chriſtian heart will not hearken diligently hereto? Oh, may not all people well perceive now that this is the time that our Maſter Chriſt ſpeaketh of, that the Father ſhould be againſt the Son, and the Son againſt the Father, and one Brother againſt another; that the Brother ſhall deliver the Brother to death: yea, and that the wicked ſhall ſay all manner of wicked ſayings againſt us for his Names ſake? the which I have well found by experience, I praiſe God therefore, that hath given me ſtrength to bear it. For I think there can be no evil deviſed but it hath been imagined againſt me, and that of my familiar friends, as David ſaith: but I praiſe my Lord God, they are not able to prove any of their ſayings true, but that they go about to find fault in them that God hath choſen, becauſe they themſelves liſt not to take up their Croſs and follow Chriſt; and therefore they ſpeak evil of the thing that they know not, the which ſhall give account for it before him that is ready to judge both the quick and the dead.

Wherefore mark well what they be, and try them well or ever you give credit to them, according to St. Johns Counſel in his Epiſtle, ſaying; Believe not every Spirit, but try the Spirits whether they be of God, or not; meaning thereby; that they that be not of God, will ſpeak good of none but of them that be as they be. I do earneſtly believe, that God which hath begun this good work in me, will perform it to the end, as he hath given me grace and will alway, to bear this eaſie yoke and light burden; the which I have always found, I praiſe my Lord God.

The manifold troubles which Woodman hath paſſed through.

For when I have been in Priſon, wearing one while bolts, otherwhile ſhackles, otherwhile lying on the bare ground, ſometime ſitting in the Stocks, ſometime bound with cords, that all my Body hath been ſwoln, much like to be overcome for the pain that hath been in my fleſh, ſometime fain to lye without in the Woods and Fields, wandring to and fro, few I ſay, that durſt keep my Company for fear of the Rulers, ſometime brought before the Juſtices, Sheriffs, Lords, Doctors, and Biſhops, ſometime called Dog, ſometime Devil, Heretick, Whoremonger, Traitor, Thief, Deceiver, with divers other ſuch like; yea, and even they that did eat of my Bread, that ſhould have been moſt my Friends by nature, have betrayed me: Yet for all this I praiſe my Lord God that hath ſeparated me from my Mothers womb, all this that hath happened unto me hath been eaſie, light, and moſt delectable and joyful of any Treaſure that ever I poſſeſſed; for I praiſe God they are not able to prove one jot or tittle of their ſayings true. And whereas I and many other have hoped, that this Perſecution would have been at an end e're this time, now I perceive, God will have a further trial to root out all diſſemblers, that no man ſhould rejoyce in himſelf, but he that rejoyceth, ſhall rejoyce of God. Neither high nor low, rich nor poor, life nor death, ſhall be able to put you from Chriſt, but by him I truſt you ſhall enter into new Jeruſalem, there to live for ever, beholding the glory of God with the ſame eyes that you now have, and all other faithful people that continue to the end. Give all honour and glory to God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghoſt, three Perſons and one God, to be honoured now and ever, Amen. 1 Cor. 13. Rom. 8.

ſo deprived of his life; with whom alſo was burned nine other, to wit, five men and four women, which were taken not paſt two or three days before their Judgment. The names of all which being alſo before expreſſed, here again follow in this order. Richard Woodman, George Stevens, William Maynard, Alexander Hoſman his Servant, Thomaſine a Wood his Maid, Margery Moris, James Moris her Son, Denis Burgis, Aſhdowne's Wife, Grove's Wife.

Theſe Perſons here above-named, and bleſſed Martyrs, were put to death at Lewes the 22. of June.

Of the which number the eight laſt were apprehended (as is ſaid) either the ſame day, or the ſecond or third day before, and ſo with the ſaid Woodman and Stevens, were together committed to the fire; in which ſpace no Writ could come down from London to the Juſtices, for their burning. Wherefore what is to be ſaid to ſuch Juſtices, or what reckoning they will make to God and to the Laws of this Realm, I refer that to them that have to do in the matter. The like whereof is to be found alſo of other Juſtices, who without any lawful Writ of diſcharge or order of Law, have unlawfully and diſorderly burnt the Servants of Chriſt (whoſe blood the Law both may and alſo ought to revenge;) eſpecially at Salisbury, and at Canterbury, and Garnſey. But concerning theſe matters, though mans Law do wink, or rather ſleep at them, yet they ſhall be ſure Gods Law will find ſuch Murderers out at length. I pray God the doers may repent betime.

The Condemnation and Martyrdom of Richard Lush.

The Condemnation of R. Lush.

IN the Registers of Gilbert Bishop of Bathe and Wells, I find a Certificate made to King Philip and Queen Mary, of one Richard Lush, there condemned and given to the Secular Power to be burned for the cause of Heresie, whose Affirmations in the said Certificate be expressed in tenour and effect, as followeth.

His Articles.

1. FIrst, for denying the verity of the Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar.

2. Item, for denying auricular confession to be made to the Priest.

3. Item, for affirming only to be three Sacraments; to wit, of Baptism, of the Supper, and of Matrimony.

4. Item, for refusing to call the Lords Supper by the Name of the Sacrament of the Altar.

5. Item, for denying Purgatory, and that prayer and almes profit not the dead Body.

6. Item, that Images are not to be suffered in the Church, and that all that kneel to Images at the Church, be Idolators.

7. Item, that they which were burnt of late for Religion, died Gods Servants and good Martyrs.

8. Item, for condemning the single life of Priests, and other votaries.

9. Item, for denying the Universal and Catholick Church, meaning belike the Church of Rome.

The Martyrdom of Rich. Lush in the Diocess of Bathe and Wells.

For these Assertions, as there are expressed, he was condemned and committed to the Sheriffs, and also a Certificate directed by the Bishop aforesaid, to the King and Queen. Whereby we have apparantly to understand, that the said Richard Lush, thus condemned by Bishop Brown, was there burnt and executed, unless peradventure in the mean season he died, or was made away in the Prison; whereof I have no certainty to express.

A note of John Hullier Minister and Martyr, burned at Cambridge.

Refer this Story of J. Hullier Martyr, to that which is before said of him. The Story of J. Hullier with more matter inlarged.

COncerning the Story of John Hullier Martyr, partly mentioned before, for the more full declaration of the death and Martyrdom of that good Man, because the Story is but rawly and imperfectly touched before; for the more perfecting thereof, I thought thereunto to add that which since hath come to my hand, as followeth.

John Hullier first Scholar at Eaton.

First, John Hullier was brought up at Eaton Colledge, and after, according to the Foundation of that House, for that he was ripe for the University, he was elected Scholar in the Kings Colledge, where also not tarrying full three years of probation, before he was fellow of the Colledge, he after a little season was one of the ten Conducts in the Kings Colledge, which was Anno 1539. Then at length in process of time, he came to be Curate of Babram, three miles from Cambridge, and so went afterward to Lynn; where he, having divers conflicts with the Papists, was from thence carried to Ely, to Doctor Thurlby, then Bishop there; who after divers Examinations, sent him to Cambridge Castle, where he remained but a while.

John Hullier Conduct in the Kings Colledge.

Hullier brought from Lynn to the Bishop of Ely.

Hullier prisoned in the Tolbooth.

From thence he was conveighed to the Town Prison, commonly called the Tolbooth, lying there almost a quarter of a year, while at length he was cited to appear at great Saint Maries on Palmsunday Eve, before divers Doctors, both Divines and Lawyers, amongst whom was chiefest Doctor Shaxton, also Doctor Young, Doctor Sedgewike, Doctor Scot, Mitch, and others. Where after Examination had, for that he would not recant, he was first condemned, the Sentence being read by Doctor Fuller.

Then consequently he was degraded after their Popish mannner, with scraping crown and hands. When they had degraded him, he said chearfully; This is the joyfullest day that ever I saw, and I thank you all, that ye have delivered and lightned me of all this paltry.

Hullier degraded.

In the mean time whilst it was doing, one standing by, asked Hullier what Book he had in his hand. Who answered, a Testament. Whereat this Man in a rage took it and threw it violently from him. Then was he given over to the Secular Powers, Brasey being Major, who carrying him to Prison again, took from him all his Books, writings, and papers.

Brasy Major of Cambridge.

On Maundy Thursday coming to the Stake, he exhorted the people to pray for him, and after holding his peace, and praying to himself, one spake to him, saying; The Lord strengthen thee. Whereat a Sergeant, named Briesly, stayed and bade him hold his Tongue, or else he should repent it.

Brisly Sergeant, persecutor.

Nevertheless Hullier answered and said (either thus or very like, the effect was all one) Friend, I trust that as God hath hitherto begun, so also he will strengthen me, and finish his work upon me. I am bidden to a Maundy, whither I trust to go, and there to be shortly. God hath laid the Foundation, as I by his aid will end it.

Hullier stedfast trust in God.

Then going to a stool (prepared for him to sit on) to have his hosen plucked off, he desired the people to pray for him again, and also to bear witness that he died in the right Faith, and that he would Seal it with his Blood; certifying them, that he died in a just cause, and for the testimony of the verity and truth, and that there was no other Name but Jesus Christ to build upon, under whose banner he fought, and whose Souldier he was; and yet speaking, he turned himself about toward the East, and exhorted the people there likewise.

Hullier prepared himself to the Stake.

Now it chanced on a bank to stand three arch Papists, George Boyes, Henry Barley, and Gray, all three of Trinity Colledge. This Boyes was one of the Proctors of the University that year. To whom Master Gray spake, saying; Hear ye not Master Proctor, what Blasphemy this fellow uttereth? surely it is evil done to suffer him.

Three notorious Papists in Trinity Colledge.

At whose words, this Boyes spake with a loud voice; Master Major, what mean ye? if ye suffer him thus to talk at liberty, I tell ye the Council shall hear of it, and we take you not to be the Queens friend. He is a pernicious person, and may do more harm then you wote of. Whereat simple Hullier, as meek as a Lamb, taking the matter very patiently, made no answer, but made him ready, uttering his prayer. Which done, he went meekly himself to the Stake, and with Chains being bound, was beset with Reed and Wood, standing in a pitch barrel, and the Fire being set to, not marking the wind, it blew the flame to his back. Then he feeling it, began earnestly to call upon God. Nevertheless his friends perceiving the Fire to be ill kindled, caused the Sergeants to turn it, and Fire it to that place where the wind might blow it to his face.

Boyes, Proctor of Cambridge.

The Martyrdom of John Hullier.

That done, there was a company of Books which were cast into the Fire, and by chance a Communion Book fell between his hands, who received it joyfully, opened it, and read so long till the force of the flame and smoak caused him that he could see no more; and then he fell again to prayer, holding his hands up to Heaven, and the Book betwixt his Arms next his Heart thanking God for sending him it: and at that time the day being a very fair day and a hot, yet the wind was somwhat up, and it caused the Fire to be the fiercer, and when all the people thought he had been dead, he suddenly uttered these words; Lord Jesus receive my Spirit, dying very meekly.

Books burned with Hullier.

The last words of J. Hullier at his death.

The place where he was burned, is called Jesus Green, not far from Jesus Colledge. Seagar gave him certain Gunpowder, but little to the purpose; for he was dead before it took fire. All the people prayed for him, and many a tear was shed for him. Which the Papists seeing, cried, he was not to be prayed for, and being but a damned Man, it could profit him nothing: nevertheless they continued praying, Whereat the Papists fell into such a rage that they menaced them with terrible threatnings to ward. His Flesh being consumed, his bones stood upright even as if they had been alive. Of the people, some took what Papists of Cambridge forbid the people to pray for Hullier.

what they could get of him, as pieces of Bones. One had his Heart, the which was distributed so far as it would go; one took the Scalp and looked for the Tongue, but it was consumed except the very root.

One rounded him in the ear, and desired him to be constant to the end; at which he spake nothing, but shewed a joyful countenance, and so continued both constant and joyful to the end.

A note of Thomas Rede.

Refer this to Tho. Rede Martyr, before.

THomas Rede who was burned at Lewes, as it appeareth above, before he was in Prison, determined with himself to go to Church. The night following he saw a vision, a company of tall young men in white, very pleasant to behold; to whom he would have joyned himself, but it would not be.

Then he looked on himself, and he was full of spots, and therewith waked, and took hold, and stood to the truth; God be thanked therefore, and so constantly was burned with his fellows, as is above specified.

Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper burnt at Norwich.

July 13. Simon Miller a Merchant, Martyr.

IN the Month of July next ensued the Martyrdom of Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper. This Simon dwelling in the Town of Lynn, a Godly and zealous Man in the knowledge of the Lord and of his Truth, detesting and abhorring the contrary enforced Religion then set forth, came from Lynn to Norwich, where he standing in the press and hearing of the people coming out the same time from their Popish Service ended in the Church, began to ask them coming out of the Church, where he might go to have the Communion. At which words, divers much marvelling to hear and see his boldness, one that was an evil disposed Papists, hearing the same, said, that if he would needs go to a Communion, he would go bring him thither where he should be sped of his purpose. Whereupon shortly after he was brought to the Chancellor of Norwich (whose Name was Dunning) who after a few words, and small talk passed with this examinate, committed him to ward.

The words of Simon Miller to the people. The cause why Simon Miller was taken.

Simon Miller examined before Doctor Dunning.

In the mean while as he was in Examination, he had in his shoe, his Confession, written in a certain paper, whereof a piece appearing above his shoe, was spied and taken out. The Chancellor asking if he would stand to the Confession of the same Faith therein contained, he constantly affirmed the same. Whereupon, as is said, he was committed. Thus the said Simon being in the Bishops House, under custody of the Keeper there called Master Felow, how it hapned it is not certain, whether by gentleness of the Keeper (who was somwhat gentle that ways) or by leave given of the Bishop, or else whether he had condescended of a purpose to their Articles, he was dismissed, and went home to his House at Lynn. Where he continued a certain space, while he had disposed and set there all things in order.

Simon Miller's Confession espied in his shoe.

Simon Miller dismissed to his House at Lynn.

Simon Miller returneth again to his confession, and is condemned.

That done, he returned again to the Bishops House to his Prison and Keeper, till the time at length, he constantly abiding in his professed purpose, and defence of Gods truth, was by the said Bishop and his Chancellor, condemded and committed to the Fire about the 13. day of July.

Elizabeth Cooper, Martyr.

Eliz. Cooper Martyr.

WIth this Simon Miller also was burnt one Elizabeth Cooper (as is aforesaid) a Pewterers Wife, dwelling in S. Andrews Parish in Norwich, where she had before recanted, and being unquiet for the same, and greatly troubled inwardly, at the last she came into the said Saint Andrews Church, the people being at their Popish Service, and there standing in the same, said she revoked her recantation before made in that place, and was heartily sorry that ever she did it, willing the people not to be deceived, neither to take her doings before for an example, &c. These or such like words she spake in the Church.

Eliz. Cooper revoketh her recantation in the open Church.

Then cried one Bacon of the said Parish, laying his Arms abroad, saying; Master Sheriff, will you suffer this? and repeating the same, urged him to go from the Church to her House, at whose knocking she came down, and was taken and sent to Prison.

Anno 1557.

The Sheriff against his will enforced to [illegible] upon Eliz. Cooper.

The Sheriff (named Master Thomas Sutton) and she had been Servants together before in one House, and for the friendship he bare unto her, and the more for the Gospels sake he was very loath to do it, but that he was enforced by those other persons (before specified) much against his own Conscience, which he now earnestly repenteth.

This good Woman being condemned, and at the Stake with Simon Miller to be burnt, when the Fire came unto her, she a little shrunk thereat, with a voice crying, ha. When the said Simon Miller heard the same, he put his hand behind him toward her, and willed her to be strong and of good chear: For good Sister (said he) we shall have a joyful and a sweet supper. Whereat she being, as it seemed, thereby strengthened, stood as still and as quiet as one most glad to finish that good work which before most happily she had begun. So in fine she ended her life with her companion joyfully, committing her Soul into the hands of Almighty God.

Eliz. Cooper strengthened at the Stake by Sim. Miller.
